INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 501

SESSION 2009–2010

18 November 2009—3 December 2009

Printed indexes to Hansard

This index is produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary Information Management Services (PIMS). It contains references to all material in the bound volume of Hansard.

- At the end of the session a sessional index is produced containing references to material in the bound volumes for the whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Volume indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Petitions', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various PIMS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, Identity and Passport Service, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Union and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Union' and the named individual institutions. Material about what the Union and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Cross references

- See references indicate that all the material has been entered under another heading.
- See also references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates and petitions, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings, written statements, written questions and ministerial corrections:
  - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
  - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
  - References ending in 'ws' indicate written statements.
  - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
  - References ending in 'p' indicate written petitions.
  - References ending in 'mc' indicate ministerial corrections. (Where a volume number is given, the correction appears in a later volume).
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting, is a written statement or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
  - Chamber Debates (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions to debates);
  - Westminster Hall Debates (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings);
  - Written Statements (consisting of ministerial statements issued in writing); and
  - Questions (which includes all written, oral and urgent questions).

ABBREVIATIONS

The following abbreviations are used in connection with the progress of bills:

- 1R = First reading
- 2R = Second reading
- Com = Committee stage
- Rep = Report stage
- 3R = Third reading
- res = resolution
- amendt(s) = amendment(s)
- * = matter taken formally without debate or division
- (HL) = Bill starting in House of Lords
- (SP) = Bill in Scottish Parliament.

Parliamentary background

- The Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk contains a range of information about Parliament and the full text of some Parliamentary papers and proceedings including Hansard.
- Information on current Parliamentary business is provided in the House of Commons Information Office Weekly Information Bulletin, available on the website and from The Stationery Office (020 7873 8499).
- Further information on Parliamentary proceedings and procedures is available from the House of Commons Information Office (020 7219 4272).

A3
Hindhead 259w

A5
M1 58w, 404w

A417
Gloucestershire 1268

Abbott, Ms Diane
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1146, 1148, 1157–8
Westminster Hall Debates
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 90–2wh

Abortion
105w, 184–5w
Northern Ireland 865w

Academies
Standards 93w

Accident and emergency departments
185w, 526w
Queen Mary's Hospital Sidcup 660w
South East 526w

Accidents
Cycling 263w, 870w
Helicopters 59–60w
Invalid vehicles 264w
Large goods vehicles 764w
Railways 268–9w
Roads 570w, 688w, 871w, 1268–9

Adaptation Sub-Committee
see Climate Change Adaptation Sub-Committee

Addresses to the Crown
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 5–12

Administration of justice
Learning disability 354w
Northern Ireland 157w

Adoption
Suffolk (25.11.2009) 646–54

Advertising
Children 314w
Government departments 973w

Affordable housing
64w, 307w, 310–1w, 497w, 501–2w, 640w
Rural areas 86–7ws, 172–3w

Afghanistan
EC external relations 878w
Elections 164–5w
Health services 247w
Ministerial statements (30.11.2009) 831–54
Overseas aid 247–8w, 606w, 754w, 898w, 917w, 1092–6
Peacekeeping operations 7ws, 18w, 149w, 151w, 287–8w, 300w, 410–1w, 413–4w, 531, 607w, 898–9w, 908w, 910w, 954–8, 1100–1, 1103–4, 1108
Politics and government 961–4
Reconstruction 432w, 631–2w
Roads 248w
Schools 248–9w

Africa
Climate change 1097

Afriyie, Adam
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 756
Questions
Higher education, Research 638w
Scientific advisers, Dept for International Development 923w

Age
Discrimination 1280

Aggregates Levy Sustainability Fund
136–7w

Agriculture see also Farmers and Farms
Higher education 984w
Subsidies 382w, 729w, 731w

Ainsworth, Rt Hon Bob, Secretary of State for Defence
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 361, 368–72
Written Statements
Al-Sweady Inquiry 81–2ws
"External Reference Group for the Service Personnel Command Paper Annual Report 2008–09" 6–7ws
Ministry of Defence Votes A 46ws
Supply estimates, Ministry of Defence 45–6ws
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 898w
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 18w, 149w, 151w, 287–8w, 410–1w, 898–9w, 910w
Armed forces, Theft 902–6w
Armoured fighting vehicles 148w
Caparo Group, Ministry of Defence 906w
Christmas, Ministry of Defence 152w
Defence equipment, Lost property 419–20w
Departmental responsibilities, Ministry of Defence 415w
European air transport fleet 610w
Exservicemen 908w
Information officers, Ministry of Defence 907w
Investment Approvals Board 23w
Iraq, Peacekeeping operations 612–3w
Legal costs, Ministry of Defence 152w
Ministerial policy advisers, Ministry of Defence 611w
Pay, Ministry of Defence 152–3w
Public expenditure, Ministry of Defence 416w, 611–2w, 910–1w
Railways, Ministry of Defence 154w
Training, Ministry of Defence 416w
Trident missiles 911w
Working hours, Ministry of Defence 416–8w

Ainsworth, Mr Peter
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 419
Questions
Audit Commission, Fees and charges 10w

Air conditioning
Aircraft 259–60w

Air force
Deployment 288w
Training 288w

Air passenger duty
812w

Aircraft
Air conditioning 259–60w

Aircraft carriers
18w

Airports
Facilities 869–70w

Al-Sweady Inquiry
81–2ws

Alarms
Carbon monoxide 521w

Alcoholic drinks
Children 928–9w, 936–7w
Excise duties 599–600w

Alcoholic drinks —continued
Labelling 102w
Misuse (01.12.2009) 59–66wh, 396, 738–40w
Sexual offences 690w
Young people 112–27w, 197–205w, 463w

Alexander, Danny
Questions
Defence, Procurement 22w
Employment and support allowance 876w

Alexander, Rt Hon Douglas, Secretary of State for International Development
Written Statements
Supply estimates, Dept for International Development 63–4ws
Questions
Afghanistan, Health services 247w
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 247–8w, 606w, 754w, 917w, 1092–5
Afghanistan, Reconstruction 432w
Afghanistan, Roads 248w
Afghanistan, Schools 248–9w
Assets, Dept for International Development 224w
Aviation, Dept for International Development 224w
Caparo Group, Dept for International Development 917w
Christmas, Dept for International Development 223–4w
Climate change, Dept for International Development 432w
Consultants, Dept for International Development 917w
Contracts, Dept for International Development 55w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for International Development 249w
Disclosure of information, Dept for International Development 249w
Domestic visits, Dept for International Development 918w
Information officers, Dept for International Development 918w
KBR, Dept for International Development 922w
Legal costs, Dept for International Development 225w
Olympic Games 2012, Dept for International Development 922–3w
Palestinians, Overseas aid 754w, 1089–91, 1097–8
Pay, Dept for International Development 226–8w, 756w
Plants, Dept for International Development 756w
Public expenditure, Dept for International Development 756w
Railways, Dept for International Development 249w
Scientific advisers, Dept for International Development 923w
Training, Dept for International Development 250w
Travel, Dept for International Development 918w

Allen, Mr Graham
Chamber Debates
Select committees (26.11.2009) 799–802, 804, 806, 808
Questions
Business questions 694–5
Developing countries, HIV infection 754–5w
Domestic violence, Prosecutions 670–1
Elections, Expenditure 662–3
Members, Allowances 47w
NHS, Accountability 389–90

Allergies
Armed forces 288–9w, 901w

Almshouses
851w

Ambulance services
Bexley 741w
Crimes of violence 343w
Hornsey 105w
Lancashire 343w
Standards 105–6w, 526w

Amess, Mr David
Chamber Debates
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 866
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 82–7
Questions
Abortion 105w, 185w
Devolution, Scotland 135w
Fuel poverty 83w
Legal profession, Voluntary work 669
Middle East, Armed conflict 164w
Personal, social, health and economic education 317w
Police, Standards 896w
Schools, Discipline 823–4
Select committee reports 678–9
USA, Antisemitism 878–9w
Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Act 2000 823–4w
Written questions, Government responses 37w

Anaerobic digestion
863–5w

Ancram, Rt Hon Michael
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 845
Questions
Halo Trust, Dept for International Development 229w

Anderson, David
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 343–6
Questions
Caffeine, Young people 528w
HM Courts Service, Manpower 439–41w
Probation, Expenditure 332–3w

Animal experiments
Rabbits 277w
Wickham Research Laboratories 661w, 749w

Animal welfare
Badgers 729–30w
Horses 137w
Pets 575w
Poultry 730–1w

Anniversaries
British Council 420w

Antibiotics
23w
Livestock 730w

Antisemitism
Higher education 557w
USA 878–9w

Antisocial behaviour orders
Children 829w
Crime prevention 663w
Young people 662–3w, 883w

Aortic aneurysm
Death 962–72w
Screening 399, 929–31w

Arbuthnot, Rt Hon James
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 843

Archives
70–1ws

Armed conflict
Middle East 164w, 305w, 429–30w, 972–3
Sudan 634–5w

Armed forces
Allergies 288–9w, 901w
Cadets 51w, 608w, 725–6w
Food 290w
Housing 18–22w, 54w, 149–50w, 290w, 411w, 609w
Injuries 152w, 287w, 901w
Marital status 899–902w
Northern Ireland 89–90ws
Pay 21w, 51–2w
Postal services 412w
Recruitment 52w
Scotland 134w
Telephone services 412w
Theft 902–6w
Uniforms 150–1w, 290–1w
Waste disposal 53w
Young people 413w

Armoured fighting vehicles
53w, 148w, 609w
Northern Ireland 726w

Arms control
Iran 629w, 735w
Israel 425w
Uzbekistan 738w

Army
Manpower 414w
Per capita costs 412w

Arrest warrants
749–50w

Arthritis
Health services 106w
Medical treatments 931w

Arts Council of England
272w, 374w

Asbestos
Schools 317w, 828

Ascension Island
971

Ashwell Prison
235–6w

Asperger's syndrome
Screening 401–2

Assaults on police
663–5w
Bedfordshire 686–7w

Assets
Dept for Communities and Local Government 778w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 374w (17–8mc)
Dept for International Development 224w
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 79w
Dept of Health 530–2w
Ministry of Defence 54w
Northern Ireland Office 597w
Treasury 141w

Asylum
206w, 465w, 495–6w, 665w
China 885w
Democratic Republic of Congo 206w, 626–7w
Employment 750w
Iraq 466w
Legal aid 239–40w, 441w
Torture 489w

Atherstone on Stour
Fires 391w, 677w, 780w

Atkins, Charlotte
Chamber Debates
Inland waterways (30.11.2009) 945
Westminster Hall Debates
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 77–82wh

Atomic Energy Authority
see United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority

Attendance allowance
527w

Attorney General
666–8
Supply estimates 72–3ws

Audio equipment
House of Commons chamber 677

Audit Commission
Fees and charges 10w
Public relations 640–1w

Austin, Ian, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and Minister for the West Midlands, Dept for Communities and Local Government
Westminster Hall Debates
Coastal areas, Regeneration (01.12.2009) 56–8wh
Questions
Affordable housing 307w, 311w
Affordable housing, Rural areas 172–3w
Almshouses 851w
Building regulations 644w
Building regulations, Energy 776w, 991w
Building regulations, Public consultation 307–8w
Carbon monoxide, Alarms 521w
Common land 787w
Common land, Rochdale 777w
Council housing, Finance 778w
Derelict land 183w, 643w
Empty property 309–10w, 644–5w
First time buyers, Norwich 784w
Homelessness 310w, 783–4w
Homelessness, South East 174–5w
Housing 519–20w
Housing, Energy 645w, 784w
Housing, Heating 12w
Housing, Milton Keynes 13w
Housing, Older people 521w
Housing, Overcrowding 183w, 311w
Housing, Owner occupation 311–2w
Housing and planning delivery grant 644w
Land, Public sector 172w, 177w
Mortgages 182w
Older people 975–6w
Planning permission, Appeals 14w, 525w
Private rented housing 788w
Property development, Floods 850w
Property development, Green belt 783w
Recreation spaces 851w
Regional government, South West 314w
Sheltered housing, Tamworth 183w
Social rented housing, Smoke alarms 183–4w
Social rented housing, South East 788w
Temporary accommodation, Greater London 14–5w
Tenancy deposit schemes 15–6w
Vacant land, Tamworth 184w, 788–9w

Austin, Mr John
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 593–6, 604

Australia
Immigration 207w

Automatic number plate recognition
260w

Aviation
869w
Cabinet Office 38w
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 556w
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 95w
Dept for International Development 224w
Dept for Transport 6w
Fares 405w
Fuels 261w
Government Equalities Office 395–6w
Greater London 264–5w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 155w
Olympic Games 2012 377w
Passengers 261w
Scotland Office 5w
Solicitor-General 576w
Taxation 371–2w
Waltham Forest 567w

Aylesbury
Unemployment (01.12.2009) 1081–8

Babies
Swine flu 358w

Bacon, Mr Richard
Questions
NHS, Information and communications technology 542–3w

Badgers
Animal welfare 729–30w

Badman Review
see Home Education Independent Review

BAE Systems
575–6w

Baha'i faith
Iran 630w

Bailey, Mr Adrian
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 145
Questions
EC energy policy 622w
Russia, Energy 971
Smoking 388

Bain, William
Chamber Debates
Maiden speeches (25.11.2009) 599–602
Oaths and affirmations (18.11.2009) 1
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 599–602

Baird, Vera, Solicitor General
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1112, 1120–2, 1124, 1128, 1149, 1161–75, 1180–2, 1193, 1201–3, 1226–7, 1229
Written Statements
Supply estimates, Attorney General 72–3ws
Questions
Attorney General 666–8
Aviation, Solicitor-General 576w
BAE Systems 575–6w
Bribery Bill (HL) 2009–10 257w
Climate change, Solicitor-General 131w
Corruption 576w, 668
Cost effectiveness, Solicitor-General 576–7w
Crown Prosecution Service, Standards 671–2
Domestic visits, Solicitor-General 577w
Equal opportunities, Teachers 1280–2
Equal pay 1279

Baird, Vera, —continued
Gilfoyle, Eddie 257–8w
Legal profession, Voluntary work 669
Legislation, Solicitor-General 867–8w
Prosecutions 131–2w
Prosecutions, Burglary 669–70
Prosecutions, Domestic violence 670–1, 868w
Prosecutions, Euthanasia 258w, 665–6
Prosecutions, Fraud 131w
Prosecutions, Theft 771w
Scientists, Solicitor-General 577–8w
Serious Fraud Office 578w, 868w
Vodafone Group, Ghana Telecom 578w

Baker, Norman
Questions
Air passenger duty 812w
Aircraft, Air conditioning 259–60w
Alcoholic drinks, Young people 197–205w
Asylum, China 885w
Aviation, Fares 405w
Aviation, Fuels 261w
Aviation, Greater London 264–5w
Aviation, Passengers 261w
Bus services, Concessions 262w
Bus services, Fares 568w
Business 977w
Children, Day care 709w
Class sizes 220w
Coroners 882–3w
Cycling, Accidents 263w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 556w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Communities and Local Government 498w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 273w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 383w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for International Development 249w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Transport 762w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Work and Pensions 388w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 359w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept of Health 653w
Departmental responsibilities, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 422w
Departmental responsibilities, Ministry of Defence 415w
Departmental responsibilities, Ministry of Justice 438w
Departmental responsibilities, Northern Ireland Office 367w
Departmental responsibilities, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w
Departmental responsibilities, Prime Minister 615w
Departmental responsibilities, Scotland Office 135w
Departmental responsibilities, Treasury 143w
Disclosure of information, Cabinet Office 319w
Disclosure of information, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 316w
Disclosure of information, Dept for Communities and Local Government 66w
Disclosure of information, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 171w
Disclosure of information, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 857w

Baker, Norman —continued
Disclosure of information, Dept for International Development 249w
Disclosure of information, Dept for Transport 761w, 763–4w
Disclosure of information, Dept of Health 189w
Disclosure of information, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 166w
Disclosure of information, Ministry of Defence 291w
Disclosure of information, Ministry of Justice 438w
Disclosure of information, Northern Ireland Office 366–7w
Disclosure of information, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 50w
Disclosure of information, Prime Minister 867w
Disclosure of information, Scotland Office 281w
Disclosure of information, Treasury 142w
Driving offences 583–4w
Driving offences, Sentencing 790–4w
Freight 982–4w
Heathrow Airport 407w
Homelessness, South East 174–5w
Horses, Animal welfare 137w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Cabinet Office 974w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Dept for Communities and Local Government 522w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 377w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Dept for International Development 757w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Dept of Health 539w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 735w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Ministry of Defence 612w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Northern Ireland Office 599w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 572w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Scotland Office 593w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Treasury 810w
Iraq Committee of Inquiry 971–2
Large goods vehicles 764w
Large goods vehicles, Accidents 764w
Members, Surveillance 366w
Motor vehicles 265–6w
Motor vehicles, Exhaust emissions 266–8w
Motor vehicles, Fuels 267w
National Express, Telephone services 408w
Official cars, Cabinet Office 451–2w
Official cars, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 233w
Official cars, Dept for Communities and Local Government 66w
Official cars, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 49w
Official cars, Dept for Transport 762w
Official cars, Dept for Work and Pensions 388w
Official cars, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 714w
Official cars, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 55w
Official cars, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 50w
Official cars, Scotland Office 136w
Official cars, Treasury 283–4w
Police, Sussex 215w
Public transport, Crime 666–7w

Baker, Norman —continued
RAF Welford 418–9w
Railway network 62w
Railways, Cabinet Office 319w
Railways, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 834–5w
Railways, Dept for Communities and Local Government 66w
Railways, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 49w
Railways, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 859w
Railways, Dept for International Development 249w
Railways, Dept for Transport 59w
Railways, Dept for Work and Pensions 389w
Railways, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 80w
Railways, Dept of Health 653w
Railways, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 161w
Railways, Franchises 568w
Railways, Fuels 571w
Railways, Ministry of Defence 154w
Railways, Ministry of Justice 438w
Railways, Northern Ireland Office 78w
Railways, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w
Railways, Penalty fares 570w
Railways, Prime Minister 615w
Railways, Scotland Office 135w
Railways, Standards 767w
Railways, Treasury 143w
Rolling stock 62w, 269–70w
Rolling stock, Procurement 1264
Shipping, Training 409w
Social rented housing, South East 788w
Taxis, Cabinet Office 695w
Taxis, Dept for Communities and Local Government 499w
Taxis, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 722–3w
Taxis, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 859w
Taxis, Dept for International Development 756–7w
Taxis, Dept of Health 653–4w
Taxis, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 423w
Taxis, Home Office 887w
Taxis, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 770w
Taxis, Prime Minister 759w
Taxis, Treasury 808w
Travel, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 637w
Travel, Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Travel, Dept for International Development 918w
Travel, Dept of Health 742w
Travel, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 572w
Travel, Prime Minister 759w
Travel, Scotland Office 592w
Travel, Treasury 809w
Truancy, South East 99–100w
Unemployment, South East 392–4w
Wickham Research Laboratories, Animal experiments 661w, 749w

Baldry, Tony
Westminster Hall Debates
Bullingdon Prison (02.12.2009) 131–4wh
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 82–4wh
Questions
Doctors, Working hours 395

Baldry, Tony —continued
Prison Service, Finance 448w

Balls, Rt Hon Edward, Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families
Chamber Debates
Children, Schools and Families Bill, 1R (19.11.2009) 143
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 144–57, 159–61, 166–7, 175–7, 180–1, 183
Written Statements
Primary education 3–6ws
Primary education, Finance 107–9ws
Social services 117–9ws
Southall, David 80–1ws
Supply estimates, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 36–8ws
Questions
Children, Learning disability 824–5
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 824
Education, Disadvantaged 811–3
Ewing School Didsbury 825–6
Great Tey School Colchester 828–9
Havering Sixth Form College 826
History, Education 830
Home education 825
National curriculum tests 816–8
Radcliffe School Milton Keynes 827
Schools, Admissions 826
Schools, Standards 828
Schools, Stoke on Trent 825

Bangladesh
Climate change 1098–9

Bank of England
Ministerial statements (25.11.2009) 533–46

Bank services
Fees and charges 527–8
Post offices 123ws, 1108

Bankruptcy
550–4w
Council tax 812–3w
East of England 636w
Hampshire 74w

Banks
Finance 805w
Loans 369w
Non-domestic rates 313w
Pay 140w
Regulation 369w

Banks, Gordon
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 557
Questions
Developing countries, Tuberculosis 1092

Barker, Gregory
Chamber Debates
Equitable Life Assurance Society, Petitions (24.11.2009) 504–5
Questions
Carbon emissions, Housing 712w
Climate change 923–4w
European Commission, Public appointments 1106

Barlow, Celia
Questions
Chronic fatigue syndrome 348w
Ophthalmology 1104

Baron, Mr John
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 850
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 869

Baron, Mr John —continued
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 233, (23.11.2009) 264–5, (24.11.2009) 408, 411–2, (25.11.2009) 573
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 531
Breast cancer 186–8w, 343–5w, 527–8w
Breast cancer, Screening 540–1w
Cancer, Health services 106w, 345–7w
Cancer, Waiting lists 108–9w
Learning disability, Administration of justice 354w
Prostate cancer, Screening 109w

Barrett, John
Questions
Attorney General 666–7
Members, Correspondence 490w

Barron, Rt Hon Kevin
Chamber Debates
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 868
Questions
NHS, Standards 381–2

Battle, Rt Hon John
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 421
Questions
Business questions 688

Bayley, Hugh
Questions
Corruption 668
East coast railway line 1275
House of Commons, Energy 680
Hunting, Employment 386w
Hunting, Yorkshire and the Humber 441w
Research, Medicine 656–7w
Research, Science 988–9w
Scientists, Cabinet Office 695w
Scientists, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 980–1w
Scientists, Dept for International Development 433w
Scientists, Dept of Health 653w
Scientists, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 627w
Scientists, Ministry of Defence 612w
Scientists, Ministry of Justice 581w
Scientists, Northern Ireland Office 598w
Scientists, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 157w
Scientists, Scotland Office 281w
Scientists, Solicitor-General 577–8w
Scientists, Treasury 370w

Bedfordshire
Assaults on police 686–7w
Injuries 939–40w
Population 828w
Primary education 841w
Sure start programme 712w

Begg, Miss Anne
Questions
Debts, Government assistance 321–3w
Employment and support allowance, Chronic fatigue syndrome 390w
Helicopters, Accidents 59–60w

Beith, Sir Alan
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 555–6
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1198
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1044
Floods, Cumbria (23.11.2009) 259
Questions
Crown Prosecution Service, Standards 672

Beith, Sir Alan—continued*
East coast railway line, Timetables 868–9w

Belarus
Capital punishment 7–8w, 300–1w

Bell, Sir Stuart, Second Church Estates Commissioner*
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 845–6
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 51–7
Questions
Christianity, Developing countries 661–2
Church Commissioners, Land 252w
Church of England, Finance 253–4w
Churches, Repairs and maintenance 663
Clergy 660–1
Clergy, Retirement 659–60

Bellingham, Mr Henry
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 711, 714–5, 740–3, 749–50
Westminster Hall Debates
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 94–6wh
Questions
Burglary, Prosecutions 669–70
Church Commissioners, Land 252w
Debts 578–80w
Railways, East of England 1271
Speed limits 1275

Bellwin scheme
643–4w

Benn, Rt Hon Hilary, Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs*
Chamber Debates
Flood and Water Management Bill, 1R (19.11.2009) 143
Floods, Cumbria (23.11.2009) 251–60
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 500–4
Written Statements
Climate change 90–1ws
Coastal Change Fund 121–2ws
EU Agriculture and Fisheries Council 9ws
Flood and Water Management Bill 2009–10 7–9ws

Benyon, Richard
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1049–57

Bereavement benefits
157–8w

Beresford, Sir Paul
Westminster Hall Debates
Proportional representation (01.12.2009) 39–40wh
Questions
Civil servants, Business interests 458w
Oils, Waste disposal 860w, 863w

Berry, Mr Roger
Questions
Climate change, International cooperation 1104–5

Bexley
Ambulance services 741w
Cancer 741w
Higher education 29w
Local government finance 785–6w
Maternity services 744w
Strokes 749w
Surgery 749w

Bill of Rights
Northern Ireland 113ws

Billing
Electricity 925w
Natural gas 925w

Binley, Brian
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 543
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 410, 439, 455, 461, 488–90

Biofuels
382w
Boilers 399–400w

Biometrics
466w
Schools 916w

Blackman, Mrs Liz
Questions
Extradition, USA 981

Blackman-Woods, Roberta
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 416, 479–82
Questions
Floods, Cumbria 523
Official engagements, Prime Minister 522–3

Blackpool-Manchester railway line
1274–5

Blair, Rt Hon Tony
Security 494w

Blindness
see Sight impaired

Blood
Donors 650w

Blunt, Mr Crispin
Chamber Debates
Equitable Life Assurance Society, Petitions (26.11.2009) 797
Questions
Extradition, USA 986–7
Middle East, Peace negotiations 973

Boarding schools
Islam 820

Boilers
Biofuels 399–400w
Schools 911w

Bolton
Health services 400

Bombings
Lockerbie 1104

Bone, Peter
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 851
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 546
Donors, Health education (03.12.2009) 1394
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1227
European Union (03.12.2009) 1300–1, 1309–10, 1341, 1350, 1357, 1361, 1367, 1381–5
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1234, 1236, 1244
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 869
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 718
Questions
Business questions 138, 698, 1296
Corruption 668
Cycling, Accidents 870w
Cycling, Helmets 1273
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Transport 1272–3
EC aid 753–4w
Human trafficking, Females 1276–7

Bone, Peter—continued*
Human trafficking, Scotland 515
NHS, Finance 390–1
President of the European Council 628w
Pupils, Disadvantaged 396w
Timetabling of bills 677–8

Bone marrow disorders
Donors 185–6w, 343w, 650w

Boorman Review
see NHS Health and Wellbeing Review

Border Agency see UK Border Agency

Borders
Israel 425–6w, 623w, 631w
Personal records 206–7w, 467w

Bottomley, Peter
Chamber Debates
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1238, 1241, 1243–4
Points of order intervention (02.12.2009) 1240
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 154, 184–9, 238
Questions
Asylum 465w
UNESCO, Prizes 251–2w

Botulinum toxin
650–1w

Bournemouth Borough Council Bill (HL) 2006–07
Chamber Debates
Revival motion (03.12.2009) 1261

Bradford and Bingley
806w

Bradley Review
see Diversion of Individuals with Mental Health Problems from the Criminal Justice System and Prison Review

Bradshaw, Rt Hon Ben, Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport*
Written Statements
Supply estimates, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 44–5ws
Questions
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 273w
Digital switchover help scheme 594–5w
Domestic visits, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 593w
Railways, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 49w

Bradwell-on-Sea
Nuclear power stations 822w

Brady, Mr Graham
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 541
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 864
Questions
Taxation, Aviation 371–2w

Brain cancer
741w

Brake, Tom
Questions
Children, Databases 815
Home education 825

Brazier, Mr Julian
Questions
Members, Correspondence 893w

Breast cancer
186–8w, 343–5w, 527–8w, 824w
Screening 540–1w, 741w

Breast cancer—continued*
Waiting lists 651–2w

Breed, Mr Colin
Questions
Furs, China 8w
Furs, Imports 75w

Brennan, Kevin, Minister of State, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills and Dept for Children, Schools and Families*
Chamber Debates
Construction, Standards (23.11.2009) 377–80
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 161, 170, (26.11.2009) 709
Westminster Hall Debates
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 96–9wh
Manufacturing industries (02.12.2009) 116wh, 127–30wh
Questions
Children, Databases 815
Higher education, Admissions 983–4w
Learning and Skills Council for England, Correspondence 987w
Unemployment, Young people 77w

Bribery Bill (HL) 2009–10
Questions
257w

Bridges
Railways 767w
Road signs and markings 133–4w

Bristol
Housing 520–1w

British constitution
789w

British Council
Anniversaries 420w

British Indian Ocean Territory
Environment protection 301–2w, 625w
Fisheries 302w

British nationality
479w
Morocco 9w

British overseas territories
974

British Petroleum
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 553w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 625–6w
Ministry of Justice 578w
Prime Minister 759w

Broadband
294w, 553w, 976w
Herefordshire 554w
Scotland 513–5

Brokenshire, James
Chamber Debates
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 867
Questions
Antisocial behaviour orders, Crime prevention 663w
Antisocial behaviour orders, Young people 662–3w, 883w
Closed circuit television 886w
Crime prevention, Schools 215w
Family intervention projects 97w
Local government, Home Office 210–2w
Mentally ill, Children 542w
National Treatment Agency, Finance 212–3w
Parenting orders 666w
Police, Marketing 492–3w

Brokenshire, James—continued*
Sexual offences, Alcoholic drinks 690w
Sexual offences, Victim support schemes 689–92w

Brooke, Mrs Annette L
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 201–4, 208
Questions
Developing countries, Tuberculosis 1091
Educational psychology 818–9
Guardianship 96–7w
Incontinence, Children 539–40w
Internet, Security 489w
Pre-school education, Finance 709–10w, 838–40w
Schools, Sanitation 398w
Students, Finance 75–6w

Brown, Rt Hon Gordon
528

Brown, Rt Hon Gordon, Prime Minister, First Lord of the Treasury and Minister for the Civil Service*
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 831–6, 838–54
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 20–30
Written Statements
Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting 113–4ws
European Council 26ws Peers, Allowances 100ws
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 531, 1100–1, 1103–4, 1108
Bank services, Fees and charges 527–8
Bank services, Post offices 1108
British Petroleum, Prime Minister 759w
Brown, Rt Hon Gordon 528
Caparo Group, Prime Minister 759w
Chequers, Ministerial policy advisers 760w
Christmas, Prime Minister 614–5w
Civil servants, Location 1108
Civil servants, Pensions 1106–7
Climate change, International cooperation 530–1, 1104–6
Climate change, Prime Minister 366w
Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting 615–6w
Departmental responsibilities, Prime Minister 615w
Disclosure of information, Prime Minister 867w
Domestic violence 1103
Domestic visits, Prime Minister 759w
Economic situation 1101–2, 1105, 1107
European Commission, Public appointments 1106
Flexible working 532
Floods, Cumbria 523–4, 530, 1105
Hizb ut Tahrir 524–6
House of Commons, Reform 529–30
India, Nuclear weapons 867w
Inheritance tax 1102
Iraq Committee of Inquiry 527
Lockerbie, Bombings 1104
Members, Domicil 1106
Members, Surveillance 366w
Monarchy, Succession 532
Northwest Regional Development Agency 528
Nuclear submarines, Scotland 528–9
Official engagements, Prime Minister 522–3, 1099
Official hospitality, Prime Minister 366w
Ophthalmology 1104
Patients, Safety 1099
Police, Demonstrations 526–7
Police, Political impartiality 531–2

Brown, Rt Hon Gordon,—continued*
Proscribed organisations 529
Public expenditure, Wales 1107
Railways, Prime Minister 615w
Shell, Prime Minister 759w
Taxation, Environment protection 1107–8
Taxis, Prime Minister 759w
Travel, Prime Minister 759w
Youth justice, Finance 530

Brown, Mr Russell
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 163, (26.11.2009) 718
Questions
Afghanistan, Elections 164–5w
Burundi, Overseas aid 223w

Browne, Jeremy
Chamber Debates
Financial institutions, EC action (01.12.2009) 993, 1001, 1012–7
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 704, 714, 717

Browne Review
see Higher Education and Student Finance Independent Review

Browning, Mrs Angela
Questions
Data protection, Ministry of Justice 437–8w
Extradition, USA 981

Bruce, Rt Hon Malcolm
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 1095–6
Attorney General 666–7
Broadband, Scotland 514
Climate change, International cooperation 1106

Bryant, Chris, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office*
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1297–313, 1316, 1319, 1321–3, 1328, 1330, 1335, 1388–90
Written Statements
EU General Affairs and External Relations Council 51–5ws Sanctions 50ws
Questions
Ascension Island 971
Belarus, Capital punishment 300–1w
British Council, Anniversaries 420w
British Indian Ocean Territory, Environment protection 301–2w, 625w
British Indian Ocean Territory, Fisheries 302w
British overseas territories 974
Christmas, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 159w
Colombia, EC external trade 159w, 420–1w
Colombia, Human rights 626w
Colombia, Trade unions 303w
Consultants, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 879–80w
Contracts, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 421w
Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly 162w
Cyprus, Politics and government 953–4
Departmental responsibilities, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 422w
Devolution, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 733w
Diplomatic service, Manpower 304w
EC budget 958–61
EC energy policy 622w

Bryant, Chris,—continued
EU High Representative for Common Foreign and Security Policy 627–8w
European Commission, Oaths and affirmations 735w
European Council 967
Falkland Islands, Sovereignty 961
Fiji, Politics and government 423–4w
Forced marriage 424w
Government Hospitality 162–3w
Hanslope Park 8w, 628w
Honduras, Elections 973
Immobilisation of vehicles, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 735w
Intelligence services 431w
Internet, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 303w, 421–2w
Iraq, Reconstruction 631–2w
Italy, Higher education 631–2w
KBR, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 880w
Khodorkovsky, Mikhail 633w
Legal costs, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 160w
Legislation, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 627w
Members, Correspondence 427–8w
Nuclear weapons, Proliferation 623–4w
Official cars, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 55w
Official hospitality, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 305w
Pay, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 160–1w, 303–4w
President of the European Council 628w
Public expenditure, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 422w
Recycling, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 161–2w
Russia, Politics and government 736–7w
Rwanda, Politics and government 970
St Helena 625w
Serbia, EC accession 737–8w
Taxis, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 423w
Training, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 423w
UK membership of EC, Referendums 624w
Uzbekistan, Arms control 738w
Venezuela, Nuclear weapons 880w
Working hours, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 304w

Buck, Ms Karen
Questions
Schools, Admissions 826
Social security benefits, Lone parents 877w
Temporary accommodation, Greater London 14–5w

Buckinghamshire
Childbirth 550w

Building regulations
644w
Energy 776w, 991w
Public consultation 307–8w

Building schools for the future programme
93–5w, 107–9ws, 827–8
Croydon 827
Plymouth 822, 825
Sixth form colleges 916w
Warrington 397w

Buildings
Carbon emissions 42–4ws
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 979w
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 913w

Buildings—continued
Dept for Communities and Local Government 849w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 1w
Dept of Health 933w
Ministry of Defence 293–4w
Tenant Services Authority 521–2w

Bulgaria
Immigration 453w

Bullingdon Prison
(02.12.2009) 131–7wh

Bullying
Pupils 815–6

Burden, Richard
Questions
Chronic obstructive pulmonary disease 652w
Civil servants, Compensation 318w
Palestinians, Overseas aid 1090

Burglary
Prosecutions 669–70

Burma
International assistance 974

Burnham, Rt Hon Andy, Secretary of State for Health
Chamber Debates
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 855–6, 858–70
Personal Care at Home Bill, 1R (25.11.2009) 559
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 231–42
Written Statements
NHS Health and Wellbeing Review 23–4ws
Questions
Departmental responsibilities, Dept of Health 395–6
Hospitals, Construction 397
Milton Keynes Hospital NHS Foundation Trust 398
NHS, Standards 381–4
Organs, Donors 396
Social services 388–9
Swine flu, Vaccination 399

Burns, Mr Simon
Chamber Debates
Home Education Independent Review, Petitions (03.12.2009) 1391
Questions
Chelmsford Prison, Prisoners' release 85w, 590w
Parking, Hospitals 386–7
Parking, Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust 745w
Written questions, Government responses 258w

Burrowes, David
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1188–9
European Union (03.12.2009) 1307
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 563, 580–1, 605, 608–11
Questions
Drugs, Rehabilitation 352w
Extradition, USA 975–8
Youth justice, Finance 530

Burstow, Mr Paul
Questions
Dementia, Research 107w
Multiple sclerosis, Drugs 194–5w

Burt, Alistair
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1312

Burt, Alistair—continued
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 85, (23.11.2009) 355–8
Questions
Palestinians, Overseas aid 1090–1

Burt, Lorely
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 742, 747–9, 766–7
Westminster Hall Debates
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 92–3wh

Burundi
Overseas aid 223w

Bus services
Concessions 261–2w, 1269–71
Fares 568w
South East 58w

Business
976–7w
Credit 978w
Crime 467–8w
EC grants and loans 101w
Government assistance 554–5w, 979w
Kent 523w
Scotland 135w
Taxation 16w
Wales 823–5w

Business, Innovation and Skills Select Committee (23.11.2009) 373

Business interests
Civil servants 458w

Business motions
(23.11.2009) 373, (25.11.2009) 644

Business Rate Supplements (Rateable Value Condition) (England) Regulations 2009
Chamber Debates
(23.11.2009) 373, (24.11.2009) 504

Business statements
127–40, 681–98, 1283–96

Butler, Dawn, Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office and An Assistant Whip
Questions
Aviation, Cabinet Office 38w
Central Office of Information 961w
Copyright 962w
Employment 38–9w
Foreign workers 813–4w
Government departments, Advertising 973w
Government departments, Public relations 973–4w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Cabinet Office 974w
Information Commissioner 971w
Marketing, Cabinet Office 971–2w
Media Monitoring Unit 975w
Population 166w
Public relations, Cabinet Office 972–3w
Unemployment, Young people 39–40w, 771w

Byrne, Rt Hon Liam, Chief Secretary to the Treasury
Questions
Public expenditure 146w, 371–2w
Public expenditure, Scotland 811w
Public expenditure, Wales 602w, 811w
Tax yields 602w
Taxation, Aviation 371–2w

Cabinet Office
Aviation 38w
Caparo Group 693w

Cabinet Office —continued
Climate change 450w
Cost effectiveness 450–1w
Disclosure of information 319w
Driving 696w
Food 451w
Immobilisation of vehicles 974w
Information officers 826–7w
Internet 694–5w
Marketing 971–2w
Official cars 451–2w
Pay 452w
Public expenditure 826w
Public relations 972–3w
Railways 319w
Recruitment 452w
Scientists 695w
Supply estimates 34–6ws
Taxis 695w
Theft 695–6w
Working hours 452–3w

Cable, Mr Vincent
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 537–8
Construction, Standards (23.11.2009) 374–7
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 897–902
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 724–9
Questions
Assets, Dept for Communities and Local Government 778w
Assets, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 374w (17–8mc)
Assets, Dept for International Development 224w
Assets, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 79w
Assets, Dept of Health 530–2w
Assets, Ministry of Defence 54w
Assets, Northern Ireland Office 597w
Assets, Treasury 141w
Bankruptcy, Council tax 812–3w
Business 976–7w
Business, Credit 978w
Business, EC grants and loans 101w
Business, Government assistance 979w
Cost effectiveness, Cabinet Office 450–1w
Cost effectiveness, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 913–4w
Cost effectiveness, Dept for Communities and Local Government 646–7w
Cost effectiveness, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 170w
Cost effectiveness, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 256w
Cost effectiveness, Dept for International Development 224–5w
Cost effectiveness, Dept for Transport 405–6w
Cost effectiveness, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 400w
Cost effectiveness, Dept of Health 188–9w
Cost effectiveness, Home Office 468w
Cost effectiveness, Minister for the Olympics 147–8w
Cost effectiveness, Ministry of Justice 236w
Cost effectiveness, Northern Ireland Office 597–8w
Cost effectiveness, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 155w
Cost effectiveness, Scotland Office 280w
Cost effectiveness, Solicitor-General 576–7w
Cost effectiveness, Treasury 141–2w
Financial services, Education 370–1w
Generic Financial Advice Review 144–5w

Cable, Mr Vincent —continued
Kenya, Civil servants 880w
National Investment Corporation 987w
Northern Rock, Compensation 811w
Pay, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 234w
Pay, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 375–6w
Pay, Dept for International Development 226–7w
Pay, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 304w
Pay, Government Equalities Office 57w
Pay, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 282–3w
Private finance initiative 285w
Public expenditure 146w
Social Enterprise Day 458w

Cadets
Armed forces 51w, 608w, 725–6w

Caffeine
Young people 528w

Cairns, David
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 553

Cambridgeshire
Housing 145w

Cameras
M5 132w
Speed limits 134w, 760w

Cameron, Rt Hon David
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 836–8
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 12–20
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 1100–1
Economic situation 1101–2
Floods, Cumbria 523–4
Heart diseases, Children 743w
Hizb ut Tahrir 524–6
Inheritance tax 1102

Cameroon
Repatriation 897w

Campbell, Mr Alan, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Home Office
Written Statements
Organised crime, Criminal investigation 99ws
Questions
Alcoholic drinks, Children 928–9w
Alcoholic drinks, Young people 112–27w, 197–205w, 463w
Antisocial behaviour orders, Children 829w
Antisocial behaviour orders, Crime prevention 663w
Antisocial behaviour orders, Young people 662–3w, 883w
Closed circuit television 127w, 665w, 886w
Crime 885–6w
Crime, Business 467–8w
Crime, Drugs 751w
Crime, Public transport 666–7w
Crime, Young people 127w
Crime prevention 485w
Crime prevention, Schools 215w
Crimes of violence 207–8w, 667–70w
Crimes of violence, Females 750w
Crimes of violence, North East 670–4w
DNA, Databases 894–6w
Domestic violence, Immigrants 477–8w
Domestic violence, Unemployment 478w
Driving offences, Insurance 674w

Campbell, Mr Alan, —continued
Firearms, Crime 675–6w
Firearms, Smuggling 689w
Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 675w
Human trafficking 677w
Hunting 677–8w
Immobilisation of vehicles 128w, 209w, 489w
Knives, Milton Keynes 468w
Missing persons 679–86w
National Treatment Agency, Finance 212–3w
Opium, Licensing 751w
Parenting orders 666w
Radicalism 687–8w
Raves, Milton Keynes 218w
Serious Organised Crime Agency 688–9w
Sexual offences, Alcoholic drinks 690w
Sexual offences, Victim support schemes 689–92w

Campbell, Mr Gregory
Westminster Hall Debates
'Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 86–7wh
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 18w
Police stations, Northern Ireland 5w
Written questions, Dept for Communities and Local Government 10–1w

Campbell, Rt Hon Sir Menzies
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1054
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 335–8, 369
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 955–6
BAE Systems 575–6w
Corruption 576w
Extradition, USA 984
KBR, Dept for Communities and Local Government 785w
KBR, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 724w
KBR, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 860w
KBR, Dept for International Development 922w
KBR, Dept of Health 655w
KBR, Export credit guarantees 562–3w
KBR, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 880w
KBR, Minister for the Olympics 758w
KBR, Treasury 601w
Public sector, Procurement 948w
Siemens, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 722w

Campbell, Mr Ronnie
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 843
Questions
Sexual offences, Rehabilitation 590–1w

Canada
Diplomatic service 158w

Cancer
454w
Bexley 741w
Clinical trials 528w
Health services 106w, 345–7w
Medical treatment 546–7w
Waiting lists 108–9w

Canterbury City Council Bill 2007–08
Chamber Debates
Revival motion (03.12.2009) 1261

Caparo Group
Cabinet Office 693w

Caparo Group —continued
Dept for International Development 917w
Ministry of Defence 906w
Prime Minister 759w
Treasury 369w

Capita
Dept for Communities and Local Government 641w, 777w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 593w, 721w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 856w
Dept for International Development 755w
Dept of Health 931–2w
Ministry of Justice 881w
Northern Ireland Office 865–6w
Treasury 947w

Capital gains tax
Second homes 600w, 947w

Capital punishment
Belarus 7–8w, 300–1w
Iran 629w

Caravan sites
Travellers 44ws, 525w

Carbon emissions
816w, 923w
Buildings 42–4ws
Government departments 927w
Heating 712w
Housing 35–6w, 712–3w
Mobile homes 80–1w

Carbon monoxide
Alarms 521w
Poisoning 106–7w, 874w

Care homes
Fees and charges 397

Care Standards Act 2000
Questions
Prosecutions 529w

Carers
Milton Keynes 219–20w
Norwich 912w

Carmichael, Mr Alistair
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 551
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1041, 1045, 1055, 1071–2
Questions
Burma, International assistance 974
Business questions 697–8
Employment, Scotland 518
Extradition, USA 988
Palestinians, Overseas aid 1089–90
Shipping, Training 1267–8

Carswell, Douglas
Questions
Gaddafi, Saif al-Islam 638w
Rothschild, Lord 638w

Cash, Mr William
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 544
European Union (03.12.2009) 1318, 1323–4, 1366, 1369–73, 1375, 1384, 1386
Financial institutions, EC action (01.12.2009) 990, 993, 997, 999, 1001–2, 1004, 1013, 1016, 1018–9
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 880, 895–6, 901
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 25
Questions
Business questions 133

Cellular phones
see Mobile phones

Census
455–7w, 951–60w, (01.12.2009) 1030–6

Census (England and Wales) Order 2009
Chamber Debates
(23.11.2009) 373, (01.12.2009) 1030–6

Central Media Monitoring Unit see Media Monitoring Unit

Central Office of Information
961w

Cervical cancer
Screening 540–1w, 547w

Cetaceans
Japan 383w

Chapman, Mr Ben
Questions
Dee estuary, Marine conservation zones 386–7w
Housing benefit 390–1w
Public libraries, Wirral 171w

Charities
693w

Charity Commission
693–4w
Public relations 694w
Supply estimates 80ws

Chaytor, Mr David
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 582, (26.11.2009) 719
Questions
Bus services, Concessions 1270
Business questions 692, 1293
Child benefit 600–1w

Cheadle Hulme Station
262w

Chelmsford Prison
Prisoners' release 85w, 590w

Chequers
Ministerial policy advisers 760w

Cheshire
Gifted children 708w

Chess
South Africa 634w

Chief Construction Adviser
Public appointments 27ws

Chilcot Inquiry
see Iraq Committee of Inquiry

Child benefit
600–1w

Child care tax credit
606w

Child care vouchers
369w, 601w, 806w

Child Poverty Bill 2008–09 then 2009–10
Chamber Debates
1R and 2R* (19.11.2009) 143

Child tax credit
283w

Child Trust Fund
Wales 806w

Childbirth
Buckinghamshire 550w

Children
Advertising 314w
Alcoholic drinks 928–9w, 936–7w
Antisocial behaviour orders 829w
Computers 912w

Children —continued
Cycling 870w
Databases 704–5w, 815
Day care 706–7w, 709w, 829–30w
Deportation 883–5w
Disability living allowance 617w
Drugs 936–7w
Health 353w
Heart diseases 743w
Incontinence 539–40w
International cooperation 705w
Learning disability 824–5
Maintenance 616w
Mentally ill 542w, 744–5w
Missing persons 912–3w
Nigeria 736w
Obesity 23ws, 944w
Poverty 271w, 387w, 620–1w, 694w
Protection 314–6w
Stress 749w
Sunderland 706–7w
Vaccination 195w

Children in care
704w
GCE A-level 914–5w
GCSE 914–5w

Children, Schools and Families Bill 2009–10
Chamber Debates
1R (19.11.2009) 143
Written Statements
Framework powers 75ws

Children's centres
814–5, 826
Enfield 705w

Children's rights
969–70

China
Asylum 885w
Furs 8w
Milk 732–3w
Politics and government 879w

Chinook helicopters
609–10w

Chlamydia
Screening 741–2w, 932–4w
West Midlands 933–4w

Cholesterol
347–8w

Chope, Mr Christopher
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 346–9
Select committees (26.11.2009) 800
Questions
Business questions 135, 695
Colombia, EC external trade 159w, 302w
International organisations, Finance 633w
Legal profession, Voluntary work 669
Smoking 387–8
Tobacco 549w

Chorley
Sure start programme 98w

Christianity
Developing countries 661–2
Human rights 736w

Christmas
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 230–1w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 804–5w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 1w, 721–2w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 856w

Christmas – continued
Dept for International Development 223–4w
Dept for Transport 405w
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 78–9w
Dept of Health 348–50w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 159w
Home Office 467w
Ministry of Defence 152w
Ministry of Justice 320w
Northern Ireland Office 157w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 155w
Prime Minister 614–5w
Scotland Office 280w
Treasury 140w

Chronic fatigue syndrome
23–4w, 107w, 348w
Employment and support allowance 390w

Chronic obstructive pulmonary disease
652w

Church Commissioners
Land 252w

Church of England
Finance 253–4w

Churches
Repairs and maintenance 663

Citizens' advice bureaux
(02.12.2009) 77–99wh

City of Westminster Bill (HL) 2008–09
Chamber Debates
Revival motion (01.12.2009) 953

Civil Law Reform Bill (Draft)
Written Statements
13ws

Civil servants
Business interests 458w
Compensation 318–9w
Disciplinary proceedings 703w
Kenya 880w
Location 1108
Pay 450w
Pensions 1106–7
Recruitment 975w

Clapham, Mr Michael
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 955
Industrial diseases, Compensation 876–7w

Clappison, Mr James
Questions
British nationality 479w
Deportation, Offenders 481–2w
Employment 38–9w, 696–700w
Employment and support allowance 389–90w, 874–5w
Entry clearances, Overseas students 208–9w
Foreign workers, Doctors 890–2w
Immigration 217–8w
Jobcentre Plus 77–8w
Nepal, Religious freedom 9w
Poverty, Children 387w, 620–1w
Railways, Accidents 268–9w
Unemployment, Young people 39–40w, 77w
Visits abroad, Dept for Work and Pensions 617w

Clappison, Mr James – continued
Welfare tax credits 950w

Clark, Greg
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 415–24, 433

Clark, Katy
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1125, 1129–30, 1156–62, 1200–1, 1226
Questions
Broadband, Scotland 513
Buildings, Ministry of Defence 293–4w
Western Sahara, Land mines 10w

Clark, Paul, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Transport
Written Statements
Legislative Regime for Drink and Drug Driving Review 136–8ws
Shipping, Conditions of employment 115–6ws
Traffic Commissioners 16–7ws
Questions
Aircraft, Air conditioning 259–60w
Airports, Facilities 869–70w
Automatic number plate recognition 260w
Aviation 869w
Aviation, Fares 405w
Aviation, Fuels 261w
Aviation, Greater London 264–5w
Aviation, Passengers 261w
Aviation, Waltham Forest 567w
Civil servants, Business interests 458w
Cycling, Accidents 263w, 870w
Cycling, Highway Code 870w
Disclosure of information, Dept for Transport 763–4w
Driving, Licensing 406–7w, 440w
Driving, Standards 1276
Driving offences, Insurance 406w
Driving tests, Isle of Wight 1273–4
Heathrow Airport 407w
Helicopters, Accidents 59–60w
Invalid vehicles, Accidents 264w
Large goods vehicles 764w
Large goods vehicles, Accidents 764w
Motor vehicles, Excise duties 6–7w, 568w
Motor vehicles, Lighting 61w
MSC Napoli 407–8w
Official cars, Dept for Transport 762w
Ports, Liverpool 133w
Ports, Milford Haven 766–7w
Public transport, Security 1266–7
Roads, Accidents 570w, 871w, 1268–9
Shipping, Liquefied natural gas 359–61w
Shipping, Pollution 270w
Shipping, Safety 270w
Shipping, Training 409w, 1267–8
Speed limits 1275
Speed limits, Cameras 134w, 760w
Trust ports 769w, 871–2w, 949–50w

Clarke, Rt Hon Charles
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 34–7, 41

Clarke, Rt Hon Kenneth
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 744, 780–4

Clarke, Rt Hon Tom
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 542
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 723, 733–5
Questions
Developing countries, Tuberculosis 1091–2

Class sizes
220w, 830–1w

Classroom assistants
North East 831–3w

Cleaning services
Hospitals 939w

Clegg, Rt Hon Nick
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 849–1
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 30–3
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 1103–4
Iraq Committee of Inquiry 527

Clergy
660–1
Retirement 659–60

Clifton-Brown, Mr Geoffrey
Questions
Aviation, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 556w
Copyright, Internet 294w
Developing countries, Tuberculosis 1092
Financial services, EC action 230w
Manpower, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 232–3w
Strategic Investment Fund 638–9w
Visits abroad, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 557w

Climate change
90–1ws, 923–4w
Africa 1097
Bangladesh 1098–9
Cabinet Office 450w
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 73–4w
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 316w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 65w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 1w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 856w
Dept for International Development 432w
Dept for Transport 263w
Dept for Work and Pensions 6w
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 21–2w, 36w
Dept of Health 188w
EC action (01.12.2009) 1039
Government Equalities Office 56–7w
Home Office 467w
International cooperation 530–1, 969, 1104–6
Ministry of Justice 83–4w
Northern Ireland Office 282w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 155w
Prime Minister 366w
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 405–504
Research 816–7w
Solicitor-General 131w

Climate Change Adaptation Sub-Committee
713w

Clinical trials
Cancer 528w

Closed circuit television
127w, 665w, 886w

Cloyd, Rt Hon Ann
Chamber Debates
Iraq Committee of Inquiry, Points of order (24.11.2009) 403
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 308–10

Cloyd, Rt Hon Ann —continued
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 956

Coaker, Vernon, Minister of State, Dept for Children, Schools and Families
Questions
Academies, Standards 93w
Building schools for the future programme 93–5w, 827–8
Building schools for the future programme, Croydon 827
Building schools for the future programme, Plymouth 822, 825
Building schools for the future programme, Sixth form colleges 916w
Building schools for the future programme, Warrington 397w
Classroom assistants, North East 831–3w
Education, Assessments 221w
GCE A-level 95–6w
GCSE 95–7w, 836w
GCSE, Disadvantaged 399w
Haywood Engineering College 810–1
History, Education 821–2
National curriculum tests 97–8w, 836–7w
Office for Standards in Education, Children's Services and Skills, Finance 837w
Primary education, Greater London 841w
Primary education, Lancashire 98w
Schools, Admissions 829, 844–5w
Schools, Asbestos 317w
Schools, Borders 911w
Schools, Discipline 397–8w, 823–4
Schools, Enfield 845–6w
Schools, Finance 916–7w
Schools, Inspections 396–7w
Schools, Lincolnshire 845w
Schools, Manpower 823
Schools, Playing fields 819
Schools, Racial discrimination 710–1w
Schools, Sanitation 398w
Statistics, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 835w
Teachers, Pay 222–3w
Teachers, Training 99w
Truancy, South East 99–100w
United Church Schools Trust 100w
Young offenders 799w
Young people, Eating disorders 840w

Coal
359–60w

Coastal areas
Finance 272w
Regeneration (01.12.2009) 59–64wh

Coastal Change Fund
121–2ws

Coastal erosion
Dredging (01.12.2009) 67–76wh

Cohen, Harry
Chamber Debates
King George Hospital Blood (24.11.2009) 508
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 21, (23.11.2009) 265, 277
Questions
Australia, Immigration 207w
China, Politics and government 879w
Iraq, Health 163w

Coinage
Forgery 948w

Colombia
EC external trade 159w, 302w, 420–1w

Colombia —continued
Human rights 626w
Military aid 610w
Trade unions 303w

Combined heat and power
EC law 817w

Commission for Equality and Human Rights see Equality and Human Rights Commission

Commission of the European Communities see European Commission

Common land
787w
Registration 254–6w
Rochdale 777w

Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting
113–4ws, 615–6w

Communities England
see Homes and Communities Agency

Community development
173w, 308w, 648–9w
Olympic Lottery 5w

Community hospitals
103w, 400

Community justice centres
Finance 321w

Community orders
Young offenders 321w

Community relations
777w

Company accounts
35w

Company liquidations
28w, 231w, 555w, 979w

Compensation
Civil servants 318–9w
Industrial diseases (02.12.2009) 138–46wh, 870–7w
Northern Rock 811w

Complaints
Digital broadcasting 594w
Insolvency 814–5w
Train operating companies 768w

Complementary medicine
391

Composite materials
85ws

Compost
863–5w

Comptroller and Auditor General
see National Audit Office

Compulsorily detained mental patients 398

Computers
Children 912w

Conditions of employment Parents 231–2w
Shopping 115–6ws

Conferences
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 273w

Congo (Kinshasa)
see Democratic Republic of Congo

Connarty, Mr Michael
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1302, 1318–9, 1323–9

Connarty, Mr Michael —continued
Questions
Employment, Scotland 517

Conservation
Energy 79w, 359w, 819w

Constitutional Reform and Governance Bill 2008–09 then 2009–10
Chamber Debates
1R and 2R* (19.11.2009) 141–2

Construction
Hospitals 397
Housing 176–7w, 285w, 523w
Power stations 716w
Prisons 243–4w
Standards (23.11.2009) 374–80

Consultants
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 913w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 778w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 857w
Dept for International Development 917w
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 400w
Dept of Health 652w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 879–80w
Home Office 886w
Ministry of Defence 907w
National Offender Management Service 332w
Network Rail 132–3w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 571w
Scotland Office 380w
Treasury 948w

Contraceptives
529w

Contracts
Criminal Records Bureau 750–1w
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 28w
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 913w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 497–8w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 593w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 857w
Dept for International Development 55w, 755–6w
Dept of Health 933–4w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 421w
Home Office 886–7w
Ministry of Justice 580w
NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency 658w
Northern Ireland Office 866w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 872w
Olympic Games 2012 271–2w, 365w, 758–9w
Rescue services 910w
Treasury 948w

Convention on Cluster Munitions
626w

Cooper, Rosie
Questions
Palestinians, Overseas aid 1097–8

Cooper, Rt Hon Yvette, Secretary of State for Work and Pensions
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 635–9

Cooper, Rt Hon Yvette, —continued
Written Statements
Supply estimates, Dept for Work and Pensions 76–8ws

Copyright
962w
Internet 294w

Corbyn, Jeremy
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 849
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1139, 1159, 1167, 1185, 1196, 1204
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1242
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 267, 276, 286, 301, 332–5, 339
Whittington Hospital (02.12.2009) 1252–4, 1257
Questions
Middle East, Armed conflict 972–3
USA, Extradition 987–8
Western Sahara, Natural resources 880–1w

Cormack, Sir Patrick
Chamber Debates
Equitable Life Assurance Society, Petitions (26.11.2009) 798
Floods, Cumbria (23.11.2009) 259
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1242, 1244–5
Select committees (26.11.2009) 806
Questions
Brown, Rt Hon Gordon 528
Business questions 137–8
Clergy, Retirement 660
Palestinians, Overseas aid 1098

Cornwall
Health services 400
Local government 308w, 312w

Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Primary Care Trust
Finance 529–30w

Coroners
882–3w

Corporate Governance of UK Banking Industry Review
86ws

Corporation tax
140w
Credit unions 16–7w

Corporation Tax Bill 2009–10
Chamber Debates
1R (19.11.2009) 141
Parliamentary procedure (26.11.2009) 702

Correspondence
Learning and Skills Council for England 987w
Members 39w, 257–8w, 418w, 427–8w, 490w, 601w, 619w, 893–4w

Corruption
576w, 668

Cost effectiveness
Cabinet Office 450–1w
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 913–4w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 646–7w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 170w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 256w
Dept for International Development 224–5w
Dept for Transport 405–6w

Cost effectiveness —continued
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 400w
Dept of Health 188–9w
Home Office 468w
Minister for the Olympics 147–8w
Ministry of Justice 236w
National Audit Office 664
Northern Ireland Office 597–8w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 155w
Scotland Office 280w
Solicitor-General 576–7w
Treasury 141–2w

Costs in Criminal Cases (General) (Amendment) Regulations 2009
Chamber Debates
(30.11.2009) 941

Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly
162w

Council housing
Finance 777–8w

Council tax
Bankruptcy 812–3w
Yate 13w

Council tax benefits
771–3w
Newcastle upon Tyne 773–4w

Counter-terrorism
see also Terrorism
690w
International cooperation 476w

Courts Service
see HM Courts Service

Cousins, Mr Jim
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 540
Questions
Alcoholic drinks, Misuse 738–40w
Bankruptcy 550–4w
Banks, Finance 805w
Bradford and Bingley 806w
Classroom assistants, North East 831–3w
Crimes of violence, North East 670–4w
Deportation, Security 888w
Fuel poverty 925–7w
Housing benefit 771–3w
Housing benefit, Newcastle upon Tyne 773–4w
Immigration controls 891–3w
Immigration controls, France 893w
Legal aid, Newcastle upon Tyne 798w
Northern Rock 806w, 811w
Pension credit, Newcastle upon Tyne 877w
Residence orders 802–4w
Revenue and Customs, Manpower 603w
Students, Newcastle upon Tyne 990–2w
Tax avoidance 812w
Taxation, Financial institutions 810w
Transport, Tyne and Wear 569–70w
UK Border Agency, Serco 897w
Unemployment, Tyne and Wear 827–30w
Vacancies 774–5w
VAT, Postal services 605–6w

Cox, Geoffrey
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1042

Crabb, Stephen
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 410–1, 493–6
Questions
Hezbollah 632w
Israel, Borders 425–6w, 631w
Middle East 428w
Middle East, Armed conflict 429w

Crabb, Stephen —continued
Middle East, Peace negotiations 305–6w, 430w, 632–3w
National parks authorities, Local government 387w
Passports 491w
Police, Road traffic control 279w
Ports, Milford Haven 766–7w
Science, Public consultation 318w
Shipping, Liquefied natural gas 359–61w
Teachers, Training 99w
Trust ports 769w, 871–2w, 949–50w

Crausby, Mr David
Questions
Afghanistan, Politics and government 963–4
Business questions 1290
Children's centres 826

Credit
Business 978w

Credit unions
Corporation tax 16–7w

Crime
885–6w
Business 467–8w
Drugs 84w, 751w
Firearms 675–6w
Home Office 665–6w
Milton Keynes 127w
Nature conservation 137–8w
Public transport 61w, 666–7w
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 560–643
Young people 127w

Crime and Security Bill 2009–10
Chamber Debates
1R (19.11.2009) 141

Crime prevention
485w
Antisocial behaviour orders 663w
Schools 215w

Crimes of violence
207–8w, 214w, 667–70w
Ambulance services 343w
Females 57–8ws, 750w
Hospitals 658–9w
North East 670–4w
Wales 750w

Criminal Defence Service (Contribution Orders) Regulations 2009
Chamber Debates
(01.12.2009) 1038

Criminal Defence Service (Representation Orders) (Amendment) Regulations 2009
Chamber Debates
(01.12.2009) 1036–8

Criminal Defence Service (Representation Orders: Appeals etc.) (Amendment) Regulations 2009
Chamber Debates
(01.12.2009) 1038

Criminal injuries compensation
437w

Criminal investigation
Organised crime 99ws

Criminal Records Bureau
Contracts 750–1w

Crops
Genetically modified organisms 573–4w

Crown Prosecution Service
Standards 671–2

Croydon
Building schools for the future programme 827

Croydon —continued
Local government finance 647w
Remand in custody 448w

Cryer, Mrs Ann
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 152–3
Questions
Business questions 133, 693
Clergy 661
Nuclear weapons, Proliferation 623w

Cumbria
Floods 500–1w, 523–4, 530, 601w, 643w, 849w, 1105
Nuclear power stations 715–6w

Cummings, Mr John
Questions
Tobacco 548–9w

Cunningham, Mr Jim
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 764–7
Questions
Affordable housing 310–1w
Domestic violence, Immigrants 477w
Housing, Construction 285w
India, Politics and government 425w
India, Religious freedom 425w, 628–9w
Manufacturing industries, Government assistance 815w
Redundancy 988w
Research, Finance 816w
Schools, Finance 916–7w
Sony Ericsson, Government assistance 816w
Sony Ericsson, Taxation 812w

Curriculum
Sustainable development 827

Curtis-Thomas, Ms Claire
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 151–2
Questions
Armed forces, Recruitment 52w
Armed forces, Waste disposal 53w
Belarus, Capital punishment 7–8w, 300–1w
Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly 162w
Crime prevention 485w
Domestic violence, Unemployment 478w
European air transport fleet 154w
European Convention on Human Rights 83w
European Defence Agency 153–4w
Exhaust emissions, Shipping 714w
Foreign workers 482–4w, 488w, 699–702w
Human trafficking 677w
Illegal immigrants 487w
Immigration 463–5w
Immigration, Romania 453w
Intelligence services, Human rights 209–10w
Iraq, Peacekeeping operations 293w
Labour migration 678–9w
Migration 457w
Navy, EC action 154–5w
Network Rail, Consultants 132–3w
Radicalism 687–8w
Railways, Finance 133w
Remittances 229–30w, 251w
Renewable energy 82w
Repatriation 487–8w
Research, Finance 102w
Somalia, Food aid 252w
Somalia, Human trafficking 165w
Somalia, Piracy 728–9w

Cycling
Accidents 263w, 870w

Cycling —continued
Children 870w
Helmets 1273
Highway Code 870w

Cyprus
Politics and government 953–4

Darfur
see Sudan

Darling, Rt Hon Alistair, Chancellor of the Exchequer
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 533–4, 536–46
Corporation Tax Bill, 1R (19.11.2009) 141
Financial Services Bill, 1R (19.11.2009) 142
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 872–86, 893
Points of order intervention (26.11.2009) 700
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 709–10, 712–24
Taxation (International and Other Provisions) Bill, 1R (19.11.2009) 141
Written Statements
EU Economic and Financial Affairs Council 22–3ws, 123–5ws
Royal Bank of Scotland 79–80ws, 107ws

Dartford
Employment and support allowance 618–9w

Dartford-Thurrock Crossing
870w

Data protection
Medical records 656w
Ministry of Justice 437–8w

Databases
Children 704–5w, 815
DNA 127–8w, 673–4w, 894–6w
Fingerprints 675w
HM Courts Service 238–9w
Home Office 468w, 887w
Police 687w
Post codes 35w, 525w
Telecommunications 828w

Davey, Mr Edward
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1305–6, 1309, 1312, 1329–38
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 285–95
Questions
Afghanistan, Politics and government 963

Davidson, Mr Ian
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 558

Davies, Dai
Westminster Hall Debates
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 87–8wh
Questions
Consultants, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 400w
Iraq Committee of Inquiry 974–5w
Nuclear power 715w
Nuclear power, National policy statements 403w
Nuclear power stations, Safety 166w
Nuclear weapons, India 867w
Sellafield, Floods 822–3w

Davies, David TC
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 567, 571, 586, 594, 619–22

Davies, David TC —continued
Questions
Non-domestic rates, Banks 313w
Travel requirements 897w
Work experience, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 872w

Davies, Philip
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 554
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1120, 1134–6, 1144–53, 1174
Equitable Life Assurance Society, Petitions (26.11.2009) 797
Questions
Age, Discrimination 1280
Business questions 1294
EC budget 958–9
Gambling Commission 168–9w
History, Education 830
Mental health services 943w
Prisoners, Foreign nationals 444–5w
Prisons, Drugs 444–6w, 589–90w
Prisons, Visits 244w
Yorkshire Forward, Public appointments 988w

Davies, Mr Quentin, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Defence
Written Statements
Defence Support Group, MOD St Athan 110–1ws
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 898w
Aircraft carriers 18w
Armed forces, Uniforms 150–1w, 290–1w
Armed forces, Waste disposal 53w
Armoured fighting vehicles 53w
Defence, Procurement 22w
Devonport Dockyard 292–3w
European air transport fleet 154w
European Defence Agency 153–4w
Food, Ministry of Defence 291w
Military aircraft, Helicopters 909w
Navy, EC action 154–5w
Nuclear submarines, Decommissioning 54w
Uranium 911w

Davis, Rt Hon David
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 310–3
Questions
Extradition, USA 985–6

Day care
Children 706–7w, 709w, 829–30w

Dean, Mrs Janet
Questions
Fires, Death 780–3w

Death
Aortic aneurysm 962–72w
Drugs 825–6w
Fires 780–3w
Sickle cell diseases 826w
Weather 400

Debts
578–80w
Government assistance 321–3w

Dee estuary
Marine conservation zones 386–7w

Defence
Procurement 22w, 413–4w
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 262–372
United Arab Emirates 613–4w

Defence equipment
Lost property 419–20w

Defence Medical Services
Manpower 906–7w

Defence Support Group
610w
MOD St Athan 110–1ws

Deferred divisions
(02.12.2009) 1233

Dementia
Health services 102–3w
Research 107w

Democratic Republic of Congo
Asylum 206w, 626–7w

Demonstrations
Police 526–7

Denham, Rt Hon John, Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government
Written Statements
Supply estimates, Dept for Communities and Local Government 38–41ws

Dental services
103w, 188w, 191–3w, 384–5, 397

Dentistry
399

Departmental coordination
Economic situation 141w

Departmental responsibilities
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 556w
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 824
Dept for Communities and Local Government 498w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 273w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 383w
Dept for International Development 249w
Dept for Transport 762w, 1272–3
Dept for Work and Pensions 388w
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 359w
Dept of Health 395–6, 653w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 422w, 968
Ministry of Defence 415w
Ministry of Justice 438w
Northern Ireland Office 367w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w
Prime Minister 615w
Scotland Office 135w
Treasury 143w

Deportation
465–6w, 473–6w, 673w
Children 883–5w
Morocco 430w
Offenders 481–4w
Security 888w

Deposit protection service see Tenancy deposit schemes

Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills
Aviation 556w
British Petroleum 553w
Buildings 979w
Christmas 230–1w
Climate change 73–4w
Contracts 28w
Departmental responsibilities 556w
Domestic visits 979–80w
Food 232w
Internet 28–9w
Legislation 980w
Manpower 232–3w

Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills —continued
Official cars 233w
Official gifts 556w
Official hospitality 636w
Pay 234w, 295w, 636–7w
Plants 233w
Recycling 233w
Scientists 980–1w
Shell 564w
Supply estimates 27–31ws
Travel 637w
Visits abroad 557w
Work experience 565–6w

Dept for Children, Schools and Families
Aviation 95w
Buildings 913w
Climate change 3[illegible]
Consultants 913w
Contracts 913w
Cost effectiveness 913–4w
Departmental responsibilities 824
Disclosure of information 316w
Employment agencies 835w
Energy 833–4w
Food 219–21w
Information officers 834w
Internet 834w
Manpower 316–7w
Plants 221w
Railways 834–5w
Statistics 835w
Supply estimates 36–8ws

Dept for Communities and Local Government
Assets 778w
Buildings 849w
Capita 641w, 777w
Christmas 64–5w
Climate change 65w
Consultants 778w
Contracts 497–8w
Cost effectiveness 646–7w
Departmental responsibilities 498w
Disclosure of information 66w
Domestic visits 642w
Driving 499–500w
Food 68w
Immobilisation of vehicles 522w
Information officers 642w
Internet 778w
KBR 785w
Legal costs 177–8w
Legislation 642w
Lost property 11–2w
Official cars 66w
Official hospitality 12w, 65–6w
Pay 11w, 66w, 308–9w
Public expenditure 642w
Railways 66w
Recruitment 173w, 498w
Recycling 67w
Supply estimates 38–41ws
Taxis 67–8w, 499w
Theft 11w
Training 499w
Travel 642w
Working hours 309w
Written questions 10–1w

Dept for Culture, Media and Sport
Assets 374w (17–8nc)
Buildings 1w
Capita 593w, 721w
Christmas 1w, 721–2w
Climate change 1w
Conferences 273w
Contracts 593w
Cost effectiveness 170w
Departmental responsibilities 273w

Dept for Culture, Media and Sport —continued
Disclosure of information 171w
Domestic visits 593w
Driving 595w
Energy 374–6w
Food 48w
Immobilisation of vehicles 377w
Information officers 722w
Internet 375w
KBR 724w
Legal costs 49w
Lost property 2w
Official cars 49w
Pay 2–3w, 375–6w, 722w
Public expenditure 594w
Railways 49w
Recruitment 49w
Recycling 3w
Siemens 722w
Statistics 273w
Supply estimates 44–5ws
Taxis 3w, 168w, 722–3w
Theft 168w
Visits abroad 3w, 856w
Working hours 48w

Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs
Capita 856w
Christmas 856w
Climate change 856w
Consultants 857w
Contracts 857w
Cost effectiveness 256w
Departmental responsibilities 383w
Disclosure of information 857w
Food 256–7w
Internet 858w
KBR 860w
Pay 858w
Plants 383w
Public consultation 858w
Public expenditure 858w
Railways 859w
Recruitment 859w
Recycling 572–3w
Supply estimates 48–9ws
Taxis 859w
Working hours 383–4w

Dept for International Development
Assets 224w
Aviation 224w
Caparo Group 917w
Capita 755w
Christmas 223–4w
Climate change 432w
Consultants 917w
Contracts 55w, 755–6w
Cost effectiveness 224–5w
Departmental responsibilities 249w
Disclosure of information 249w
Domestic visits 918w
Driving 434w
Food 225w
Halo Trust 229w
Immobilisation of vehicles 757w
Information officers 918w
Internet 432w, 606–7w
KBR 922w
Legal costs 225w
Mines Advisory Group 229w
Olympic Games 2012 922–3w
Pay 226–8w, 756w
Plants 756w
Public expenditure 756w
Public relations 607w
Railways 249w
Recruitment 249w
Recycling 250w
Scientific advisers 923w

Dept for International Development —continued
Scientists 433w
Supply estimates 63–4ws
Taxis 756–7w
Training 250w
Travel 918w
Working hours 250–1w

Dept for Transport
Aviation 6w
Christmas 405w
Climate change 263w
Cost effectiveness 405–6w
Departmental responsibilities 762w, 1272–3
Disclosure of information 761w, 763–4w
Domestic visits 761w
Internet 406w, 762w
Official cars 762w
Pay 58–9w
Public expenditure 761–2w
Railways 59w
Recruitment 763w
Supply estimates 73–4ws

Dept for Work and Pensions
Climate change 6w
Departmental responsibilities 388w
Food 388w
Official cars 388w
Pay 388–9w
Railways 389w
Supply estimates 76–8ws
Training 389w
Visits abroad 617w

Dept of Energy and Climate Change
Assets 79w
Christmas 78–9w
Climate change 21–2w, 36w
Consultants 400w
Cost effectiveness 400w
Departmental responsibilities 359w
Food 79–80w
Legal costs 713w
Legislation 924–5w
Manpower 817–8w
Official cars 714w
Official hospitality 714w
Pay 80w, 400–1w
Railways 80w
Recycling 401w
Supply estimates 47–8ws

Dept of Health
Assets 530–2w
Buildings 933w
Capita 931–2w
Christmas 348–50w
Climate change 188w
Consultants 652w
Contracts 933–4w
Cost effectiveness 188–9w
Departmental responsibilities 395–6, 653w
Disclosure of information 189w
Employment agencies 654w
Food 348–50w
Immobilisation of vehicles 539w
Information officers 742w
Internet 350w
KBR 655w
Legal costs 189w
Official engagements 934w
Pay 189–90w, 350w
Public expenditure 531w (505 3mc), 653w
Railways 653w
Recruitment 351w
Recycling 190w
Scientists 653w
Supply estimates 56–8ws
Taxis 351w, 653–4w

Dept of Health —continued
Theft 190w
Travel 742w
Working hours 531–3w

Derbyshire
Water 732w

Derbyshire County Primary Care Trust
Manpower 934–5w

Derelict land
183w, 643w
VAT 373w

Developing countries
Christianity 661–2
Disabled 757w
Education 918–9w
Family planning 433–4w
Health services 919w
HIV infection 754–5w, 919–20w
Infant mortality 920w
Maternal mortality 922w
Secondary education 228–9w
Tuberculosis 921w, 1091–2

Devine, Jim
Questions
Palestinians, Overseas aid 1091

Devolution
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 733w
Scotland 84ws, 135w, 522

Devonport Dockyard
292–3w

Dhanda, Parmjit
Questions
Proscribed organisations 529

Diabetes
351w, 935w

Digital broadcasting
Complaints 594w
Radio 594w
Video equipment 723w

Digital switchover help scheme
594–5w

Digital technology
Scotland 135w

Diplomatic service
Canada 158w
Manpower 304w

Director General of Water Services see Office of Water Services

Director of Public Prosecutions see Crown Prosecution Service

Directors
Personation 554w

Disability living allowance
Children 617w
Lone parents 617–8w

Disabled
Developing countries 757w
Employment schemes 875–6w
Northern Ireland Office 866w
Social services 104w

Disabled students' allowances
989–90w

Disadvantaged
Education 811–3
GCSE 399w
Pupils 396w

Disciplinary proceedings
Civil servants 703w

Disclosure of information
Cabinet Office 319w

Disclosure of information —continued
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 316w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 66w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 171w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 857w
Dept for International Development 249w
Dept for Transport 761w, 763–4w
Dept of Health 189w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 166w
Ministry of Defence 291w
Ministry of Justice 438w
NHS 658w
Northern Ireland Office 366–7w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 50w
Prime Minister 867w
Scotland Office 281w
Treasury 142w

Discrimination
Age 1280

Dismore, Mr Andrew
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 411w, 607w
Defence, Procurement 413–4w
Housing, Construction 523w
Housing, Hendon 645w
Immigration 494w
Iraq, Iran 163–4w
Middle East, Armed conflict 164w
Police, Demonstrations 526–7
Rolling stock, Procurement 1263

Diversion of Individuals with Mental Health Problems from the Criminal Justice System and Prison Review
10–1ws

Djanogly, Mr Jonathan
Questions
Employment agencies, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 835w
Employment agencies, Dept of Health 654w
Employment agencies, Public sector 637w

DNA
Databases 127–8w, 673–4w, 894–6w
South East 894–6w

Dobson, Rt Hon Frank
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 5–9
Whittington Hospital (02.12.2009) 1253–4

Doctors
Foreign workers 890–2w
Working hours 393–5

Dodds, Mr Nigel
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1299
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 748
Westminster Hall Debates
Manufacturing industries (02.12.2009) 115wh
Questions
Abortion, Northern Ireland 865w
Business questions 1296
Disabled, Northern Ireland Office 866w
Police, Northern Ireland 599w
Public transport, Security 1267
Written questions, Government responses 676

Dogs
Electric shock equipment 137–8w

Domestic violence
324–30w, 581–2w, 790w, 1103
Immigrants 477–8w, 873w, 1279–80
Prosecutions 670–1, 868w
Unemployment 478w

Domestic visits
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 979–80w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 593w
Dept for International Development 918w
Dept for Transport 761w
Minister for the Olympics 758w
Prime Minister 759w
Solicitor-General 577w
Treasury 948w

Domicil
Members 1106

Donaldson, Mr Jeffrey M
Questions
Police, Northern Ireland 757–8w

Donohoe, Mr Brian H
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 554
Westminster Hall Debates
Proportional representation (01.12.2009) 27–8wh, 37–9wh, 43wh, 45wh, 48wh
Questions
Broadband, Scotland 513–4

Donors
Blood 650w
Bone marrow disorders 385–6w, 343w, 650w
Health education 397w, (03.12.2009) 1392–8
Organs 104w, 396, 536–7w, 747w

Doran, Mr Frank
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1062–4

Dorries, Nadine
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 628–31
Questions
Assaults on police, Bedfordshire 686–7w
Bankruptcy, East of England 636w
Class sizes 830–1w
Injuries, Offensive weapons 939–40w
Population, Bedfordshire 828w
Primary education, Bedfordshire 841w
Special educational needs 846w
Sure start programme, Bedfordshire 712w

Double taxation
Oman 105ws

Dowd, Jim
Chamber Debates
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 863–4

Dredging
Coastal erosion (01.12.2009) 67–76wh
Petitions (30.11.2009) 8p

Drew, Mr David
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1139, 1189, 1191–2, 1198
European Union (03.12.2009) 1303, 1351, 1373–7
Inland waterways (30.11.2009) 947, 950
Westminster Hall Debates
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 81wh
Higher education (01.12.2009) 5wh
Proportional representation (01.12.2009) 31wh, 34wh, 36wh

Drew, Mr David —continued
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 910w
Business questions 1291–2
Carbon emissions, Housing 35–6w
China, Milk 732–3w
Christianity, Developing countries 662
Community development 649w
Convention on Cluster Munitions 626w
Empty property 644–5w
EU High Representative for Common Foreign and Security Policy 627–8w
Foreign nationals, Prisoners' release 967
Improvement and Development Agency for Local Government 784w
Iran, Capital punishment 629w
Iran, Press freedom 630w
Legal profession, Voluntary work 669
Modernisation of the House of Commons Select Committee 674
Peacekeeping operations, Geneva Conventions 726–7w
Public sector 646w
Revenue and Customs 371w
Sudan, Politics and government 431w

Drinking water
Ministry of Defence 414–5w
Pollution control 573w

Driving
Cabinet Office 696w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 499–500w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 595w
Dept for International Development 434w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 733–4w
Licensing 406–7w, 440w
Ministry of Defence 417–8w
Ministry of Justice 582–3w
Standards 1276
Treasury 809–10w

Driving offences
583–4w
Insurance 406w, 674w
Mobile phones 1268–9
Norwich 406w, 583–8w
Sentencing 790–4w

Driving tests
Isle of Wight 1273–4

Driving under influence
Reoffenders 40–6w

Drugs
Children 936–7w
Crime 84w, 751w
Death 825–6w
Epilepsy 396
Leukaemia 941–3w
Mentally ill 657w
Misuse 190–1w, 661w
Multiple sclerosis 194–5w
NHS 533–4w
Prisons 237–8w, 242w, 340–1w, 444–6w, 589–90w
Rehabilitation 352w
South West 84w

Dual nationality
Pakistan 478w

Duddridge, James
Questions
Departmental responsibilities, Dept of Health 395–6

Duddridge, James —continued
Epilepsy, Drugs 396

Duncan, Alan
Questions
Ashwell Prison 235–6w
Drugs, Crime 84w
Liverpool Prison, Industrial disputes 239w
Mental health services 240w, 332w
Mental health services, Per capita costs 331–2w
Mental health services, Prisons 333–4w
Mentally disturbed offenders 84w
National offender management information system 320–1w, 436w
Prisoners, Females 238w
Prisoners, Mentally ill 239–40w, 242–3w
Prisoners, Suicide 447w
Prisons, Construction 243–4w
Prisons, Drugs 237–8w, 242w, 340–1w
Prisons, Inspections 339w, 447w
Prisons, Security 241–2w
Prisons, Standards 241w
Probation officers 442–3w
Reoffenders 240–2w, 244w

Dunfermline Building Society
370w

Dunne, Philip
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 779–80
Questions
Written questions, Government responses 675–6

Durkan, Mark
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 542
Questions
Offences against children, Northern Ireland 596–7w
Ulster Bank 372–3w

Eagle, Angela, Minister of State, Dept for Work and Pensions
Written Statements
EU Employment, Social Policy, Health and Consumer Affairs Council 101–2ws
Questions
Pension credit, Newcastle upon Tyne 877w
State retirement pensions 6w
Winter fuel payments 158w, 622w, 878w

Eagle, Maria, Minister of State, Ministry of Justice and Government Equalities Office
Written Statements
Supply estimates, Government Equalities Office 75–6ws
Questions
Chelmsford Prison, Prisoners' release 85w, 590w
Domestic violence 324–30w, 581–2w, 790w
Domestic violence, Immigrants 873w, 1279–80
Driving offences, Norwich 583–8w
Electronic tagging 799w
Equality and Human Rights Commission 218–9w, 872–3w
Hollesley Bay Prison, Prisoner escapes 795–7w
Legislation, Ministry of Justice 581w
National offender management information system 320–1w, 436w, 587–8w
Open prisons 800w
Peterborough Prison 588–90w
Prison sentences 337–40w

Eagle, Maria, —continued
Prison sentences, Greater Manchester 335–8w
Prison Service, Finance 448w
Prisoner escapes 801–2w
Prisoners, Exservicemen 803–5w
Prisoners, Females 238w
Prisoners, Foreign nationals 444–5w
Prisoners, Self-harm 591w
Prisoners, Suicide 447w
Prisoners' transfers 882w
Prisoners' transfers, Libya 243w
Prisons, Construction 243–4w
Prisons, Drugs 237–8w, 242w, 444–6w, 589–90w
Prisons, Inspections 339w
Prisons, Security 241–2w
Prisons, Standards 241w
Prisons, Visits 244w
Probation 441–2w
Probation, Expenditure 332–3w, 341–2w
Probation officers 442–3w
Reoffenders 240–2w, 244w
Sexual offences, Rehabilitation 590–1w
Young offender institutions 883–4w
Young offenders, Community orders 321w
Youth custody 45w, 245–6w, 591–2w
Youth custody, Per capita costs 450w
Youth offending teams 85–92w, 245w, 448–9w

East coast railway line 1275
Franchises 73ws
Internet 568w
Timetables 868–9w

East Midlands Development Agency
Public appointments 103ws
Public relations 981w

East of England
Bankruptcy 636w
General practitioners 533–4w
Health services 654w
Leisure 855w
Mortgages 524w
Railways 122ws, 1271–2
Shared ownership schemes 647–8w
Sports 724–5w, 852w, 854–5w

Eastern Europe
Political parties 628w

Eating disorders
Young people 848w

EC accession
Kosovo 737–8w
Serbia 737–8w

EC action
Climate change (01.12.2009) 1039
Financial institutions (01.12.2009) 989–1030
Financial services 230w
Navy 154–5w

EC aid
753–4w

EC budget
100–1w, 958–61

EC Commission
see European Commission

EC countries
Taxation 147w

EC energy policy
622w

EC external relations
Afghanistan 878w

EC external trade
Colombia 159w, 302w, 420–1w
Gulf States 424–5w
Israel 101w

EC grants and loans
384–5w
Business 101w

EC law
734–5w
Combined heat and power 817w
Power stations 716–7w

EC nationals
Overseas students 889–90w

Economic situation
1101–2, 1105, 1107
Departmental coordination 141w
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 703–96

Eco-towns
119–20ws

Education
Assessments 221w
Developing countries 918–9w
Disadvantaged 811–3
Financial services 370–1w
History 221w, 821–2, 830
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 144–242

Educational psychology
818–9

Efford, Clive
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 15

Eight minutes rule
Rulings and statements (01.12.2009) 1057

Elections
47w
Afghanistan 164–5w
Expenditure 662–3
Honduras 973
Somaliland 1096

Elective Home Education Review
see Home Education Independent Review

Electoral register
Sales 67–8ws

Electric shock equipment
Dogs 137–8w

Electric vehicles
Expenditure 763w
Milton Keynes 59w

Electricity
166–7w, 401–2w
Billing 925w

Electricity generation
818–9w
Finance 402w

Electronic tagging
799w

Elgin Marbles
376–7w

Ellman, Mrs Louise
Questions
Middle East, Peace negotiations 966
Northwest Regional Development Agency 528
Railway stations, North West 1266

Ellwood, Tobias
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 852
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 898w

Ellwood, Tobias —continued
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 288w, 300w
Armed forces, Injuries 287w
Armed forces, Uniforms 290–1w
Aviation 869w
Homeopathy 938w
Legislative reform orders 987w
Licensing laws 853w

Employment
38–9w, 696–700w
Asylum 750w
Hunting 386w
Scotland 517–9
Vale of Clwyd 453w

Employment agencies
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 835w
Dept of Health 654w
Public sector 637w

Employment and support allowance
389–90w, 874–6w
Chronic fatigue syndrome 390w
Hartford 618–9w

Employment schemes
Disabled 875–6w

Empty property
309–10w, 644–5w
Ministry of Defence 22w
Non-domestic rates 313w, 524–5w

Energy
Building regulations 776w, 991w
Conservation 79w, 359w, 819w
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 833–4w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 374–6w
Home Office 208w
House of Commons 679–80
Housing 645w, 784w
Meters 125–7ws
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 405–504
Russia 971
Scotland Office 5w

Energy Bill 2009–10
Chamber Debates
1R (19.11.2009) 142–3

Energy performance certificates
402w, 819w

Enfield
Children's centres 705w
School leaving 707–8w
Schools 845–6w
Specialised diplomas 711w

Engel, Natascha
Questions
Bus services, Concessions 1269–70
Curriculum, Sustainable development 827
Dental services 385
Developing countries, Education 918–9w

Engineering
Research 988–9w

English Partnerships
Public relations 849w

English Sports Council
see Sport England

Ennis, Jeff
Questions
Invalid vehicles, Accidents 264w
Specialised diplomas, South Yorkshire 711w

Enterprise management incentives
981–2w

Entry clearances
478–80w, 483w, 888–9w
Overseas students 208–9w, 213w, 215–7w, 479–81w, 674–5w
Polygamy 128w

Environment protection
British Indian Ocean Territory 301–2w, 625w
Taxation 1107–8

Environmental Permitting (England and Wales) (Amendment) (No. 2) Regulations 2009
Chamber Debates
(02.12.2009) 1249

Epilepsy
Drugs 396

Equal opportunities
Teachers 1280–2

Equal pay
1279
Northern Ireland Office 367w

Equalities Office
see Government Equalities Office

Equality and Human Rights Commission
218–9w, 872–3w

Equality Bill 2008–09 then 2009–10
Chamber Debates
1R and 2R* (19.11.2009) 142
Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1111–233
Questions
873–4w

Equitable Life Assurance Society
Petitions (19.11.2009) 1–2p, (25.11.2009) 5–6p, (19.11.2009) 243, (24.11.2009) 504–5, (25.11.2009) 645, (26.11.2009) 797–8, (30.11.2009) 942

EU Agriculture and Fisheries Council
9ws

EU Competitiveness Council
103–4ws

EU Economic and Financial Affairs Council
21–3ws, 123–5ws

EU Education, Youth and Culture Council
88–9ws

EU Employment, Social Policy, Health and Consumer Affairs Council
56ws, 101–2ws

EU Environment Council
111–2ws

EU General Affairs and External Relations Council
51–5ws

EU High Representative for Common Foreign and Security Policy
627–8w

EU Justice and Home Affairs Council
97–9ws

EU President
see President of the European Council

EU Transport, Telecommunications and Energy Council
133–4ws

European air transport fleet
154w, 610w

European Commission
Oaths and affirmations 735w
Public appointments 1106

European Communities (Definition of Treaties) (Stabilisation and Association Agreement) (Republic of Montenegro) Order 2009
Chamber Debates
(01.12.2009) 1036

European Convention on Human Rights
83w

European Council
26ws, 967

European Defence Agency
153–4w

European Union
(03.12.2009) 1297–390

Euthanasia
Prosecutions 258w, 665–6

Evans, Mr Nigel
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1305–6, 1315, 1345, 1351–5, 1359, 1379, 1383
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 173, 189–94, 224
Questions
Afghanistan, EC external relations 878w
Business questions 134, 689, 1289
Fuel poverty, Wales 714–5w
HIV infection 537–8w
HIV infection, Developing countries 920w
Renewable energy, Wales 717w

Evennett, David
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 147, 194–7
Questions
Ambulance services, Bexley 741w
Cancer, Bexley 741w
Crown Prosecution Service, Standards 671
Further education, Foundation degrees 985–6w
Higher education, Admissions 983–4w, 986w
Higher education, Bexley 29w
Higher Education and Student Finance Independent Review 983w
Local government finance, Bexley 785–6w
Maternity services, Bexley 744w
NHS, Finance 745–6w
Queen Mary's Hospital Sidcup, Accident and emergency departments 660w
Rolling stock, Procurement 1261–2
Schools, Discipline 397w
Social services 103–4w
South London Healthcare NHS Trust 548w, 748–9w
Strokes, Bexley 749w
Surgery, Bexley 749w

Ewing School Didsbury
825–6

Excise duties
Alcoholic drinks 599–600w
Motor vehicles 6–7w, 568w

Exclusion orders
473–4w

Exhaust emissions
Motor vehicles 266–8w, 760–1w
Shipping 714w

Export credit guarantees
KBR 562–3w

Exports
Land mines 637–8w

Exservicemen
908w

Exservicemen*—*continued
Prisoners 803–5w
Radiation exposure 293w

"External Reference Group for the Service Personnel Command Paper Annual Report 2008–09"
6–7ws

Extradition
Terrorism 474–5w
USA 975–88

Eyesight
Testing 191–3w

Fabricant, Michael
Questions
Churches, Repairs and maintenance 663
Dental services 384
Dentistry 399
House of Commons chamber, Audio equipment 677

Faith schools
Islam 915–6w

Falkland Islands
Sovereignty 961

Fallon, Mr Michael
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 540
Financial institutions, EC action (01.12.2009) 991–3, 995, 1017–20
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 272
Questions
Financial services 810w
Hospices, Finance 938–9w
Tomlinson, Ian 277–8w

Families
836w

Family intervention projects
97w

Family planning
Developing countries 433–4w

Fares
Aviation 405w
Bus services 568w

Farmers
see also Agriculture
Poverty 621–2w

Farms
Holiday accommodation 853w

Farron, Timothy
Chamber Debates
Floods, Cumbria (23.11.2009) 255–6
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 61, (24.11.2009) 407–8, 423, 473–9
Questions
Anaerobic digestion 863–5w
Drinking water, Pollution control 573w
Floods, Housing 859w
Floods, Property development 850w
Food, Waste 8[illegible]60w
Landfill 860–4w
Livestock, Antibiotics 730w
Public consultation, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 858w

Featherstone, Lynne
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1127–8, 1130–7, 1141, 1150, 1153, 1161, 1229–30
Whittington Hospital (02.12.2009) 1255–6, 1258
Questions
Ambulance services, Hornsey 105w
Business questions 687, 1293–4

Featherstone, Lynne—continued*
Females, Human trafficking 1278
North Central London Strategic Health Authority 25w
Social services, Haringey 222w
Whittington Hospital 26w

Females
Crimes of violence 57–8ws, 750w
Human trafficking 1276–9
Prisoners 238w
Sports 378w
United Nations 27w, 607w
Young people 463w

Field, Rt Hon Frank
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Points of order (23.11.2009) 261, (25.11.2009) 560
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 265–6, 276–7, (25.11.2009) 564, 568, 583
Questions
Government departments, Land Registry 320w
Higher education, Historic buildings 29–31w
Population 166w
Poverty, Children 271w
Royal Fleet Auxiliary 294w

Field, Mr Mark
Chamber Debates
Financial institutions, EC action (01.12.2009) 995, 998–9, 1005
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 877, 922–7
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 719, 727, 741, 770–3
Westminster Hall Debates
Higher education (01.12.2009) 7–8wh, 13–7wh

Fifteen minutes rule
Rulings and statements (03.12.2009) 1329

Fiji
Politics and government 423–4w

Financial institutions
EC action (01.12.2009) 989–1030
Taxation 810w

Financial services
810w
EC action 230w
Education 370–1w
Pay 810w
Regulation 144w

Financial Services Bill 2009–10
Chamber Debates
1R (19.11.2009) 142
2R, Programme motion, Money res* and Ways and means res* (30.11.2009) 872–941

Financial Services Compensation Scheme
1–3ws

Fines
Surcharges 329–31w

Fingerprints
Databases 675w

Fire prevention
Rented housing 12w

Fire Service College
Public relations 779w

Fire services
Floods 779–80w

Firearms
Crime 675–6w
Police 491w
Smuggling 689w

Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997
Questions
675w

Fires
Atherstone on Stour 391w, 677w, 780w
Death 780–3w

First Capital Connect
Industrial disputes 768w

First time buyers
Norwich 784w

Fisheries
(01.12.2009) 1040–77
British Indian Ocean Territory 302w
Somalia 430–1w

Fitzpatrick, Jim, Minister of State, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs*
Westminster Hall Debates
Origin marking, Israel (02.12.2009) 104–6wh
Questions
Agriculture, Subsidies 382w, 729w
Dogs, Electric shock equipment 137–8w
Farmers, Poverty 621–2w
Food supply 573w
Genetically modified organisms, Food 138w
Horses, Animal welfare 137w
Hunting, Employment 386w
Livestock, Antibiotics 730w
Origin marking, Israel 257w
Pets, Animal welfare 575w
Pets, Shops 138–9w
Poultry, Animal welfare 730–1w
Wildlife, Licensing 139–40w

Five minutes rule
Rulings and statements (01.12.2009) 1068

Flello, Robert
Chamber Debates
Inland waterways (30.11.2009) 947
Questions
Schools, Stoke on Trent 825

Fletcher, Yvonne
692–3w

Flexible working 532

Flood and Water Management Bill 2009–10
Chamber Debates
1R (19.11.2009) 143
Written Statements
7–9ws

Flood control
233–5w

Floods
Cumbria 500–1w, 523–4, 530, 601w, 643w, 849w, 1105
Finance 785w
Fire services 779–80w
Housing 859w
Military aid 111ws
Ministerial statements (23.11.2009) 251–60
Property development 850w
Sellafield 822–3w
Warnings 385–6w

Flynn, Paul
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 264, 277, 290, 342, 349–52, 370
Questions
Nuclear power stations, Cumbria 715–6w

Flynn, Paul—continued*
Sellafield 928w

Follett, Barbara, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State and Minister for the East of England, Dept for Communities and Local Government*
Written Statements
Local government finance 87–8ws
Questions
Assets, Dept for Communities and Local Government 778w
Audit Commission, Fees and charges 10w
Bellwin scheme 643–4w
Buildings, Dept for Communities and Local Government 849w
Business, Kent 523w
Capita, Dept for Communities and Local Government 641w, 777w
Christmas, Dept for Communities and Local Government 64–5w
Community development 173w
Consultants, Dept for Communities and Local Government 778w
Contracts, Dept for Communities and Local Government 498w
Cost effectiveness, Dept for Communities and Local Government 646–7w
Council tax, Yate 13w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Communities and Local Government 498w
Disclosure of information, Dept for Communities and Local Government 66w
Domestic visits, Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Driving, Dept for Communities and Local Government 499–500w
Floods, Cumbria 643w
Food, Dept for Communities and Local Government 68w
Housing, Yate 522w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Dept for Communities and Local Government 522w
Improvement and Development Agency for Local Government 784w
Information officers, Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Internet, Dept for Communities and Local Government 778w
KBR, Dept for Communities and Local Government 785w
Legal costs, Dept for Communities and Local Government 177–8w
Legislation, Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Leisure, Finance 523w
Local government, Pay 11w, 13–4w
Local government, Pensions 178–82w, 523–4w
Local government finance, Bexley 785–6w
Local government finance, Croydon 647w
Local government finance, Kent 645–6w
Lost property, Dept for Communities and Local Government 11–2w
Neighbourhood wardens 524w
Non-domestic rates 312–3w, 786–7w
Non-domestic rates, Banks 313w
Non-domestic rates, Empty property 313w, 524–5w
Official cars, Dept for Communities and Local Government 66w
Official hospitality, Dept for Communities and Local Government 12w, 65–6w

Follett, Barbara, —continued
Pay, Dept for Communities and Local Government 11w, 66w, 309w
Public expenditure, Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Railways, Dept for Communities and Local Government 66w
Recruitment, Dept for Communities and Local Government 173w
Recycling, Dept for Communities and Local Government 67w
Regeneration, Kent 850w
Taxis, Dept for Communities and Local Government 67–8w, 499w
Theft, Dept for Communities and Local Government 11w
Training, Dept for Communities and Local Government 499w
Travel, Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Travellers, Caravan sites 525w
Working hours, Dept for Communities and Local Government 309w
Written questions, Dept for Communities and Local Government 10–1w

Food
Armed forces 290w
Cabinet Office 451w
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 232w
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 219–21w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 68w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 48w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 256–7w
Dept for International Development 225w
Dept for Work and Pensions 388w
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 79–80w
Dept of Health 348–50w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 159–60w
Genetically modified organisms 138w, 534–5w
Home Office 469w
Ministry of Defence 291w
Northern Ireland Office 157w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w
Scotland Office 380w
Treasury 142–3w
Waste 859–60w

Food aid
Somalia 252w

Food supply
573w

Football
Young people 4w

Forbes Inquiry
see Al-Sweady Inquiry

Forced marriage
424w

Foreign and Commonwealth Office
British Petroleum 625–6w
Christmas 159w
Consultants 879–80w
Contracts 421w
Departmental responsibilities 422w, 968
Devolution 733w
Disclosure of information 166w
Driving 733–4w
Food 159–60w
Immobilisation of vehicles 735w
Internet 303w, 421–2w

Foreign and Commonwealth Office —continued
KBR 880w
Legal costs 160w
Legislation 627w
Official cars 55w
Official hospitality 305w
Pay 160–1w, 303–4w
Public expenditure 422w
Railways 161w
Recycling 161–2w
Scientists 627w
Shell 634w
Supply estimates 50–1ws
Taxis 423w
Theft 161w
Training 423w
Working hours 304w

Foreign investment
Hungary 555w

Foreign investment in UK
Norwich 982w

Foreign nationals
Prisoners 444–8w, 484–5w
Prisoners' release 966–7
Youth custody 485w

Foreign policy
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 262–372

Foreign relations
Iran 968–9
Japan 970
United Arab Emirates 165–6w

Foreign workers
482–4w, 488w, 699–702w, 813–4w
Doctors 890–2w
Immigration controls 58–60ws
Nurses 890–2w

Forests
730w

Forgery
Coinage 948w

Foster, Mr Don
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 26
Questions
Cancer 454w
Gambling 724w
Gambling, Tax yields 371w
Gaming machines 273–4w
Sport England, Finance 275–8w
Sports 378w
Sports, Females 378w

Foster, Mr Michael (Worcester), Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for International Development
Written Statements
Sri Lanka, Internally displaced people 61–3ws
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 1095–6
Capita, Dept for International Development 755w
Contracts, Dept for International Development 755–6w
Cost effectiveness, Dept for International Development 224–5w
Developing countries, Disabled 757w
Developing countries, Education 918–9w
Developing countries, Family planning 433–4w
Developing countries, Health services 919w
Developing countries, HIV infection 754–5w, 919–20w

Foster, Mr Michael —continued
Developing countries, Infant mortality 920w
Developing countries, Maternal mortality 922w
Developing countries, Secondary education 228–9w
Developing countries, Tuberculosis 921w, 1091–2
Driving, Dept for International Development 434w
Food, Dept for International Development 225w
Global Fund to Fight AIDS Tuberculosis and Malaria 229w
Halo Trust, Dept for International Development 229w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Dept for International Development 757w
Internet, Dept for International Development 432w, 606–7w
Latin America, Overseas aid 55w
Overseas aid 56w
Pakistan, Internally displaced people 754w
Palestinians, Overseas aid 435w
Palestinians, Utilities 435–6w
Pay, Dept for International Development 226w
Public relations, Dept for International Development 607w
Recruitment, Dept for International Development 249w
Recycling, Dept for International Development 250w
Scientists, Dept for International Development 433w
Sri Lanka, Internally displaced people 56w
Sri Lanka, Overseas aid 755w
Taxis, Dept for International Development 756–7w
UN Population Fund 436w
United Nations, Females 27w, 607w
Working hours, Dept for International Development 250–1w

Foster, Mr Michael Jabez (Hastings and Rye), Parliamentary Secretary to the Government Equalities Office
Questions
Age, Discrimination 1280
Aviation, Government Equalities Office 395–6w
Climate change, Government Equalities Office 56–7w
Equality Bill 2008–09 then 2009–10 873–4w
Hotels, Government Equalities Office 57w
Internet, Government Equalities Office 396w, 873w
Official cars, Government Equalities Office 57w
Pay, Government Equalities Office 57w
Training, Government Equalities Office 57w
Working hours, Government Equalities Office 57w

Foundation degrees
Further education 985–6w

Fox, Dr Liam
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 364–8
Questions
Joint rapid reaction force 908–9w
Public expenditure, Ministry of Defence 910–1w

Framework powers
Children, Schools and Families Bill 2009–10 75ws

France
Immigration controls 893w

Franchises
East coast railway line 73ws
London Tilbury and Southend line 73ws
Railways 7w, 100ws, 568w, 869w, 1275–6

Francois, Mr Mark
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1313–24, 1329–30, 1334, 1337, 1373–4
Questions
Cyprus, Politics and government 954
EC budget 960–1

Fraser, Christopher
Chamber Debates
Financial institutions, EC action (01.12.2009) 996, 1011, 1015, 1020–2, 1024
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 904, 907, 911, 915
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 475
Questions
Business questions 691

Fraud
Prosecutions 131w

Freedom of information
Government departments 440w (503 5–6mc)

Freight
982–4w
Railways 409w

Fuel poverty
83w, 925–7w
Pensioners 819–20w
Wales 714–5w

Fuels
Aviation 261w
Motor vehicles 267w
Railways 571w

Furs
China 8w
Imports 75w

Further education
Foundation degrees 985–6w

Future Jobs Fund
Scotland 519–20

Futurebuilders England
Public relations 701w

G6
11–2ws

Gaddafi, Saif al-Islam
638w

Gale, Mr Roger
Questions
Holiday accommodation, Farms 853w

Gambling
724w
Tax yields 371w

Gambling Commission
168–9w

Gaming machines
273–4w
Tax yields 949w

Gapes, Mike
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 842
European Union (03.12.2009) 1339

Gapes, Mike*—*continued
King George Hospital Ilford (24.11.2009) 506–10
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 281, 295–8
Questions
Departmental responsibilities, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 968
Iran, Foreign relations 968–9

Gardiner, Mr Barry
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 80, 86, 112–7
Questions
India, Terrorism 970–1
Stop and search, Greater London 493w

Garnier, Mr Edward
Questions
Attorney General 668
National Offender Management Service, Consultants 332w
Pipelines, Market Harborough 393–4w
Probation, Expenditure 341–2w

Gas supply
see Natural gas

Gaza
see Palestinians

GCE A-level
95–6w
Children in care 914–5w

GCSE
95–7w, 836w
Children in care 914–5w
Disadvantaged 399w

General elections
664–5

General practitioners
East of England 533–4w
Staffordshire 534w

Generic Financial Advice Review
144–5w

Genetically modified organisms
353w
Crops 573–4w
Food 138w, 534–5w
Research 654–5w

Geneva Conventions
Peacekeeping operations 726–7w

George, Andrew
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1045, 1059–62
Questions
British Indian Ocean Territory, Environment protection 301–2w, 625w
British Indian Ocean Territory, Fisheries 302w
Capital gains tax, Second homes 600w, 947w
Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Primary Care Trust, Finance 529–30w
Developing countries, Health services 919w
Developing countries, HIV infection 919–20w
Developing countries, Infant mortality 920w
Developing countries, Maternal mortality 922w
Developing countries, Tuberculosis 921w
Elgin Marbles 376–7w
Global Fund to Fight AIDS Tuberculosis and Malaria 921–2w
Local government 312w
Local government, Cornwall 308w, 312w
NHS, Finance 660w

George, Andrew*—*continued
Public expenditure 371–2w

Gerrard, Mr Neil
Questions
Aviation, Waltham Forest 567w

Ghana Telecom
Vodafone Group 578w

Gibb, Mr Nick
Questions
National curriculum tests 817–8

Gibraltar
Politics and government 162w

Gidley, Sandra
Questions
Bankruptcy, Hampshire 74w
Children, Day care 829–30w
DNA, Databases 894–6w
Injuries, Offensive weapons 540w
Non-domestic rates, Empty property 524–5w
Students, Loans 296–9w
Surgery, Negligence 357–8w
Swine flu, Vaccination 399

Gifted children
Cheshire 708w
Staffordshire 707–10w

Gilfoyle, Eddie
257–8w

Gillan, Mrs Cheryl
Questions
Accident and emergency departments, South East 526w
Extradition, USA 982
House of Commons annunciator system 567w
Members, Correspondence 428w
NHS, Redundancy 543w
Public expenditure, Dept of Health 531w (505 3mc)
Public expenditure, Wales 602w, 811w
Tax yields 602w
Warm front scheme 718w

Gilroy, Linda
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 17, (24.11.2009) 418, 436–7, 448–54, 501
Westminster Hall Debates
Industrial diseases, Compensation (02.12.2009) 139–41wh
Questions
Building schools for the future programme, Plymouth 822

Glasgow Airport
Railways 1273

Global Fund to Fight AIDS Tuberculosis and Malaria
229w, 921–2w

Gloucestershire
A417 1268

Goggins, Rt Hon Paul, Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office
Questions
Abortion, Northern Ireland 865w
Administration of justice, Northern Ireland 157w
Capita, Northern Ireland Office 865–6w
Climate change, Northern Ireland Office 282w
Contracts, Northern Ireland Office 866w
Cost effectiveness, Northern Ireland Office 597–8w
Disabled, Northern Ireland Office 866w
Disclosure of information, Northern Ireland Office 366–7w

Goggins, Rt Hon Paul —continued
Equal pay, Northern Ireland Office 367w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Northern Ireland Office 599w
Internet, Northern Ireland Office 598w
New deal for young people, Northern Ireland 867w
Pay, Northern Ireland Office 282w
Plants, Northern Ireland Office 866–7w
Police, Northern Ireland 599w, 757–8w
Police stations, Northern Ireland 5w
Prisons, Mobile phones 758w
Recruitment, Northern Ireland Office 367–8w
Taxis, Northern Ireland Office 598–9w
Working hours, Northern Ireland Office 368w

Goldsworthy, Julia
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 775–8
Questions
Business, Government assistance 554–5w
Health services, Cornwall 400
UK Border Agency, Telephone services 130w

Goodman, Helen, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Work and Pensions
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 634
Questions
Bereavement benefits 157–8w
Children, Maintenance 616w
Disability living allowance, Children 617w
Disability living allowance, Lone parents 617–8w
Housing benefit 390–1w, 771–3w
Housing benefit, Newcastle upon Tyne 773–4w
Housing benefit, Norwich 158w
Members, Correspondence 619w
Mortgages, Government assistance 393w
Poverty 619–20w
Poverty, Children 271w, 387w, 620–1w, 694w
Social security benefits, Lone parents 877w

Goodman, Mr Paul
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 197–201
Questions
Childbirth, Buckinghamshire 550w
Members, Correspondence 427–8w

Goodwill, Robert
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1298–9, 1307, 1327, 1333–4, 1337, 1360–4
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1043
Questions
Equality and Human Rights Commission 872–3w
Repatriation, Cameroon 897w
Roads, Accidents 1269

Gove, Michael
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 156–68, 183, 227
Questions
Education, Disadvantaged 813
GCSE 836w
National curriculum tests 836–7w
Schools 809–10

Government Communications
701w

Government departments
Advertising 973w
Carbon emissions 927w
Freedom of information 440w (503 5–6mc)
Land Registry 320w
Official hospitality 319–20w
Public relations 973–4w

Government Equalities Office
Aviation 395–6w
Climate change 56–7w
Hotels 57w
Internet 396w, 873w
Official cars 57w
Pay 57w
Supply estimates 75–6ws
Training 57w
Working hours 57w

Government Hospitality
162–3w

Government of the National Assembly for Wales see Welsh Assembly Government

Government Olympic Executive London Development Agency 4w

Government responses
Written questions 37w, 258w, 675–7

Government securities
Islam 145w

Government Strategic Marketing Advisory Board
702w

Gray, Mr James
Questions
Badgers, Animal welfare 729–30w
Electricity 401–2w
Hercules aircraft, Training 612w
Multiple sclerosis, Drugs 194w

Grayling, Chris
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 560–70, 572, 577, 579, 589, 592
Questions
Arrest warrants 749–50w

Great Tey School Colchester
828–9

Greater London
Aviation 264–5w
Primary education 841w
Stop and search 493w
Temporary accommodation 14–5w

Greater London Select Committee see London Select Committee

Greater Manchester
Identity cards 279w
Prison sentences 335–8w
Schools 396w

Green, Mr Damian
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 581
Questions
Armed forces, Injuries 901w
Asylum, Legal aid 239–40w, 441wh
Databases, Home Office 887w
Deportation 465–6w, 473w, 475–6w, 673w
Deportation, Offenders 483–4w
Extradition, USA 978–9
Firearms, Smuggling 689w
Foreign nationals, Prisoners 446–8w, 484–5w
Foreign nationals, Youth custody 485w
Identity cards, Expenditure 487w
Manpower, Home Office 493w
Opinion polls, Home Office 279–80w

Green, Mr Damian —continued
Remittances 251w
Security, Home Office 208w
Serious Organised Crime Agency 688–9w
Terrorism, Police interrogation 493–4w
UK Border Agency 495–6w

Green belt
Property development 783w

Greening, Justine
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 723
Questions
Non-domestic rates 312–3w, 786–7w
Non-domestic rates, Empty property 313w

Grieve, Mr Dominic
Chamber Debates
Sri Lanka, Petitions (01.12.2009) 1079–80

Griffith, Nia
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 416, 459–62
Questions
Nuclear weapons, Proliferation 623w

Grogan, Mr John
Chamber Debates
Floods, Cumbria (23.11.2009) 260

Group of Six see G6

Guardianship
96–7w, 802–4w

Gulf States
EC external trade 424–5w

Gummer, Rt Hon John
Questions
Open prisons 800w
Prisoner escapes 801w
Prisoner escapes, Hollesley Bay Prison 795–7w
Prisoners' transfers 882w

Gurkhas
Immigration 209w, 284–5w, 485w

Gwynne, Andrew
Questions
Iran, Nuclear power 964–5
Middle East, Peace negotiations 624w

Hadleigh (Essex)
Petitions (30.11.2009) 942–3

Hague, Rt Hon William
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 274–85, 292
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 300w
Afghanistan, Reconstruction 432w
Entry clearances 479–80w
Gulf States, EC external trade 424–5w
International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia 306w
Iran, Arms control 629w, 735w
Israel, Arms control 425w
Kosovo, Politics and government 426w
Middle East, Armed conflict 305w, 429–30w
Pakistan, Dual nationality 478w
Palestinians, Overseas aid 435w
Palestinians, Utilities 435–6w
Somalia, Fisheries 430–1w
Somalia, Piracy 165w
United Arab Emirates, Foreign relations 165–6w

Hague, Rt Hon William*—*continued
Yemen, Peace negotiations 306–7w

Hain, Rt Hon Peter, Secretary of State for Wales
Written Statements
Children, Schools and Families Bill 2009–10, Framework powers 75ws
Legislation, Wales 18–9ws
Public expenditure, Wales 101ws
Welsh Assembly Government, Supply estimates 74–5ws
Questions
Aviation, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 155w
Christmas, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 155w
Climate change, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 155w
Consultants, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 571w
Contracts, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 872w
Cost effectiveness, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 155w
Departmental responsibilities, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w
Disclosure of information, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 50w
Food, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 572w
Information officers, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 571w
Internet, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w, 769w
Official cars, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 50w
Pay, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w, 282–3w, 769w
Public expenditure, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 571–2w, 769–70w
Railways, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w
Scientists, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 157w
Taxis, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 50w, 770w
Theft, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 283w
Travel, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 572w
Work experience, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 872w
Working hours, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 283w

Halifax Bank of Scotland
79–80ws

Halo Trust
Dept for International Development 229w

Hammond, Mr Philip
Questions
Christmas, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 721–2w
Pay, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 769w

Hammond, Stephen
Chamber Debates
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 883–4, 905–10, 935
Questions
Bus services, Concessions 1270–1
Integrated Transport Smartcard Organisation, Expenditure 60w
Rolling stock 63w

Hammond, Stephen*—*continued
Rolling stock, Thameslink railway line 63–4w

Hampshire
Bankruptcy 74w

Hampstead
Welfare tax credits 950w

Hancock, Mr Mike
Chamber Debates
Equitable Life Assurance Society, Petitions (25.11.2009) 645

Hands, Greg
Questions
Antisocial behaviour orders, Children 829w
Members, Correspondence 601w
Official hospitality, Prime Minister 366w

Hanslope Park
8–9w, 628w

Hanson, Rt Hon David, Minister of State, Home Office
Written Statements
Police, Finance 91–6ws
Questions
Assaults on police 663–5w
Assaults on police, Bedfordshire 686–7w
Blair, Rt Hon Tony, Security 494w
Counter-terrorism 690w
Counter-terrorism, International cooperation 476w
Fires, Atherstone on Stour 677w
Fletcher, Yvonne 692–3w
Intelligence services, Human rights 209–10w
Intercept as Evidence Review 489–90w
Internet, Security 489w
Motor vehicles, Seized articles 894w
101 calls 197w
Police, Databases 687w
Police, Firearms 491w
Police, Lancashire 491–2w
Police, Manpower 214w
Police, Marketing 492–3w
Police, Newark 128–9w
Police, Pay 38w, 214w
Police, Road traffic control 279w, 687w
Police, Standards 214w, 896w
Police, Sussex 215w
Police custody, Hemel Hempstead 280w
Radicalism 688w
Roads, Accidents 688w
Security guards 213–4w
Stop and search, Greater London 493w
Surveillance 752–4w
Terrorism, Police interrogation 217w, 493–4w
Tomlinson, Ian 277–8w

Haringey
Social services 222w

Harman, Rt Hon Harriet, Leader of the House of Commons, Lord Privy Seal, Secretary of State for Equality and Minister for Women
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, 1R and 2R° (19.11.2009) 142
Oral question time intervention (26.11.2009) 673
Points of order intervention (26.11.2009) 699
Written Statements
Legislation 13–4ws
Questions
Business statements 127–40, 681–98, 1283–96

Harman, Rt Hon Harriet,*—*continued
Females, Human trafficking 1276–9

Harper, Mark
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Points of order (25.11.2009) 559
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1148, 1183–91
European Union (03.12.2009) 1297–9, 1309–10, 1312, 1319, 1332, 1334, 1348–9, 1353, 1358, 1377–81
Questions
Business questions 696–7
Disability living allowance, Children 617w
Employment schemes, Disabled 875–6w
Euthanasia, Prosecutions 665–6
Members, Allowances 675
Social security benefits, Older people 622w
Social services 388

Harris, Dr Evan
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Points of order (24.11.2009) 404, (26.11.2009) 701–2, (02.12.2009) 1110
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1167–8, 1184, 1187, 1189–90, 1192–200, 1225
Questions
Business questions 136–7, 698, 1290
Equality Bill 2008–09 then 2009–10 873–4w
Members, Correspondence 428w
Monarchy, Succession 532
Schools, Inspections 819–20
Timetabling of bills 678

Harris, Mr Tom
Questions
Members, Domicil 1106

Harvey, Nick
Westminster Hall Debates
House of Commons Commission (03.12.2009) 147–9wh, 160–4wh
Questions
Almshouses 851w
Armed forces, Housing 290w, 411w
Armed forces, Marital status 899–902w
Defence Medical Services, Manpower 906–7w
Exservicemen, Radiation exposure 293w
House of Commons, Energy 679–80
House of Commons announciator system 567w
House of Commons chamber, Audio equipment 677
Members, Allowances 47w
Rescue services, Contracts 910w
Uranium 911w
Uzbekistan, Arms control 738w

Havard, Mr Dai
Questions
Civil servants, Pensions 1106–7

Havering Sixth Form College 826

Hayes, Mr John
Westminster Hall Debates
Higher education (01.12.2009) 17wh, 20–4wh
Questions
European Commission, Oaths and affirmations 735w
Food supply 573w
Foreign workers 813–4w
Official gifts, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 556w

Hayes, Mr John —continued
South Africa, Chess 634w

Haywood Engineering College
810–1

Heald, Mr Oliver
Questions
Aviation, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 95w
Aviation, Government Equalities Office 595–6w
Business questions 135–6
Consultants, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 913w
Consultants, Dept for Communities and Local Government 778w
Consultants, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 857w
Consultants, Dept for International Development 917w
Consultants, Dept of Health 652w
Consultants, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 879–80w
Consultants, Home Office 886w
Consultants, Ministry of Defence 907w
Consultants, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 571w
Consultants, Scotland Office 380w
Consultants, Treasury 948w
Hotels, Government Equalities Office 57w
Information officers, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 834w
Information officers, Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Information officers, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 722w
Information officers, Dept for International Development 918w
Information officers, Dept of Health 742w
Information officers, Ministry of Defence 908w
Information officers, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 571w
Information officers, Scotland Office 592w
Internet, Cabinet Office 604–5w
Internet, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 834w
Internet, Dept for Communities and Local Government 778w
Internet, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 375w
Internet, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 858w
Internet, Dept for International Development 432w, 606–7w
Internet, Dept for Transport 406w, 762w
Internet, Dept of Health 350w
Internet, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 301w, 421–2w
Internet, Government Equalities Office 596w, 871w
Internet, Home Office 673w
Internet, Ministry of Defence 610–1w, 729w
Internet, Ministry of Justice 580–1w
Internet, Northern Ireland Office 367w, 598w
Internet, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w, 769w
Internet, Scotland Office 592w
Internet, Treasury 807w
Official cars, Cabinet Office 452w
Official cars, Government Equalities Office 57w
Official hospitality, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 636w
Public expenditure, Cabinet Office 826w
Heald, Mr Oliver —continued
Public expenditure, Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Public expenditure, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 594w
Public expenditure, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 858w
Public expenditure, Dept for International Development 756w
Public expenditure, Dept for Transport 761–2w
Public expenditure, Dept of Health 653w
Public expenditure, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 422w
Public expenditure, Ministry of Defence 612w
Public expenditure, Ministry of Justice 882w
Public expenditure, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 571–2w
Public expenditure, Scotland Office 760w
Security, Scotland Office 760w

Healey, Rt Hon John, Minister of State, Dept for Communities and Local Government
Written Statements
Affordable housing, Rural areas 86–7ws
Buildings, Carbon emissions 42–4ws
Eco-towns 119–20ws
Housing and planning delivery grant 120ws
Questions
Affordable housing 64w, 70–2w, 310–1w, 497w, 501–2w, 640w
Climate change, Dept for Communities and Local Government 65w
Contracts, Dept for Communities and Local Government 497w
Council housing, Finance 777w
Energy performance certificates 402w
English Partnerships, Public relations 849w
Home information packs 173–4w
Homes and Communities Agency 64w, 68–74w, 175–6w, 503–22w, 644w
Homes and Communities Agency, Secondment 644w
Housing, Bristol 520–1w
Housing, Construction 176–7w, 523w
Housing, Hendon 645w
Mortgages, Government assistance 69–70w, 181–2w, 524w
National policy statements, Nuclear power 403w
Recruitment, Dept for Communities and Local Government 498w
Shared ownership schemes, East of England 647–8w
Tenant Services Authority 73–4w, 514w, 521–2w
Tenant Services Authority, Information and communications technology 173w
Tenant Services Authority, Public relations 649w
Tenant Services Authority, Secondment 851w

Health
Children 353w
Iraq 163w
Screening 24w, 107–8w, 193w

Health education
Donors 397w, (03.12.2009) 1302–8

Health hazards
Incinerators 104w, 539w
Mobile phones 25w
Wi-fi 743–4p

Health professions
Regulation 935–6w

Health services
Afghanistan 247w
Arthritis 106w
Bolton 400
Cancer 106w, 345–7w
Cornwall 400
Dementia 102–3w
Developing countries 919w
East of England 654w
Human trafficking 385–6
Learning disability 354w
Obesity 544–6w
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 144–242
Staffordshire 398
Tuberculosis 105w

Health visitors
Manpower 394–5, 938w

Heart diseases
Children 743w

Heath, Mr David
Chamber Debates
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 873
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1236–9, 1242–3
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 870
Westminster Hall Debates
House of Commons Commission (03.12.2009) 149–51wh, 153wh, 157wh
Questions
Business questions 130–2, 1286–8

Heathcoat-Amory, Rt Hon David
Chamber Debates
Financial institutions, EC action (01.12.2009) 992, 994, 1003
Questions
EC budget 100–1w, 958–9
EC law 734–5w
Pyramid selling 724w
Roads, Lighting 869w

Heathrow Airport
407w
Railways 1274

Heating
Carbon emissions 712w
Housing 12w
Mobile homes 80–1w

Helicopters
Accidents 59–60w
Military aircraft 909w

Helmets
Cycling 1273

Hemel Hempstead
Police custody 280w

Hemming, John
Chamber Debates
Home Education Independent Review, Petitions (01.12.2009) 1080
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 40, 98, 92–9

Henderson, Mr Doug
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 759–62

Hendon
Housing 645w

Hendry, Mr Charles
Questions
Carbon emissions 816w
Carbon emissions, Government departments 927w
Carbon emissions: Housing 713w

Hendry, Mr Charles —continued
Climate change, Research 816–7w
Electricity generation 818–9w
Exhaust emissions, Motor vehicles 760–1w
Fuel poverty, Pensioners 819–20w
Manpower, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 817–8w
Natural gas, Billing 925w
Official hospitality, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 714w
Power stations, Construction 716w
Power stations, EC law 716–7w
Renewable energy 822w

Hepatitis
24–5w

Hepburn, Mr Stephen
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 573, 577, 647–9

Herbal medicine
193w
Regulation 743w

Herbert, Nick
Chamber Debates
Floods, Cumbria (23.11.2009) 253–4
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 496–500

Hercules aircraft
Training 612w

Herefordshire
Broadband 554w

Hermon, Lady
Questions
Nigeria, Children 736w
Prisons, Mobile phones 758w

Hezbollah
632w

High court
Judges 83–4ws

High Representative for Common Foreign and Security Policy
see EU High Representative for Common Foreign and Security Policy

Higher education
(01.12.2009) 1–25wh
Admissions 983–4w, 986w
Agriculture 984w
Antisemitism 557w
Bexley 29w
Finance 558–60w, 984w
Historic buildings 29–31w
Italy 631–2w
Per capita costs 985w
Qualifications 31–2w
Research 638w

Higher Education and Student Finance Independent Review
985w

Highway Code
Cycling 870w

Hillier, Meg, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Home Office
Written Statements
EU Justice and Home Affairs Council 97–9ws
Identity and Passport Service 97ws
Identity cards 11ws
Questions
Animal experiments, Rabbits 277w
Animal experiments, Wickham Research Laboratories 661w, 749w

Hillier, Meg, —continued
Criminal Records Bureau, Contracts 750–1w
Dual nationality, Pakistan 670w
EC law 734–5w
Identity cards 278–9w
Identity cards, Greater Manchester 279w
National identity register 490–1w
Passports 491w

Hindhead
A3 259w

Hip replacements
Sports 108w

Historic buildings
Higher education 29–31w

History
Education 221w, 821–2, 830

HIV infection
537–8w
Developing countries 754–5w, 919–20w

Hizb ut Tahrir
524–6

HM Courts Service
Databases 238–9w
Manpower 439–41w

HM Inspectorate of Prisons
Public appointments 134–5ws

HM Land Registry
see Land Registry

HM Prison Service
see Prison Service

HM Revenue and Customs
see Revenue and Customs

Hoban, Mr Mark
Chamber Debates
Financial institutions, EC action (01.12.2009) 992, 996–1008, 1010–1, 1024
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 929–33

Hodge, Rt Hon Margaret, Minister of State, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport
Written Statements
Legal deposit 109–10ws
Questions
Arts Council of England 272w, 374w
Coastal areas, Finance 272w
Elgin Marbles 370–7w
Holiday accommodation, Farms 853w
Museums and galleries 853w
Public libraries, Wirral 171w, 854w
Tourism 171w
Tourism, VAT 855w
Tourism, West Midlands 379w

Hoey, Miss Kate
Questions
Extradition, USA 982–3

Hogg, Rt Hon Douglas
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 851
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1226
Questions
Business questions 135, 660, 1290–1
Extradition, USA 985
Timetabling of bills 678

Holiday accommodation
Farms 853w
Taxation 17w, 603–4w

Hollesley Bay Prison
Prisoner escapes 795–7w

Hollobone, Philip
Chamber Debates
Donors, Health education (03.12.2009) 1392–5
European Union (03.12.2009) 1304–5
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 606w
Bus services, Concessions 1270
Business questions 140, 696, 1296
Donors, Health education 397w
Donors, Organs 104w, 396
Equal opportunities, Teachers 1280–2
Falkland Islands, Sovereignty 961
Licensing laws 50w
National Audit Office 365w
Road signs and markings, Bridges 133–4w
Westminster Hall sittings 258–9w

Holloway, Adam
Questions
Drugs, Misuse 661w
Forced marriage 424w

Holmes, Paul
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 435, (25.11.2009) 580, 588
Questions
Academies, Standards 93w
Asylum 665w
Asylum, Employment 750w
Business questions 695
Derbyshire County Primary Care Trust, Manpower 934–5w
Health visitors, Manpower 938w
Incinerators, Health hazards 539w
Mental health services 392
Oils, Waste disposal 863w
United Church Schools Trust 100w

Home care services
82–3ws

Home education
825

Home Education Independent Review
Petitions (30.11.2009) 7–9p, (01.12.2009) 9–10p, (02.12.2009) 11–3p, (03.12.2009) 15–6p, (01.12.2009) 1080, (02.12.2009) 1250–1, (03.12.2009) 1391

Home information packs
173–4w

Home Office
Christmas 467w
Climate change 467w
Consultants 886w
Contracts 886–7w
Cost effectiveness 468w
Crime 665–6w
Databases 468w, 887w
Energy 208w
Food 469w
Information and communications technology 469–70w
Internet 673w
Local government 210–2w
Manpower 493w
Opinion polls 279–80w
Pay 470w
Recruitment 470–2w
Recycling 471w
Security 208w
Statistics 471w
Supply estimates 60–1ws
Taxis 887w
Training 887–8w
Working hours 471–4w

Homelessness
310w, 783–4w
South East 174–5w

Homeopathy
938w

Homes and Communities Agency
64w, 68–74w, 175–6w, 503–22w, 644w
Information and communications technology 173w
Secondment 644w

Homosexuality
Uganda 635w

Honduras
Elections 973

Hood, Mr Jim
Questions
Broadband, Scotland 514–5

Hope, Phil, Minister of State and Minister for the East Midlands, Dept of Health*
Chamber Debates
Nurses, Training (18.11.2009) 123–6
Westminster Hall Debates
Alcoholic drinks, Misuse (01.12.2009) 59wh, 63–6wh
Written Statements
Diversion of Individuals with Mental Health Problems from the Criminal Justice System and Prison Review 10–1ws
Home care services 82–3ws
Questions
Antibiotics 23w
Asperger's syndrome, Screening 401–2
Assets, Dept of Health 530–2w
Attendance allowance 527w
Buildings, Dept of Health 933w
Cancer, Health services 106w
Capita, Dept of Health 931–2w
Care homes, Fees and charges 397
Care Standards Act 2000, Prosecutions 529w
Christmas, Dept of Health 348–50w
Climate change, Dept of Health 188w
Compulsorily detained mental patients 398
Consultants, Dept of Health 652w
Contracts, Dept of Health 933–4w
Dementia, Health services 102–3w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept of Health 653w
Disclosure of information, Dept of Health 189w
Drugs, Prisons 340–1w
Employment agencies, Dept of Health 654w
Food, Dept of Health 348–50w
Health services, East of England 654w
Health services, Learning disability 354w
Hospices, Finance 938–9w
Hospital beds 939w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Dept of Health 539w
Information officers, Dept of Health 742w
Injuries, Offensive weapons 540w
Internet, Dept of Health 350w
KBR, Dept of Health 655w
Learning disability, Administration of justice 354w
Legal costs, Dept of Health 189w
Mental health 541w
Mental health, Unemployed people 356w
Mental health services 109w, 240w, 332w, 356w, 392–3, 943w
Mental health services, Per capita costs 331–2w

Hope, Phil, —continued*
Mental health services, Prisons 333–4w
Mental health services, South East 193w
Mental health services, Waiting lists 541w
Mentally ill, Children 542w, 744–5w
Mentally ill, Prisoners 542w
NHS, Accountability 389–90
North Central London Strategic Health Authority 25w
Official engagements, Dept of Health 934w
Pay, Dept of Health 189–90w, 350w
Public expenditure, Dept of Health 653w
Railways, Dept of Health 653w
Recruitment, Dept of Health 351w
Recycling, Dept of Health 190w
Scientists, Dept of Health 653w
Social services 103–4w, 548w
Social services, Older people 104w
Social services, Sight impaired 111–2w
Taxis, Dept of Health 351w, 653–4w
Theft, Dept of Health 190w
Townlands Hospital 26w
Travel, Dept of Health 742w
Whittington Hospital 26w
Working hours, Dept of Health 531–3w

Hopkins, Mr Kelvin
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1300, 1306–8, 1316, 1341, 1344–5, 1355–60, 1370, 1374, 1376

Horam, Mr John
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1375
Questions
Building regulations 644w

Hornsey
Ambulance service 105w

Horserace Totalisator Board
275w

Horses
Animal welfare 137w

Horwood, Martin
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 37–8, (24.11.2009) 451–2, 466–7, 489, 502–3
Questions
Carbon emissions, Housing 36w
Energy, Conservation 79w, 359w
Low carbon buildings programme 820–1w
Renewable energy 361–2w
Warm front scheme 362–3w

Hosie, Stewart
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 847
Financial institutions, EC action (01.12.2009) 991–2, 1006, 1009
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 877
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 713–4, 745, 762–4
Questions
Business questions 696

Hospices
Finance 938–9w

Hospital beds
939w

Hospitals
Cleaning services 939w
Construction 397
Crimes of violence 658–9w
Infectious diseases 103w, 538–9w
Liverpool 397
Parking 386–7

Hotels
Government Equalities Office 57w

House of Commons
Energy 679–80
Reform 529–30

House of Commons annunciator system
567w

House of Commons chamber
Audio equipment 677

House of Commons Commission
(03.12.2009) 147–64wh

House of Commons Liaison Committee (30.11.2009) 941

House of Commons Members' Fund
(23.11.2009) 372

House of Commons Modernisation Select Committee see Modernisation of the House of Commons Select Committee

Housing
519–20w
Armed forces 18–22w, 54w, 149–50w, 290w, 411w, 609w
Bristol 520–1w
Cambridgeshire 145w
Carbon emissions 35–6w, 712–3w
Construction 176–7w, 285w, 523w
Energy 645w, 784w
Floods 859w
Heating 12w
Hendon 645w
Insulation 81–2w
Milton Keynes 13w
Older people 521w
Overcrowding 183w, 311w
Owner occupation 311–2w
Valuation 145w
Yate 522w

Housing and planning delivery grant
120ws, 644w

Housing benefit
390–1w, 771–3w
Newcastle upon Tyne 773–4w
Norwich 158w

Howard, Rt Hon Michael
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1183, 1201–3
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 37–43
Questions
Taxation, Holiday accommodation 603–4w

Howarth, David
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1137, 1166, 1195
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1240
Westminster Hall Debates
Proportional representation (01.12.2009) 34wh, 36wh, 42–5wh, 49wh
Questions
Attorney General 667–8
Children, Maintenance 616w
Community justice centres, Finance 321w
Counter-terrorism 690w
Iran, Baha'i faith 630w
Police, Databases 687w
Police, Manpower 214w
Probation 441–2w
Radicalism 688w
Winter fuel payments 878w

Howarth, David —continued
Youth custody 246w

Howarth, Mr George
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 738–40

Howarth, Mr Gerald
Chamber Debates
Ministerial statement intervention (30.11.2009) 838
Questions
History, Education 821–2

Howell, John
Chamber Debates
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 914–20
Questions
Housing, Construction 176–7w
Planning permission, Appeals 14w, 525w
Townlands Hospital 26w
Unemployment, Scotland 521

Howells, Dr Kim
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 290, 302–6

Hoyle, Mr Lindsay
Chamber Debates
Inland waterways (30.11.2009) 949
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 406
Westminster Hall Debates
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 79wh, 88wh
Manufacturing industries (02.12.2009) 107–8wh, 112wh, 114wh, 118–22wh
Questions
Ambulance services, Crimes of violence 343w
Blackpool-Manchester railway line 1274–5
British overseas territories 974
Business questions 691, 1291
Child care vouchers 369w, 601w
Criminal injuries compensation 437w
Domestic violence, Prosecutions 868w
Educational psychology 819
Gibraltar, Politics and government 162w
Morocco, British nationality 9w
NHS, Drugs 534w
Overseas aid 56w
Police, Lancashire 491–2w
Population, Lancashire 454–6w
Primary care trusts, Finance 397
Primary education, Lancashire 98w
Schools, Asbestos 828
Students, Loans 76w
Sure start programme 98–9w
Sure start programme, Chorley 98w
Sure start programme, Lancashire 98w
Swine flu, Babies 358w

Hughes, Simon
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 23–4, 36, 39, (24.11.2009) 409, 429–36
Questions
Aviation, Cabinet Office 38w
Aviation, Dept for International Development 224w
Aviation, Dept for Transport 6w
Aviation, Government Equalities Office 395w
Aviation, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 155w
Aviation, Scotland Office 5w
Aviation, Solicitor-General 576w
Bribery Bill (HL) 2009–10 257w
Climate change, Cabinet Office 450w
Climate change, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 73–4w

Hughes, Simon —continued
Climate change, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 316w
Climate change, Dept for Communities and Local Government 65w
Climate change, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 1w
Climate change, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 856w
Climate change, Dept for International Development 432w
Climate change, Dept for Transport 263w
Climate change, Dept for Work and Pensions 6w
Climate change, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 21–2w, 36w
Climate change, Dept of Health 188w
Climate change, Government Equalities Office 56–7w
Climate change, Home Office 467w
Climate change, Ministry of Justice 83–4w
Climate change, Northern Ireland Office 282w
Climate change, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 155w
Climate change, Prime Minister 366w
Climate change, Solicitor-General 131w
Cyprus, Politics and government 953–4
Death, Weather 400
Health visitors, Manpower 394–5
London Underground, Repairs and maintenance 1275
Schools, Manpower 823

Huhne, Chris
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 34, 45, (25.11.2009) 562, 574, 586–93, 636
Questions
Building schools for the future programme, Sixth form colleges 916w
Children in care 704w
Crime, Home Office 665–6w
Databases, Home Office 468w
Deportation, Children 883–5w
Domestic violence 324–30w, 581–2w, 790w
Electronic tagging 799w
Extradition, USA 979–80
Fingerprints, Databases 675w
Gilfoyle, Eddie 257–8w
Legal aid 798w
Legislation, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 980w
Legislation, Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Legislation, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 924–5w
Legislation, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 627w
Legislation, Solicitor-General 867–8w
Legislation, Treasury 867–8w
Motorways, Noise 765w
Motorways, Repairs and maintenance 766w
Office for Criminal Justice Reform, Finance 84–5w, 334–6w
Olympic Games 2012, River Thames 365–6w
Police, Pay 492w
Prisons, Operating costs 802w
Prosecutions 131–2w
Prosecutions, Fraud 131w
Serious Fraud Office 578w
Vetting 753w
Young offender institutions 883–4w
Youth custody 591–2w

Hull and East Yorkshire Hospitals NHS Trust
Publications 108w

Human rights
Christianity 736w
Colombia 626w
Intelligence services 209–10w

Human trafficking
486w, 677w
Females 1276–9
Health services 385–6
Scotland 515–6
Somalia 165w

Hungary
Foreign investment 555w

Hunt, Jeremy
Questions
Broadband 976w
Buildings, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 1w
Christmas, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 1w
Coastal areas, Finance 272w
Conferences, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 271w
Horserace Totalisator Board 275w
Olympic Games 2012, Contracts 271–2w, 365w
Public libraries, Wirral 854w
Taxis, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 3w
Visits abroad, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 3w, 856w

Hunter, Mark
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 899w
Business questions 694
Cheadle Hulme Station 262w
Diabetes 351w
Social services, Sight impaired 111–2w
Stockport Station 271w
Telephone services, Fees and charges 76–7w, 299w

Hunting
677–8w
Employment 386w
Yorkshire and the Humber 441w

Hurd, Nick
Questions
Census 951–60w
Central Office of Information 961w
Community development 648–9w
Copyright 962w
Government Communications 701w
Government departments, Advertising 973w
Government Strategic Marketing Advisory Board 702w
Information officers, Cabinet Office 826–7w
Information officers, Prime Minister 701w
Marketing, Cabinet Office 971–2w
Media Monitoring Unit 975w
Ministers, Visits abroad 703w
Public relations, Audit Commission 640–1w
Public relations, Cabinet Office 972–3w
Public relations, Charity Commission 694w
Public relations, Dept for International Development 607w
Public relations, East Midlands Development Agency 981w
Public relations, English Partnerships 849w
Public relations, Fire Service College 779w

Hurd, Nick – continued
Public relations, Futurebuilders England 701w
Public relations, Government departments 973–4w
Public relations, Nuclear Decommissioning Authority 402–3w
Public relations, Science and Technology Facilities Council 989w
Public relations, South East England Development Agency 989w
Public relations, Tenant Services Authority 649w
Public relations, Thurrock Thames Gateway Development Corporation 788w
Public relations, United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority 404w
Telecommunications, Databases 828w

Hutton, Rt Hon John
Chamber Debates
Floods, Cumbria (23.11.2009) 257

Iddon, Dr Brian
Questions
Health services, Bolton 400
Hepatitis 24–5w
Mental health services 992
Middle East, Peace negotiations 972
Palestinians, Overseas aid 754w, 1000

Identity and Passport Service
97ws

Identity cards
Hws, 27ff–9w
Expenditure 487w
Greater Manchester 276w

Identity theft
see Personation

Illegal immigrants
487w

Illsley, Mr Eric
Questions
Afghanistan, Politics and government 961–2

Immigrants
Domestic violence 477–8w, 871w, 1279–80

Immigration
217–8w, 463–5w, 494w
Australia 207w
Bulgaria 453w
Gurkhas 209w, 284–5w, 485w
Romania 453w
Scotland 136w

Immigration controls
752w, 891–3w
Foreign workers 58–60ws
France 893w

Immobilisation of vehicles
128w, 209w, 489w
Cabinet Office 924w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 522w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 177w
Dept for International Development 752w
Dept of Health 539w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 735w
Ministry of Defence 612w
Northern Ireland Office 599w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 572w
Scotland Office 593w
Treasury 810w

Import controls
Tobacco 604–5w

Imports
Furs 75w

Improvement and Development Agency for Local Government
784w

Incapacity benefit
874–6w

Incinerators
Health hazards 104w, 539w

Income tax
Tax yields 145w

Incontinence
Children 539–40w
Medical equipment 655w

Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority
Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1234–49

Independent Review of Higher Education and Student Finance
see Higher Education and Student Finance Independent Review

India
Internally displaced people 969
Nuclear weapons 867w
Politics and government 425w
Religious freedom 425w, 628–9w
Terrorism 970–1

Industrial diseases
Compensation (02.12.2009) 138–46wh, 876–7w

Industrial disputes
827–8w
First Capital Connect 768w
Liverpool Prison 239w

Infant mortality
Developing countries 920w

Infectious diseases
Hospitals 103w, 538–9w

Influenza
655w

Information and communications technology
Home Office 469–70w
Homes and Communities Agency 173w
Ministry of Defence 415w
NHS 196w, 542–3w, 943w
Tenant Services Authority 173w

Information Commissioner
702w, 971w

Information officers
Cabinet Office 826–7w
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 834w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 722w
Dept for International Development 918w
Dept of Health 742w
Ministry of Defence 907–8w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 571w
Prime Minister 701w
Scotland Office 592w

Ingram, Rt Hon Adam
Questions
Public expenditure, Scotland 811w

Inheritance tax
1102

Injuries
Armed forces 152w, 287w, 931w

Injuries – continued
Bedfordshire 939–40w
Knives 940–2w
North East 940–2w
Offensive weapons 540w, 939–40w

Inland Revenue and Customs Service
see Revenue and Customs

Inland waterways
(30.11.2009) 944–52

Insolvency
32–3w, 561w
Complaints 814–5w
Fees and charges 34w, 75w
Licensing 34w

Insolvency Service
561–2w

Insulation
Housing 81–2w

Insurance
Driving offences 406w, 674w
Motor vehicles 568w

Integrated Transport Smartcard Organisation
Expenditure 60w

Intelligence services
431w
Human rights 209–10w

Intercept as Evidence Review
489–90w

Internally displaced people
India 969
Pakistan 754w
Sri Lanka 56w, 61–3ws

International assistance
Burma 974

International cooperation
Children 705w
Climate change 530–1, 969, 1104–6
Counter-terrorism 476w

International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia
806w

International organisations
Finance 633w

Internet
Cabinet Office 694–5w
Copyright 294w
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 28–9w
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 834w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 778w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 375w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 858w
Dept for International Development 432w, 606–7w
Dept for Transport 406w, 762w
Dept of Health 350w
East coast railway line 568w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 803w, 421–2w
Government Equalities Office 396w, 873w
Home Office 673w
Ministry of Defence 680–1w, 726w
Ministry of Justice 580–1w
Northern Ireland Office 487w, 598w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w, 769w
Scotland Office 592w
Security 489w
Treasury 807w

Invalid vehicles
263w
Accidents 264w

Investment Approvals Board
23w

Iran
Arms control 629w, 735w
Baha'i faith 630w
Capital punishment 629w
Foreign relations 968–9
Iraq 163–4w
Nuclear power 964–5
Press freedom 630w

Iraq
Asylum 466w
Health 163w
Iran 163–4w
Military aid 121ws
Peacekeeping operations 293w, 612–3w, 908w
Reconstruction 631–2w

Iraq Committee of Inquiry
527, 971–2, 974–5w

Iron and steel
27–8w

Irranca-Davies, Huw, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1040–8, 1055, 1066–8, 1076–7
Inland waterways (30.11.2009) 948–52
Westminster Hall Debates
Coastal erosion, Dredging (01.12.2009) 70–6wh
Written Statements
Office of Water Services, Supply estimates 49–50ws
Questions
Aggregates Levy Sustainability Fund 136–7w
Agriculture, Subsidies 731w
Badgers, Animal welfare 729–30w
Cetaceans, Japan 383w
Common land, Registration 254–6w
Dee estuary, Marine conservation zones 386–7w
Drinking water, Pollution control 573w
Flood control 233–5w
Floods, Warnings 385–6w
Forests 730w
Land drainage, Urban areas 574–5w
Members, Correspondence 257w
National parks authorities, Local government 387w
Nature conservation, Crime 137–8w
Public expenditure, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 858w
Rodents 731w
Rural development programme 381–2w
Sewers, Private sector 139w
Sewers, Rodents 731–2w
Water, Meters 732w
Water, Pipelines 732w
Wildlife, Facilities 139w

Islam
Boarding schools 820
Faith schools 915–6w
Government securities 145w

Isle of Wight
Driving tests 1273–4

Isles of Scilly
Local government 312w

Israel
Arms control 425w

Israel continued
Borders 425–6w, 623w, 631w
EC external trade 101w
Origin marking (02.12.2009) 100–6wh, 257w

Israeli-Palestinian conflict
see Middle East

Italy
Higher education 631–2w

Jack, Rt Hon Michael
Chamber Debates
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 865
Questions
Business questions 690–1

Jackson, Ms Glenda
Questions
Welfare tax credits, Hampstead 950w

Jackson, Stewart
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 84, 89, (25.11.2009) 632
Questions
Bellwin scheme 643–4w
Equality and Human Rights Commission 218–9w
Fires, Atherstone on Stour 391w, 677w, 780w
Floods, Cumbria 500–1w, 643w
Mortgages, Government assistance 524w
Peterborough Prison 588–90w
Radioactive waste, Waste management 927–8w
Railway stations, Repairs and maintenance 408w
Shared ownership schemes, East of England 647–8w
Social security benefits, Peterborough 394–5w

Japan
Cetaceans 383w
Foreign relations 970

Jenkin, Mr Bernard
Chamber Debates
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 868–9
Reform of the House of Commons Select Committee, Points of order (24.11.2009) 403
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 954–5
Business questions 139–40
Great Tey School Colchester 828–9
Medical records, Data protection 656w
Recruitment, Cabinet Office 452w
Recruitment, Dept for Communities and Local Government 173w
Recruitment, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 49w
Recruitment, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 859w
Recruitment, Dept for International Development 249w
Recruitment, Dept for Transport 763w
Recruitment, Dept of Health 351w
Recruitment, Home Office 470–2w
Recruitment, Ministry of Defence 291–2w
Recruitment, Ministry of Justice 438–9w
Recruitment, Northern Ireland Office 367–8w
Recruitment, Scotland Office 381w
Recruitment, Treasury 284w

Jenkins, Mr Brian
Questions
Army, Manpower 414w
Community development 308w

Jenkins, Mr Brian continued
Electricity 166–7w
Electricity generation, Finance 402w
General practitioners, Staffordshire 534w
Gifted children, Staffordshire 707–10w
Housing, Carbon emissions 712–3w
Housing, Heating 12w
Housing, Insulation 81–2w
Leisure, Finance 169w, 523w
Members, Allowances 702w, 770w
Motor vehicles, Manufacturing industries 816w
Natural gas 167w
Olympic Games 2012, West Midlands 169–70w
Pets, Animal welfare 575w
Primary education, Standards 821
Recreation spaces 851w
Recycling, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 233w
Recycling, Dept for Communities and Local Government 67w
Recycling, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 3w
Recycling, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 572–3w
Recycling, Dept for International Development 250w
Recycling, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 401w
Recycling, Dept of Health 190w
Recycling, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 161–2w
Recycling, Home Office 471w
Recycling, Ministry of Defence 292w
Recycling, Ministry of Justice 439–40w
Schools, Sports 222w
Sheltered housing, Tamworth 183w
Television, Licensing 379w
Third sector, Finance 458–9w
Tourism 171w
Tourism, West Midlands 379w
Vacant land, Tamworth 184w, 788–9w
Warm front scheme, Tamworth 364w
Wildlife, Facilities 139w

Jobcentre Plus
77–8w

Johnson, Rt Hon Alan, Secretary of State for the Home Dept
Chamber Debates
Crime and Security Bill, 1R (19.11.2009) 141
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 561–2, 570–85, 587, 589
Written Statements
Crimes of violence, Females 57–8ws
G6 11–2ws
Police 127–32ws
Supply estimates, Home Office 60–1ws
Questions
Arrest warrants 749–50w
Crime, Home Office 665–6w
Databases, Home Office 468w
Deportation, Children 883–5w
Extradition, USA 975–88
Fingerprints, Databases 675w
Members, Correspondence 893–4w
Police, Pay 492w
Vetting 753w

Johnson, Diana R, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Children, Schools and Families and an Assistant Whip
Chamber Debates
Adoption, Suffolk (25.11.2009) 651–4
Questions
Aviation, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 95w

Johnson, Diana R, —continued
Boarding schools, Islam 820
Buildings, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 913w
Children, Advertising 314w
Children, Computers 912w
Children, International cooperation 705w
Class sizes 220w, 830–1w
Climate change, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 316w
Consultants, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 913w
Contracts, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 913w
Cost effectiveness, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 913–4w
Curriculum, Sustainable development 827
Disclosure of information, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 316w
Educational psychology 818–9
Energy, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 833–4w
Faith schools, Islam 915–6w
Food, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 219–21w
Gifted children, Cheshire 708w
Gifted children, Staffordshire 707–10w
History, Education 221w
Information officers, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 834w
Internet, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 834w
Manpower, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 316–7w
Multiple births 835–6w
Outdoor education 837–8w
Personal, social, health and economic education 317w
Plants, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 221w
Primary education, Bedfordshire 841w
Primary education, Standards 820–1
Pupils, Bullying 815–6
Railways, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 834–5w
Schools, Admissions 710w, 841–4w
Schools, Asbestos 828
Schools, Biometrics 916w
Schools, Greater Manchester 396w
Schools, Mental health services 317–8w
Schools, Norwich 846w
Science, Public consultation 318w
Special educational needs 318w, 846–7w

Joint rapid reaction force
908–9w

Jones, David
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 778–9
Questions
Iran, Nuclear power 964
Sri Lanka, Overseas aid 755w

Jones, Mr Kevan, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Defence
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 314
Written Statements
Armed forces, Northern Ireland 89–90ws
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 288w
Armed forces, Allergies 288–9w, 901w
Armed forces, Cadets 51w, 608w
Armed forces, Food 290w
Armed forces, Housing 18–22w, 54w, 149–50w, 290w, 411w, 609w
Armed forces, Injuries 152w, 287w, 901w
Armed forces, Marital status 899–902w

Jones, Mr Kevan, —continued
Armed forces, Pay 21w, 51–2w
Armed forces, Recruitment 52w
Armed forces, Young people 413w
Armoured fighting vehicles 609w
Assets, Ministry of Defence 54w
Buildings, Ministry of Defence 293–4w
Chinook helicopters 609–10w
Climate change, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 21–2w
Consultants, Ministry of Defence 907w
Defence Medical Services, Manpower 906–7w
Defence Support Group 610w
Disclosure of information, Ministry of Defence 291w
Driving, Ministry of Defence 417–8w
Empty property, Ministry of Defence 22w
Exservicemen, Radiation exposure 293w
Gurkhas, Immigration 284–5w
Hercules aircraft, Training 612w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Ministry of Defence 612w
Information and communications technology, Ministry of Defence 415w
Information officers, Ministry of Defence 908w
Internet, Ministry of Defence 610–1w
Iraq, Peacekeeping operations 908w
Land, Ministry of Defence 291w, 415w
Military aircraft 613w
Publicity, Ministry of Defence 23w
Puma helicopters 614w
RAF Welford 418–9w
Recruitment, Ministry of Defence 291–2w
Recycling, Ministry of Defence 292w
Royal Fleet Auxiliary 294w, 614w
Scientists, Ministry of Defence 612w
United Arab Emirates, Defence 613–4w

Jones, Dr Lynne
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 574, 627–8
Questions
Asylum, Torture 489w
Business questions 1289
Cancer, Medical treatments 546–7w
Office for Legal Complaints 339–40w
Pay, Dept for Work and Pensions 388–9w

Jowell, Rt Hon Ms Tessa, Minister for the Olympics and London, Cabinet Office and Paymaster General
Written Statements
Olympic Games 2012, Finance 24–6ws
Supply estimates, Cabinet Office 34–6ws
Questions
Civil servants, Compensation 318–9w
Civil servants, Disciplinary proceedings 703w
Civil servants, Pay 450w
Civil servants, Recruitment 975w
Climate change, Cabinet Office 450w
Cost effectiveness, Minister for the Olympics 147–8w
Disclosure of information, Cabinet Office 319w
Domestic visits, Minister for the Olympics 758w
Government departments, Land Registry 320w
Government departments, Official hospitality 319–20w
Government Olympic Executive, London Development Agency 4w
Information Commissioner 702w
Information officers, Prime Minister 701w
Internet, Cabinet Office 694–5w
Iraq Committee of Inquiry 974–5w

Jowell, Rt Hon Ms Tessa, —continued
KBR, Minister for the Olympics 758w
Legal costs, Minister for the Olympics 4w
Members, Allowances 702w
Members, Correspondence 39w
Ministers, Visits abroad 703w
Official cars, Cabinet Office 451–2w
Olympic Games 2012, Aviation 377w
Olympic Games 2012, Contracts 271–2w, 365w, 758–9w
Olympic Games 2012, Expenditure 147w
Olympic Games 2012, River Thames 365–6w
Olympic Games 2012, Third sector 148w
Olympic Lottery, Community development 5w
Railways, Cabinet Office 319w

Joyce, Mr Eric
Westminster Hall Debates
Manufacturing industries (02.12.2009) 117wh

Judges
High court 83–4ws

Junior doctors see Doctors

Kaufman, Rt Hon Sir Gerald
Questions
Members, Correspondence 893–4w

Kawczynski, Daniel
Chamber Debates
Electoral systems, Points of order (02.12.2009) 1109
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 284, (24.11.2009) 406
Westminster Hall Debates
Proportional representation (01.12.2009) 26wh, 28wh, 31–7wh, 42wh, 48wh
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 300w
Asylum 495–6w
Blair, Rt Hon Tony, Security 494w
Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting 615–6w
Deportation 473–4w
Fletcher, Yvonne 692–3w
Foreign nationals, Prisoners' release 966–7
Identity cards 278–9w
Intercept as Evidence Review 489–90w
Pay, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 161w
Terrorism, Extradition 474–5w
Terrorism, Libya 427w

KBR
Dept for Communities and Local Government 785w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 724w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 860w
Dept for International Development 922w
Dept of Health 655w
Export credit guarantees 562–3w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 880w
Minister for the Olympics 758w
Treasury 601w

Keeble, Ms Sally
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 541
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 876, 883–4, 887–8, 895, 926–9
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 597, 606–8
Questions
Flexible working 532

Keeble, Ms Sally—continued*
Housing, Overcrowding 183w, 311w

Keeley, Barbara, Parliamentary Secretary to the Leader of the House of Commons*
Chamber Debates
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1234–5
Select committees (26.11.2009) 802–8
Westminster Hall Debates
House of Commons Commission (03.12.2009) 155–60wh, 162wh
Written Statements
Topical debates 135–6ws
Questions
Members, Allowances 675, 770w
Members, Correspondence 258w
Modernisation of the House of Commons Select Committee 672–4
Select committee reports 678–9
Timetabling of bills 677–8
Training, Leader of the House of Commons 770w
Westminster Hall sittings 258–9w
Written questions, Government responses 258w, 675–7

Keen, Ann, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of Health*
Chamber Debates
Donors, Health education (03.12.2009) 1396–8
Questions
Alcoholic drinks, Misuse 738–40w
Ambulance services, Crimes of violence 343w
Aortic aneurysm, Screening 399, 929–31w
Arthritis, Health services 106w
Blood, Donors 650w
Bone marrow disorders, Donors 343w
Brain cancer 741w
Breast cancer 186–8w, 343–5w, 527–8w
Breast cancer, Screening 540–1w, 741w
Breast cancer, Waiting lists 651–2w
Caffeine, Young people 528w
Cancer, Bexley 741w
Cancer, Health services 345–7w
Cancer, Waiting lists 108–9w
Cervical cancer, Screening 547w
Chlamydia, Screening 933–4w
Cholesterol 347–8w
Chronic fatigue syndrome 23–4w, 107w, 348w
Chronic obstructive pulmonary disease 652w
Dental services 103w, 188w, 384–5, 397
Dentistry 399
Derbyshire County Primary Care Trust, Manpower 934–5w
Diabetes 351w, 935w
Doctors, Working hours 393–5
Drugs, Misuse 661w
Eyesight, Testing 191–3w
Genetically modified organisms, Research 654–5w
Health, Children 353w
Health, Screening 24w
Health professions, Regulation 935–6w
Health visitors, Manpower 394–5, 938w
Heart diseases, Children 743w
Herbal medicine, Regulation 743w
HIV infection 537–8w
Hospitals, Cleaning services 939w
Hospitals, Crimes of violence 658–9w
Hospitals, Infectious diseases 103w, 538–9w

Keen, Ann,—continued*
Hull and East Yorkshire Hospitals NHS Trust, Publications 108w
Incinerators, Health hazards 539w
Incontinence, Children 539–40w
Leukaemia 527w
Liver diseases, Transplant surgery 354w
Lung cancer 354–5w, 656w
Manchester Mental Health and Social Care NHS Trust, Finance 356w
Methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus, Screening 745w
Musculoskeletal disorders, Medical treatments 110w
Musculoskeletal disorders, Voluntary organisations 357w
NHS, Disclosure of information 658w
NHS, Pay 357w
NHS, Pensions 110w
NHS, Training 543w
NHS, Working hours 742–3w
Nurses 543–4w, 659–60w
Nurses, Prisons 746w
Nurses, Training 746–7w
Organs, Donors 104w, 536–7w, 747w
Prostate cancer, Screening 109w
Scarborough and North East Yorkshire Healthcare NHS Trust 108w
Sickle cell diseases 747–8w, 931w
Stress, Children 749w
Strokes, Bexley 749w
Surgery, Manpower 196w
Surgery, Negligence 357–8w
Tobacco 549w
Transplant surgery, Private sector 358–9w

Keetch, Mr Paul
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 851
Questions
Attendance allowance 527w
Criminal Records Bureau, Contracts 750–1w
Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 675w
NHS, Working hours 742–3w
North Cotswold railway line 569w
Railways, Wales 567w
Skin piercing, Young people 748w

Kellogg Brown and Root see KBR

Kemp, Fraser
Questions
Children, Day care 706–7w
Unemployment, North East 392w
Warm front scheme, Sunderland 719–20w

Kennedy, Rt Hon Charles
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 57–63

Kennedy, Rt Hon Jane
Questions
Hospitals, Construction 397

Kent
Business 523w
Local government finance 645–6w
Regeneration 850w

Kenya
Civil servants 880w

Key, Mr Robert
Questions
Children, Learning disability 824–5
Clergy, Retirement 660
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 824

Key, Mr Robert—continued*
Future Jobs Fund, Scotland 520

Khan, Rt Hon Sadiq, Minister of State, Dept for Transport*
Written Statements
Railways, Franchises 100ws
Supply estimates, Dept for Transport 73–4ws
Questions
Bus services, Concessions 261–2w, 1269–71
Bus services, Fares 568w
Bus services, South East 58w
Climate change, Dept for Transport 263w
Cycling, Helmets 1273
Dartford-Thurrock Crossing 870w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Transport 1272–3
East coast railway line 1275
Electric vehicles, Expenditure 763w
Electric vehicles, Milton Keynes 59w
Integrated Transport Smartcard Organisation, Expenditure 60w
Invalid vehicles 263w
Invalid vehicles, Accidents 264w
London Underground, Repairs and maintenance 1275
Motor vehicles 265–6w
Motor vehicles, Exhaust emissions 266–8w, 760–1w
Motor vehicles, Fuels 267w
Northern Rail, Rolling stock 1272
Pedestrian crossings 268w, 408–9w
Public transport, Crime 61w
Railways, Dept for Transport 59w
Road signs and markings, Bridges 133–4w
Roads, Lighting 869w
Rolling stock, Procurement 1261–5
Transport, Tyne and Wear 569–70w
Transport, Weston-super-Mare 571w

Khodorkovsky, Mikhail
633w

Kidney, David, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of Energy and Climate Change*
Written Statements
Energy, Meters 125–7ws
EU Transport, Telecommunications and Energy Council 133–4ws
Questions
Coal 359–60w
Consultants, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 400w
Electricity 166–7w, 401w
Electricity generation 818–9w
Electricity generation, Finance 402w
Fuel poverty 83w, 925–7w
Fuel poverty, Pensioners 819–20w
Fuel poverty, Wales 714–5w
Natural gas 167w
Natural gas, Billing 925w
Nuclear Decommissioning Authority, Public relations 402–3w
Nuclear engineering, Training 403w, 715w
Nuclear power 715w
Nuclear power stations, Bradwell-on-Sea 822w
Nuclear power stations, Cumbria 715–6w
Nuclear power stations, Safety 166w
Power stations, Construction 716w
Power stations, EC law 716–7w
Radioactive waste, Waste management 927–8w
Renewable energy 361–2w, 822w
Renewable energy, Wales 717w
Renewables obligation, Water power 403–4w

Kidney, David, —continued
Sellafield 928w
Sellafield, Floods 822–3w
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, Public relations 404w
Warm front scheme 362–4w, 717–9w
Warm front scheme, Sunderland 719–20w
Warm front scheme, Tamworth 364w

Kilfoyle, Mr Peter
Questions
Italy, Higher education 631–2w

King George Hospital Ilford
(24.11.2009) 506–12

Kirkbride, Miss Julie
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 416
Questions
Business questions 1288

Knight, Rt Hon Greg
Questions
Airports, Facilities 869–70w
Fines, Surcharges 329–31w
Forests 730w
Hip replacements, Sports 108w
Hull and East Yorkshire Hospitals NHS Trust, Publications 108w
M1, Speed limits 765w
M5, Cameras 132w
M18 132w
Modernisation of the House of Commons Select Committee 674
Motor vehicles, Excise duties 6–7w
Motor vehicles, Lighting 61w
Patients, Transport 110–1w
Road signs and markings 267–9w
Scarborough and North East Yorkshire Healthcare NHS Trust 108w
Speed limits, Cameras 760w
WiFi, Health hazards 743–4w

Knight, Rt Hon Jim, Minister of State and Minister for the South West, Dept for Work and Pensions
Questions
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Work and Pensions 388w
Food, Dept for Work and Pensions 388w
Jobcentre Plus 77–8w
Official cars, Dept for Work and Pensions 388w
Pay, Dept for Work and Pensions 388–9w
Training, Dept for Work and Pensions 389w
Visits abroad, Dept for Work and Pensions 617w

Knives
Injuries 940–2w
Milton Keynes 468w

Kosovo
EC accession 737–8w
Politics and government 426w

Kramer, Susan
Questions
Breast cancer, Waiting lists 651–2w
Olympic Games 2012, Aviation 377w
Primary education, Greater London 841w

Kumar, Dr Ashok
Questions
Child care vouchers 806w
Child tax credit 283w
Coal 359–60w
Derelict land 643w
Green belt, Property development 783w
Injuries, Knives 940–2w
NHS, Expenditure 535–6w

Kumar, Dr Ashok —continued
Nuclear engineering, Training 403w, 715w
Poverty, Children 694w
Smoking 660–1w
Unemployment, Young people 771w

Labelling
Alcoholic drinks 102w

Labour migration
678–9w

Ladyman, Dr Stephen
Questions
Business, Kent 523w
Driving, Cabinet Office 696w
Driving, Dept for Communities and Local Government 499–500w
Driving, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 595w
Driving, Dept for International Development 434w
Driving, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 733–4w
Driving, Ministry of Defence 417–8w
Driving, Ministry of Justice 582–3w
Driving, Treasury 809–10w
Local government finance, Kent 645–6w
Regeneration, Kent 850w

Laing, Mrs Eleanor
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 552
Westminster Hall Debates
Proportional representation (01.12.2009) 27wh, 30wh, 44–7wh
Questions
Automatic number plate recognition 260w
Borders, Personal records 206–7w, 467w
British constitution 789w
Elections 47w

Lait, Mrs Jacqui
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 444–8

Lamb, Norman
Chamber Debates
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 860–1
Questions
Eyesight, Testing 191–3w
Hospitals, Cleaning services 939w
Influenza 655w
NHS, Drugs 533w
NHS, Finance 196w
NHS, Standards 382
101 calls 197w
Prescriptions, Fees and charges 196–7w

Lammy, Rt Hon David, Minister of State, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills
Westminster Hall Debates
Higher education (01.12.2009) 18–20wh, 23–5wh
Written Statements
EU Competitiveness Council 103–4ws
Questions
Disabled students' allowances 989–90w
Further education, Foundation degrees 985–6w
Higher education, Admissions 986w
Higher education, Agriculture 984w
Higher education, Antisemitism 557w
Higher education, Bexley 29w
Higher education, Finance 558–60w, 984w
Higher education, Historic buildings 29–31w
Higher education, Per capita costs 985w
Higher education, Qualifications 31–2w

Lammy, Rt Hon David, —continued
Higher education, Research 638w
Higher Education and Student Finance Independent Review 983w
Overseas students, EC nationals 889–90w
Research, Finance 816w
Science, Research 988–9w
Science and Technology Facilities Council, Public relations 989w
Scientists, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 980–1w
Shell, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 564w
Students, Finance 75–6w
Students, Loans 76w, 235w, 296–9w, 564–5w, 990w
Students, Newcastle upon Tyne 990–2w
Students, Radicalism 557w, 560w
Work experience, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 565–6w

Lancashire
[illegible]oulance services 343w
[illegible]ice 491–2w
[illegible]opulation 454–6w
Primary education 98w
Sure start programme 98w

Lancaster, Mark
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 851
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 1094–5
Armed forces, Allergies 288–9w, 901w
Armed forces, Cadets 608w
Armed forces, Food 290w
Armed forces, Injuries 152w
Armed forces, Uniforms 150–1w
Ascension Island 971
Bus services, South East 58w
Business questions 687
Carers, Milton Keynes 219–20w
Dental services 188w
Electric vehicles, Milton Keynes 59w
Entry clearances 483w
GCE A-level 95–6w
Hanslope Park 8–9w, 628w
Herbal medicine, Regulation 743w
Housing, Milton Keynes 13w
Iraq, Reconstruction 631–2w
Knives, Milton Keynes 468w
Low carbon buildings programme 78w
Mental Health Services, Schools 317–8w
Mental health services, South East 193w
NHS, Standards 381
Public transport, Crime 61w
Radcliffe School Milton Keynes 827
Raves, Milton Keynes 218w
Teenage pregnancy 99w
Territorial Army, Finance 23w, 54–5w
Young people, Crime 127w
Young people, Eating disorders 848w

Land
Church Commissioners 252w
Ministry of Defence 291w, 415w
Public sector 172w, 177w

Land drainage
Urban areas 574–5w

Land mines
Exports 637–8w
Western Sahara 10w, 431–2w

Land Registry
Government departments 320w

Landfill
860–4w

Lansley, Mr Andrew
Chamber Debates
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 856–8

Lansley, Mr Andrew—continued*
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 222–31, 234–6, 241
Questions
Health, Screening 107–8w, 193w
Housing, Valuation 145w
Mental health services, Waiting lists 541w
NHS, Standards 383
Social services 389
Teenage pregnancy 944w

Large goods vehicles
764w
Accidents 764w

Latin America
Overseas aid 55w

Laws, Mr David
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 145, 148–9, 160–1, 166, 174–83
Questions
Child care tax credit 606w
Education, Assessments 221w
Education, Disadvantaged 812
GCSE 97w
History, Education 221w
National curriculum tests 97–8w
Office for Standards in Education, Children's Services and Skills, Finance 837w
Schools, Admissions 841–5w

Laxton, Mr Bob
Chamber Debates
Inland waterways (30.11.2009) 945–6

Lazarowicz, Mr Mark
Chamber Debates
Financial institutions, EC action (01.12.2009) 1008
Questions
Extradition, USA 983–4

Leader of the House of Commons
Training 770w

Learning and Skills Council for England
Correspondence 987w

Learning disability
Administration of justice 354w
Children 824–5
Health services 354w

Leech, John
Questions
Diabetes 935w
Ewing School Didsbury 825–6
Identity cards, Greater Manchester 279w
Police, Marketing 492w
Schools, Greater Manchester 396w

Leeds City Council Bill 2007–08
Chamber Debates
Revival motion (26.11.2009) 659

Legal aid
798w
Asylum 239–40w, 441w
Newcastle upon Tyne 798w

Legal costs
Dept for Communities and Local Government 177–8w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 49w
Dept for International Development 225w
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 713w
Dept of Health 189w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 160w
Minister for the Olympics 4w
Ministry of Defence 152w
Ministry of Justice 236–7w

Legal costs—continued*
Treasury 143w

Legal deposit
109–10ws

Legal profession
Voluntary work 669

Legal Services Act 2007 (Consequential Amendments) Order 2009
Chamber Debates
(02.12.2009) 1249

Legal Services Act 2007 (Functions of an Approved Regulator) Order 2009
Chamber Debates
(02.12.2009) 1249

Legislation
13–4ws
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 980w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 924–5w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 627w
Ministry of Justice 581w
Northern Ireland 14–5ws
Scotland 15–6ws
Solicitor-General 867–8w
Treasury 807–8w
Wales 18–9ws

Legislative reform orders
987w

Legislative Regime for Drink and Drug Driving Review
136–8ws

Leigh, Mr Edward
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 540
Bank of England, Points of order (26.11.2009) 700
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 29, (26.11.2009) 731–3

Leisure
East of England 855w
Finance 169w, 523w

Lepper, Mr David
Questions
Cyprus, Politics and government 954

Letwin, Rt Hon Oliver
Chamber Debates
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 934

Leukaemia
527w
Drugs 941–3w

Levitt, Mr Tom
Chamber Debates
Floods, Cumbria (23.11.2009) 260
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 269
Questions
Aggregates Levy Sustainability Fund 136–7w
Building regulations, Public consultation 307–8w
Carbon monoxide, Alarms 521w
Carbon monoxide, Poisoning 106–7w, 874w
Developing countries, Disabled 757w
Natural gas, Safety 563w
Third sector, Finance 703w

Lewis, Ivan, Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 291

Lewis, Ivan,—continued*
Questions
Afghanistan, EC external relations 878w
Afghanistan, Elections 164–5w
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 300w
Belarus, Capital punishment 7–8w
British Petroleum, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 625–6w
Burma, International assistance 974
Canada, Diplomatic service 158w
Children's rights 969–70
China, Furs 8w
China, Milk 732–3w
China, Politics and government 879w
Colombia, EC external trade 302w
Contracts, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 421w
Convention on Cluster Munitions 626w
Democratic Republic of Congo, Asylum 626–7w
Disclosure of information, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 166w
Driving, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 733–4w
Eastern Europe, Political parties 628w
Food, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 159–60w
Foreign nationals, Prisoners' release 966–7
Gibraltar, Politics and government 162w
Hanslope Park 8–9w
Hezbollah 632w
Human rights, Christianity 736w
India, Internally displaced people 969
India, Politics and government 425w
India, Religious freedom 425w, 628–9w
International organisations, Finance 633w
Iran, Baha'i faith 630w
Iran, Capital punishment 629w
Iran, Nuclear power 964–5
Iran, Press freedom 630w
Iraq, Health 163w
Iraq, Iran 163–4w
Israel, Borders 425–6w, 623w, 631w
Japan, Foreign relations 970
Kenya, Civil servants 880w
Libya 426w
Libya, Terrorism 427w
Members, Correspondence 428w
Middle East 428w
Middle East, Armed conflict 164w, 429w
Middle East, Peace negotiations 305–6w, 430w, 624w, 632–3w, 972–3
Morocco, British nationality 9w
Morocco, Deportation 430w
Nepal, Religious freedom 9w
Nigeria, Children 736w
Nuclear weapons, Proliferation 623w
Pakistan, Terrorism 624w
Railways, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 161w
Scientists, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 627w
Shell, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 634w
Somalia, Human trafficking 165w
South Africa, Chess 634w
Sudan, Armed conflict 634–5w
Sudan, Politics and government 431w
Theft, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 161w
Uganda, Homosexuality 635w
USA, Antisemitism 878–9w
Vatican, State visits 306w
Western Sahara, Land mines 10w, 431–2w
Western Sahara, Natural resources 880–1w

Lewis, Ivan, —continued
Western Sahara, Politics and government 635w
Zimbabwe, Politics and government 624w

Lewis, Dr Julian
Questions
Business questions 1295

Liabilities Management Authority see Nuclear Decommissioning Authority

Liaison Committee
see House of Commons Liaison Committee

Libraries
see Public libraries

Libya
426w
Prisoners' transfers 243w
Terrorism 427w

Licensing laws
50w, 853w

Liddell-Grainger, Mr Ian
Chamber Debates
Home Education Independent Review, Petitions (02.12.2009) 1250–1
Questions
Business questions 688, 1289
Renewables obligation, Water power 403–4w
Revenue and Customs, Public consultation 603w
Tourism, VAT 605w, 855w

Lidington, Mr David
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1385–7
Unemployment, Aylesbury (01.12.2009) 1081–4
Questions
Iran, Nuclear power 965

Lighting
Motor vehicles 61w
Roads 869w

Lilley, Rt Hon Peter
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 407, 425, 503
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 1092–3

Lincolnshire
Schools 845w

Linton, Martin
Westminster Hall Debates
Alcoholic drinks, Misuse (01.12.2009) 59–63wh
Questions
Alcoholic drinks, Labelling 102w
Alcoholic drinks, Misuse 396
Voting methods 254w

Liquefied natural gas
Shipping 359–61w

Liver diseases
Transplant surgery 354w

Liverpool
Hospitals 397
Ports 133w

Liverpool Prison
Industrial disputes 239w

Livestock
Antibiotics 730w

Lloyd, Mr Tony
Questions
Police, Political impartiality 531–2

Lloyd, Mr Tony —continued
Railway stations, North West 1265
Social services 389
Social services, Older people 104w
Sure start programme 813–4

Llwyd, Mr Elfyn
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 26
Westminster Hall Debates
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 84–6wh
Questions
Public expenditure, Wales 1107

Loans
Banks 369w
Students 76w, 235w, 296–9w, 564–5w, 990w

Local government
312w
Cornwall 308w, 312w
Home Office 210–2w
Isles of Scilly 312w
National parks authorities 387w
Pay 11w, 13–4w
Pensions 178–82w, 523–4w

Local government finance
87–8ws
Bexley 785–6w
Croydon 647w
Kent 645–6w

Local Government Leadership Centre
784w

Local housing allowance see Housing benefit

Lockerbie
Bombings 1104

London
see Greater London

London Development Agency
Government Olympic Executive 4w

London Select Committee
(30.11.2009) 941, (02.12.2009) 1250, (03.12.2009) 1390

London Tilbury and Southend line
Franchises 73ws

London Underground
Repairs and maintenance 1275

Lone parents
Disability living allowance 617–8w
Social security benefits 877w

Lorries
see Large goods vehicles

Lost property
Defence equipment 419–20w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 11–2w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 2w
Treasury 808w

Loughton, Tim
Questions
Children, Databases 704–5w, 815
Children, Protection 314–6w
Drugs, Misuse 190–1w
GCE A-level, Children in care 914–5w
GCSE 836w
GCSE, Children in care 914–5w
Secondary education, Developing countries 228–9w
Special educational needs 318w, 847w
Teenage pregnancy 399w
Young offenders 799w
Young offenders, Community orders 321w

Loughton, Tim —continued
Young offenders, Reoffenders 449w
Young offenders, Sentencing 342w
Young people, Females 463w
Youth custody 45w, 245w
Youth custody, Per capita costs 450w
Youth offending teams 85–92w, 245w, 448–9w

Love, Mr Andrew
Questions
Combined heat and power, EC law 817w

Low carbon buildings programme
78w, 820–1w

Lucas, Ian, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills
Chamber Debates
Unemployment, Aylesbury (01.12.2009) 1084–8
Written Statements
Chief Construction Adviser, Public appointments 27ws
Composite materials 85ws
Questions
Bankruptcy 550–4w
Bankruptcy, Council tax 812–3w
Bankruptcy, East of England 636w
Bankruptcy, Hampshire 74w
Climate change, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 73–4w
Company accounts 35w
Company liquidations 28w, 231w, 555w, 979w
Directors, Personation 554w
Financial services, EC action 230w
Foreign investment, Hungary 555w
Foreign investment in UK, Norwich 982w
Freight 982–4w
Furs, Imports 75w
Insolvency 32–3w, 561w
Insolvency, Complaints 814–5w
Insolvency, Fees and charges 34w, 75w
Insolvency, Licensing 34w
Insolvency Service 561–2w
Iron and steel 27–8w
KBR, Export credit guarantees 562–3w
Land mines, Exports 637–8w
Legislative reform orders 987w
Manufacturing industries, Government assistance 815w
Missing persons, Children 912–3w
Motor vehicles, Manufacturing industries 816w
Public sector, Procurement 563–4w
Sony Ericsson, Government assistance 816w

Luff, Mr Peter
Chamber Debates
Equitable Life Assurance Society, Petitions (30.11.2009) 942
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 707, 735–8

Lung cancer
354–5w, 656w

Lynx helicopters
614w

M1
A5 58w, 404w
Speed limits 765w

M5
Cameras 132w

M6
Walsall 60–1w

M18
132w

M18 —continued
Speed limits 765w

McCafferty, Ms Chris
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 485–8
Questions
Developing countries, Family planning 433–4w
Global Fund to Fight AIDS Tuberculosis and Malaria 229w
Uganda, Homosexuality 635w
UN Population Fund 436w

McCarthy-Fry, Sarah, Exchequer Secretary to the Treasury
Chamber Debates
Financial institutions, EC action (01.12.2009) 989–97, 1022–6
Written Statements
National Savings and Investments, Supply estimates 33–4ws
Supply estimates, Treasury 31–2ws
Terrorism, Finance 105–6ws
Questions
Air passenger duty 812w
Assets, Treasury 141w
Banks, Finance 805w
Banks, Loans 369w
Banks, Pay 140w
Banks, Regulation 369w
Bradford and Bingley 806w
Caparo Group, Treasury 369w
Capita, Treasury 947w
Child Trust Fund, Wales 806w
Christmas, Treasury 140w
Contracts, Treasury 948w
Cost effectiveness, Treasury 141–2w
Departmental responsibilities, Treasury 143w
Disclosure of information, Treasury 142w
Driving, Treasury 809–10w
Dunfermline Building Society 370w
Economic situation, Departmental coordination 141w
Excise duties, Alcoholic drinks 599–600w
Financial services 810w
Financial services, Education 370–1w
Financial services, Pay 810w
Financial services, Regulation 144w
Floods, Cumbria 601w
Food, Treasury 142–3w
Generic Financial Advice Review 144–5w
Government securities, Islam 145w
Housing, Construction 285w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Treasury 810w
Import controls, Tobacco 604–5w
Internet, Treasury 807w
KBR, Treasury 601w
Legal costs, Treasury 143w
Legislation, Treasury 807–8w
Lost property, Treasury 808w
Monetary policy 146w
Northern Rock 806w, 811w
Northern Rock, Compensation 811w
Official cars, Treasury 283–4w
Pay, Treasury 143w
Railways, Treasury 143w
Recruitment, Treasury 284w
Scientists, Treasury 370w
Tax allowances, Pensions 146w
Tax yields, Gambling 371w
Tax yields, Gaming machines 949w
Taxation, EC countries 147w
Taxation, Financial institutions 810w
Taxis, Treasury 144w, 808w
Telephone services, Treasury 284w
Training, Treasury 809w
Travel, Treasury 809w
Ulster Bank 147w, 372–3w

McCarthy-Fry, Sarah, —continued
Working hours, Treasury 144w

McCartney, Rt Hon Ian
Questions
Business questions 687
Modernisation of the House of Commons Select Committee 673

McCrea, Dr William
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 557
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1073–4
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 724, 754, 756
Questions
Business questions 692

McDonagh, Ms Siobhain
Chamber Debates
Nurses, Training (18.11.2009) 118–22

McDonnell, John
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1137–44, 1154–7, 1170, 1172–3, 1225
Questions
Contracts, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 28w
Contracts, Dept for International Development 55w
Contracts, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 421w
National offender management information system 587–8w
Pay, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 636–7w
Pay, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 376w
Pay, Dept for International Development 227–8w
Pay, Dept for Transport 58–9w
Prisoners, Exservicemen 803–5w
Prisoners, Mentally ill 542w
Prisoners, Self-harm 591w
Prisons, Nurses 746w
Railways, Franchises 7w

McFadden, Rt Hon Patrick, Minister of State, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 784–8
Written Statements
Post offices, Bank services 123ws
Supply estimates, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 27–31ws United Kingdom Accreditation Service 133ws
Questions
Aviation, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 556w
British Petroleum, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 553w
Buildings, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 979w
Christmas, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 230–1w
Conditions of employment, Parents 231–2w
Contracts, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 28w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 556w
Domestic visits, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 979–80w
Employment agencies, Public sector 637w
Food, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 232w
Gaddafi, Saif al-Islam 638w
Internet, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 28–9w

McFadden, Rt Hon Patrick, —continued
Legislation, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 980w
Manpower, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 232–3w
Official cars, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 233w
Official gifts, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 556w
Official hospitality, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 636w
Pay, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 234w, 295w, 636–7w
Plants, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 233w
Post codes, Databases 35w, 525w
Post offices, Finance 563w
Recycling, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 233w
Redundancy 988w
Rothschild, Lord 638w
Strategic Investment Fund 638–9w
Travel, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 637w
Visits abroad, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 557w

McFall, Mr John
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 539
Bank of England, Points of order (26.11.2009) 701
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 35, 42–7, 53

McGrady, Mr Eddie
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1066–8
Questions
Administration of justice, Northern Ireland 157w
Equal pay, Northern Ireland Office 367w
Ulster Bank 147w
Weapons, Northern Ireland 368–9w

McGuire, Rt Hon Anne
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 541–2
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 552
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 592, (26.11.2009) 754–7
Questions
Employment, Scotland 518
Israel, Borders 623w

McIntosh, Miss Anne
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 917w
Agriculture, Subsidies 729w
Business questions 132
Clergy 660–1
Crown Prosecution Service, Standards 672
EC grants and loans 384–5w
European Council 967
Flood control 233–5w
Floods, Finance 785w
Floods, Cumbria 601w, 849w, 1105
Land drainage, Urban areas 574–5w
NHS, Finance 746w
Primary care trusts, Snow and ice 943–4w
Railways, Scotland 869w
Schools, Inspections 396–7w
Theft, Prosecutions 771w

McIsaac, Shona
Questions
Economic situation 1107

MacKay, Rt Hon Andrew
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 849–50

MacKay, Rt Hon Andrew —continued
Ashcroft, Lord, Points of order (26.11.2009) 699
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 754w
Business questions 691–2, 1291
House of Commons, Energy 680

McKechin, Ann, Minister of State, Scotland Office
Questions
Armed forces, Scotland 134w
Aviation, Scotland Office 5w
Christmas, Scotland Office 280w
Consultants, Scotland Office 380w
Cost effectiveness, Scotland Office 280w
Digital technology, Scotland 135w
Disclosure of information, Scotland Office 281w
Energy, Scotland Office 5w
Food, Scotland Office 380w
Human trafficking, Scotland 515–6
Immigration, Scotland 136w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Scotland Office 593w
Information officers, Scotland Office 592w
Internet, Scotland Office 592w
Mobile phones, Scotland Office 281w
Nuclear submarines, Scotland 516–7
Official cars, Scotland Office 136w
Pay, Scotland Office 281w
Public expenditure, Scotland Office 760w
Railways, Scotland 522
Recruitment, Scotland Office 381w
Scientists, Scotland Office 281w
Security, Scotland Office 760w
Taxis, Scotland Office 281–2w
Theft, Scotland Office 380w
Tourism, Scotland 520–1
Unemployment, Scotland 6w
Working hours, Scotland Office 381w

McKenna, Mrs Rosemary
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 554
Questions
Unemployment, Scotland 521

Mackinlay, Andrew
Chamber Debates
Ministerial statement intervention (30.11.2009) 854
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 862
Oral question time intervention (01.12.2009) 974
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 63–4, 68, 79, 84, 88, 95, 100–6, (23.11.2009) 271, 278, 282, 304
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 957
Aortic aneurysm, Death 962–72w
Aortic aneurysm, Screening 399, 929–31w
Extradition, USA 984–5
Serbia, EC accession 737–8w

Maclean, Rt Hon David
Chamber Debates
Floods, Cumbria (23.11.2009) 257–8
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 47–51

McLoughlin, Mr Patrick
Chamber Debates
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1248
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 639

McLoughlin, Mr Patrick —continued
Questions
Water, Meters 732w

MacNeil, Angus
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 556
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1042, 1068–70
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 492
Questions
Broadband, Scotland 514
Immigration, Scotland 136w

MacShane, Mr Denis
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 39, 47, 52, 55, 58, 63–9, 78, (23.11.2009) 279–81, 287
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 958
Business questions 692–3
Human trafficking, Scotland 515

Mactaggart, Fiona
Questions
Burglary, Prosecutions 670
Business questions 694
Human trafficking, Females 1277–8
Human trafficking, Health services 386
Heathrow Airport, Railways 1274
National curriculum tests 817
Schools, Admissions 829

Magistrates' courts
Welsh language 331w

Maiden speeches
Bain, William (25.11.2009) 599–602

Main, Anne
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 543
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 358–61
Questions
Business questions 690
First Capital Connect, Industrial disputes 768w
Railways, Freight 409w

Maintenance
Children 616w

Malik, Shahid, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Communities and Local Government
Written Statements
Travellers, Caravan sites 44ws
Questions
Community relations 777w
Fire prevention, Rented housing 12w
Fire Service College, Public relations 779w
Fire services, Floods 779–80w
Fires, Atherstone on Stour 780w
Fires, Death 780–3w
Thurrock Thames Gateway Development Corporation, Public relations 788w

Mallaber, Judy
Chamber Debates
Inland waterways (30.11.2009) 947
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 16

Manchester Airport
Railways 765w

Manchester City Council Bill (HL) 2006–07
Chamber Debates
Revival motion (03.12.2009) 1261

Manchester Mental Health and Social Care NHS Trust
Finance 356w

Mann, John
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 412, 420, 456, 467–73
Questions
Schools 809

Manufacturing industries
(02.12.2009) 107–30wh
Government assistance 815w
Motor vehicles 816w

Maples, Mr John
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 317–21

Marine conservation zones
Dee estuary 386–7w

Marital status
Armed forces 899–902w

Market Harborough
Pipelines 393–4w

Marketing
Cabinet Office 971–2w
Police 492–3w

Marris, Rob
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1137, 1146–7, 1203–4, 1228
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 16, 24, 32, (26.11.2009) 711, 717–8, 723
Questions
Educational psychology 818
Euthanasia, Prosecutions 666
Extradition, USA 987

Marsden, Mr Gordon
Questions
Building schools for the future programme 93–4w

Marshall-Andrews, Mr Robert
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 269, 283–4, 331, 338–41

Martlew, Mr Eric
Questions
Floods, Cumbria 530

Mason, John
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 546
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1127, 1135, 1145, 1149, 1159, 1188, 1195, 1197, 1199–200, 1230
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 575, 614–7
Westminster Hall Debates
Proportional representation (01.12.2009) 29wh, 37–8wh, 41–2wh, 45wh
Questions
Business questions 140
Extradition, USA 988
Pay, Cabinet Office 452w
Pay, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 295w
Pay, Dept for Communities and Local Government 66w
Pay, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 2–3w
Pay, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 858w
Pay, Dept for International Development 226w
Pay, Dept for Work and Pensions 389w
Pay, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 80w, 400–1w
Pay, Dept of Health 189–90w, 350w

Mason, John —continued
Pay, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 160–1w, 304w
Pay, Home Office 470w
Pay, Ministry of Justice 323w
Pay, Northern Ireland Office 282w
Pay, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w
Pay, Scotland Office 281w
Pay, Treasury 143w
Railways, Scotland 522

Maternal mortality
Developing countries 922w

Maternity services
Bexley 744w

May, Mrs Theresa
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1227–9
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 575, 631–5
Questions
Females, Human trafficking 1278–9

Meacher, Rt Hon Michael
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 749–52
Questions
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 573–4w
Genetically modified organisms, Research 654–5w

Meale, Mr Alan
Questions
Motor vehicles, Seized articles 894w

Medals
World War II 301w

Media Monitoring Unit
975w

Medical equipment
Incontinence 655w

Medical records
Data protection 656w

Medical treatments
Arthritis 931w
Cancer 546–7w
Musculoskeletal disorders 110w
VAT 17w

Medicine
Research 656–7w

Members
Allowances 47w, 675, 702w, 770w
Correspondence 39w, 257–8w, 418w, 427–8w, 490w, 601w, 619w, 893–4w
Disqualification 882w
Domicil 1106
Surveillance 366w

Members' Fund
see House of Commons Members' Fund

Mental health
541w
Unemployed people 356w

Mental health services
109w, 240w, 332w, 356w, 392–3, 943w
Per capita costs 331–2w, 546–7w
Prisons 333–4w
Schools 317–8w
South East 193w
Waiting lists 541w

Mentally disturbed offenders
84w

Mentally ill
Children 542w, 744–5w
Drugs 657w

Mentally ill —continued
Prisoners 239–40w, 242–3w, 484–5w, 542w

Mercer, Patrick
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 854
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 289, 341–3
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 410w
Asylum, Iraq 466w
Counter-terrorism, International cooperation 476w
DNA, Databases 127–8w, 673–4w
Entry clearances, Overseas students 480w
Entry clearances, Polygamy 128w
Identity cards 278w
Immigrants, Domestic violence 477–8w
Immigration 218w
Immobilisation of vehicles 128w
Intelligence services 431w
MI6, Security 9–10w
National identity register 490–1w
Olympic Games 2012, Expenditure 147w
Olympic Games 2012, Third sector 148w
Police, Newark 128–9w
Serious Fraud Office 868w
Surveillance 752–4w
Terrorism, Police interrogation 217w
UK Border Agency, Telephone services 129–30w

Merchant Shipping (Light Dues) (Amendment) Regulations 2009
Chamber Debates
(23.11.2009) 373

Merlin helicopters
Training 613w

Merron, Gillian, Minister of State, Dept of Health
Written Statements
EU Employment, Social Policy, Health and Consumer Affairs Council 56ws
Obesity, Children 23ws
Swine flu 9–10ws
Questions
Abortion 105w, 184–5w
Alcoholic drinks, Children 936–7w
Alcoholic drinks, Labelling 102w
Alcoholic drinks, Misuse 396
Arthritis, Medical treatments 931w
Bone marrow disorders, Donors 185–6w
Cancer, Clinical trials 528w
Carbon monoxide, Poisoning 106–7w
Chlamydia, Screening 741–2w, 932w
Complementary medicine 391
Death, Weather 408
Dementia, Research 107w
Drugs, Misuse 190–1w
Drugs, Rehabilitation 352w
Genetically modified organisms 353w
Genetically modified organisms, Food 534–5w
Health services, Human trafficking 385–6
Hepatitis 24–5w
Herbal medicine 193w
Hip replacements, Sports 108w
HIV infection 538w
Homeopathy 938w
Incinerators, Health hazards 104w
Injuries, Knives 940–2w
Injuries, Offensive weapons 540w, 939–40w
Medicine, Research 636–7w
Mobile phones, Health hazards 25w
NHS, Redundancy 543w
Obesity, Children 944w
Obesity, Health services 544–6w
Skin piercing, Young people 748w

Merron, Gillian, —continued
Smoking 387–8, 660–1w
Swine flu 944w
Swine flu, Babies 358w
Swine flu, Vaccination 25–6w
Tobacco 548–9w
Tuberculosis 945–6w
Tuberculosis, Health services 105w
Vaccination, Children 195w
WiFi, Health hazards 743–4w

Meters
Energy 125–7ws
Water 732w

Methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus
Screening 745w

MI6
Security 9–10w

Michael, Rt Hon Alun
Chamber Debates
Inland waterways (30.11.2009) 946
Questions
Somaliland, Elections 1096

Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust
Parking 745w

Middle East
428w
Armed conflict 164w, 305w, 429–30w, 972–3
Peace negotiations 305–6w, 430w, 624w, 632–3w, 965–6, 972–3

Migration
457w

Milford Haven
Ports 766–7w

Miliband, Rt Hon David, Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 262–74, 278
Written Statements
Supply estimates, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 50–1ws
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 300w, 954–8
Afghanistan, Politics and government 961–4
Departmental responsibilities, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 968
Gulf States, EC external trade 424–5w
India, Terrorism 970–1
International cooperation, Climate change 969
International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia 306w
Iran, Arms control 629w, 735w
Iran, Foreign relations 968–9
Iraq Committee of Inquiry 971–2
Israel, Arms control 425w
Kosovo, Politics and government 426w
MI6, Security 9–10w
Middle East, Armed conflict 305w, 429–30w, 972–3
Middle East, Peace negotiations 965–6
Russia, Energy 971
Somalia, Fisheries 430–1w
Somalia, Piracy 165w
United Arab Emirates, Foreign relations 165–6w
World War II, Medals 301w
Yemen, Peace negotiations 306–7w

Miliband, Rt Hon David, — continued*
Zimbabwe, Politics and government 967–8, 972

Miliband, Rt Hon Edward, Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change*
Chamber Debates
Energy Bill, 1R (19.11.2009) 142–3
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 405–15, 418, 420, 423, 499
Written Statements
EU Environment Council 111–2ws
Supply estimates, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 47–8ws

Military aid
909n
Colombia 810n
Floods 111ws
Iraq 121ws

Military aircraft
613n
Helicopters 909n

Military bases
Northern Ireland 909–10n

Milk
China 732–3n

Miller, Mr Andrew
Chamber Debates
Floods, Cumbria (23.11.2009) 259
Westminster Hall Debates
Manufacturing industries (02.12.2009) 111wh, 113–9wh, 123wh, 127wh
Questions
Extradition, USA 986
General elections 665
Nuclear weapons, Proliferation 623n
Pupils, Bullying 816

Miller, Maria
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 444, 457, 463–7
Questions
State start programme 814

Milton, Anne
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 352–5
Questions
Mental health services 392–3

Milton Keynes
Carers 219–20n
Crime 127n
Electric vehicles 59n
Housing 13n
Knives 466n
Raves 210n
Schools 317–8n

Milton Keynes Hospital NHS Foundation Trust 398

Mines Advisory Group
Dept for International Development 229n

Minimum wage
Taxation 286–7n

Minister for the Olympics
Cost effectiveness 147–8n
Domestic visits 758n
KBR 758n
Legal costs 4n

Ministerial policy advisers
Chequers 766n
Ministry of Defence 611n

Ministerial statements
Afghanistan (30.11.2009) 831–54
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 533–46
Floods (23.11.2009) 251–60
NHS (30.11.2009) 855–70
Scotland (25.11.2009) 547–58

Ministers
Visits abroad 703n

Ministry of Defence
Assets 58n
Buildings 293–4n
Capita Group 906n
Christmas 152n
Consultants 907n
Departmental responsibilities 415n
Disclosure of information 291n
Drinking water 414–5n
Driving 417–8n
Empty property 22n
Food 291n
Immobilisation of vehicles 612n
Information and communications technology 415n
Information officers 907–8n
Internet 610–1n, 726n
Land 291n, 415n
Legal costs 152n
Ministerial policy advisers 611n
Pay 152–3n
Public expenditure 416n, 611–2n, 910–1n
Publicity 23n
Railways 154n
Recruitment 291–2n
Recycling 292n
Scientists 612n
Supply estimates 45–6ws
Training 416n
Working hours 416–8n

Ministry of Defence Votes A
46ws

Ministry of Justice
British Petroleum 578n
Capita 881n
Christmas 320n
Climate change 83–4n
Contracts 580n
Cost effectiveness 236n
Data protection 437–8n
Departmental responsibilities 430n
Disclosure of information 430n
Driving 582–3n
Internet 580–1n
Legal costs 236–7n
Legislation 581n
Pay 323n
Postal services 12–3ws
Public expenditure 882n
Railways 430n
Recruitment 438–9n
Recycling 439–40n
Scientists 581n
Supply estimates 64–7ws
Taxis 323–4n

Missing persons
679–86n
Children 912–3n

Misuse
Alcoholic drinks (01.12.2009) 59–66wh, 396, 738–40n

Misuse — continued
Drugs 190–1n, 661n

Mitchell, Mr Andrew
Questions
Olympic Games 2012, Dept for International Development 922–3n

Mitchell, Mr Austin
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1347–51, 1389
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1057–9
Westminster Hall Debates
Proportional representation (01.12.2009) 26–32wh, 35wh, 39wh
Questions
Banks, Pay 140n
Banks, Regulation 369n
Corporation tax 140n
Financial services, Pay 810n
Insolvency 561n
National Audit Office, Cost effectiveness 664
Schools, Lincolnshire 845n
Tax allowances, Pensions 146n
Tax allowances, Professional organisations 102n, 147n
Tax yields, Income tax 145n
Taxation, Minimum wage 286–7n
Winter fuel payments 150n

Mobile homes
Carbon emissions 80–1n
Heating 80–1n

Mobile phones
Driving offences 1268–9
Health hazards 25n
Prisons 758n
Scotland Office 281n

MOD St Athan
Defence Support Group 110–1ws

Modernisation of the House of Commons Select Committee 672–4

Moffat, Anne
Questions
Colombia, Military aid 810n
Euthanasia, Prosecutions 258n
Football, Young people 4n
Taxation, Business 16n

Moffatt, Laura
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 644

Mole, Mr Chris, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Transport*
Chamber Debates
Roads, Norwich (19.11.2009) 247–50
Written Statements
London Tilbury and Southend line, Franchises 73ws
Railway stations, Standards 17–9ws
Railways, East of England 122ws
Roads, Finance 122ws
Questions
A3, Hindhead 259n
A417, Gloucestershire 1268
Aviation, Dept for Transport 6n
Blackpool-Manchester railway line 1274–5
Cheadle Hulme Station 262n
Christmas, Dept for Transport 405n
Cost effectiveness, Dept for Transport 405–6n
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Transport 762n

Mole, Mr Chris—continued*
Disclosure of information, Dept for Transport 761w
Domestic visits, Dept for Transport 761w
East coast railway line, Internet 568w
East coast railway line, Timetables 868–9w
First Capital Connect, Industrial disputes 768w
Internet, Dept for Transport 406w, 762w
M1, A5 58w, 404w
M1, Speed limits 765w
M5, Cameras 132w
M6, Walsall 60–1w
M18 132w
Motorways, Noise 765w
Motorways, Repairs and maintenance 766w
National Express, Telephone services 408w
Network Rail, Consultants 132–3w
North Cotswold railway line 569w
Norwich-London railway line 569w, 766w
Norwich-London railway line, Rolling stock 408w, 766w
Pay, Dept for Transport 58–9w
Penzance-Plymouth railway line 569w
Public expenditure, Dept for Transport 761–2w
Railway network 62w, 409w
Railway stations, North West 1265–6
Railway stations, Parking 868w
Railway stations, Repairs and maintenance 268w, 408w
Railways, Accidents 268–9w
Railways, Bridges 767w
Railways, East of England 1271–2
Railways, Finance 61w, 133w
Railways, Franchises 7w, 568w, 869w, 1275–6
Railways, Freight 409w
Railways, Fuels 571w
Railways, Glasgow Airport 1273
Railways, Heathrow Airport 1274
Railways, Manchester Airport 765w
Railways, Penalty fares 570w
Railways, Repairs and maintenance 570w
Railways, Scotland 869w
Railways, Standards 767w
Railways, Wales 567w
Recruitment, Dept for Transport 763w
Road signs and markings 267–9w
Road traffic, Stonehenge 269w
Rolling stock 62–3w, 269–70w, 409w
Stockport Station 271w
Stratford Station 7w
Thameslink railway line, Rolling stock 63–4w, 410w
Train operating companies, Complaints 768w
Wantage Road Station 1274

Monarchy
Succession 532

Monetary policy
146w

Moon, Madeleine
Questions
Bank services, Fees and charges 527–8

Moore, Mr Michael
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1046
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 1093–4
Digital technology, Scotland 135w

Moran, Margaret
Questions
Pay, Dept for Communities and Local Government 308–9w

Morden, Jessica
Questions
Business, Wales 823–5w
Business questions 1288
Child Trust Fund, Wales 806w
Crimes of violence, Females 750w
Roads, Accidents 1269

Morgan, Julie
Questions
Bangladesh, Climate change 1098–9
Business questions 686
Civil servants, Location 1108

Morocco
British nationality 9w
Deportation 430w

Mortgages
Arrears, 182w
East of England 524w
Government assistance 69–70w, 181–2w, 393w, 524w

Moss, Mr Malcolm
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1331, 1343–7
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 329–32
Questions
Public houses, Closures 853–4w
Sports, East of England 724–5w, 852w, 854–5w

Motor vehicles
265–6w
Excise duties 6–7w, 568w
Exhaust emissions 266–9w, 760–1w
Fuels 267w
Insurance 568w
Lighting 61w
Manufacturing industries 816w
Seized articles 894w

Motorways
Noise 765w
Repairs and maintenance 766w

MRSA
see Methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus

MSC Napoli
407–8w

Mulholland, Greg
Chamber Debates
Treatment centres, Points of order (02.12.2009) 1089–90
Questions
Alcoholic drinks, Young people 112–27w
Business questions 130, 689–90, 1295
Care homes, Fees and charges 397
GCSE, Disadvantaged 399w
Latin America, Overseas aid 55w
Tenancy deposit schemes 15–6w
Treatment centres 393

Mullin, Chris
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 43, (20.11.2009) 704, 743–7
Questions
Business questions 690

Multiple births
705–6w, 835–8w

Multiple sclerosis
Drugs 194–5w

Mundell, David
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 549–50
Questions
Employment, Scotland 519

Munn, Meg
Questions
Falkland Islands, Sovereignty 961

Murphy, Rt Hon Jim, Secretary of State for Scotland
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 547–8, 550–8
Written Statements
Devolution, Scotland 84ws
Legislation, Scotland 15–6ws
Supply estimates, Scotland Office 71–2ws
Questions
Broadband, Scotland 513–5
Business, Scotland 135w
Departmental responsibilities, Scotland Office 135w
Devolution, Scotland 135w, 522
Employment, Scotland 517–9
Future Jobs Fund, Scotland 519–20
Railways, Scotland Office 135w
Travel, Scotland Office 592w
Unemployment, Scotland 521

Murrison, Dr Andrew
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1303, 1309–11
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 149, (24.11.2009) 409, (25.11.2009) 566
Questions
Armed forces, Postal services 412w
Armed forces, Telephone services 412w
Business questions 137, 1294
Civil servants, Compensation 319w
Energy performance certificates 402w
Investment Approvals Board 23w
Iraq, Peacekeeping operations 908w
Public expenditure, Ministry of Defence 416w, 611–2w

Musculoskeletal disorders
Medical treatments 110w
Voluntary organisations 357w

Museums and galleries
853w

Napoli
see MSC Napoli

National Audit Office
365w
Cost effectiveness 664

National Centre for Stereotactic Radiosurgery
Standards 657–8w

National curriculum tests
97–8w, 816–8, 836–7w

National Express
Telephone services 408w

National identity register
490–1w

National Investment Corporation
987w

National Lottery
Olympic Games 2012 377–8w

National offender management information system
320–1w, 436w, 587–8w

National Offender Management Service
Consultants 332w

National parks authorities
Local government 387w

National policy statements
Nuclear power 403w

National Savings and Investments
Supply estimates 33–4ws

National Treatment Agency
Finance 212–3w

Natural gas
167w
Billing 925w
Safety 563w

Natural resources
Western Sahara 880–1w

Nature conservation
Crime 137–8w

Navy
EC action 154–5w

Naysmith, Dr Douglas
Questions
Official engagements, Prime Minister 1099
Patients, Safety 1099
Tuberculosis, Health services 105w

Negligence
Surgery 357–8w

Neighbourhood wardens
524w

Nepal
Religious freedom 9w

Network Rail
Consultants 132–3w

New deal for young people
Northern Ireland 867w

Newark
Police 128–9w

Newcastle upon Tyne
Council tax benefits 773–4w
Housing benefit 773–4w
Legal aid 798w
Pension credit 877w
Students 990–2w

Newmark, Brooks
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 55

NHS
Accountability 389–90
Disclosure of information 658w
Drugs 533–4w
Expenditure 535–6w
Finance 196w, 390–1, 542w, 660w, 745–6w
Information and communications technology 196w, 542–3w, 943w
Ministerial statements (30.11.2009) 855–70
Pay 357w
Pensions 110w
Private finance initiative 399
Public consultation 195–6w
Redundancy 543w
Standards 381–4
Training 543w
Working hours 742–3w

NHS Health and Wellbeing Review
23–4ws

NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency
Contracts 658w

Nigeria
Children 736w

Noise
Motorways 765w

Non-domestic rates
312–3w, 786–7w, 849–50w
Banks 313w
Empty property 313w, 524–5w
Parking 101–2w

Non-Domestic Rating (Deferred Payments) (England) Regulations 2009
Chamber Debates
(23.11.2009) 373

Norris, Dan, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs*
Written Statements
Supply estimates, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 48–9ws
Questions
Anaerobic digestion 863–5w
Capita, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 856w
Christmas, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 856w
Climate change, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 856w
Climate Change Adaptation Sub-Committee 713w
Consultants, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 857w
Contracts, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 857w
Cost effectiveness, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 256w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 383w
Disclosure of information, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 857w
EC grants and loans 384–5w
Food, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 256–7w
Food, Waste 859–60w
Genetically modified organisms, Crops 573–4w
Internet, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 858w
KBR, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 860w
Landfill 860–4w
Oils, Waste disposal 860w, 863w
Pay, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 858w
Plants, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 383w
Public consultation, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 858w
Railways, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 859w
Recruitment, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 859w
Recycling, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 572–3w
Taxis, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 859w
Working hours, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 383–4w

North Central London Strategic Health Authority
25w

North Cotswold railway line
569w

North East
Classroom assistants 831–3w
Crimes of violence 670–4w
Injuries 940–2w
Unemployment 392w

North East Development Agency see One NorthEast

North Review
see Legislative Regime for Drink and Drug Driving Review

North West
Railway stations 1265–6

Northern Cyprus
see Cyprus

Northern Ireland
Abortion 865w
Administration of justice 157w
Armed forces 89–90ws
Armoured fighting vehicles 726w
Bill of Rights 113ws
Legislation 14–5ws
Military bases 909–10w
New deal for young people 867w
Offences against children 596–7w
Police 599w, 757–8w
Police stations 5w
Population 704w
Prisons 758w
Special Reconnaissance Regiment 419w
Unemployment 703–4w
Weapons 368–9w

Northern Ireland Office
Assets 597w
Capita 865–6w
Christmas 157w
Climate change 282w
Contracts 866w
Cost effectiveness 597–8w
Departmental responsibilities 367w
Disabled 866w
Disclosure of information 366–7w
Equal pay 367w
Food 157w
Immobilisation of vehicles 599w
Internet 367w, 598w
Pay 282w
Plants 866–7w
Railways 78w
Recruitment 367–8w
Scientists 598w
Supply estimates 71ws
Taxis 598–9w
Working hours 368w

Northern Rail
Rolling stock 1272

Northern Rock
806w, 811w
Compensation 811w

Northwest Regional Development Agency
528

Norwich
Carers 912w
Driving offences 406w, 583–8w
First time buyers 784w
Foreign investment in UK 982w
Housing benefit 158w
Roads (19.11.2009) 244–50
Schools 846w
Speed limits 134w

Norwich-London railway line
569w, 766w
Rolling stock 408w, 766w

Nottingham City Council Bill 2007–08
Chamber Debates
Revival motion (03.12.2009) 1261

Nuclear Decommissioning Authority
Public relations 402–3w

Nuclear engineering
Training 403w, 715w

Nuclear power
715w
Iran 964–5
National policy statements 403w

Nuclear power stations
Bradwell-on-Sea 822w
Cumbria 715–6w
Safety 166w

Nuclear submarines
Decommissioning 54w, 419w
Scotland 516–7, 528–9

Nuclear weapons
India 867w
Pakistan 867w
Proliferation 623–4w
Venezuela 880w

Nurses
543–4w, 659–60w
Foreign workers 890–2w
Prisons 746w
Training (18.11.2009) 118–26, 746–7w

Nursing homes
see Care homes

Outen, Mr Mark
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 432, 434
Questions
Asylum, Democratic Republic of Congo 206w, 626–7w
Biometrics 466w
Botulinum toxin 650–1w
Carbon emissions, Mobile homes 80–1w
Children, International cooperation 705w
Entry clearances 888–9w
Entry clearances, Overseas students 213w, 215–7w, 479–81w
Incontinence, Medical equipment 655w
Learning and Skills Council for England, Correspondence 987w
Telephone services, Revenue and Customs 949w
Telephone services, Treasury 284w
VAT, Medical treatments 17w
Warm front scheme 718w

Oaths and affirmations
Bain, William (18.11.2009) 1
European Commission 735w

Obesity
Children 23ws, 944w
Health services 544–6w

O'Brien, Rt Hon Mike, Minister of State, Dept of Health
Chamber Debates
King George Hospital Ilford (24.11.2009) 510–2
Whittington Hospital (02.12.2009) 1256–60
Written Statements
Prescription drugs 112ws
Supply estimates, Dept of Health 56–8ws
Questions
Accident and emergency departments 185w, 526w
Accident and emergency departments, South East 526w
Ambulance services, Bexley 741w
Ambulance services, Hornsey 105w
Ambulance services, Standards 105–6w, 526w
Botulinum toxin 650–1w
Cancer, Medical treatments 546–7w

O'Brien, Rt Hon Mike, —continued
Community hospitals 103w, 400
Contraceptives 529w
Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Primary Care Trust, Finance 529–30w
Cost effectiveness, Dept of Health 188–9w
Epilepsy, Drugs 396
General practitioners, East of England 533–4w
General practitioners, Staffordshire 534w
Health, Screening 107–8w, 193w
Health services, Bolton 400
Health services, Cornwall 400
Health services, Staffordshire 398
Hospitals, Parking 386–7
Incontinence, Medical equipment 655w
Influenza 655w
Leukaemia, Drugs 941–3w
Maternity services, Bexley 744w
Medical records, Data protection 656w
Mentally ill, Drugs 657w
Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust, Parking 745w
Multiple sclerosis, Drugs 194–5w
National Centre for Stereotactic Radiosurgery, Standards 657–8w
NHS, Drugs 533–4w
NHS, Expenditure 535–6w
NHS, Finance 196w, 390–1, 542w, 660w, 745–6w
NHS, Information and communications technology 196w, 542–3w, 943w
NHS, Private finance initiative 399
NHS, Public consultation 195–6w
NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency, Contracts 658w
Patients, Transport 110–1w
Pharmacy, Regulation 111w, 454w
Prescriptions, Fees and charges 196–7w, 547w
Primary care trusts, Finance 397
Primary care trusts, Snow and ice 943–4w
Public expenditure, Dept of Health 531w (505 3mc)
Queen Mary's Hospital Sidcup, Accident and emergency departments 660w
Sickle cell diseases 111w
South London Healthcare NHS Trust 548w, 748–9w
Surgery, Bexley 749w
Treatment centres 393

O'Brien, Mr Stephen
Questions
Care Standards Act 2000, Prosecutions 529w
Chequers, Ministerial policy advisers 760w
Church of England, Finance 253–4w
Contraceptives 529w
Doctors, Working hours 394
Health, Children 353w
Health services, Learning disability 354w
Leukaemia 527w
NHS, Information and communications technology 196w
NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency, Contracts 658w
Official engagements, Dept of Health 934w
Organs, Donors 536–7w, 747w
Social services 548w
Transplant surgery, Liver diseases 354w
Transplant surgery, Private sector 358–9w
Vaccination, Children 195w

Offences against children
Northern Ireland 596–7w

Offenders
Deportation 481–4w

Offensive weapons
Injuries 540w, 939–40w

Office for Criminal Justice Reform
Finance 84–5w, 334–6w

Office for Legal Complaints
339–40w

Office for Standards in Education, Children's Services and Skills
Finance 837w

Office for Tenants and Social Landlords
see Tenant Services Authority

Office of the High Representative
see EU High Representative for Common Foreign and Security Policy

Office of the Secretary of State for Wales
Aviation 155w
Christmas 155w
Climate change 155w
Consultants 571w
Contracts 872w
Cost effectiveness 155w
Departmental responsibilities 156w
Disclosure of information 50w
Food 156w
Immobilisation of vehicles 572w
Information officers 571w
Internet 156w, 769w
Official cars 50w
Pay 156w, 282–3w, 769w
Public expenditure 571–2w, 769–70w
Railways 156w
Scientists 157w
Taxis 50w, 770w
Theft 283w
Travel 572w
Work experience 872w
Working hours 283w

Office of Water Services
Supply estimates 49–50ws

Official cars
Cabinet Office 451–2w
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 233w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 66w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 49w
Dept for Transport 762w
Dept for Work and Pensions 388w
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 714w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 55w
Government Equalities Office 57w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 50w
Scotland Office 136w
Treasury 283–4w

Official engagements
Dept of Health 934w
Prime Minister 522–3, 1099

Official gifts
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 556w

Official hospitality
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 636w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 12w, 65–6w
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 714w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 305w
Government departments 319–20w
Prime Minister 366w

Oils
Waste disposal 860w, 863w

Older people
975–6w
Care homes see Care homes
Housing 521w
Social security benefits 622w
Social services 104w

Olympic Games 2012
Aviation 377w
Contracts 271–2w, 365w, 758–9w
Dept for International Development 922–3w
Expenditure 147w
Finance 24–6ws
National Lottery 377–8w
River Thames 365–6w
Third sector 148w
West Midlands 169–70w

Olympic Lottery
Community development 5w

Oman
Double taxation 105ws

101 calls
197w

One NorthEast
Public appointments 988w

Open prisons
980w

Opencast mining
Petitions (23.11.2009) 3–4p

Ophthalmology
1104

Öpik, Lembit
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 37, (24.11.2009) 406
Questions
NHS, Accountability 390

Opinion polls
Home Office 279–80w

Opium
Licensing 751w

Organised crime
Criminal investigation 99ws

Organs
Donors 104w, 396, 536–7w, 747w

Origin marking
Israel (02.12.2009) 100–6wh, 257w

Osborne, Mr George
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 534–6
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 874–6, 886–97
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 703–12, 716, 722

Osborne, Sandra
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 555
Questions
Future Jobs Fund, Scotland 519–20
Nuclear weapons, Proliferation 623–4w

Ottaway, Richard
Questions
Business questions 1292

Outdoor education
837–8w

Overseas aid
56w
Afghanistan 247–8w, 606w, 754w, 898w, 917w, 1092–6
Burundi 223w
Latin America 55w

Overseas aid —continued
Palestinians 435w, 754w, 1089–91, 1097–8
Sri Lanka 755w
Zimbabwe 230w

Overseas students
EC nationals 889–90w
Entry clearances 208–9w, 213w, 215–7w, 479–81w, 674–5w

Owner occupation
Housing 311–2w

Paice, Mr James
Questions
Climate Change Adaptation Sub-Committee 713w
Floods, Warnings 385–6w
Poultry, Animal welfare 730–1w
Poverty 619–20w
Poverty, Farmers 621–2w

Pakistan
Dual nationality 478w
Internally displaced people 754w
Nuclear weapons 867w
Terrorism 624w

Palestinian-Israeli conflict
see Middle East

Palestinians
Overseas aid 435w, 754w, 1089–91, 1097–8
Utilities 435–6w

Parenting orders
666w

Parents
Conditions of employment 231–2w

Parking
Hospitals 386–7
Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust 745w
Non-domestic rates 101–2w
Railway stations 868w

Parliamentary Standards Authority see Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority

Parole
443w

Passengers
Aviation 261w

Passport and Identity Service see Identity and Passport Service

Passports
491w

Patients
Safety 1099
Transport 110–1w

Pay
Armed forces 21w, 51–2w
Banks 140w
Cabinet Office 452w
Civil servants 450w
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 234w, 295w, 636–7w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 11w, 66w, 308–9w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 2–3w, 375–6w, 722w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 858w
Dept for International Development 226–8w, 756w
Dept for Transport 58–9w
Dept for Work and Pensions 388–9w
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 80w, 400–1w
Dept of Health 189–90w, 350w

Pay —continued
Financial services 810w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 160–1w, 303–4w
Government Equalities Office 57w
Home Office 470w
Local government 11w, 13–4w
Ministry of Defence 152–3w
Ministry of Justice 323w
NHS 357w
Northern Ireland Office 282w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w, 282–3w, 769w
Police 38w, 214w, 492w
Scotland Office 281w
Teachers 222–3w
Treasury 143w

Peace negotiations
Middle East 305–6w, 430w, 624w, 632–3w, 965–6, 972–3
Yemen 306–7w

Peacekeeping operations
Afghanistan 7ws, 18w, 149w, 151w, 287–8w, 300w, 410–1w, 413–4w, 531, 607w, 898–9w, 908w, 910w, 954–8, 1100–1, 1103–4, 1108
Geneva Conventions 726–7w
Iraq 293w, 612–3w, 908w

Pearson, Ian, Economic Secretary to the Treasury
Chamber Debates
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 933–7
Written Statements
Corporate Governance of UK Banking Industry Review 86ws
EU Economic and Financial Affairs Council 21ws Financial Services Compensation Scheme 1–3ws
Questions
Business, EC grants and loans 101w
Coinage, Forgery 948w
Consultants, Treasury 948w
Domestic visits, Treasury 948w
EC budget 100–1w
Enterprise management incentives 981–2w
Government departments, Carbon emissions 927w
Housing, Valuation 145w
Non-domestic rates 849–50w
Non-domestic rates, Parking 101–2w
Private finance initiative 285w
Public sector, Procurement 948w
Research, Finance 102w
Tax allowances, Professional organisations 102w
Tax yields, Gaming machines 949w
Taxation, Sony Ericsson 812w

Pedestrian crossings
268w, 408–9w

Peers
Allowances 100ws

Pelling, Andrew
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 853
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 545
Christmas, Points of order (30.11.2009) 871
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 558
European Union (03.12.2009) 1299–300
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 878, 881–2
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1057, 1075–6
Members, Points of order (26.11.2009) 702

Pelling, Andrew—continued*
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 870
Oral question time intervention (03.12.2009) 1278
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 708, 720, 786
Questions
Arthritis, Medical treatments 931w
Building schools for the future programme, Croydon 827
Business questions 1292
Christianity, Developing countries 661–2
Compulsorily detained mental patients 398
Females, Human trafficking 1276–7
Incinerators, Health hazards 104w
Japan, Foreign relations 970
Remand in custody, Croydon 448w

Penalty fares
Railways 570w

Penning, Mike
Chamber Debates
Equitable Life Assurance Society, Petitions (19.11.2009) 243
Ministerial statement intervention (30.11.2009) 852
Questions
Banks, Loans 369w
Business questions 693
Cholesterol 347–8w
Dental services 385
Human rights, Christianity 736w
Import controls, Tobacco 604–5w
NHS, Public consultation 195–6w
Olympic Games 2012, National Lottery 377–8w
Police custody, Hemel Hempstead 280w
Select committee reports 679
Swine flu, Vaccination 25–6w

Penrose, John
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1122–30, 1132, 1163
Questions
Company accounts 35w
Company liquidations 231w
Drugs, Crime 84w
Insolvency Service 561–2w
Internet, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 28–9w
Transport, Weston-super-Mare 571w

Pension credit
Newcastle upon Tyne 877w

Pensioners
Fuel poverty 819–20w

Pensions
Civil servants 1106–7
Local government 178–82w, 523–4w
NHS 110w
Tax allowances 146w, 604w

Penzance-Plymouth railway line
569w

Permanent Secretary Government Communications
see Government Communications

Personal Care at Home Bill 2009–10
Chamber Debates
1R (25.11.2009) 559

Personal records
Borders 206–7w, 467w

Personal, social, health and economic education
317w

Personation
Directors 554w

Peterborough
Social security benefits 394–5w

Peterborough Prison
588–90w

Petitions
Dredging (30.11.2009) 8p
Equitable Life Assurance Society (19.11.2009) 1–2p, (25.11.2009) 5–6p, (19.11.2009) 243, (24.11.2009) 504–5, (25.11.2009) 645, (26.11.2009) 797–8, (30.11.2009) 942
Hadleigh (Essex) (30.11.2009) 942–3
Home Education Independent Review (30.11.2009) 7–9p, (01.12.2009) 9–10p, (02.12.2009) 11–3p, (03.12.2009) 15–6p, (01.12.2009) 1080, (02.12.2009) 1250–1, (03.12.2009) 1391
Opencast mining (23.11.2009) 3–4p
Princess Royal Hospital Telford (23.11.2009) 4p
Prostitution (01.12.2009) 1078–9
Shops (25.11.2009) 644
Sri Lanka (01.12.2009) 1079–80
Thundersley (02.12.2009) 13–4p

Pets
Animal welfare 575w
Shops 138–9w

Pharmacy
Regulation 111w, 454w

Pickles, Mr Eric
Chamber Debates
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 863

Pipelines
Market Harborough 393–4w
Water 732w

Piracy
Somalia 165w, 728–9w

Planning permission
Appeals 14w, 525w

Plants
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 233w
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 221w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 383w
Dept for International Development 756w
Northern Ireland Office 866–7w

Plaskitt, James
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 845

Playgrounds
706w

Playing fields
Schools 819

Plymouth
Building schools for the future programme 822, 825

Poisoning
Carbon monoxide 106–7w, 874w

Police
127–32ws
Databases 687w
Demonstrations 526–7
Finance 91–6ws
Firearms 491w
Lancashire 491–2w
Manpower 214w
Marketing 492–3w
Newark 128–9w
Northern Ireland 599w, 757–8w
Pay 38w, 214w, 492w
Political impartiality 531–2

Police—continued*
Road traffic control 279w, 687w
Standards 214w, 896w
Sussex 215w

Police custody
Hemel Hempstead 280w

Police interrogation
Terrorism 217w, 493–4w

Police stations
Northern Ireland 5w

Political impartiality
Police 531–2

Political parties
Eastern Europe 628w
Finance 68–70ws

Political refugees
see Asylum

Politics and government
Afghanistan 961–4
China 879w
Cyprus 953–4
Fiji 423–4w
Gibraltar 162w
India 425w
Kosovo 426w
Russia 736–7w
Rwanda 970
Sudan 431w
Western Sahara 635w
Zimbabwe 624w, 967–8, 972

Pollution
Shipping 270w

Pollution control
Drinking water 573w

Polygamy
Entry clearances 128w

Population
166w
Bedfordshire 828w
Lancashire 454–6w
Northern Ireland 704w

Ports
Liverpool 133w
Milford Haven 766–7w

Post codes
Databases 35w, 525w

Post offices
Bank services 123ws, 1108
Finance 563w

Postal services
Armed forces 412w
Ministry of Justice 12–3ws
VAT 605–6w

Poultry
Animal welfare 730–1w

Poverty
619–20w
Children 271w, 387w, 620–1w, 694w
Farmers 621–2w

Power stations
Construction 716w
EC law 716–7w

Pregnant women
Swine flu 25–6w

Prentice, Bridget, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Justice*
Written Statements
Civil Law Reform Bill (Draft) 13ws
Questions
Community justice centres, Finance 321w

Prentice, Bridget, continued
Data protection, Ministry of Justice 437–8w
Debts 578–80w
Debts, Government assistance 321–3w
HM Courts Service, Databases 238–9w
HM Courts Service, Manpower 439–41w
Legal aid 798w
Legal aid, Asylum 239–40w, 441w
Legal aid, Newcastle upon Tyne 798w
Magistrates' courts, Welsh language 331w
Office for Legal Complaints 339–40w
Parole 443w
Residence orders 802–4w

Prentice, Mr Gordon
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 847
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 272
Questions
Accident and emergency departments 185w, 526w
Breast cancer, Screening 741w
Business questions 689
Charities 693w
Coinage, Forgery 948w
Diplomatic service, Canada 158w
Diplomatic service, Manpower 304w
East coast railway line, Internet 568w
Government departments, Freedom of information 440w (503 5–6mc)
Honduras, Elections 973
Islam, Boarding schools 820
Islam, Faith schools 915–6w
Information Commissioner 702w, 971w
Members, Disqualification 882w
NHS, Accountability 390

Pre-school education
Finance 709–10w, 838–40w

Prescott, Rt Hon John
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 424–8, 453

Prescription drugs
112ws

Prescriptions
Fees and charges 196–7w, 547w

President of the European Council
628w

Press freedom
Iran 630w

Price, Adam
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 263, 286, 323–6, 366
Questions
Mobile phones, Health hazards 25w

Primarolo, Rt Hon Dawn, Minister of State, Dept for Children, Schools and Families
Questions
Carers, Milton Keynes 219–20w
Carers, Norwich 912w
Children, Databases 704–5w
Children, Day care 706–7w, 709w, 829–30w
Children, Protection 314–6w
Children in care 704w
Children's centres 814–5, 826
Children's centres, Enfield 705w
Families 836w
Family intervention projects 97w
GCSE 836w
Guardianship 96–7w
Health education, Donors 397w
Multiple births 705–6w

Primarolo, Rt Hon Dawn, continued
Pre-school education, Finance 709–10w, 838–40w
Schools, Inspections 819–20
Social services, Haringey 222w
Sure start programme 98–9w, 813–4
Sure start programme, Bedfordshire 712w
Sure start programme, Chorley 98w
Sure start programme, Lancashire 98w
Teenage pregnancy 99w, 399w

Primary care trusts
Finance 397
Snow and ice 943–4w

Primary education
3–6ws
Bedfordshire 841w
Finance 107–9ws
Greater London 841w
Lancashire 98w
Standards 820–1

Prime Minister
British Petroleum 759w
Caparo Group 759w
Christmas 614–5w
Climate change 366w
Departmental responsibilities 615w
Disclosure of information 867w
Domestic visits 759w
Information officers 701w
Official engagements 522–3, 1099
Official hospitality 366w
Railways 615w
Shell 759w
Taxis 759w
Travel 759w

Princess Royal Hospital Telford
Petitions (23.11.2009) 4p

Prisk, Mr Mark
Westminster Hall Debates
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 79wh
Manufacturing industries (02.12.2009) 109wh, 121wh, 125–8wh, 130wh
Questions
Energy performance certificates 819w
Women's Enterprise Task Force 991–2w

Prison sentences
337–40w
Greater Manchester 335–8w

Prison Service
Finance 448w

Prisoner escapes
801–2w
Hollesley Bay Prison 795–7w

Prisoners
Exservicemen 803–5w
Females 238w
Foreign nationals 444–8w, 484–5w
Mentally ill 239–40w, 242–3w, 484–5w, 542w
Self-harm 591w
Suicide 447w

Prisoners' release
Chelmsford Prison 85w, 590w
Foreign nationals 966–7

Prisoners' transfers
882w
Libya 243w

Prisons
Construction 243–4w
Drugs 237–8w, 242w, 340–1w, 444–6w, 589–90w
Inspections 339w, 447w
Mental health services 333–4w
Mobile phones 758w

Prisons continued
Northern Ireland 758w
Nurses 746w
Operating costs 802w
Security 241–2w
Standards 241w
Visits 244w

Prisons Inspectorate see HM Inspectorate of Prisons

Pritchard, Mark
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 853
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1230
Questions
Business questions 686
Colombia, Human rights 626w
Eastern Europe, Political parties 628w
Fire services, Floods 779–80w
Higher education, Agriculture 984w
Hungary, Foreign investment 555w
Nature conservation, Crime 137–8w
Pets, Shops 138–9w
Pupils, Bullying 816
Venezuela, Nuclear weapons 880w
Wildlife, Licensing 139–40w

Private finance initiative
285w
NHS 399

Private members' bills
(23.11.2009) 373, (24.11.2009) 504, (25.11.2009) 644, (26.11.2009) 796, (30.11.2009) 941, (01.12.2009) 1078, (02.12.2009) 1250, (03.12.2009) 1390–1

Private rented housing
788w

Private sector
Sewers 139w
Transplant surgery 358–9w

Prizes
UNESCO 251–2w

Probation
441–2w
Expenditure 332–3w, 341–2w

Probation officers
442–3w

Professional organisations
Tax allowances 102w, 147w

Programme motions
see Timetabling of bills

Proliferation
Nuclear weapons 623–4w

Property development
Floods 850w
Green belt 783w

Proportional representation
(01.12.2009) 26–49wh

Proscribed organisations
529

Prosecutions
131–2w
Burglary 669–70
Care Standards Act 2000 529w
Domestic violence 670–1, 868w
Euthanasia 258w, 665–6
Fraud 131w
Theft 771w

Prosser, Mr Gwyn
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1153–6
Questions
Business questions 686–7

Prostate cancer
Screening 109w

Prostitution
Petitions (01.12.2009) 1078–9

Public appointments
Chief Construction Adviser 27ws
East Midlands Development Agency 103ws
European Commission 1106
HM Inspectorate of Prisons 134–5ws
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority (02.12.2009) 1234–49
One NorthEast 988w
Regional development agencies 104–5ws
Yorkshire Forward 988w

Public expenditure
146w, 371–2w
Cabinet Office 826w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 594w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 858w
Dept for International Development 756w
Dept for Transport 761–2w
Dept of Health 531w (505 3mc), 653w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 422w
Ministry of Defence 416w, 611–2w, 910–1w
Ministry of Justice 882w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 571–2w, 769–70w
Scotland 811w
Scotland Office 760w
Wales 101ws, 602w, 811w, 1107

Public houses
Closures 853–4w

Public libraries
Wirral 171w, 854w

Public relations
Audit Commission 640–1w
Cabinet Office 972–3w
Charity Commission 694w
Dept for International Development 607w
East Midlands Development Agency 981w
English Partnerships 849w
Fire Service College 779w
Futurebuilders England 701w
Government departments 973–4w
Nuclear Decommissioning Authority 402–3w
Science and Technology Facilities Council 989w
South East England Development Agency 989w
Tenant Services Authority 649w
Thurrock Thames Gateway Development Corporation 788w
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority 404w

Public sector
646w
Employment agencies 637w
Land 172w, 177w
Procurement 563–4w, 948w

Public transport
Crime 61w, 666–7w
Security 1266–7
South East 61w

Publicity
Ministry of Defence 23w

Pugh, John
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 544
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 907, 914, 923
Westminster Hall Debates
Manufacturing industries (02.12.2009) 107–13wh, 119wh
Questions
Census 455–7w
Children, Alcoholic drinks 936–7w
Children, Obesity 944w
Children, Stress 749w
Drugs, Crime 751w
Industrial disputes 827–8w
Northern Rail, Rolling stock 1272
Opium, Licensing 751w
Outdoor education 837–8w
Post codes, Databases 35w, 525w
Video games 379–80w

Puma helicopters
614w

Pupils
Bullying 815–6
Disadvantaged 396w

Purchase, Mr Ken
Chamber Debates
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 866
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 72, 88–92
Questions
Business questions 1289–90

Pyramid selling
724w

Qualifications
Higher education 31–2w

Queen Mary's Hospital Sidcup
Accident and emergency departments 660w

Queen's speech
(18.11.2009) 2–4, 12–117
Addresses to the Crown (18.11.2009) 5–12
Climate change (24.11.2009) 405–504
Crime (25.11.2009) 560–643
Defence (23.11.2009) 262–372
Economic situation (26.11.2009) 703–96
Education (19.11.2009) 144–242
Energy (24.11.2009) 405–504
Foreign policy (23.11.2009) 262–372
Health services (19.11.2009) 144–242
Welfare state (25.11.2009) 560–643

Rabbits
Animal experiments 277w

Racial discrimination
Schools 710–1w

Radcliffe School Milton Keynes
827

Radiation exposure
Exservicemen 293w

Radicalism
687–8w
Students 557w, 560w

Radio
Digital broadcasting 594w

Radioactive waste
Waste management 927–8w

Radlett
Railways 409w

RAF Welford
418–9w

Railway network
62w, 409w

Railway stations
North West 1265–6
Parking 868w
Repairs and maintenance 268w, 408w
Standards 17–8ws

Railways
Accidents 268–9w
Bridges 767w
Cabinet Office 319w
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 834–5w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 66w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 49w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 859w
Dept for International Development 249w
Dept for Transport 59w
Dept for Work and Pensions 389w
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 80w
Dept of Health 653w
East of England 122ws, 1271–2
Finance 61w, 133w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 161w
Franchises 7w, 100ws, 568w, 869w, 1275–6
Freight 409w
Fuels 571w
Glasgow Airport 1273
Heathrow Airport 1274
Manchester Airport 765w
Ministry of Defence 154w
Ministry of Justice 438w
Northern Ireland Office 78w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w
Penalty fares 570w
Prime Minister 615w
Radlett 409w
Repairs and maintenance 570w
Scotland 522, 869w
Scotland Office 135w
Standards 767w
Treasury 143w
Wales 567w

Rammell, Bill, Minister of State, Ministry of Defence
Written Statements
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 7ws
Military aid, Floods 111ws
Military aid, Iraq 121ws
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 287w, 411w, 413–4w, 607w
Air force, Deployment 288w
Air force, Training 288w
Armed forces, Cadets 725–6w
Armed forces, Postal services 412w
Armed forces, Telephone services 412w
Armoured fighting vehicles, Northern Ireland 726w
Army, Manpower 414w
Army, Per capita costs 412w
Chinook helicopters 609w
Colombia, Military aid 610w
Defence, Procurement 413–4w
Drinking water, Ministry of Defence 414–5w
Internet, Ministry of Defence 726w
Iraq, Peacekeeping operations 293w
Joint rapid reaction force 908–9w
Lynx helicopters 614w
Members, Correspondence 418w
Merlin helicopters, Training 613w
Military aid 909w

Rammell, Bill, —continued
Military bases, Northern Ireland 909–10w
Nuclear submarines, Decommissioning 419w
Peacekeeping operations, Geneva Conventions 726–7w
Rescue services, Contracts 910w
Royal Military Academy, Admissions 727w
Somalia, Piracy 728–9w
Special Reconnaissance Regiment, Northern Ireland 419w
Territorial Army, Finance 23w, 54–5w

Randall, Mr John
Questions
Extradition, USA 983

Raves
Milton Keynes 218w

Reading Borough Council Bill 2007–08
Chamber Debates
Revival motion (26.11.2009) 659

Recess motions
(23.11.2009) 372, (25.11.2009) 602, 655–8

Reconstruction
Afghanistan 432w, 631–2w
Iraq 631–2w

Recreation spaces
851w

Recruitment
Armed forces 52w
Cabinet Office 452w
Civil servants 975w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 173w, 498w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 49w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 859w
Dept for International Development 249w
Dept for Transport 763w
Dept of Health 351w
Home Office 470–2w
Ministry of Defence 291–2w
Ministry of Justice 438–9w
Northern Ireland Office 367–8w
Scotland Office 381w
Treasury 284w

Recycling
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 233w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 67w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 3w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 572–3w
Dept for International Development 250w
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 401w
Dept of Health 190w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 161–2w
Home Office 471w
Ministry of Defence 292w
Ministry of Justice 439–40w

Redundancy
988w
NHS 543w

Redwood, Rt Hon John
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 852

Redwood, Rt Hon John —continued
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 24, 33, 35, 43, 54, 69–77, (26.11.2009) 708, 715, 785

Reed, Mr Andy
Questions
Africa, Climate change 1097
Rwanda, Politics and government 970

Referendums
UK membership of EC 624w

Refugees
see Asylum

Regeneration
Coastal areas (01.12.2009) 50–8wh
Kent 850w

Regional development agencies
Public appointments 104–5ws

Regional government
South West 314w

Regulation
Banks 369w
Financial services 144w
Health professions 935–6w
Herbal medicine 743w
Pharmacy 111w, 454w

Rehabilitation
Drugs 352w
Sexual offences 590–1w

Reid, Mr Alan
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1074–5
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 62, (26.11.2009) 767–70
Questions
Business, Scotland 135w
Business questions 140
Nuclear submarines, Scotland 528–9

Religious freedom
India 425w, 628–9w
Nepal 9w

Remand in custody
Croydon 448w

Remittances
229–30w, 251w

Remploy
Standards 20ws

Renewable energy
37w, 82w, 361–2w, 822w
Wales 717w

Renewables obligation
Water power 403–4w

Rennie, Willie
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 555
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 411
Questions
Air force, Deployment 288w
Air force, Training 288w
Aircraft carriers 18w
Armed forces, Cadets 725–6w
Armed forces, Housing 19–22w, 54w, 290w, 609w
Armed forces, Theft 902–6w
Armoured fighting vehicles 53w
Army, Manpower 414w
Defence equipment, Lost property 419–20w
Devonport Dockyard 292–3w
Drinking water, Ministry of Defence 414–5w
Dunfermline Building Society 370w
Empty property, Ministry of Defence 22w
Income, Rents 285–6w

Rennie, Willie —continued
Information officers, Ministry of Defence 907w
Land, Ministry of Defence 291w, 415w
Ministerial policy advisers, Ministry of Defence 611w
Nuclear submarines, Decommissioning 54w, 419w
Nuclear submarines, Scotland 516
Publicity, Ministry of Defence 23w
Third sector, Finance 459–60w

Rented housing
Fire prevention 12w

Rents
Income 285–6w

Reoffenders
240–2w, 244w
Driving under influence 40–6w
Young offenders 449w

Repatriation
487–8w
Cameroon 897w

Rescue services
Contracts 910w

Research
Climate change 816–7w
Dementia 107w
Engineering 988–9w
Finance 102w, 816w
Genetically modified organisms 654–5w
Higher education 638w
Medicine 656–7w
Science 988–9w

Residence orders
802–4w

Residential care homes
see Care homes

Retail trade
Theft 771w

Retirement
Clergy 659–60

Revenue and Customs
371w
Manpower 603w
Public consultation 603w
Supply estimates 32–3ws
Telephone services 949w

Rifkind, Sir Malcolm
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 844
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 270, 298–302
Questions
Afghanistan, Politics and government 961–2

River Thames
Olympic Games 2012 365–6w

Road signs and markings
267–9w
Bridges 133–4w

Road traffic
Stonehenge 269w

Road traffic control
Police 279w, 687w

Roads
Accidents 570w, 688w, 871w, 1268–9
Afghanistan 248w
Finance 122ws
Lighting 869w
Norwich (19.11.2009) 244–50

Robathan, Mr Andrew
Questions
Business questions 139, 1293

Robathan, Mr Andrew—continued*
Community hospitals 103w, 400
Employment, Scotland 517
General elections 664–5
Modernisation of the House of Commons Select Committee 672–3

Robertson, Angus
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 553
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 287w
Chinook helicopters 609–10w
Defence Support Group 610w
European air transport fleet 610w
Iraq, Peacekeeping operations 612–3w
Puma helicopters 614w
Trident missiles 911w

Robertson, Hugh
Questions
Government Olympic Executive, London Development Agency 4w
Olympic Lottery, Community development 5w
Railway network 409w
Sports, Television 4w
Stratford Station 7w
UK School Games 37–8w, 596w

Robertson, John
Chamber Debates
Devolution, Scotland (25.11.2009) 556
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 1095
Glasgow Airport, Railways 1273
National Audit Office, Cost effectiveness 664
Pupils, Bullying 815–6

Robertson, Mr Laurence
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 417, 453–9
Questions
A417, Gloucestershire 1268
Cetaceans, Japan 383w
Leukaemia, Drugs 941–3w
Missing persons, Children 912–3w
Motor vehicles, Excise duties 568w
Public sector, Procurement 563–4w
Schools, Racial discrimination 710–1w

Robinson, Mr Geoffrey
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 848
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 888, 890, 892, 902–5
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 865–6
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 773–5
Questions
Afghanistan, Politics and government 962–3
NHS, Finance 391

Robinson, Mrs Iris
Questions
Extradition, USA 987

Rochdale
Common land 777w

Rodents
731w
Sewers 731–2w

Rogerson, Daniel
Westminster Hall Debates
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 78wh
Questions
Penzance-Plymouth railway line 569w

Rolling stock
62–3w, 269–70w, 409w

Rolling stock—continued*
Northern Rail 1272
Norwich-London railway line 408w, 766w
Procurement 1261–5
Thameslink railway line 63–4w, 410w

Romania
Immigration 453w

Rosindell, Mr Andrew
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 413–4w, 898w
Armoured fighting vehicles 609w
Armoured fighting vehicles, Northern Ireland 726w
Climate change, Research 817w
Cycling, Highway Code 870w
Drugs, Death 825–6w
Drugs, Mentally ill 657w
Electric vehicles, Expenditure 763w
Exservicemen 908w
Lynx helicopters 614w
Merlin helicopters, Training 613w
Military aircraft 613w
Military aircraft, Helicopters 909w
Military bases, Northern Ireland 909–10w
NHS, Information and communications technology 943w
Nurses, Training 746–7w
Prisoner escapes 801–2w
Railways, Bridges 767w
Railways, Repairs and maintenance 570w
Roads, Accidents 570w, 871w
Royal Military Academy, Admissions 727w
Sickle cell diseases 747–8w
Sickle cell diseases, Death 826w
Special Reconnaissance Regiment, Northern Ireland 419w
Swine flu 944w

Rothschild, Lord
638w

Rowen, Paul
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 268, 288
Questions
Arthritis, Health services 106w
Building schools for the future programme 94–5w
Chronic fatigue syndrome 23–4w, 107w
Common land 787w
Common land, Rochdale 777w
House of Commons, Reform 529–30
Musculoskeletal disorders, Medical treatments 110w
Musculoskeletal disorders, Voluntary organisations 357w
Schools, Asbestos 317w
Schools, Biometrics 916w
Students, Loans 235w, 564w
Tax yields, Gaming machines 949w
Work capability assessment 395w, 877w

Roy, Lindsay
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 1094
Devolution, Scotland 522
Post offices, Bank services 1108
Telephone services, Operating costs 639–40w

Royal Bank of Scotland
79–80ws, 107ws

Royal Dutch Shell
see Shell

Royal Fleet Auxiliary
294w, 614w

Royal Military Academy
Admissions 727w

Royal Navy
see Navy

Ruane, Chris
Questions
Blood, Donors 650w
Bone marrow disorders, Donors 185–6w, 343w
Bus services, Concessions 1271
Children, Advertising 314w
Community development 173w
Community relations 777w
Conditions of employment, Parents 231–2w
Economic situation 1105
Employment, Vale of Clwyd 453w
Families 836w
Land mines, Exports 637–8w
Manchester Airport, Railways 765w
Mental health 541w
Mental health, Unemployed people 356w
Mental health services 109w, 356w
Mentally ill, Children 744–5w
Neighbourhood wardens 524w
New deal for young people, Northern Ireland 867w
Overseas aid 56w
Population, Northern Ireland 704w
Post offices, Finance 563w
Social conditions 370w
Statistics, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 835w
Statistics, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 273w
Statistics, Home Office 471w
Television 378–80w
Unemployment 775–6w
Unemployment, Northern Ireland 703–4w
Unemployment, Young people 462–4w

Ruddock, Joan, Minister of State, Dept of Energy and Climate Change*
Questions
Assets, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 79w
Biofuels 382w
Biofuels, Boilers 399–400w
Carbon emissions 816w, 923w
Carbon emissions, Heating 712w
Carbon emissions, Housing 35–6w, 712–3w
Carbon emissions, Mobile homes 80–1w
Christmas, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 78–9w
Climate change 923–4w
Climate change, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 36w
Climate change, Research 816–7w
Combined heat and power, EC law 817w
Cost effectiveness, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 400w
Departmental responsibilities, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 359w
Electricity 401–2w
Energy, Conservation 79w, 359w, 819w
Energy performance certificates 819w
Exhaust emissions, Shipping 714w
Food, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 79–80w
Insulation, Housing 81–2w
Legal costs, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 713w
Legislation, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 924–5w
Low carbon buildings programme 78w, 820–1w
Manpower, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 817–8w

Ruddock, Joan, —continued
Official cars, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 714w
Official hospitality, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 714w
Pay, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 80w, 400–1w
Railways, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 80w
Recycling, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 401w
Renewable energy 37w, 82w
Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Act 2000 823–4w
Written questions, Government responses 37w

Ruffley, Mr David
Questions
Alcoholic drinks, Young people 463w
Assaults on police 663–5w
Crimes of violence 667–70w
Driving offences, Insurance 674w
Firearms, Crime 675–6w
General practitioners, East of England 533–4w
Health services, East of England 654w
Hunting 677–8w
Norwich-London railway line 569w, 766w
Norwich-London railway line, Rolling stock 408w, 766w
Police, Firearms 491w
Police, Road traffic control 687w
Rolling stock 409w
Train operating companies, Complaints 768w

Rural areas
Affordable housing 86–7ws, 172–3w

Rural development programme
381–2w

Russell, Bob
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 847–8
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 867
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 144, 152, 158, 162, 165, 170, 217–22, 232
Questions
Corporation tax, Credit unions 16–7w
Dental services 397
Invalid vehicles 263w
Invalid vehicles, Accidents 264w
Multiple births 705–6w, 835–6w
Nuclear power stations, Bradwell-on-Sea 822w
Railways, East of England 1272
St Helena 625w
Schools, Admissions 710w
Swimming pools 706w

Russia
Energy 971
Politics and government 736–7w

Rwanda
Politics and government 970

Ryan, Ms Joan
Questions
Children's centres, Enfield 705w
School leaving, Enfield 707–8w
Schools, Enfield 845–6w
Specialised diplomas, Enfield 711w

St Helena
625w

Sales
Electoral register 67–8ws

Salmond, Rt Hon Alex
Questions
Members, Correspondence 490w

Salter, Mr Martin
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1070–1
Select committees (26.11.2009) 800, 805–6
Questions
Business questions 688

Sanctions
50ws

Sanders, Mr Adrian
Westminster Hall Debates
Coastal areas, Regeneration (01.12.2009) 51wh
Questions
Animal experiments, Rabbits 277w
Bus services, Concessions 261w
Business, Credit 978w
Departmental coordination, Economic situation 141w
Fire prevention, Rented housing 12w
Hospitals, Crimes of violence 658–9w
NHS, Disclosure of information 658w
NHS, Finance 542w
NHS, Training 543w
Nurses 543–4w, 659–60w
Pedestrian crossings 268w, 408–9w
Pharmacy, Regulation 111w, 454w
Railways, Finance 61w
Security guards 213–4w
Social rented housing, Smoke alarms 183–4w
Taxation, EC countries 147w
Taxation, Holiday accommodation 17w
UK membership of EC, Referendums 624w
VAT, Derelict land 373w
VAT, Tourism 373–4w
Warm front scheme 718–9w

Sanitation
Schools 398w

Scarborough and North East Yorkshire Healthcare NHS Trust
108w

School leaving
Enfield 707–8w

Schools
809–10
Admissions 710w, 826, 829, 841–5w
Afghanistan 248–9w
Asbestos 317w, 828
Biometrics 916w
Boilers 911w
Crime prevention 215w
Discipline 397–8w, 823–4
Enfield 845–6w
Finance 916–7w
Greater Manchester 396w
Inspections 396–7w, 819–20
Lincolnshire 845w
Manpower 823
Mental health services 317–8w
Milton Keynes 317–8w
Norwich 846w
Playing fields 819
Racial discrimination 710–1w
Sanitation 398w
Sports 222w, 398–9w
Standards 828
Stoke on Trent 825

Science
Public consultation 318w
Research 988–9w

Science and Technology Facilities Council
Public relations 989w

Scientific advisers
Dept for International Development 923w

Scientists
Cabinet Office 695w
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 980–1w
Dept for International Development 433w
Dept of Health 653w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 627w
Ministry of Defence 612w
Ministry of Justice 581w
Northern Ireland Office 598w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 157w
Scotland Office 281w
Solicitor-General 577–8w
Treasury 370w

Scotland
Armed forces 134w
Broadband 513–5
Business 135w
Devolution 84ws, 135w, 522
Digital technology 135w
Employment 517–9
Future Jobs Fund 519–20
Human trafficking 515–6
Immigration 136w
Legislation 15–6ws
Ministerial statements (25.11.2009) 547–58
Nuclear submarines 516–7, 528–9
Public expenditure 811w
Railways 522, 869w
Taxation 371–2w
Tourism 520–1
Unemployment 6w, 521

Scotland Office
Aviation 5w
Christmas 280w
Consultants 380w
Cost effectiveness 280w
Departmental responsibilities 135w
Disclosure of information 281w
Energy 5w
Food 380w
Immobilisation of vehicles 593w
Information officers 592w
Internet 592w
Mobile phones 281w
Official cars 136w
Pay 281w
Public expenditure 769w
Railways 135w
Recruitment 381w
Scientists 281w
Security 760w
Supply estimates 71–2ws
Taxis 281–2w
Theft 380w
Travel 592w
Working hours 381w

Scott, Lee
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 150, 216–7
Questions
Business questions 689
Housing and planning delivery grant 644w

Screening
Aortic aneurysm 399, 929–31w
Asperger's syndrome 401–2
Breast cancer 540–1w, 741w
Cervical cancer 540–1w, 547w
Chlamydia 741–2w, 932–4w

Screening—continued*
Health 24w, 107–8w, 193w
Methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus 745w
Prostate cancer 109w

Seabeck, Alison
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 846
Westminster Hall Debates
Industrial diseases, Compensation (02.12.2009) 138–41wh, 144wh
Questions
Building schools for the future programme, Plymouth 825

Second homes
Capital gains tax 600w, 947w

Secondary education
Developing countries 228–9w

Secondment
Homes and Communities Agency 73w, 644w
Tenant Services Authority 851w

Secret Intelligence Service see MI6

Security
Blair, Rt Hon Tony 494w
Deportation 888w
Home Office 208w
Internet 489w
MI6 9–10w
Prisons 241–2w
Public transport 1266–7
Scotland Office 760w

Security guards
213–4w

Seized articles
Motor vehicles 894w

Select Committee on Standards and Privileges see Standards and Privileges Select Committee

Select committee reports
678–9

Select committees
(26.11.2009) 799–808

Self-harm
Prisoners 591w

Sellafield
928w
Floods 822–3w

Selous, Andrew
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1188, 1194, 1198
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 28
Shops, Petitions (25.11.2009) 644
Questions
A5, M1 58w, 404w
Bereavement benefits 157–8w
Education, Disadvantaged 811–2
Middle East, Peace negotiations 965–6
Mortgages, Government assistance 393w
Roads, Accidents 1268–9
Working hours, Cabinet Office 452–3w
Working hours, Dept for Communities and Local Government 309w
Working hours, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 48w
Working hours, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 383–4w
Working hours, Dept for International Development 250–1w
Working hours, Dept of Health 531–3w

Selous, Andrew—continued*
Working hours, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 304w
Working hours, Government Equalities Office 57w
Working hours, Home Office 471–4w
Working hours, Ministry of Defence 416–8w
Working hours, Northern Ireland Office 368w
Working hours, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 283w
Working hours, Scotland Office 381w
Working hours, Treasury 144w

Sentencing
Driving offences 790–4w
Young offenders 342w

Serbia
EC accession 737–8w

Serco
UK Border Agency 897w

Serious Fraud Office
578w, 868w

Serious Organised Crime Agency
688–9w

Sewers
Private sector 139w
Rodents 731–2w

Sexual offences
Alcoholic drinks 690w
Rehabilitation 590–1w
Victim support schemes 689–92w

Shapps, Grant
Questions
Affordable housing 64w, 70–2w, 307w, 497w, 501–2w, 640w
Affordable housing, Rural areas 172–3w
Contracts, Dept for Communities and Local Government 497w
Derelict land 183w
Energy, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 833–4w
Energy, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 374–6w
Energy, Home Office 208w
Energy, Scotland Office 5w
Government Hospitality 162–3w
Home information packs 173–4w
Homes and Communities Agency 64w, 68–74w, 175–6w, 503–22w, 644w
Homes and Communities Agency, Secondment 644w
Housing 519–20w
Housing, Bristol 520–1w
Information and communications technology, Home Office 469–70w
Information and communications technology, Ministry of Defence 415w
Land, Public sector 172w, 177w
Lost property, Dept for Communities and Local Government 11–2w
Lost property, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 2w
Lost property, Treasury 808w
Mobile phones, Scotland Office 281w
Mortgages 182w
Mortgages, Government assistance 69–70w
Official hospitality, Dept for Communities and Local Government 12w, 65–6w
Official hospitality, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 305w
Pay, Dept for Communities and Local Government 11w, 309w
Pay, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 722w

Shapps, Grant—continued*
Pay, Dept for International Development 756w
Pay, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 303w
Pay, Ministry of Defence 152–3w
Plants, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 233w
Plants, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 221w
Plants, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 383w
Plants, Dept for International Development 756w
Plants, Northern Ireland Office 866–7w
Recruitment, Dept for Communities and Local Government 498w
Tenant Services Authority 73–4w, 514w, 521–2w
Tenant Services Authority, Information and communications technology 173w
Tenant Services Authority, Secondment 851w
Theft, Cabinet Office 695–6w
Theft, Dept for Communities and Local Government 11w
Theft, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 168w
Theft, Dept of Health 190w
Theft, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 161w
Theft, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 283w
Theft, Scotland Office 380w
Training, Dept for Communities and Local Government 499w
Training, Dept for International Development 250w
Training, Dept for Work and Pensions 389w
Training, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 423w
Training, Government Equalities Office 57w
Training, Home Office 887–8w
Training, Leader of the House of Commons 770w
Training, Ministry of Defence 416w
Training, Treasury 809w
Travellers, Caravan sites 525w

Shared ownership schemes
East of England 647–8w

Shareholders
457–8w

Sharma, Mr Virendra Kumar
Questions
Children's centres 814–5
Domestic violence, Immigrants 873w
Pakistan, Internally displaced people 754w
Tuberculosis 945–6w

Shaw, Jonathan, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and Minister for the South East, Dept for Work and Pensions*
Written Statements
Remploy, Standards 20ws
Questions
Carbon monoxide, Poisoning 874w
Climate change, Dept for Work and Pensions 6w
Employment and support allowance 389–90w, 874–6w
Employment and support allowance, Chronic fatigue syndrome 390w
Employment and support allowance, Dartford 618–9w
Employment schemes, Disabled 875–6w

Shaw, Jonathan, —continued*
Fires, Atherstone on Stour 391w
Industrial diseases, Compensation 876–7w
Natural gas, Safety 563w
Pipelines, Market Harborough 393–4w
Railways, Dept for Work and Pensions 389w
Social security benefits, Older people 622w
Social security benefits, Peterborough 394–5w
Work capability assessment 395w, 877w

Sheerman, Mr Barry
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1383
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 886–7
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 165, 168–74
Questions
Business questions 690
Common land, Registration 254–6w
Modernisation of the House of Commons Select Committee 674
Schools 810

Shell
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 564w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 634w
Prime Minister 759w

Sheltered housing
Tamworth 183w

Sheridan, Mr Jim
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 18
Questions
Business questions 1288–9
Health services, Human trafficking 386
Tourism, Scotland 521

Shipping
Conditions of employment 115–6ws
Exhaust emissions 714w
Liquefied natural gas 359–61w
Pollution 270w
Safety 270w
Training 409w, 1267–8

Shops
Petitions (25.11.2009) 644
Pets 138–9w

Short, Rt Hon Clare
Questions
Armed forces, Young people 413w
Members, Correspondence 893w

Sickle cell diseases
111w, 747–8w, 931w
Death 826w

Siemens
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 722w

Sight impaired
Social services 111–2w

Simmonds, Mr Mark
Questions
Cancer, Clinical trials 528w
Health professions, Regulation 935–6w
Hospital beds 939w
Lung cancer 354–5w, 656w
Prescriptions, Fees and charges 547w
Surgery, Manpower 196w

Simon, Mr Siôn, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport*
Written Statements
EU Education, Youth and Culture Council 88–9ws

Simon, Mr Siôn, —continued*
Questions
Assets, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 374w (17–8mc)
Buildings, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 1w
Capita, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 593w, 721w
Christmas, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 1w, 721–2w
Climate change, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 1w
Conferences, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 273w
Contracts, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 593w
Cost effectiveness, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 170w
Digital broadcasting, Complaints 594w
Digital broadcasting, Radio 594w
Digital broadcasting, Video equipment 723w
Disclosure of information, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 171w
Driving, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 595w
Energy, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 374–6w
Food, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 48w
Immobilisation of vehicles, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 377w
Information officers, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 722w
Internet, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 375w
KBR, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 724w
Legal costs, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 49w
Lost property, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 2w
Official cars, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 49w
Olympic Games 2012, National Lottery 377–8w
Pay, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 2–3w, 375–6w, 722w
Public expenditure, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 594w
Recruitment, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 49w
Recycling, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 3w
Siemens, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 722w
Statistics, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 273w
Taxis, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 3w, 168w, 722–3w
Television 378–9w
Television, Licensing 379w
Theft, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 168w
Visits abroad, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 3w, 856w
Working hours, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 48w

Simpson, Mr Alan
Questions
Genetically modified organisms 353w
Genetically modified organisms, Food 534–5w

Simpson, David
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 752–4, 756
Questions
Devolution, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 733w

Simpson, David—continued*
Domestic visits, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 979–80w
Domestic visits, Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Domestic visits, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 593w
Domestic visits, Dept for International Development 918w
Domestic visits, Dept for Transport 761w
Domestic visits, Minister for the Olympics 758w
Domestic visits, Prime Minister 759w
Domestic visits, Solicitor-General 577w
Domestic visits, Treasury 948w
Homelessness 783–4w

Simpson, Mr Keith
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 956–8

Single parents
see Lone parents

Sixth form colleges
Building schools for the future programme 916w

Skin piercing
Young people 748w

Skinner, Mr Dennis
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 212–6

Smith, Rt Hon Andrew
Chamber Debates
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 902, 908
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 729–31
Westminster Hall Debates
Bullingdon Prison (02.12.2009) 132wh
Higher education (01.12.2009) 3wh, 7wh
Origin marking, Israel (02.12.2009) 101wh
Questions
Council housing, Finance 777–8w
Private rented housing 788w

Smith, Angela C
Questions
Alcoholic drinks, Children 928–9w
Alcoholic drinks, Excise duties 599–600w
Rolling stock, Procurement 1263

Smith, Rt Hon Angela E, Minister of State, Cabinet Office
Written Statements
Charity Commission, Supply estimates 80ws
Questions
Breast cancer 824w
Business, Wales 823–5w
Cancer 454w
Caparo Group, Cabinet Office 693w
Census 455–7w, 951–60w
Charities 693w
Charity Commission 693–4w
Charity Commission, Public relations 694w
Childbirth, Buckinghamshire 550w
Civil servants, Pay 450w
Cost effectiveness, Cabinet Office 450–1w
Death, Aortic aneurysm 962–72w
Death, Drugs 825–6w
Death, Sickle cell diseases 826w
Driving, Cabinet Office 696w
Employment 696–700w
Employment, Vale of Clwyd 453w
Food, Cabinet Office 451w
Foreign workers 699–702w
Futurebuilders England, Public relations 701w

Smith, Rt Hon Angela E.—continued
Government Communications 701w
Government Strategic Marketing Advisory Board 702w
Industrial disputes 827–8w
Information officers, Cabinet Office 826–7w
Internet, Cabinet Office 694w
Migration 457w
Pay, Cabinet Office 452w
Population, Bedfordshire 828w
Population, Lancashire 454–6w
Population, Northern Ireland 704w
Public expenditure, Cabinet Office 826w
Recruitment, Cabinet Office 452w
Scientists, Cabinet Office 695w
Shareholders 457–8w
Social Enterprise Day 458w
Taxis, Cabinet Office 695w
Telecommunications, Databases 828w
Theft, Cabinet Office 695–6w
Third sector, Finance 458–60w, 703w
Unemployment 775–6w
Unemployment, North East 392w
Unemployment, Northern Ireland 703–4w
Unemployment, South East 392–4w
Unemployment, Tonbridge 460–2w
Unemployment, Tyne and Wear 827–30w
Unemployment, Young people 462–4w
Vacancies 774–5w
Working hours, Cabinet Office 452–3w
Young people, Females 463w

Smith, Chloe
Chamber Debates
Roads, Norwich (19.11.2009) 244–7
Questions
Carers, Norwich 912w
Doctors, Working hours 393–4
Driving offences, Insurance 406w
Driving offences, Norwich 583–8w
First time buyers, Norwich 784w
Foreign investment in UK, Norwich 982w
Homelessness 310w
Housing, Owner occupation 311–2w
Housing benefit, Norwich 158w
Schools, Norwich 846w
Speed limits, Cameras 134w

Smith, Geraldine
Questions
Business questions 686

Smith, Sir Robert
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 542
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1239–40
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 721
Questions
Business questions 134–5, 684–5
Elections, Expenditure 663
Modernisation of the House of Commons Select Committee 674

Smoke alarms
Social rented housing 183–4w

Smoking
387–8, 660–1w

Smuggling
Firearms 689w

Snow and ice
Primary care trusts 943–4w

Soames, Mr Nicholas
Questions
Immigration controls 752w
Parole 443w

Soames, Mr Nicholas—continued
United Arab Emirates, Defence 613–4w

Social conditions
370w

Social Enterprise Day
458w

Social Housing Register
see Tenant Services Authority

Social rented housing
Smoke alarms 183–4w
South East 788w

Social security benefits
Lone parents 877w
Older people 622w
Peterborough 394–5w

Social services
103–4w, 117–9ws, 388–9, 548w
Disabled 104w
Haringey 222w
Older people 104w
Sight impaired 111–2w

Solicitor-General
Aviation 576w
Climate change 131w
Cost effectiveness 576–7w
Domestic visits 577w
Legislation 867–8w
Scientists 577–8w

Somalia
Fisheries 430–1w
Food aid 252w
Human trafficking 165w
Piracy 165w, 728–9w

Somaliland
Elections 1096

Sony Ericsson
Government assistance 816w
Taxation 812w

Soubry, Sir Peter
Chamber Debates
Inland waterways (30.11.2009) 946, 951
Questions
Public transport, Security 1267

South Africa
Chess 634w

South East
Accident and emergency departments 526w
Bus services 58w
DNA 894–6w
Homelessness 174–5w
Mental health services 193w
Public transport 61w
Social rented housing 788w
Students 296–9w
Truancy 99–100w
Unemployment 392–4w

South East England Development Agency
Public relations 989w

South London Healthcare NHS Trust
548w, 748–9w

South West
Drugs 84w
Regional government 314w

South Yorkshire
Specialised diplomas 711w

Southall, David
80–1ws

Southworth, Ms Helen
Questions
Building schools for the future programme, Warrington 397w

Sovereignty
Falkland Islands 961

Speaker and deputies
Chamber Debates
Amendments and new clauses (25.11.2009) 560, (26.11.2009) 703, (01.12.2009) 1030, (02.12.2009) 1112, 1175, 1234
Conduct of proceedings (18.11.2009) 5, 16, 28, 30, 61, (19.11.2009) 133, 139, 160, 166, 235, (23.11.2009) 266, 298, 355, 361, (24.11.2009) 387, 468, 479, (25.11.2009) 517, 520, 525, 532, 539, 543, 549–60, 592, 557, 585, 594, 619, 622, 632, 639, (26.11.2009) 667, 684–5, 697–700, 702, 704, 785, 804, (30.11.2009) 813, 818, 826, 843, 854, 862, 864–5, 936, (01.12.2009) 956, 958–9, 974, 980–1, 983, 990, 1026, 1040, 1046, 1071, 1078, (02.12.2009) 1096, 1102–3, 1128, 1183, 1193, 1204, 1237, 1241–3, 1246, 1250, (03.12.2009) 1265, 1271, 1277, 1285, 1288, 1300, 1310, 1320
Deferred divisions (25.11.2009) 602
Disallowed questions (26.11.2009) 673
Points of order (19.11.2009) 154, (23.11.2009) 261, (24.11.2009) 403–4, (25.11.2009) 559–60, (26.11.2009) 699–702, (30.11.2009) 871, (01.12.2009) 1057, 1078, (02.12.2009) 1109–10, 1174, 1225–6, 1238, 1240–3, 1248–9
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 2–4
Rulings and statements, Eight minutes rule (01.12.2009) 1057
Rulings and statements, Fifteen minutes rule (03.12.2009) 1329
Rulings and statements, Five minutes rule (01.12.2009) 1068
Rulings and statements, Ten minutes rule (25.11.2009) 617, (26.11.2009) 729
Rulings and statements, Twelve minutes rule (23.11.2009) 295
Rulings and statements, Unparliamentary expressions (26.11.2009) 692–3, 699–700, (02.12.2009) 1248
Westminster Hall Debates
Conduct of proceedings (01.12.2009) 10wh, 25wh, 33wh, 40wh, (02.12.2009) 82wh, 92wh, 96wh

Special educational needs
318w, 846–7w

Special Reconnaissance Regiment
Northern Ireland 419w

Specialised diplomas
Enfield 711w
South Yorkshire 711w

Speed limits
1275
Cameras 134w, 760w
M1 765w
M18 765w
Norwich 134w

Spelman, Mrs Caroline
Chamber Debates
Local government finance, Points of order (26.11.2009) 699
Questions
Breast cancer 824w

Spicer, Sir Michael
Questions
Members, Correspondence 257–8w, 498w

Spink, Bob
Chamber Debates
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 873, 885

Spink, Bob —continued
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1042, 1050
Floods, Cumbria (23.11.2009) 260
Hadleigh (Essex), Petitions (30.11.2009) 942–3
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 868
Prostitution, Petitions (01.12.2009) 1078–9
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 263, (24.11.2009) 442–448, 457, 471, (25.11.2009) 566
Westminster Hall Debates
Alcoholic drinks, Misuse (01.12.2009) 59wh, 62wh
Coastal erosion, Dredging (01.12.2009) 67wh, 73wh
Higher education (01.12.2009) 1–2wh
Questions
Africa, Climate change 1097
Armed forces, Scotland 134n
Crime, Business 467–8n
Herbal medicine 193n
Hospitals, Infectious diseases 103n
Schools, Playing fields 819

Sport England
Finance 275–8n

Sports
378n
East of England 724–5n, 852n, 854–5n
Females 378n
Hip replacements 109n
Schools 222n, 398–9n
Television 4n

Sri Lanka
Internally displaced people 56n, 61–3wx
Overseas aid 755n
Petitions (01.12.2009) 1079–80

Staffordshire
General practitioners 534n
Gifted children 707–10n
Health services 398

Standards and Privileges Select Committee (26.11.2009) 796

Stanley, Rt Hon Sir John
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 886
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 306–8
Questions
Unemployment, Tonbridge 460–2n

Starkey, Dr Phyllis
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 569, 570, 597, 622–4
Westminster Hall Debates
Israel, Origin marking (02.12.2009) 100–4wh
Questions
Domestic violence, Immigrants 1279–80
Israel, EC external trade 101n
Israel, Origin marking 257n
Milton Keynes Hospital NHS Foundation Trust 39n
VAT 17n

State retirement pensions
6n

State visits
Vatican 300n

Statistics
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 835n
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 273n

Statistics —continued
Home Office 471n

Steen, Mr Anthony
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 568, 602–6, 635
Questions
Human trafficking 486n
Human trafficking, Health services 385–6
Missing persons 679–86n

Stewart, Ian
Questions
Taxis, Dept for Communities and Local Government 67–8n
Taxis, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 168n
Taxis, Dept of Health 351n
Taxis, Ministry of Justice 323–4n
Taxis, Northern Ireland Office 598–9n
Taxis, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 50n
Taxis, Scotland Office 281–2n
Taxis, Treasury 144n

Stoate, Dr Howard
Questions
Employment and support allowance, Dartford 618–9n

Stockport Station
271n

Stoke on Trent
Schools 825

Stonehenge
Road traffic 269n

Stop and search
Greater London 493n

Strang, Rt Hon Dr Gavin
Questions
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 1093

Strategic Investment Fund
638–9n

Stratford Station
7n

Straw, Rt Hon Jack, Secretary of State for Justice and Lord Chancellor
Chamber Debates
Constitutional Reform and Governance Bill, 1R and 2R* (19.11.2009) 141–2
Written Statements
High court, Judges 83–4wx
HM Inspectorate of Prisons, Public appointments 134–5wx
Political parties, Finance 68–70wx
Supply estimates, Ministry of Justice 64–7wx
Questions
Ashwell Prison 235–6n
British Petroleum, Ministry of Justice 578n
Christmas, Ministry of Justice 320n
Coroners 882–3n
Departmental responsibilities, Ministry of Justice 438n
Disclosure of information, Ministry of Justice 438n
Driving offences, Sentencing 700–4n
Liverpool Prison, Industrial disputes 239n
National Offender Management Service, Consultants 332n
Pay, Ministry of Justice 323n
Prisons, Inspections 447n
Prisons, Operating costs 802n

Straw, Rt Hon Jack, —continued
Railways, Ministry of Justice 438n

Streeter, Mr Gary
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1052, 1072–3
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 226
Westminster Hall Debates
Industrial diseases, Compensation (02.12.2009) 141–2wh
Questions
Elections 47n
Elections, Expenditure 662–3
Elections, Somaliland 1098
General elections 664–5
Pakistan, Terrorism 624n
Royal Fleet Auxiliary 614n
Voting methods 254n

Stress
Children 749n

Stringer, Mr Graham
Questions
Biofuels 382n
Biofuels, Boilers 399–400n
Manchester Mental Health and Social Care NHS Trust, Finance 356n
Renewable energy 37n, 82n
Schools, Boilers 911n

Strokes
Bexley 749n

Stuart, Ms Gisela
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 850
European Union (03.12.2009) 1299, 1301, 1311, 1316, 1354, 1365–9, 1371
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 286, 278, 326–9, 370
Questions
Iran, Nuclear power 985

Stuart, Graham
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 543
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 882
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 146, 152, 155, 164, 169, 171, 175–6, 191, 197, 204–10, 237, 242, (26.11.2009) 713, 726–7, 786
Westminster Hall Debates
Coastal erosion, Dredging (01.12.2009) 67–70wh, 72wh, 74wh
Questions
Brain cancer 741n
Caparo Group, Cabinet Office 691n
Caparo Group, Dept for International Development 917n
Caparo Group, Ministry of Defence 930n
Caparo Group, Prime Minister 759n
Caparo Group, Treasury 360n
Manpower, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 310–7n
National Centre for Stereotactic Radiosurgery, Standards 657–8n
Students, Loans 564–5n
Work permits 897–8n

Students
Finance 75–6n
Loans 76n, 235n, 286–9n, 564–5n, 990n
Newcastle upon Tyne 990–2n
Radicalism 557n, 560n
South East 286–9n

Stunell, Mr Andrew
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 102
Questions
Asylum 206n

Stanclf, Mr Andrew — continued
India, Internally displaced people 989
Military aid 999w
Prison sentences 887–89w
Prison sentences, Greater Manchester 895–96w
Warm front scheme 363–64w, 717–18w

Succession
Monarchy 532

Sudan
Armed conflict 634–5w
Politics and government 431w

Suffolk
Adoption (25.11.2009) 646–54

Suicide
Prisoners 447w

Sunderland
Children 706–7w
Warm front scheme 719–20w

Supply estimates
Attorney General 72–3ws
Cabinet Office 34–6ws
Charity Commission 80ws
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 27–31ws
Dept for Children, Schools and Families 86–89ws
Dept for Communities and Local Government 38–41ws
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 44–5ws
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 48–9ws
Dept for International Development 63–4ws
Dept for Transport 73–4ws
Dept for Work and Pensions 76–9ws
Dept of Energy and Climate Change 47–8ws
Dept of Health 56–9ws
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 50–1ws
Government Equalities Office 75–6ws
Home Office 60–1ws
Ministry of Defence 45–6ws
Ministry of Justice 64–7ws
National Savings and Investments 33–4ws
Northern Ireland Office 71ws
Office of Water Services 49–50ws
Revenue and Customs 32–3ws
Scotland Office 71–2ws
Treasury 31–2ws
Welsh Assembly Government 74–5ws

Surcharges
Flood penalties 329–31w

Sure start programme
98–9w, 813–4
Bedfordshire 712w
Chorley 98w
Lancashire 99w

Surgery
Bexley 740w
Manpower 196w
Negligence 197–8w

Surveillance
752–4w
Members 866w

Sussex
Police 215w

Sustainable development
Curriculum 827

Sutcliffe, Mr Gerry, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport

Sutcliffe, Mr Gerry, — continued
Questions
Football, Young people 4w
Gambling 726w
Gambling Commission 160–9w
Gaming machines 273–4w
Horserace Totalisator Board 275w
Leisure, Finance 169w
Licensing laws 50w, 853w
Olympic Games 2012, West Midlands 169–70w
Public houses, Closures 853–4w
Pyramid selling 724w
Sport England, Finance 275–8w
Sports 378w
Sports, East of England 724–5w, 852w, 854–5w
Sports, Females 378w
Sports, Television 4w
Swimming pools 708w
Television 379–80w
UK School Games 37–9w, 598w
Video games 379–80w

Swayne, Mr Desmond
Chamber Debates
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1257
Questions
Ambulance services, Standards 526w
Business questions 137
Closed circuit television 127w, 665w
Dental services 169w
National curriculum tests 916–7
Rolling stock, Procurement 1281–3
Zimbabwe, Politics and government 967–8

Swimming pools
708w

Swine flu
9–10ws, 944w
Babies 356w
Pregnant women 25–6w
Vaccination 25–6w, 399

Swinson, Jo
Chamber Debates
European Union (03.12.2009) 1384
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 353
Questions
Gurkhas, Immigration 209w, 284–5w, 485w
Human trafficking, Scotland 536
Sri Lanka, Internally displaced people 56w
United Nations, Females 27w, 697w

Swire, Mr Hugo
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 469, 416–7, 419, 427, 438–9, 442–3, 456, 462–5
Westminster Hall Debates
Coastal areas, Regeneration (01.12.2009) 50–6wh
Questions
Digital broadcasting, Complaints 594w
Digital broadcasting, Video equipment 723w
Digital switchover help scheme 594–5w
MSC Napoli 467–8w
Non-domestic rates 849–50w
Non-domestic rates, Parking 101–2w
Palestinians, Overseas aid 1089
Shipping, Pollution 270w
Shipping, Safety 270w

Syms, Mr Robert
Chamber Debates
Equitable Life Assurance Society, Pensions (26.11.2009) 708

Syms, Mr Robert — continued
Queen's speech (19.11.2009) 210–2
Questions
Business questions 686

Tamworth
Sheltered housing 183w
Vacant land 184w, 788–9w
Warm front scheme 364w

Tapsell, Sir Peter
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 844
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 267–8
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 1108

Tax allowances
Pensions 146w, 604w
Professional organisations 102w, 147w

Tax avoidance
812w

Tax Law Rewrite Project
1ws

Tax yields
602w
Gambling 371w
Gaming machines 949w
Income tax 145w

Taxation
Aviation 371–2w
Business 16w
EC countries 147w
Environment protection 1107–8
Financial institutions 810w
Holiday accommodation 17w, 603–4w
Minimum wage 286–7w
Scotland 371–2w
Sony Ericsson 812w

Taxation (International and Other Provisions) Bill 2009–10
Chamber Debates
1R (19.11.2009) 141
Parliamentary procedure (26.11.2009) 702

Taxis
Cabinet Office 695w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 67–8w, 499w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 3w, 168w, 722–3w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 859w
Dept for International Development 756–7w
Dept of Health 351w, 653–4w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 423w
Home Office 887w
Ministry of Justice 323–4w
Northern Ireland Office 598–9w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 50w, 770w
Prime Minister 759w
Scotland Office 281–2w
Treasury 144w, 808w

Taylor, Mr David
Chamber Debates
Construction, Standards (23.11.2009) 375, 379
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 68, 70, 73, (24.11.2009) 410, 413, 456, 458, (25.11.2009) 621, 626
Tax avoidance, Points of order (30.11.2009) 871
Westminster Hall Debates
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 79wh, 81–2wh, 84wh
Higher education (01.12.2009) 3wh, 5–6wh, 12wh

Taylor, Mr David —continued
Manufacturing industries (02.12.2009) 109–10wh
Questions
Age, Discrimination 1280
Attorney General 667
Business questions 134, 1292
Civil servants, Disciplinary proceedings 703w
Clergy, Retirement 659–60
Dementia, Health services 102–3w
EC budget 959–60
Education, Disadvantaged 812
Government departments, Official hospitality 319–20w
House of Commons, Energy 679–80
International cooperation, Climate change 969
NHS, Private finance initiative 399
Nuclear submarines, Scotland 516
Railways, Franchises 869w, 1275–6
Rolling stock, Procurement 1263–4
Sudan, Armed conflict 634–5w

Taylor, Dr Richard
Chamber Debates
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 867
Questions
Obesity, Health services 544–6w

Teachers
Equal opportunities 1280–2
Pay 222–3w
Training 99w

Teather, Sarah
Questions
Empty property 309–10w
Entry clearances 478w
Income, Rents 285–6w
Mortgages, Government assistance 181–2w
Sickle cell diseases 111w, 931w

Teenage pregnancy
99w, 399w, 944w

Telecommunications
Databases 828w

Telephone services
Armed forces 412w
Fees and charges 76–7w, 299w
National Express 408w
Operating costs 639–40w
Revenue and Customs 949w
Treasury 284w
UK Border Agency 129–30w

Television
378–80w
Licensing 379w
Sports 4w

Temporary accommodation
Greater London 14–5w

Ten minutes rule
Rulings and statements (25.11.2009) 617, (26.11.2009) 729

Tenancy deposit schemes
15–6w

Tenant Services Authority
73–4w
Buildings 521–2w
Finance 73w
Information and communications technology 173w
Manpower 514w
Public relations 649w
Secondment 851w

Territorial Army
Finance 23w, 54–5w

Terrorism
see also Counter-terrorism
Extradition 474–5w
Finance 105–6ws
India 970–1
Libya 427w
Pakistan 624w
Police interrogation 217w, 493–4w

Thalassaemia
931w

Thameslink railway line
Rolling stock 63–4w, 410w

The Tote
see Horserace Totalisator Board

Theft
Armed forces 902–6w
Cabinet Office 695–6w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 11w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 168w
Dept of Health 190w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 161w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 283w
Prosecutions 771w
Retail trade 771w
Scotland Office 380w

Third sector
Finance 458–60w, 703w
Olympic Games 2012 148w

Thomas, Mr Gareth (Harrow West), Minister of State, Dept for International Development
Questions
Africa, Climate change 1097
Bangladesh, Climate change 1098–9
Burundi, Overseas aid 223w
EC aid 753–4w
Global Fund to Fight AIDS Tuberculosis and Malaria 921–2w
Remittances 229–30w, 251w
Somalia, Food aid 252w
Somaliland, Elections 1096
UNESCO, Prizes 251–2w
Zimbabwe, Overseas aid 230w

Thoresen Review
see Generic Financial Advice Review

Thornberry, Emily
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 9–12
Whittington Hospital (02.12.2009) 1255, 1259

Thundersley
Petitions (02.12.2009) 13–4p

Thurrock Thames Gateway Development Corporation
Public relations 788w

Thurso, John
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (26.11.2009) 751
Westminster Hall Debates
Manufacturing industries (02.12.2009) 115wh, 121–5wh

Timetables
East coast railway line 868–9w

Timetabling of bills
677–8, (30.11.2009) 872–941,

Timms, Rt Hon Stephen, Financial Secretary to the Treasury and Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills

Timms, Rt Hon Stephen, —continued
Chamber Debates
Child Poverty Bill, 1R and 2R* (19.11.2009) 143
Written Statements
Double taxation, Oman 105ws
Revenue and Customs, Supply estimates 32–3ws
Tax Law Rewrite Project 1ws
Questions
Broadband 294w, 553w, 976w
Broadband, Herefordshire 554w
Capital gains tax, Second homes 600w, 947w
Child benefit 600–1w
Child care tax credit 606w
Child care vouchers 369w, 601w, 806w
Child tax credit 283w
Copyright, Internet 294w
Corporation tax 140w
Corporation tax, Credit unions 16–7w
EC external trade, Israel 101w
Income, Rents 285–6w
Members, Correspondence 601w
Revenue and Customs 371w
Revenue and Customs, Manpower 603w
Revenue and Customs, Public consultation 603w
Revenue and Customs, Telephone services 949w
Social conditions 370w
Tax allowances, Pensions 604w
Tax allowances, Professional organisations 147w
Tax avoidance 812w
Tax yields, Income tax 145w
Taxation, Business 16w
Taxation, Holiday accommodation 17w, 603–4w
Taxation, Minimum wage 286–7w
Telephone services, Fees and charges 76–7w, 299w
Telephone services, Operating costs 639–40w
VAT 17w, 605w, 950w
VAT, Derelict land 373w
VAT, Medical treatments 17w
VAT, Postal services 605–6w
VAT, Tourism 373–4w, 605w
Welfare tax credits 950w
Welfare tax credits, Hampstead 950w

Timpson, Edward
Questions
Children's rights 969–70
Gifted children, Cheshire 708w

Tipping, Mr Paddy
Chamber Debates
NHS, Standards (30.11.2009) 865
Questions
Sewers, Private sector 139w

Tobacco
548–9w
Import controls 604–5w

Todd, Mr Mark
Chamber Debates
Financial institutions, EC action (01.12.2009) 990, 1008–12, 1025
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 881, 903, 910–4
Questions
Enterprise management incentives 981–2w
Rodents 731w
Rodents, Sewers 731–2w

Tomlinson, Ian
277–8w

Tonbridge
Unemployment 460–2w

Topical debates
135–6ws

Torture
Asylum 489w

Tote
see Horserace Totalisator Board

Touhig, Rt Hon Don
Questions
Capita, Dept for Communities and Local Government 641w, 777w
Capita, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 593w, 721w
Capita, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 856w
Capita, Dept for International Development 755w
Capita, Dept of Health 931–2w
Capita, Ministry of Justice 881w
Capita, Northern Ireland Office 865–6w
Capita, Treasury 947w
Contracts, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 913w
Contracts, Dept for Communities and Local Government 498w
Contracts, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 593w
Contracts, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 857w
Contracts, Dept for International Development 755–6w
Contracts, Dept of Health 933–4w
Contracts, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 421w
Contracts, Home Office 886–7w
Contracts, Ministry of Justice 580w
Contracts, Northern Ireland Office 866w
Contracts, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 872w
Contracts, Treasury 948w

Tourism
171w
Scotland 520–1
VAT 373–4w, 605w, 855w
West Midlands 379w

Townlands Hospital
26w

Trade unions
Colombia 303w

Traffic Commissioners
16–7ws

Train operating companies
Complaints 768w

Training
Air force 288w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 499w
Dept for International Development 250w
Dept for Work and Pensions 389w
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 423w
Government Equalities Office 57w
Hercules aircraft 612w
Home Office 887–8w
Leader of the House of Commons 770w
Merlin helicopters 613w
Ministry of Defence 416w
NHS 543w
Nuclear engineering 403w, 715w
Nurses (18.11.2009) 118–26, 746–7w
Shipping 409w, 1267–8
Teachers 99w
Treasury 809w

Transplant surgery
Liver diseases 354w
Private sector 358–9w

Transport
Patients 110–1w
Tyne and Wear 569–70w
Weston-super-Mare 571w

Transport for London (Supplemental Toll Provisions) Bill (HL) 2006–07
Chamber Debates
Revival motion (01.12.2009) 953

Travel
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 637w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 642w
Dept for International Development 918w
Dept of Health 742w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 572w
Prime Minister 759w
Scotland Office 592w
Treasury 809w

Travel requirements
897w

Travellers
Caravan sites 44ws, 525w

Treasury
Assets 141w
Caparo Group 369w
Capita 947w
Christmas 140w
Consultants 948w
Contracts 948w
Cost effectiveness 141–2w
Departmental responsibilities 143w
Disclosure of information 142w
Domestic visits 948w
Driving 809–10w
Food 142–3w
Immobilisation of vehicles 810w
Internet 807w
KBR 601w
Legal costs 143w
Legislation 807–8w
Lost property 808w
Official cars 283–4w
Pay 143w
Railways 143w
Recruitment 284w
Scientists 370w
Supply estimates 31–2ws
Taxis 144w, 808w
Telephone services 284w
Training 809w
Travel 809w
Working hours 144w

Treatment centres
393

Tredinnick, Mr David
Questions
Complementary medicine 391

Trident missiles
911w

Truancy
South East 99–100w

Trust ports
769w, 871–2w, 949–50w

Tuberculosis
945–6w
Developing countries 921w, 1091–2

Tuberculosis*—*continued
Health services 105w

Turner, Mr Andrew
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1049
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1237
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 629
Questions
Abortion 184–5w
Crime 885–6w
Driving tests, Isle of Wight 1273–4
Equality and Human Rights Commission 872–3w
Legislation, Ministry of Justice 581w
Rolling stock, Procurement 1261–2
Schools, Discipline 397–8w
Schools, Sports 398–9w
Swine flu, Vaccination 26w
Unemployment, Scotland 6w
Written questions, Government responses 675
Zimbabwe, Overseas aid 230w

Twelve minutes rule
Rulings and statements (23.11.2009) 295

Twigg, Derek
Chamber Debates
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 920–2
Floods, Cumbria (23.11.2009) 258
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 313–7
Questions
Antibiotics 23w
Energy, Building regulations 776w, 991w
Energy, Conservation 819w
Energy, Housing 645w, 784w
Health, Screening 24w
NHS, Standards 384
Water, Pipelines 732w

Tyne and Wear
Transport 569–70w
Unemployment 827–30w

Tyrie, Mr Andrew
Questions
Charity Commission 693–4w
Civil servants, Recruitment 975w

Uganda
Homosexuality 635w

UK Border Agency
495–6w
Serco 897w
Telephone services 129–30w

UK membership of EC
Referendums 624w

UK School Games
37–8w, 596w

Ulster Bank
147w, 372–3w

UN Population Fund
436w

Unemployed people
Mental health 356w

Unemployment
775–6w
Aylesbury (01.12.2009) 1081–8
Domestic violence 478w
North East 392w
Northern Ireland 703–4w
Scotland 6w, 521
South East 392–4w
Tonbridge 460–2w
Tyne and Wear 827–30w

Unemployment —continued
Young people 39–40w, 77w, 462–4w, 771w

UNESCO
Prizes 251–2w

Uniforms
Armed forces 150–1w, 290–1w

United Arab Emirates
Defence 613–4w
Foreign relations 165–6w

United Church Schools Trust
100w

United Kingdom Accreditation Service
133ws

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority
Public relations 404w

United Nations
see also UN headings
Females 27w, 607w

Universities
see Higher education

Unparliamentary expressions
Rulings and statements (26.11.2009) 692–3, 699–700, (02.12.2009) 1248

Uranium
911w

Urban areas
Land drainage 574–5w

Urban Regeneration Agency see English Partnerships

USA
Antisemitism 878–9w
Extradition 975–88

Utilities
Palestinians 435–6w

Uzbekistan
Arms control 738w

Vacancies
774–5w

Vacant land
Tamworth 184w, 788–9w

Vaccination
Children 195w
Swine flu 25–6w, 399

Vaizey, Edward
Questions
Dental services 384–5
Equal pay 1279
Museums and galleries 853w
Railway stations, Parking 868w
Schools, Standards 828
Wantage Road Station 1274

Vale of Clwyd
Employment 453w

Valuation
Housing 145w

Vara, Shailesh
Chamber Debates
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1235–6
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 569, 577, 596–9
Westminster Hall Debates
House of Commons Commission (03.12.2009) 152–5wh, 161–2wh
Questions
Shareholders 457–8w
Written questions, Government responses 676–7

VAT
17w, 605w, 950w
Derelict land 373w
Medical treatments 17w
Postal services 605–6w
Tourism 373–4w, 605w, 855w

Vatican
State visits 306w

Vaz, Rt Hon Keith
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1230
European Union (03.12.2009) 1297, 1305, 1308, 1320, 1326–7, 1334, 1338–43
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 32, 75, 77–82, (25.11.2009) 565, 570, 576, 582
Questions
Business questions 691
Extradition, USA 981–2
NHS, Standards 382–3

Venezuela
Nuclear weapons 880w

Vetting
753w

Victim support schemes
Sexual offences 689–92w

Video equipment
Digital broadcasting 723w

Video games
379–80w

Villiers, Theresa
Questions
A3, Hindhead 259w
Driving under influence, Reoffenders 40–6w
Immobilisation of vehicles 209w, 489w
Ports, Liverpool 133w
Railway stations, Repairs and maintenance 268w
Road traffic, Stonehenge 269w
Rolling stock 62–3w
Rolling stock, Procurement 1264–5
Rolling stock, Thameslink railway line 410w

Visits
Prisons 244w

Visits abroad
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 557w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 3w, 856w
Dept for Work and Pensions 617w
Ministers 703w

Vodafone Group
Ghana Telecom 578w

Voluntary organisations
Musculoskeletal disorders 357w

Voluntary work
Legal profession 669

Voting methods
254w

Wales
Business 823–5w
Child Trust Fund 806w
Crimes of violence 750w
Fuel poverty 714–5w
Legislation 18–9ws
Public expenditure 101ws, 602w, 811w, 1107
Railways 567w
Renewable energy 717w

Wales Office
see Office of the Secretary of State for Wales

Walker, Charles
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 542
Financial Services Bill, 2R (30.11.2009) 900
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 578, 582, 624–6

Walker Review
see Corporate Governance of UK Banking Industry Review

Wallace, Ben
Questions
Armed forces, Housing 18–20w, 149–50w
British Petroleum, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 553w
British Petroleum, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 625–6w
British Petroleum, Ministry of Justice 578w
British Petroleum, Prime Minister 759w
Business questions 1295–6
Libya 426w
Libya, Prisoners' transfers 243w
Lockerbie, Bombings 1104
Nuclear submarines, Scotland 517
Shell, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 564w
Shell, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 634w
Shell, Prime Minister 759w

Walley, Ms Joan
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 406
Questions
Haywood Engineering College 810–1
Health services, Staffordshire 398

Walsall
M6 60–1w

Walter, Mr Robert
Questions
Regional government, South West 314w

Waltham Forest
Aviation 567w

Walton, Lynda
Chamber Debates
Inland waterways (30.11.2009) 944–8
Questions
Domestic violence 1103

Wantage Road Station
1274

Ward, Ms Claire, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Justice
Westminster Hall Debates
Bullingdon Prison (02.12.2009) 134–7wh
Industrial diseases, Compensation (02.12.2009) 142–6wh
Questions
Criminal injuries compensation 437w
Driving offences 583–4w
Driving under influence, Reoffenders 40–6w
Drugs, Crime 84w
Fines, Surcharges 329–31w
Hunting, Yorkshire and the Humber 441w
Mentally disturbed offenders 84w
Office for Criminal Justice Reform, Finance 84–5w, 334–6w
Prisoners, Foreign nationals 446–8w, 484–5w
Prisoners, Mentally ill 239–40w, 242–3w

Ward, Ms Claire, —continued
Remand in custody, Croydon 448w
Young offenders, Reoffenders 449w
Young offenders, Sentencing 342w
Youth custody, Foreign nationals 485w

Warm front scheme
362–4w, 717–9w
Sunderland 719–20w
Tamworth 364w

Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Act 2000
Questions
823–4w

Warrington
Building schools for the future programme 397w

Waste
Food 859–60w

Waste disposal
Armed forces 53w
Oils 860w, 863w

Waste management
Radioactive waste 927–8w

Water
Derbyshire 732w
Meters 732w
Pipelines 732w

Water power
Renewables obligation 403–4w

Waterson, Mr Nigel
Questions
Housing, Older people 521w

Watkinson, Angela
Chamber Debates
Floods, Cumbria (23.11.2009) 260
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 94, (26.11.2009) 757–9
Questions
Havering Sixth Form College 826

Watson, Tom
Westminster Hall Debates
Manufacturing industries (02.12.2009) 109wh, 111wh, 114–5wh, 120wh, 126wh, 128wh
Questions
Arts Council of England 272w, 374w
British Council, Anniversaries 420w
Business questions 132, 689
Cervical cancer, Screening 547w
Chlamydia, Screening 741–2w, 932–4w
Colombia, EC external trade 302w, 420–1w
Colombia, Trade unions 303w
EC budget 960
Education, Disadvantaged 812–3
Extradition, USA 985
Fiji, Politics and government 423–4w
Hospitals, Infectious diseases 538–9w
Hospitals, Parking 387
Khodorkovsky, Mikhail 633w
Methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus, Screening 745w
Russia, Politics and government 736–7w
Vodafone Group, Ghana Telecom 578w

Weapons
Northern Ireland 368–9w

Weather
Death 400

Webb, Mr Steve
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 83, (25.11.2009) 620, 636
Questions
Council tax, Yate 13w

Webb, Mr Steve —continued
Disability living allowance, Lone parents 617–8w
Employment and support allowance 390w
Housing, Yate 522w
Local government, Pay 11w, 13–4w
Local government, Pensions 178–82w, 523–4w
NHS, Pay 357w
NHS, Pensions 110w
Older people 975–6w
Pay, Armed forces 21w, 51–2w
Pay, Civil servants 450w
Pay, Police 38w, 214w
Pay, Teachers 222–3w
State retirement pensions 6w
Winter fuel payments 622w

Weir, Mr Mike
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1041, 1051
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 413, 431, 439, 490–3
Questions
Company liquidations 28w, 555w, 979w
Insolvency 32–3w
Insolvency, Complaints 814–5w
Insolvency, Fees and charges 34w, 75w
Insolvency, Licensing 34w
Tourism, Scotland 520–1

Welfare state
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 560–643

Welfare tax credits
950w
Hampstead 950w

Welsh Assembly Government
Supply estimates 74–5ws

Welsh Grand Committee
(02.12.2009) 1249

Welsh language
Magistrates' courts 331w

West Bank
see Palestinians

West Midlands
Chlamydia 933–4w
Olympic Games 2012 169–70w
Tourism 379w

Western Sahara
Land mines 10w, 431–2w
Natural resources 880–1w
Politics and government 635w

Westminster Hall sittings
258–9w

Weston-super-Mare
Transport 571w

Whitehead, Dr Alan
Questions
Climate change, International cooperation 530–1

Whittingdale, Mr John
Questions
Dartford-Thurrock Crossing 870w

Whittington Hospital
26w, (02.12.2009) 1252–60

Wickham Research Laboratories
Animal experiments 661w, 749w

Wicks, Rt Hon Malcolm
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 436–44
Questions
Iron and steel 27–8w

Wicks, Rt Hon Malcolm —continued
Local government finance, Croydon 647w

Widdecombe, Rt Hon Ann
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1174, 1204–5, 1225
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1241, 1245–6
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 18w
Vatican, State visits 306w

WiFi
Health hazards 743–4w

Wiggin, Mr Bill
Chamber Debates
Fisheries (01.12.2009) 1053, 1064–6
Questions
Afghanistan, Health services 247w
Afghanistan, Overseas aid 247–8w
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 149w, 151w, 287w, 410–1w, 898w
Afghanistan, Roads 248w
Afghanistan, Schools 248–9w
Armed forces, Cadets 51w
Armoured fighting vehicles 148w
Army, Per capita costs 412w
Broadband 294w, 553w
Broadband, Herefordshire 554w
Financial services, Regulation 144w
Overseas students, EC nationals 889–90w
Overseas students, Entry clearances 674–5w
Public expenditure 146w

Wildlife
Facilities 139w
Licensing 139–40w

Willetts, Mr David
Questions
Disabled students' allowances 989–90w
Higher education, Antisemitism 557w
Higher education, Finance 558–60w, 984w
Higher education, Qualifications 31–2w
Overseas students, Entry clearances 480w
Students, Loans 990w
Students, Radicalism 557w, 560w
Work experience, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 565–6w

Williams, Rt Hon Alan
Questions
National Audit Office 365w

Williams, Hywel
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 106–12
Questions
Olympic Games 2012, Contracts 365w, 758–9w
Public expenditure, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 769–70w
Tax allowances, Pensions 604w

Williams, Mark
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 107
Westminster Hall Debates
Citizens' advice bureaux (02.12.2009) 88–90wh
Higher education (01.12.2009) 10–5wh
Proportional representation (01.12.2009) 33wh
Questions
Directors, Personation 554w
Morocco, Deportation 430w
Western Sahara, Land mines 431–2w

Williams, Mark—continued*
Western Sahara, Politics and government 635w

Williams, Mr Roger
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (24.11.2009) 460, 462
Questions
Agriculture, Subsidies 382w, 731w
Ambulance services, Standards 105–6w
Carbon emissions 923w
Carbon emissions, Heating 712w
Christmas, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 230–1w
Christmas, Dept for Communities and Local Government 64–5w
Christmas, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 1w
Christmas, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 856w
Christmas, Dept for International Development 223–4w
Christmas, Dept for Transport 405w
Christmas, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 78–9w
Christmas, Dept of Health 348–50w
Christmas, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 159w
Christmas, Home Office 467w
Christmas, Ministry of Defence 152w
Christmas, Ministry of Justice 320w
Christmas, Northern Ireland Office 157w
Christmas, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 155w
Christmas, Prime Minister 614–5w
Christmas, Scotland Office 280w
Christmas, Treasury 140w
Crimes of violence 207–8w
Dogs, Electric shock equipment 137–8w
Driving, Licensing 406–7w, 440w
Food, Cabinet Office 451w
Food, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 232w
Food, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 219–21w
Food, Dept for Communities and Local Government 68w
Food, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 48w
Food, Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 256–7w
Food, Dept for International Development 225w
Food, Dept for Work and Pensions 388w
Food, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 79–80w
Food, Dept of Health 348–50w
Food, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 159–60w
Food, Genetically modified organisms 138w
Food, Home Office 469w
Food, Ministry of Defence 291w
Food, Northern Ireland Office 157w
Food, Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 156w
Food, Scotland Office 380w
Food, Treasury 142–3w
Food, Waste 859–60w
Government securities, Islam 145w
Monetary policy 146w
Police, Standards 214w
Roads, Accidents 688w
Rural development programme 381–2w

Williams, Stephen
Westminster Hall Debates
Higher education (01.12.2009) 4wh, 17–20wh
Proportional representation (01.12.2009) 30wh, 35wh, 38wh

Williams, Stephen—continued*
Questions
Digital broadcasting, Radio 594w
Higher education, Per capita costs 985w
Students, Loans 990w
VAT 605w, 950w

Willis, Mr Phil
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 66–7
Westminster Hall Debates
Higher education (01.12.2009) 2wh, 8wh
Questions
Buildings, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 979w
Buildings, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 913w
Buildings, Dept for Communities and Local Government 849w
Buildings, Dept of Health 933w

Willott, Jenny
Questions
HM Courts Service, Databases 238–9w
Magistrates' courts, Welsh language 331w

Wills, Rt Hon Michael, Minister of State, Ministry of Justice*
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (18.11.2009) 85–7
Westminster Hall Debates
Proportional representation (01.12.2009) 44–9wh
Written Statements
Archives 70–1ws
Electoral register, Sales 67–8ws
Postal services, Ministry of Justice 12–3ws
Questions
British constitution 789w
Capita, Ministry of Justice 881w
Climate change, Ministry of Justice 83–4w
Contracts, Ministry of Justice 580w
Cost effectiveness, Ministry of Justice 236w
Driving, Ministry of Justice 582–3w
European Convention on Human Rights 83w
Government departments, Freedom of information 440w (503 5–6mc)
Internet, Ministry of Justice 580–1w
Legal costs, Ministry of Justice 236–7w
Members, Disqualification 882w
Public expenditure, Ministry of Justice 882w
Recruitment, Ministry of Justice 438–9w
Recycling, Ministry of Justice 439–40w
Scientists, Ministry of Justice 581w
Taxis, Ministry of Justice 323–4w

Wilson, Mr Phil
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (25.11.2009) 611–4
Questions
Building schools for the future programme 827–8

Wilson, Robert
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 545–6
Westminster Hall Debates
Higher education (01.12.2009) 1–10wh, 18–9wh
Questions
Business questions 138, 698

Wilson, Sammy
Chamber Debates
Bank of England (25.11.2009) 544

Wilson, Sammy—continued*
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1144, 1147, 1152, 1200

Winnick, David
Chamber Debates
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 315, 321–3, 356
Questions
M6, Walsall 60–1w
Members, Correspondence 39w, 619w

Winter fuel payments
158w, 622w, 878w

Winterton, Ann
Chamber Debates
Afghanistan, Pakistan (30.11.2009) 849
Questions
Afghanistan, Peacekeeping operations 956–7
Asperger's syndrome, Screening 401–2
Driving, Standards 1276
Primary education, Standards 820–1
Public transport, Security 1266–7

Winterton, Sir Nicholas
Chamber Debates
Equality Bill, Rep and 3R (02.12.2009) 1227
Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Public appointments (02.12.2009) 1238–41, 1248
Queen's speech (23.11.2009) 284, 296, 361–4
Select committees (26.11.2009) 799, 805
Questions
Business questions 140, 693–4, 1294
Modernisation of the House of Commons Select Committee 673–4
Railway stations, North West 1265–6
Zimbabwe, Politics and government 624w, 972

Winterton, Rt Hon Rosie, Minister of State and Minister for Yorkshire and the Humber, Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills and Dept for Communities and Local Government*
Written Statements
East Midlands Development Agency, Public appointments 103ws
Regional development agencies, Public appointments 104–5ws
Questions
Audit Commission, Public relations 640–1w
Business 976–7w
Business, Credit 978w
Business, Government assistance 554–5w, 979w
Community development 308w, 648–9w
East Midlands Development Agency, Public relations 981w
Floods, Cumbria 500–1w, 849w
Floods, Finance 785w
Floods, Housing 859w
Local government 312w
Local government, Cornwall 308w, 312w
National Investment Corporation 987w
Pay, Dept for Communities and Local Government 308–9w
Pubic sector 646w
South East England Development Agency, Public relations 989w
Women's Enterprise Task Force 991–2w
Yorkshire Forward, Public appointments 988w

Wirral
Public libraries 171w, 854w

Wishart, Pete
Questions
Legal costs, Dept for Communities and Local Government 177–8w
Legal costs, Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 49w
Legal costs, Dept for International Development 225w
Legal costs, Dept of Energy and Climate Change 713w
Legal costs, Dept of Health 189w
Legal costs, Foreign and Commonwealth Office 160w
Legal costs, Minister for the Olympics 4w
Legal costs, Ministry of Defence 152w
Legal costs, Ministry of Justice 236–7w
Legal costs, Treasury 143w

Women
see Females

Women's Enterprise Task Force
991–2w

Woodward, Rt Hon Shaun, Secretary of State for Northern Ireland
Written Statements
Bill of Rights, Northern Ireland 113ws
Legislation, Northern Ireland 14–5ws
Supply estimates, Northern Ireland Office 71ws
Questions
Assets, Northern Ireland Office 597w
Christmas, Northern Ireland Office 157w
Departmental responsibilities, Northern Ireland Office 367w
Food, Northern Ireland Office 157w
Internet, Northern Ireland Office 367w
Offences against children, Northern Ireland 596–7w
Railways, Northern Ireland Office 78w
Scientists, Northern Ireland Office 598w
Weapons, Northern Ireland 368–9w

Woolas, Phil, Minister of State and Minister for the North West, Treasury and Home Office
Written Statements
Foreign workers, Immigration controls 58–60ws
Questions
Asylum 206w, 465w, 495–6w, 665w
Asylum, China 885w
Asylum, Democratic Republic of Congo 206w
Asylum, Employment 750w
Asylum, Iraq 466w
Asylum, Torture 489w
Biometrics 466w
Borders, Personal records 206–7w, 467w
British nationality 479w
Christmas, Home Office 467w
Climate change, Home Office 467w
Consultants, Home Office 886w
Contracts, Home Office 886–7w
Cost effectiveness, Home Office 468w
Databases, Home Office 887w
Deportation 465–6w, 473–6w, 673w
Deportation, Offenders 481–4w
Deportation, Security 888w
DNA, Databases 127–8w, 673–4w
Energy, Home Office 208w
Entry clearances 478–80w, 483w, 888–9w
Entry clearances, Overseas students 208–9w, 213w, 215–7w, 479–81w, 674–5w
Entry clearances, Polygamy 128w
Food, Home Office 469w
Foreign workers 482–4w, 488w

Woolas, Phil, —continued
Foreign workers, Doctors 890–2w
Human trafficking 486w
Identity cards, Expenditure 487w
Illegal immigrants 487w
Immigration 217–8w, 463–5w, 494w
Immigration, Australia 207w
Immigration, Gurkhas 209w, 485w
Immigration, Romania 453w
Immigration controls 752w, 891–3w
Immigration controls, France 893w
Information and communications technology, Home Office 469–70w
Internet, Home Office 673w
Labour migration 678–9w
Local government, Home Office 210–2w
Manpower, Home Office 493w
Members, Correspondence 490w, 893w
Opinion polls, Home Office 279–80w
Pay, Home Office 470w
Recruitment, Home Office 470–2w
Recycling, Home Office 471w
Repatriation 487–8w
Repatriation, Cameroon 897w
Security, Home Office 208w
Statistics, Home Office 471w
Taxis, Home Office 887w
Terrorism, Extradition 474–5w
Training, Home Office 887–8w
Travel requirements 897w
UK Border Agency 495–6w
UK Border Agency, Serco 897w
UK Border Agency, Telephone services 129–30w
Work permits 897–8w
Working hours, Home Office 471–4w

Work and Pensions Select Committee
(23.11.2009) 373

Work capability assessment
395w, 877w

Work experience
Dept for Business, Innovation and Skills 565–6w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 872w

Work permits
897–8w

Working Age Agency see Jobcentre Plus

Working hours
Cabinet Office 452–3w
Dept for Communities and Local Government 309w
Dept for Culture, Media and Sport 48w
Dept for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs 383–4w
Dept for International Development 250–1w
Dept of Health 531–3w
Doctors 393–5
Foreign and Commonwealth Office 304w
Government Equalities Office 57w
Home Office 471–4w
Ministry of Defence 416–8w
NHS 742–3w
Northern Ireland Office 368w
Office of the Secretary of State for Wales 283w
Scotland Office 381w
Treasury 144w

World War II
Medals 301w

Wright, Mr Anthony D
Westminster Hall Debates
Coastal erosion, Dredging (01.12.2009) 68wh

Wright, Iain, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept for Children, Schools and Families
Questions
Employment agencies, Dept for Children, Schools and Families 835w
GCE A-level, Children in care 914–5w
GCSE, Children in care 914–5w
Pupils, Disadvantaged 396w
School leaving, Enfield 707–8w
Schools 809–10
Schools, Sports 222w, 398–9w
Specialised diplomas, Enfield 711w
Specialised diplomas, South Yorkshire 711w
Teenage pregnancy 944w

Written questions
Dept for Communities and Local Government 10–1w
Government responses 37w, 258w, 675–7

Wyatt, Derek
Questions
Children, Computers 912w
Members, Correspondence 418w
World War II, Medals 301w

Yate
Council tax 13w
Housing 522w

Yemen
Peace negotiations 306–7w

Yeo, Mr Tim
Chamber Debates
Adoption, Suffolk (25.11.2009) 646–51
Questions
Taxation, Environment protection 1107–8

Yorkshire and the Humber
Hunting 441w

Yorkshire Forward
Public appointments 988w

Young, Sir George
Questions
Business questions 127–30, 681–4, 1283–6

Young offender institutions
883–4w

Young offenders
799w
Community orders 321w
Reoffenders 449w
Sentencing 342w

Young people
Alcoholic drinks 112–27w, 197–205w, 463w
Antisocial behaviour orders 662–3w, 883w
Armed forces 413w
Caffeine 528w
Crime 127w
Eating disorders 848w
Females 463w
Football 4w
Skin piercing 748w
Unemployment 39–40w, 77w, 462–4w, 771w

Younger-Ross, Richard
Questions
Business questions 695–6

Youth custody
45w, 245–6w, 591–2w
Foreign nationals 485w
Per capita costs 450w

Youth justice
Finance 530

Youth offending teams
85–92w, 245w, 448–9w

Zimbabwe
Overseas aid 230w
Politics and government 624w, 967–8, 972

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

(HANSARD)

SIXTH SERIES—VOLUME 502 (Part 1)

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OFFICIAL REPORT

FIFTH SESSION OF THE FIFTY-FOURTH PARLIAMENT
OF THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND
FIFTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF THE REIGN OF
HER MAJESTY QUEEN ELIZABETH II

SESSION 2009–2010

COMPRISING PERIOD
7 December 2009 – 16 December 2009

HER MAJESTY'S GOVERNMENT

MEMBERS OF THE CABINET

(Formed by the Rt. Hon. Gordon Brown, MP, June 2007)

Prime Minister, First Lord of the Treasury and Minister for the Civil Service—The Rt. Hon. Gordon Brown, MP
Leader of the House of Commons, Lord Privy Seal and Minister for Women and Equality—The Rt. Hon. Harriet Harman, QC, MP
First Secretary of State, Secretary of State for Business, Innovation and Skills and Lord President of the Council—The Rt. Hon. Lord Mandelson
Chancellor of the Exchequer—The Rt. Hon. Alistair Darling, MP
Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs—The Rt. Hon. David Miliband, MP
Secretary of State for Justice and Lord Chancellor—The Rt. Hon. Jack Straw, MP
Secretary of State for the Home Department—The Rt. Hon. Alan Johnson, MP
Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs—The Rt. Hon. Hilary Benn, MP
Secretary of State for International Development—The Rt. Hon. Douglas Alexander, MP
Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government—The Rt. Hon. John Denham, MP
Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families—The Rt. Hon. Ed Balls, MP
Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change—The Rt. Hon. Edward Miliband, MP
Secretary of State for Health—The Rt. Hon. Andy Burnham, MP
Secretary of State for Northern Ireland—The Rt. Hon. Shaun Woodward, MP
Leader of the House of Lords and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster —The Rt. Hon. Baroness Royall of Blaisdon
Minister for the Cabinet Office and for the Olympics, and Paymaster General—The Rt. Hon. Tessa Jowell, MP (Minister for London)*
Secretary of State for Scotland—The Rt. Hon. Jim Murphy, MP
Secretary of State for Work and Pensions—The Rt. Hon. Yvette Cooper, MP
Chief Secretary to the Treasury—The Rt. Hon. Liam Byrne, MP
Secretary of State for Wales—The Rt. Hon. Peter Hain, MP
Secretary of State for Defence—The Rt. Hon. Bob Ainsworth, MP
Secretary of State for Transport—The Rt. Hon. Lord Adonis
Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport—The Rt. Hon. Ben Bradshaw, MP

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND MINISTERS

Business, Innovation and Skills—

Secretary of State—The Rt. Hon. Lord Mandelson §

Ministers of State—
Minister for Business, Innovation and Skills—The Rt. Hon. Pat McFadden, MP
Minister for Science and Innovation—The Rt. Hon. Lord Drayson §
Minister for Regional Economic Development and Co-ordination—The Rt. Hon. Rosie Winterton, MP (Minister for Yorkshire and the Humber)* §
Minister for Trade, Investment and Small Business—The Lord Davies of Abersoch, CBE §
Minister for Higher Education and Intellectual Property—The Rt. Hon. David Lammy, MP
Minister for Further Education, Skills, Apprenticeships and Consumer Affairs—Kevin Brennan, MP §

Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State—
The Rt. Hon Stephen Timms, MP §
The Lord Young of Norwood Green
Ian Lucas, MP

Cabinet Office—

Minister for the Cabinet Office and for the Olympics, and Paymaster General—The Rt. Hon. Tessa Jowell, MP (Minister for London)*
Minister of State—The Rt. Hon. Angela E Smith, MP
Parliamentary Secretary—Dawn Butler, MP

Children, Schools and Families—

Secretary of State—The Rt. Hon. Ed Balls, MP

Ministers of State—
Minister for Children, Young People and Families—The Rt. Hon. Dawn Primarolo, MP Minister for Schools and Learners—Vernon Coaker, MP
Kevin Brennan, MP §

Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State—
Iain Wright, MP
The Baroness Morgan of Drefelin
Diana R Johnson, MP

Communities and Local Government—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. John Denham, MP

MINISTERS OF STATE—
Minister for Regional Economic Development and Co-ordination—The Rt. Hon. Rosie Winterton, MP (Minister for Yorkshire and the Humber)* §
Minister for Housing—The Rt. Hon. John Healey, MP

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARIES OF STATE—
Barbara Follett, MP (Minister for the East of England)*
Shahid Malik, MP
Ian Austin, MP (Minister for the West Midlands)*
The Lord McKenzie of Luton §

Culture, Media and Sport—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Ben Bradshaw, MP

MINISTER OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Margaret Hodge, MBE, MP

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARIES OF STATE—
Gerry Sutcliffe, MP
Siôn Simon, MP

Defence—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Bob Ainsworth, MP

MINISTERS OF STATE—
Minister for the Armed Forces—Bill Rammell, MP
The Rt. Hon. Lord Drayson §

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARIES OF STATE—
The Rt. Hon. Baroness Taylor of Bolton §
Quentin Davies, MP
Kevan Jones, MP

Duchy of Lancaster—

CHANCELLOR OF THE DUCHY OF LANCASTER AND LEADER OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS—The Rt. Hon. Baroness Royall of Blaisdon

Energy and Climate Change—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Edward Miliband, MP

MINISTERS OF STATE—
The Rt. Hon. Lord Hunt of Kings Heath, OBE
Joan Ruddock, MP

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE—
David Kidney, MP

Environment, Food and Rural Affairs—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Hilary Benn, MP

MINISTER OF STATE—
Jim Fitzpatrick, MP

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARIES OF STATE—
Huw Irranca-Davies, MP
Dan Norris, MP
The Rt. Hon. Lord Davies of Oldham §

Foreign and Commonwealth Office—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. David Miliband, MP

MINISTERS OF STATE—
Minister for Africa and the UN—The Baroness Kinnock of Holyhead
Minister for Trade, Investment and Small Business—The Lord Davies of Abersoch, CBE §
Ivan Lewis, MP

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARIES OF STATE—
Minister for Europe—Chris Bryant, MP
The Rt. Hon. Baroness Taylor of Bolton §

Government Equalities Office—

MINISTER FOR WOMEN AND EQUALITY—The Rt. Hon. Harriet Harman, QC, MP §

MINISTER OF STATE—Maria Eagle, MP §

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY—Michael Jabez Foster, MP (Hastings and Rye)

Health—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Andy Burnham, MP

MINISTERS OF STATE—
The Rt. Hon. Mike O'Brien, QC, MP
Phil Hope, MP (Minister for the East Midlands)*
Gillian Merron, MP

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE—
Ann Keen, MP

Home Office—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Alan Johnson, MP

MINISTERS OF STATE—
Minister for Borders and Immigration—Phil Woolas, MP (Minister for the North West)* §
Minister for Policing, Crime and Counter-Terrorism—The Rt. Hon. David Hanson, MP

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARIES OF STATE—
Admiral The Lord West of Spithead, GCB DSC
Meg Hillier, MP
Alan Campbell, MP
The Lord Brett §

International Development—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Douglas Alexander, MP

MINISTER OF STATE—Gareth Thomas, MP

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE—
Michael Foster, MP (Worcester)

Justice—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Jack Straw, MP

MINISTERS OF STATE—
The Rt. Hon. Michael Wills, MP
Maria Eagle, MP §

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARIES OF STATE—
Bridget Prentice, MP
The Lord Bach
Claire Ward, MP

Law Officers' Department—

ATTORNEY-GENERAL—The Rt. Hon. Baroness Scotland of Asthal, QC

SOLICITOR-GENERAL—Vera Baird, QC, MP

ADVOCATE-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND—The Lord Davidson of Glen Clova, QC

Leader of the House of Commons—

LEADER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, LORD PRIVY SEAL AND MINISTER FOR WOMEN AND EQUALITY—The Rt. Hon. Harriet Harman, QC, MP §

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY, OFFICE OF THE LEADER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS—Barbara Keeley, MP

Northern Ireland—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Shaun Woodward, MP

MINISTER OF STATE—
The Rt. Hon. Paul Goggins, MP

Privy Council Office—

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL, FIRST SECRETARY OF STATE AND SECRETARY OF STATE FOR BUSINESS, INNOVATION AND SKILLS—The Rt. Hon. Lord Mandelson §

Scotland Office—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Jim Murphy, MP

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE—
Ann McKechin, MP

Transport—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Lord Adonis

MINISTER OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Sadiq Khan, MP

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARIES OF STATE—
Paul Clark, MP
Chris Mole, MP

Treasury—

PRIME MINISTER, FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY AND MINISTER FOR THE CIVIL SERVICE—The Rt. Hon. Gordon Brown, MP

CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER—The Rt. Hon. Alistair Darling, MP

CHIEF SECRETARY—The Rt. Hon. Liam Byrne, MP

FINANCIAL SECRETARY—The Rt. Hon. Stephen Timms, MP §

MINISTER OF STATE—Phil Woolas, MP (Minister for the North West)* §

ECONOMIC SECRETARY—Ian Pearson, MP

EXCHEQUER SECRETARY—Sarah McCarthy-Fry, MP

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY—The Rt. Hon. Nicholas Brown, MP (Minister for the North East)*

FINANCIAL SERVICES SECRETARY—The Lord Myners, CBE

LORDS COMMISSIONERS—
Frank Roy, MP
Steve McCabe, MP
Dave Watts, MP
Tony Cunningham, MP
Bob Blizzard, MP

ASSISTANT WHIPS—
Mark Tami, MP
George Mudie, MP
John Heppell, MP
Lyn Brown, MP
Mary Creagh, MP
Sharon Hodgson, MP
Kerry McCarthy, MP
David Wright, MP

Wales Office—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Peter Hain, MP

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE—
Wayne David, MP

Work and Pensions—

SECRETARY OF STATE—The Rt. Hon. Yvette Cooper, MP

MINISTERS OF STATE—
Minister for Employment and Welfare Reform—The Rt. Hon. Jim Knight, MP (Minister for the South West)*
Minister for Pensions and the Ageing Society—Angela Eagle, MP

PARLIAMENTARY UNDER-SECRETARIES OF STATE—
Jonathan Shaw, MP (Minister for the South East)*
Helen Goodman, MP
The Lord McKenzie of Luton §

Her Majesty's Household—

LORD CHAMBERLAIN—The Rt. Hon. Earl Peel, GCVO, DL

LORD STEWARD—The Earl of Dalhousie

MASTER OF THE HORSE—The Rt. Hon. Lord Vestey, KCVO

TREASURER—The Rt. Hon. Thomas McAvoy, MP

COMPTROLLER—The Rt. Hon. John Spellar, MP

VICE-CHAMBERLAIN—Helen Jones, MP

CAPTAIN OF THE HONOURABLE CORPS OF GENTLEMEN-AT-ARMS—The Lord Bassam of Brighton

CAPTAIN OF THE QUEEN'S BODYGUARD OF THE YEOMEN OF THE GUARD—The Rt. Hon. Lord Davies of Oldham §

LORDS IN WAITING—The Lord Tunnicliffe, The Lord Young of Norwood Green, The Lord Brett §, The Lord Faulkner of Worcester

BARONESSES IN WAITING—The Baroness Farrington of Ribbleton, The Baroness Thornton, The Baroness Crawley

§ Members of the Government with responsibilities in more than one area

* Regional Ministers (in addition to other ministerial responsibilities)

Full list:

Ministers for the English Regions—
Ian Austin, MP (Minister for the West Midlands)
The Rt. Hon. Nicholas Brown, MP (Minister for the North East)
Barbara Follett, MP (Minister for the East of England)
Phil Hope, MP (Minister for the East Midlands)
The Rt. Hon. Tessa Jowell, MP (Minister for London)
The Rt. Hon. Jim Knight, MP (Minister for the South West)
Jonathan Shaw, MP (Minister for the South East)
The Rt. Hon. Rosie Winterton, MP (Minister for Yorkshire and the Humber)
Phil Woolas, MP (Minister for the North West)

SECOND CHURCH ESTATES COMMISSIONER, REPRESENTING CHURCH COMMISSIONERS—Sir Stuart Bell, MP

HOUSE OF COMMONS

THE SPEAKER—The Rt. Hon. John Bercow, MP

CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS—The Rt. Hon. Sir Alan Haselhurst, MP

FIRST DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS—Sylvia Heal, MP

SECOND DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS—Sir Michael Lord, MP

CHAIRMEN'S PANEL

Mr. David Amess, MP, Janet Anderson, MP, Mr. Peter Atkinson, MP, Hugh Bayley, MP, Miss Anne Begg, MP, Mr. Joe Benton, MP, Mr. Clive Betts, MP, Mr. Graham Brady, MP, Sir John Butterfill, MP, Mr. Martin Caton, MP, Mr. Christopher Chope, MP, Frank Cook, MP, John Cummings, MP, Mrs. Janet Dean, MP, Mr. Nigel Evans, MP, Christopher Fraser, MP, Mr. Roger Gale, MP, Mr. Mike Hancock, MP, Mr. Jim Hood, MP, The Rt. Hon. George Howarth, MP, Mrs. Joan Humble, MP, Mr. Eric Illsley, MP, Mr. Martyn Jones, MP, Robert Key, MP, Dr. William McCrea, MP, Mr. Eric Martlew, MP, Mr. Edward O'Hara, MP, Mr. Bill Olner, MP, Mr. Greg Pope, MP, Bob Russell, MP, Jim Sheridan, MP, Mr. Gary Streeter, MP, David Taylor, MP, Joan Walley, MP, Mr. Mike Weir, MP, Hywel Williams, MP, Mr. David Wilshire, MP, Ann Winterton, MP, Sir Nicholas Winterton, MP

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

The Rt. Hon. The Speaker (Chairman), Sir Stuart Bell, MP, The Rt. Hon. Harriet Harman, QC, MP, Nick Harvey, MP, The Rt. Hon. David Maclean, MP, The Rt. Hon. Sir George Young, MP

SECRETARY OF THE COMMISSION—Dorian Gerhold

ASSISTANT SECRETARY—Robert Cope

ADMINISTRATION ESTIMATE AUDIT COMMITTEE

The Rt. Hon. Sir George Young, MP (Chairman), Clive Betts, MP, Nick Harvey, MP, Mark Clarke, Alex Jablonowski, David Taylor

SECRETARY OF THE AUDIT COMMITTEE—Hannah White, PhD

MANAGEMENT BOARD

Malcolm Jack, PhD (Chief Executive), Robert Rogers (Director General, Chamber and Committee Services), John Pullinger (Director General, Information Services), Andrew Walker (Director General, Resources), John Borley, CB (Director General, Facilities), Joan Miller (Director of Parliamentary ICT) (External Member), Alex Jablonowski (External Member)

SECRETARY OF THE MANAGEMENT BOARD—Philippa Helme

SPEAKER'S SECRETARY—Angus Sinclair

SPEAKER'S COUNSEL—Michael Carpenter

SPEAKER'S CHAPLAIN—Rev. Canon Robert Wright

MEDICAL ADVISER TO THE SPEAKER—Dr. Ron Zeegen, OBE, FRCP, MRCS, DObst, RCOG

PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER FOR STANDARDS—John Lyon, CB

PARLIAMENTARY SECURITY CO-ORDINATOR—Peter Mason

THE PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

IN THE FIFTH SESSION OF THE FIFTY-FOURTH PARLIAMENT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND
[WHICH OPENED 11 MAY 2005]

FIFTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF THE REIGN OF
HER MAJESTY QUEEN ELIZABETH II

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 502

SECOND VOLUME OF SESSION 2009-2010

House of Commons

Monday 7 December 2009

The House met at half-past Two o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

Oral Answers to Questions

WORK AND PENSIONS

The Secretary of State was asked—

Youth Unemployment

1. Andrew Rosindell (Romford) (Con): What assessment she has made of the causes of the change in the level of youth unemployment in the last 12 months. [304061]

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Yvette Cooper): Young people have been particularly heavily affected by the impact of the global financial crisis and the recession. Many employers have chosen to delay new recruitment, which is why the £5 billion investment that we have put in place to help the unemployed includes a £1 billion future jobs fund as well as extra training and support for young people across the country.

Andrew Rosindell: I thank the Secretary of State for her reply. She will be aware that many people who are not graduates also need help and support in finding employment. What measures are the Government taking to ensure that those without degrees are given as much help and support as those who have left university?

Yvette Cooper: The hon. Gentleman makes an important point because we need to help young people, whatever their circumstances or their level of qualifications, to be able to get into work as rapidly as possible. Currently, more than half of young people are managing to leave the claimant count new jobseeker's allowance within three months, so a lot of people are getting help. As well as support for graduates, particularly through internships, we are providing additional help for young people through additional training places, the September guarantee, and the young person's guarantee that no young person should become long-term unemployed. The future jobs fund is also providing youth jobs in the hon. Gentleman's constituency, and I hope that his party will change its policy and support it, as it is making a difference to young people.

Mr. Frank Field (Birkenhead) (Lab): Will the Secretary of State place in the Library information on the breakdown by educational qualification of those who are young and unemployed? That would show just how important the Government's education reforms are in supporting a safe move from school into work.

Yvette Cooper: I am certainly happy to make sure that that information is available. My right hon. Friend is right that those with lower qualifications and skills are at higher risk not just of unemployment generally but of becoming long-term unemployed. That is why it is important not only to raise the education-leaving age so that more young people stay on in education, but to provide the guarantee that young people do not end up stuck on the dole for the long term. The £5 billion investment to support that is also important.

Mrs. Theresa May (Maidenhead) (Con): In the last Department for Work and Pensions questions on 19 October, as reported in Hansard at column 620, I effectively asked the Government to adopt our proposal to give the young unemployed specialist help through welfare-to-work providers after six months. The Secretary of State dismissed this, but yesterday in The Sunday Telegraph, it was reported that the Government were going to change the young person's guarantee so that in future it will kick in at six months. That is not enough, but will the Secretary of State now admit that she got it wrong and we got it right?

Yvette Cooper: Let us be clear of the consequence of the programme we have already put in place. Youth unemployment figures for the right hon. Lady's constituency show 2,200 young people on the dole at the moment compared with 4,300 in December 1992—half the level it was in the early 1990s. I would also point out that the investment we have put in place not only provides support at six months but provides it from day one of unemployment—from the very beginning when young people lose their job and need to find work. We are investing to deliver the young person's guarantee with £5 billion of additional investment. Her party opposes that and she also opposes the young person's guarantee that we want to bring forward. She has opposed it because she cannot support the investment to guarantee jobs and training for young people.

Mrs. May: The Secretary of State is always keen to contrast the performance of the last Conservative Government and this Labour Government with selective figures, so I will give her a contrast. In the last five years of the last Conservative Government, youth unemployment fell by 251,000. In the five years of this Labour Government before the recession began, youth unemployment rose by 129,000. We will give earlier help through welfare-to-work providers and create hundreds of thousands of new apprenticeships, training places, places at further education colleges and work pairings. Is not the clear contrast the one between a Conservative party that has policies to help young people and a Labour Government who have let them down?

Yvette Cooper: What utter and complete nonsense! The right hon. Lady will not guarantee young people a job or training or real-work opportunities for young people right now, and she will not fund the additional investment of £5 billion to help young people right now. As long as Conservative Members oppose the £5 billion investment, they cannot back our young person's guarantee and the extra help. I have to say to her again that the 18 to 24-year-olds claimant count is 462,000 right now; in the early '90s it was 784,000; in the mid-80s it was 980,000. This investment helps young people through the recession rather than abandoning them like the Conservatives did time and again in previous recessions and want to do again now because they want to cut the investment and support that is aimed at giving those young people a chance.

Ms Sally Keeble (Northampton, North) (Lab): May I bring to the attention of my right hon. Friend the report from my constituency, "Northampton Young People and the Recession"? Will she say how she is going to meet one of the challenges mentioned in it—providing targeted help for young people who have quite complex needs and making sure that they get support with social issues as well as training to get them back into the job market as quickly as possible?

Yvette Cooper: My hon. Friend is right. People, especially those with complex needs, need individual support to deal with particular circumstances. She will know that the future jobs fund is providing real job opportunities for young people. The Conservatives have said that they would abolish it, but I know that it is already making a difference in her part of the world. We want to expand on that to provide additional help for, in particular, those with the greatest needs, who might otherwise be at the greatest risk of long-term unemployment.

Winter Fuel Payments

2. Shona McIsaac (Cleethorpes) (Lab): What steps her Department is taking to support older people during the winter months. [304062]

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Yvette Cooper): This winter, older people will again receive the higher levels of winter fuel payment: £250, and £400 for the over-80s. We are also maintaining the cold weather payment at last year's higher rate this winter.

Shona McIsaac: Given that, of all the initiatives introduced by the Government, the winter fuel payment is probably the most universally popular with the over-60s, what does my right hon. Friend think of Members who have described that assistance as a gimmick and believe that it should be abolished?

Yvette Cooper: There are pensioners across the country who certainly do not regard extra cash in their pockets at the time when they need it most as a gimmick. They regard it as a lifeline that helps them to pay their fuel bills in the winter. In 1997-98, about £60 million a year was spent on helping pensioners with fuel bills; now we spend about £2.7 billion a year. I think that that represents a justifiable increase in investment in helping people to get through the winter months.

Workplace Pension Saving

3. Richard Ottaway (Croydon, South) (Con): What steps she plans to take to encourage uptake of workplace pension saving. [304064]

The Minister for Pensions and the Ageing Society (Angela Eagle): Our reforms to workplace pension saving, including automatic enrolment and the introduction of the personal accounts scheme, will result in between 5 million and 9 million people newly saving, or saving more, for their retirement.

Richard Ottaway: The Minister will be well aware of Conservative criticism of the Government's appalling record on pensions and the savings culture, but she may not be aware of the comments of the chief executive of the National Association of Pension Funds, who said the other day:

"The Government can no longer sit on its hands. It must take bold and positive action to help support employer-sponsored pensions."

Even at this late hour, can the Minister get a grip on the issue, do something about it, and reverse the culture towards pensions that has prevailed in this country for far too long?

Angela Eagle: The Government are determined to support the provision of good private sector schemes. That is why we are in the middle of putting into effect the Turner commission's proposals, which will ensure that between 5 million and 9 million people who do not currently have an opportunity to save begin to do so. We know of the hon. Gentleman's views on the stresses on defined benefit final salary schemes so perhaps he will explain why the Conservatives want to reduce pension saving in the public sector.

Rob Marris (Wolverhampton, South-West) (Lab): What evidence have the Government that tax relief on pension contributions, particularly for higher-rate taxpayers, has any effect on savings for pensions? If the Government have such evidence, will they please send it to me?

Angela Eagle: I have seen no such evidence, although I have heard plenty of assertions since my right hon. Friend the Chancellor decided to reduce the tax relief available to those who earn more than £150,000 a year. As for the distribution of tax relief accorded to pensions savings, I do not know whether my hon. Friend is aware that 230,000 of the best-off people in the country currently receive £6.1 billion, or 25 per cent. of all that tax relief.

Steve Webb (Northavon) (LD): The Minister will know that the Personal Accounts Delivery Authority is now reduced to just two potential bidders to provide the massive IT system for personal accounts and that it will have personal data on millions of employees who have never been pensioned before. Is she concerned about that and, in particular, would she be concerned if one or both of those bidders held those sensitive data offshore?

Angela Eagle: I would certainly not be concerned about the fact that the competitive dialogue being led by the authority has now reduced the number of potential bidders from four to two. One would expect that as part of a dialogue. Clearly we must be careful about the way in which personal data are held, and it is certainly true that the security of personal data is very important in this context. I assure the hon. Gentleman that those concerns are being taken into account adequately in continuing discussions between the Personal Accounts Delivery Authority and the potential bidders who are still left in the competition.

Ms Gisela Stuart (Birmingham, Edgbaston) (Lab): Workplace pensions are extremely important for employers and employees, but will the Minister also have discussions with the trade unions to encourage them to play a positive role in encouraging such schemes?

Angela Eagle: I regularly see stakeholders on all sides of the pensions issue, including trade unions, as well as suppliers and stakeholders in the pensions industry itself. The trade unions have long played an important role, such as by providing trustees to ensure that pension funds are properly and adequately looked after and administered. I intend, of course, to continue seeing representatives of all sides of the pensions industry. It is important that employees as well as employers have the confidence that the pensions they are putting aside are being properly administered. That is why it is also important that, for the first time ever, we have the Pension Protection Fund, which ensures that, in the event of private sector insolvency, there are protections for those who have paid into, and invested in, private pension funds.

Mr. Nigel Waterson (Eastbourne) (Con): But can the Minister confirm that 100,000 pension schemes have been wound up since 1997 and that the number of active members has halved from 5.1 million in 1995 to 2.6 million according to the latest Office for National Statistics figures published very recently? Is it any wonder that a survey conducted by the Minister's own Department showed that 51 per cent. of people do not trust the Government to act in their best interests on pensions?

Angela Eagle: It is important to understand that the decline in final salary or defined benefit schemes, which the hon. Gentleman refers to, has been going on since the 1960s, when I was at school, so it was rather a long time ago. There is no magic bullet in preserving defined benefit schemes. Perhaps he will also acknowledge his party's role in the creation of personal pensions and the mis-selling scandals of the 1980s, which also destroyed confidence in pension-saving schemes.

Disability Benefits

4. Mr. Douglas Carswell (Harwich) (Con): What plans the Government have for the future of disability living allowance and other disability benefits. [304065]

11. Mr. David Amess (Southend, West) (Con): What plans the Government have for the future of disability living allowance and other disability benefits. [304072]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Jonathan Shaw): The "Shaping the future of care together" Green Paper set out our vision for a new national care service. There may be a case for bringing together some disability benefits and the adult social care system into a single system, as a better way of providing support to older and disabled people. The Department keeps all our benefits under review.

Mr. Carswell: Many folk in Clacton who have disabilities and whose need is genuine have contacted me to say they are very concerned that they could lose their allowances. Can the Minister guarantee that the deficit will not be fixed on the back of vulnerable people in Clacton who genuinely need these allowances?

Jonathan Shaw: I welcome the hon. Gentleman's interest in disability benefits. We are, of course, concerned about pensioner disability benefits—both attendance allowance and disability living allowance. As the hon. Gentleman will know, about 1.7 million extra people are going to need social care by 2026, so we do need a new system, but I can assure him that those people who are receiving the affected benefits at the time of reform of the care service nationally will continue to receive the same level of cash support.

Mr. Amess: I represent the most centenarians in the country, and a huge number of senior citizens in my constituency are greatly concerned about any changes to their allowances. Will the Minister put their minds at rest by saying that the changes to, or even abolition of, the attendance allowance, as referred to in the Green Paper, will not mean that 2.5 million pensioners will be £3,500 a year worse off?

Jonathan Shaw: I have given an assurance about the arrangements for existing claimants if we introduce a national care service. Many of the hon. Gentleman's constituents are currently living to 100, and he will be aware that that number will quadruple in 20 years' time—and I hope he is among them, and that you are, too, Mr. Speaker. The Wanless report identified that, because of the ageing population profile in this country, we will need an additional £6 billion, so we do need a new system. I have assured the House that existing claimants will continue to receive the same cash levels as before, but I think that everyone recognises that we need a new system, and that is why we are determined to bring forward this debate.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North) (Lab): The Government have a good record as far as disabled people are concerned, but does my hon. Friend recognise the genuine anxiety among many disabled people about the Green Paper? It is necessary to reassure them that no one who is genuinely disabled will lose out as a result.

Jonathan Shaw: My hon. Friend will have heard the scaremongering from certain quarters. I think that we all accept that, with the ageing population, we need a system that is fit for purpose. With increasing age comes increasing cost, and there is a demand for more quality, too. Grappling with these competing demands necessitates that we should come up with a new system. If we do not, the current system will buckle and fail. I hope that my hon. Friend will take the assurance from me that existing claimants will continue to receive the same cash level of support if we introduce a national care service.

Dr. Phyllis Starkey (Milton Keynes, South-West) (Lab): May I draw the Minister's attention to a problem that is affecting some of my constituents who are in receipt of disability and other benefits? If they report any change in circumstance, there seems to be a very long time lag before their new benefit is agreed. In the meantime—and these people are on very low incomes—they are left with no income at all. Will the Minister look into this?

Jonathan Shaw: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for bringing to our attention the concerns of her constituents in Milton Keynes. If she provides me with the details of those constituents who have experienced a delay, I shall certainly look into the matter.

Mr. Mark Harper (Forest of Dean) (Con): It is no good the Minister pretending that this is all Conservative scaremongering, because 34 Labour Members have signed early-day motion 1 and they, along with all the disability organisations, oppose taking away attendance allowance and disability living allowance and folding them into the social care system. The simple question for the Minister is this: the Secretary of State herself, in evidence to the Select Committee, said that older people valued attendance allowance and disability living allowance and the independence and control that they gave them, so how do they benefit if those benefits are taken away and, at best, they are not even given back to them in an individual budget or, at worst, if they lose that independence and control? How do they benefit?

Jonathan Shaw: The hon. Gentleman is approaching this from a one-dimensional perspective. I have set out that we have an ageing population and that there will be additional costs in order for us to deliver on a required new system. It took the hon. Gentleman and his colleagues about four months to read this paper before we got a scaremongering response. I have said to his hon. Friends and other hon. Members that existing claimants will have their cash-related income protected as regards attendance allowance and DLA. We need to put in place a system that is fit for the future. We will have a national care system in the same way that we have a national health service, and that is opposed completely by the Opposition.

Jobseeker's Allowance

5. Mr. Peter Bone (Wellingborough) (Con): What the percentage change has been in the number of jobseeker's allowance claimants in (a) Wellingborough constituency and (b) England between 1997 and the latest period for which figures are available. [304066]

The Minister for Employment and Welfare Reform (Jim Knight): From October 1997 to the end of October 2009, the numbers claiming jobseeker's allowance in England have gone up by 163,277 and in Wellingborough by 1,578. This is a change of 14.1 per cent. and 105.1 per cent. respectively. In the same period, employment has risen by 2,685,200 in England and by 11,700 in Wellingborough.

Mr. Bone: In 1997, Tony Blair said that things could only get better. In Wellingborough, unemployment has more than doubled since 1997. How could Tony Blair have got it so wrong?

Jim Knight: Things have certainly got better for those 11,700 people who, thanks to the policies of this Government, are now in work and who would not have been in work before. Things have got better for the 137 people net who came off jobseeker's allowance last month in the hon. Gentleman's constituency. I do not hear him celebrating the fact that the figures are now starting to come down in his constituency. All in all, the management of the economy that we have seen over the past year through this recession is in stark contrast to that when his party was in power, when unemployment was deemed a price worth paying. We have now seen unemployment figures that are 400,000 less than those predicted at the time of the Budget in April.

David Taylor (North-West Leicestershire) (Lab/Co-op): In Leicestershire and Northamptonshire, including in Wellingborough, those who have been on jobseeker's allowance for 12 months are referred by the local jobcentre to a private sector organisation, the offices of which I visited last week to discuss its approach. How confident is the Minister that the training and support that those outsourced contracts provide will be appropriate to those who seek to find work in a very difficult market?

Jim Knight: My hon. Friend is right to point out that, however good the providers are, we also need to ensure that we have policies in place to create work for people to move into. Those providers are paid on the basis of results—for those whom they successfully get into work—and that is a strong incentive for them properly to match the support that is needed with the individuals. The biggest threat comes from the policies that have been put forward by the shadow Chancellor, which The Economist has said would lead to a doubling of unemployment to 5 million.

Mr. James Clappison (Hertsmere) (Con): Was not the pledge of Labour in 1997 to get 250,000 under-25s off benefits and into work? Is it not the case that today there are 300,000 more under-25s out of work than there were in 1997, and that that figure has been rising for many years? Was it not higher before the recession took hold than it was in 1997? Is there not a problem of structural youth unemployment today, and do we not need some fresh thinking rather than the failed policies of the Government?

Jim Knight: I am afraid that that is more rubbish from the Conservative party. The pledge on the famous pledge cards in 1997 was about long-term youth unemployment and what would be delivered through the new deal. As the noble Lord Freud said a year ago, that was a huge success. We were able to tackle long-term claimant youth unemployment, which is currently an 18th of what it was in 1997. It has been slashed, thanks to the imaginative ideas of the Government. The problems that we have now are in relation to short-term levels of unemployment.

Youth Unemployment

6. Mr. Tom Clarke (Coatbridge, Chryston and Bellshill) (Lab): What steps her Department is taking to reduce unemployment among young people; and if she will make a statement. [304067]

12. Mr. Stephen Hepburn (Jarrow) (Lab): What steps the Government are taking to reduce the level of youth unemployment; and if she will make a statement. [304073]

The Minister for Employment and Welfare Reform (Jim Knight): We have launched a number of targeted initiatives to tackle youth unemployment, as hon. Members have been hearing. From next month, the young person's guarantee will ensure that all 18 to 24-year-olds on jobseeker's allowance will be guaranteed either the offer of work, work-focused training or meaningful activity. They will then be required to take up one of those opportunities. The future jobs fund will create 150,000 jobs. About 95,000 jobs have already been approved and some have already started, but the Government cannot prevent youth unemployment on our own. That is why we have launched Backing Young Britain, and I am delighted to report that, as a result, more than 330 employers are already pledging new opportunities for young people.

Mr. Clarke: What measures within the future jobs fund and other initiatives within the Department are focused specifically on disabled young people, the vast majority of whom want to experience the same job opportunities and job satisfaction as has been the experience of their peers?

Jim Knight: My right hon. Friend is well known in the House as a champion for disabled people. The future jobs fund is designed to help all young people and, with my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for disabled people, the Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, my hon. Friend the Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Jonathan Shaw), I am looking to secure good access to all future jobs fund opportunities for young disabled people. Among the future jobs fund bids, First Movement in the east midlands will offer creative arts and outreach activities for people with disabilities, and, in Scotland, the Royal National Institute of Blind People has proposed a number of jobs, including positions such as facilities officers, conferences officers and an admin director.

Mr. Hepburn: Programmes such as the young person's guarantee are to be welcomed, and I am sure that they will do a lot of good. However, does my hon. Friend realise—I do not know what was in the press yesterday, but as far as I am concerned this is the case with the rules today—that there are daft rules? There is a 39-week eligibility wait before one can qualify for that scheme, which means that about a third of young unemployed people in the north-east will not qualify at all. Will the Minister look into this issue and scrap the rule to make sure that all young people get their rights from day one?

Jim Knight: Given that my hon. Friend comes from the part of the world that he does, which has been hard hit by the recession, I naturally listen carefully to his encouragements. Of course, we continue to consider the point at which people become eligible for increasing levels of support, according to the risks that they have of becoming long-term unemployed. We will have more to say about that in the next few days.

Mr. Graham Stuart (Beverley and Holderness) (Con): I am sure that the Minister recognises the anger and frustration of young people and families who find themselves unemployed at this time. Why have the numbers been rising steadily, even before the credit crunch? Does he understand and accept that unemployment when one is young has a long-term, scarring effect, from which people often do not recover?

Jim Knight: We know only too well, from our memories of the recessions of the 1980s and 1990s, when the Government of the day thought that unemployment was a price worth paying, about the scarring effect of unemployment, especially on young people. It can damage their self-confidence for the rest of their working lives. That is why we have put such a focus on preventing long-term youth unemployment through the £5 billion investment—opposed by the hon. Gentleman and his party—which has been successful, as I have already said in answers today. That is why, if we consider the international position, we see that our youth unemployment is below the European average and that of countries such as France, Italy and Spain.

Local Housing Allowance

7. Angela Watkinson (Upminster) (Con): What recent assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the rules governing local housing allowance. [304068]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Helen Goodman): We are taking forward a review of the first two years of the operation of local housing allowance. In many respects, it is effective, but we will shortly consult on the reform of housing benefit. Our aim is a system that is fair to customers, landlords and the taxpayer.

Angela Watkinson: Does the Under-Secretary agree that more private rented accommodation might become available if tenants could opt to have their LHA paid directly to the landlord? The landlord would thus be guaranteed to receive the rent and tenants would not be at risk of accumulating unmanageable debt.

Helen Goodman: I am afraid that we have no independent evidence to support the hon. Lady's proposition. Indeed, the number of people living in the private rented sector has increased by 200,000 since November 2008.

Steve Webb (Northavon) (LD): The local housing allowance was designed to give people an incentive to shop around; if they could get a rent for below the going rate, they could keep the difference. However, the Under-Secretary knows that the Government plan to scrap that. In those circumstances, why would landlords offer rents below local housing allowance level? Will not they simply put up rents as a result? Is not that a direct transfer from the taxpayer to landlords?

Helen Goodman: At the moment, we are considering the consultation responses to our proposals about the £15 excess. We will respond to that in due course. I am afraid that I do not accept the hon. Gentleman's proposition. We believe that the freedom that we have given tenants enables them to shop around. It also gives them more choice, enables them to manage their benefit payments and open bank accounts, and improves their financial inclusion generally.

Andrew Selous (South-West Bedfordshire) (Con): But why do the Government persist in refusing tenants' request to have their local housing allowance paid directly to their landlords? That is what tenants want. There is much evidence to show that money goes straight to loan sharks or drug dealers. The policy also reduces the supply of social homes to local housing allowance tenants. When will the Government give tenants the choice for which they are asking?

Helen Goodman: As I have said, the evidence is unclear. The feedback that we have had from local authorities generally is that most tenants manage their benefit payments and do not get into increasing arrears. Choice is only one aspect of the local housing allowance; responsibility is a key principle. I would have thought that the hon. Gentleman would accept that principle.

Pensioner Poverty

8. Malcolm Bruce (Gordon) (LD): What her most recent estimate is of the number of pensioners living in poverty. [304069]

The Minister for Pensions and the Ageing Society (Angela Eagle): Through targeted support and additional funding, we have got 900,000 pensioners out of the relative poverty in which they were living in 1997. However, there are still 2 million pensioners in relative poverty, which we define as 60 per cent. or below of median household income.

Malcolm Bruce: Does the Minister acknowledge that a reason for that is the complexity and delay involved in applying for benefits, particularly pension credit, for which the form is 18-pages long and the guidance is 19 pages? Does she not accept that, for many people, that is simply a deterrent, which means that they do not claim benefits? Is that not the Government's intention? If it is not, surely they could find a better way of ensuring that people who are entitled to benefits get them.

Angela Eagle: First things first: I am proud to be part of the first Government ever to end the link between poverty and old age. A report published by the Joseph Rowntree Foundation on 3 December revealed that there has been a historic reversal in the fortunes of pensioners over state pension age, who are now at the lowest risk of being in poverty than any other age group. I do very important work with the Pensions Service in attempting to encourage pension credit recipients to claim, and that service makes 13,000 visits a week to the homes of vulnerable pensioners to take them through the claim form. People can claim for pension credit, housing benefit and council tax benefit in the same phone call, and the hon. Gentleman's own local authority—Aberdeenshire—is one of 203 local authorities working in partnership with the Department for Work and Pensions to improve the take-up of pension credit, and we believe that we are succeeding.

Jobseeker's Allowance

9. Mr. David Jones (Clwyd, West) (Con): How many jobseeker's allowance claimants there were in (a) the UK, (b) Wales and (c) Clwyd, West constituency on the most recent date for which figures are available. [304070]

The Minister for Employment and Welfare Reform (Jim Knight): In October 2009, there were 1,582,555 jobseeker's allowance claimants in the UK, 78,234 in Wales, and 1,603 in the Clwyd, West parliamentary constituency. Employment levels have risen since 1997 by 121,200 in Wales and 6,700 in Clwyd, West.

Mr. Jones: Almost half of the last quarterly increase in unemployment across the UK was attributable to job losses in Wales, which was particularly hard-hit by the downturn. I know that the Minister's Department works closely with the Welsh Assembly Government in the delivery of their ProAct programme, so can he explain why in the 12 months to October this year, not a penny was spent under that programme in the county of Conwy, which includes my constituency, where there has been a 50 per cent. increase in unemployment?

Jim Knight: The hon. Gentleman is right that I regularly meet Ministers from the Welsh Assembly Government. Over the summer, we were pleased that Wales appeared to buck the trend and be moving in a positive direction. Some people put that down to the effectiveness of ProAct and ReAct. I cannot give him a detailed answer on spending in his part of the world, but I can tell him that in the past year, employment has risen in his constituency, inactivity has fallen and the number of people claiming jobseeker's allowance fell in the past month.

Gloucester Works Project

10. Mr. Parmjit Dhanda (Gloucester) (Lab): What assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the Gloucester Works project. [304071]

The Minister for Employment and Welfare Reform (Jim Knight): This is a good-quality project, providing support to unemployed people and businesses in Gloucester, and bringing together the public and private sectors to ensure that local communities benefit from regeneration. During the first phase of the Quays development, the project has delivered 236 jobs for local people, 67 per cent. of whom had previously been unemployed or facing redundancy. I was very pleased to see this for myself when I visited the project in October to meet people who have secured jobs thanks both to the investment Government are making and to the tireless work of their excellent local Member of Parliament.

Mr. Dhanda: I am grateful to my right hon. Friend, who will be aware that Gloucester Works has contributed to a reduction in unemployment in the city of Gloucester in four of the past six months. The project is worth something like £4 million of investment from the Government, so does he share my concern that that funding would not continue should the Opposition ever come to power?

Jim Knight: I share my hon. Friend's concern, because the funding has come from two organisations about which the Opposition are sceptical—the regional development agency and the European Union. As I have said, the project has delivered 236 jobs that would not be delivered if the Opposition's policies had their way.

Local Housing Allowance

14. Mr. Robert Goodwill (Scarborough and Whitby) (Con): What recent assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the rules governing local housing allowance. [304075]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Helen Goodman): I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Upminster (Angela Watkinson).

Mr. Goodwill: To return to where we were on Question 7, would the Minister be surprised to hear that, despite a private landlord contacting Scarborough borough council to inform it that three months' rent that had been paid to a tenant had not been passed on, and that, before eviction proceedings could take place, the tenant absconded, the council said that it had no alternative but to pay the subsequent payment to the tenant, although they had left the property with three months of arrears?

Helen Goodman: The hon. Gentleman has told this story, but the overall picture is quite different. In total, across the whole country, there are a million people receiving local housing allowance. It is, on average, £110 a week, and they use that to pay their rent.

Miss Julie Kirkbride (Bromsgrove) (Con): I am sure the Minister saw the story in the newspapers last week of a family in west London who were receiving some £180,000 worth of benefits, most of which formed their housing allowance. The hon. Lady previously had plans to cap the very large sums of rent that were paid to families. Can she explain how such an extraordinary state of affairs came about?

Helen Goodman: We have already acted to cap those high levels of benefit by capping the local housing allowance to the five-bedroom rate. We will shortly be consulting on reform of housing benefit to make it fairer and support access to reasonably priced accommodation. The hon. Lady makes a fair point. Nobody expects housing benefit to pay for a small number of people to live in extremely expensive accommodation, but I point out to her that fewer than 100 households across the whole country receive housing benefit of more than £1,000 a week.

Unemployment

16. Mr. Lindsay Hoyle (Chorley) (Lab): What recent steps she has taken to reduce the level of unemployment; and if she will make a statement. [304077].

The Minister for Employment and Welfare Reform (Jim Knight): We are taking decisive steps to reduce the level of unemployment, as we have been discussing. Since November 2008, the Government have made available £5 billion to provide more support to jobseekers prior to redundancy, when they are newly unemployed, and at the six and 12-month points of their claim.

Mr. Hoyle: My right hon. Friend rightly describes what has been put in place when people are unemployed. Would it not make sense to support people while they are in the workplace? Perhaps we ought to introduce something similar to the ProAct scheme. In that way we will be subsidising people to keep their jobs, rather than retraining them at the jobcentre afterwards.

Jim Knight: Thanks to the extra £5 billion that we are spending, one of the areas of investment has been in the rapid response service, which goes into workplaces and works with those immediately facing redundancy, before they start their claim for jobseeker's allowance, reskilling them so that they can go straight into a different sort of job. In respect of ProAct and whether we should have some kind of wage subsidy scheme, in England we have chosen not to go down that road because of other schemes that are in place. We have heard some debate today about its effectiveness or otherwise in Wales.

Miss Anne McIntosh (Vale of York) (Con): Can the Minister tell me why, when in 1997 youth unemployment in the Vale of York and across the country was going down dramatically, we now have record levels of youth unemployment in the Vale of York, as well as those 18 to 24-year-olds not in employment or training?

Jim Knight: This may come as a surprise to the hon. Lady, but there has been a global recession. Thanks to that, unemployment has risen, which normally happens during recessions. It has happened during every previous recession, but the measures that have been taken—the £5 billion that we have invested—have lessened the impact of unemployment. We have done considerably better during the present recession than in previous ones.

Kelvin Hopkins (Luton, North) (Lab): Will my right hon. Friend urge our right hon. Friend the Chancellor not to cut public spending in the areas of public services and construction in particular, which are labour intensive and should make a considerable contribution to future employment?

Jim Knight: Naturally, we are deep in discussions with my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, but it is beyond my pay grade to comment at this point on the outcome of those discussions.

Private Pension Schemes

17. Mr. Henry Bellingham (North-West Norfolk) (Con): When she next expects to meet representatives of occupational pension campaign groups to discuss private pension schemes that have been wound up. [304078]

The Minister for Pensions and the Ageing Society (Angela Eagle): My predecessors and I have frequently met representatives of occupational pension campaign groups and trade unions, and I will continue to do so.

Mr. Bellingham: The Minister will know that I represent a number of constituents who are in occupational pension schemes that have failed. That has caused substantial concern and grief. Can she confirm that the financial assistance scheme will pay out the 90 per cent. as promised, without conditions? Can she also confirm that there will be full protection for widows and partners of deceased members of schemes?

Angela Eagle: I am aware that the hon. Gentleman represents areas where there are pensioners in several schemes that have entered the financial assistance scheme because he has been in correspondence with me about that, and I have been more than happy to correspond with him in reply. I can confirm the promise that we issued when we introduced the financial assistance scheme: that members would get 90 per cent. of expected pension, subject to the cap, revalued from the date of wind-up. This is not the pension that they could have expected to retire on if they had continued paying all the way to retirement, but the rights that they had accrued to date.

Disability Living Allowance/Attendance Allowance

18. Mr. Stephen O'Brien (Eddisbury) (Con): What plans the Government have for the future of disability living allowance and attendance allowance. [304079]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Jonathan Shaw): I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave earlier to the hon. Members for Harwich (Mr. Carswell) and for Southend, West (Mr. Amess).

Mr. O'Brien: The Minister did, indeed, reply to Question 4, and his response centred on the rising elderly population and on the escalating costs. He rested his case on false accusations of scaremongering, but I have with me a number of letters from real people, showing the vulnerability that they feel in the light of the threatened withdrawal of attendance allowance and disability living allowance. Why do the Government so blatantly discriminate against the over-65s on disability living allowance?

Jonathan Shaw: The arrangements for disability living allowance have been in place for many years, and they precede this Government's entry into office, as I am sure the hon. Gentleman is aware, and as I am sure he will tell the people who have written to him. We need to set out a new care system. People want a system that ends the postcode lottery: they want a system whereby, if they move from one town to another, they do not have to battle to receive such services. In my earlier reply, I said that an existent pensioner claimant who is in receipt of attendance allowance or disability living allowance will get the same cash total under the new system. In order to reassure the people who have written to him, I hope that the hon. Gentleman will tell them that, and not repeat the scaremongering that we have heard from those on the Opposition Front Bench.

Topical Questions

T1. [304086] Ann Winterton (Congleton) (Con): If she will make a statement on her departmental responsibilities.

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Yvette Cooper): Today, the Secretary of State for Health and I announced a number of publications on mental health conditions and employment. Because of the devastating impact that mental health can have on people and their families, we know that it also costs the economy between £30 billion and £40 billion in lost production, sick pay, NHS treatment and unemployment. We want to do more not only to help people—and their families—who have mental health conditions, but to improve their employment chances, because that is good for the economy, as well as for such individuals and their families. Later this week, the Department will publish its back to work White Paper, with extra help for young people and others who are struggling to find work.

Ann Winterton: But does the Secretary of State recall the parable of the 10 wise and foolish virgins? Would it not have been wiser for the Government to have prevented the £3 billion worth of benefit fraud and overpayment each year, rather than to set up yet another taskforce, which is foolishly 12 years' too late?

Yvette Cooper: The hon. Lady will realise that the Government have done a huge amount of work to reduce fraud and overpayments. The progress that we have made has been hugely important, but we want to go further, so it is right that we look both throughout the government and in the private sector at how we can go further and build on the very considerable progress that has already been made.

Jessica Morden (Newport, East) (Lab): A constituent of mine, who was successfully helped back into work by the new deal for lone parents, found herself within 3p of losing her carer's allowance when the minimum wage went up in October. What work is the Department doing to synchronise minimum wage rises with the earnings threshold for carer's allowance?

Yvette Cooper: My hon. Friend makes an important point, and we are looking at what more can be done to help carers who are often very keen to work, even if they are able to do so for only a limited number of hours, so that they can combine such work with their caring responsibilities. That is one of the issues that we have looked at as part of the back to work White Paper—how we do more to support carers and parents who need more flexible work. I am happy to talk further to my hon. Friend about that issue and the concerns of her constituent.

Mr. Patrick McLoughlin (West Derbyshire) (Con): May I tell the Secretary of State of a constituent who came to see me on Saturday morning? His partner died on 8 September, and he is having tremendous problems getting the child benefit and tax credits that should be paid over to him. He is in desperate straits, and so are his children—obviously suffering the terrible loss of their mother. If I give the Secretary of State's office the details, will she ensure that the situation is sorted out by Christmas?

Yvette Cooper: I can say that I will look into this immediately. If the right hon. Gentleman gives me the details today, I will get my office on to it straight away. It is important that people are provided with rapid support at a very difficult time. We are trying to work right across government so that, particularly in cases of bereavement, it is possible for people to tell not only our Department but any other area of government, just once, about what has happened so that all areas of government concerned can work together to provide that support rapidly. I am very sorry to hear of the hon. Gentleman's constituent's case.

T2. [304087] Clive Efford (Eltham) (Lab): This morning, together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families, I had the pleasure of attending a youth impact project run by Charlton Athletic community trust in partnership with CARE—the Charlton Athletic race equality project. The project works with NEETs—people not in education, employment or training—and it has had a high success rate. We heard some very moving stories from young people who had been through the project. The funding for this successful project comes to an end in March, and it is looking for funding to take the project forward. May I urge the Secretary of State to enter into negotiations with such projects in order to get secure funding?

The Minister for Employment and Welfare Reform (Jim Knight): I am very encouraged to hear the stories of how successful Charlton Athletic is being in engaging with young people in my hon. Friend's constituency. Last week, I was at Stamford Bridge to take part in the launch of the premier league Into Work initiative, which is trying to do similar things. It might be worth Charlton's linking up with the premier league and Richard Scudamore on that work.

I am happy to discuss funding with my hon. Friend to see whether there is any more that we can do.

T5. [304090] Mr. Stephen O'Brien (Eddisbury) (Con): Given the exchanges that we have had on Questions 4, 11 and 18, and the Government's attempts to suggest that nobody who is on existing benefits will suffer, can the Minister give the equivalent promise that those in future need will have equivalent benefits in cash?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Jonathan Shaw): The hon. Gentleman knows that we have a Green Paper, on which we are consulting, to provide—[Interruption.] To answer the sedentary question, the problem is that we have an ageing population with increasing demands, and we need to find solutions in order to meet those demands. We have a Green Paper, which we are consulting on, and we are listening carefully to what people have to say. We need to ensure that those who are most vulnerable—those in the greatest need—[Interruption] If the right hon. Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) would listen, I repeat that those in the greatest need require support and care, but all she is doing is scaremongering about elderly people in a vulnerable situation. We will come forward with a national care service that will be popular and will meet the needs of future generations, whereas the Conservatives have a blank sheet of paper and can offer nothing other than—

Mr. David Evennett (Bexleyheath and Crayford) (Con): Rubbish!

Jonathan Shaw: As the hon. Gentleman says, all they can offer is rubbish.

T7. [304092] Mr. Russell Brown (Dumfries and Galloway) (Lab): The future jobs fund has the potential to provide 134 new jobs in my area after the Conservative-controlled local authority submitting bids to the fund. However, can the Minister help me with a dilemma—namely, how does the position of my local authority square with the position of the Conservative party?

Jonathan Shaw: My hon. Friend knows that the future jobs fund is creating jobs in the Dumfries and Galloway council area in gardening, community development and customer services. I take on board his comments in welcoming it. As for how it squares with the policy of the Conservative party centrally, it does not. The Conservatives opposed the investment, and the borrowing that financed it, which has been spent on the future jobs fund. Without that investment put in by this Labour Government, my hon. Friend would not have those 91 jobs in his constituency.

T6. [304091] Richard Ottaway (Croydon, South) (Con): Does the Secretary of State agree with the Joseph Rowntree Foundation that poverty, unemployment and repossessions started to rise as early as 2004?

Yvette Cooper: The hon. Gentleman will be aware that as a result of the support that we have put in, particularly for those who are at risk of losing their mortgages, the number of repossessions has in fact been considerably lower than people expected at the beginning of the recession. That has helped a lot of families who had lost their jobs and were at risk of losing their homes to stay in their homes and to get additional support, whether from their local council, from the Government, or from their mortgage company. That has been helpful, and it means that we have not been turning our backs on people as the hon. Gentleman's party did in the early '90s.

T8. [304093] Jim Sheridan (Paisley and Renfrewshire, North) (Lab): Despite resistance from the official Opposition, the Access to Work scheme has proven extremely successful in either getting disabled people back to work or getting them the benefits that they are entitled to. However, there remains a problem for people with autism in trying to get back into work or get their benefits. Will my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meet representatives from the National Autistic Society to explore whether the difficulties can be solved?

Jonathan Shaw: I thank my hon. Friend for his question and for his commitment to working with people with autism and all disabilities. We seek to provide more opportunities to get into work, and disabled people have seen employment levels rise by about 10 per cent. in recent years, assisted by Access to Work, for which we are doubling the resources to about £138 million, helping about 34,000 people. However, we do need to do more to help people with autism, and I will be pleased to meet him and representatives of the NAS to discuss how we might make Access to Work more flexible and tailor-make it for people such as he refers to.

T9. [304094] David T.C. Davies (Monmouth) (Con): Despite promises of action back in October, Ministers have continued happily to pay for a family of Afghans to live in a seven-bedroom, £1 million townhouse in west London. Will they now offer the same right to homeless ex-British soldiers living on the streets of London?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Helen Goodman): As I said in answer to an earlier question, the number of people being paid exceptionally high levels of local housing allowance, which I agree are not acceptable, is very small indeed. We will bring forward proposals to tackle the problem in our consultation document on housing benefit, but the hon. Gentleman sheds no light whatever on the matter by suggesting that it is somehow to do with immigration.

Rob Marris (Wolverhampton, South-West) (Lab): On 1 November 2008, the Child Maintenance and Enforcement Commission took over the Child Support Agency, which had a woeful record of using its enforcement powers. Can the Minister tell me, if not today then later, how many driving licences were removed in each of the past five years? Was that power ever used?

Helen Goodman: I am sorry, but I cannot give my hon. Friend that information immediately. I will have to write to him. As he knows, that is an additional power that we are using to get more non-paying, non-resident parents to pay the maintenance that they owe their children.

T10. [304095] Mr. Stephen Crabb (Preseli Pembrokeshire) (Con): I sat down at the weekend to help a constituent fill out an application for disability living allowance, and I was appalled at the length and complexity of the form. Have Ministers ever tried filling one out for themselves? If so, what suggestions do they have for making the process far less lengthy and complex?

Jonathan Shaw: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for his question. He will appreciate the competing demands in any benefit form. On one hand we must get the right information, and on the other we want to ensure that there is no fraud and mitigate against appeals, which we want to reduce. We have recently revised the DLA form for children, which has been welcomed by a number of children's organisations. We keep all benefits under review and work in partnership with a range of organisations that advise us, but I am sure that the hon. Gentleman and his constituent understand those competing demands.

Mr. Gordon Prentice (Pendle) (Lab): In a few moments we will hear more about smarter government. The Department is leading the Government's "Tell us once" programme, which reduces the number of times individuals have to contact Government to tell them about changes that have affected them. How is it going?

Jonathan Shaw: The "Tell us once" initiative has been very effective, bringing together a number of agencies. For example, there has been some excellent work on bereavement in particular, especially children's bereavement, by St. Guy's and St. Thomas's hospital and Lambeth council. We want that successful initiative, which reduces bureaucracy and eases people's pain, to be expanded, and I hope that my hon. Friend will be satisfied with the responses on it that come forward.

Sir Patrick Cormack (South Staffordshire) (Con): Will the Secretary of State be able to offer any Christmas cheer to those of my pensioner constituents who are victims of Equitable Life?

Yvette Cooper: The hon. Gentleman will know that Judge Chadwick is currently reviewing the circumstances of many people who were affected by Equitable Life, and that there are a lot of problems for a lot of pensioners who have been badly affected. The Government have said that additional support should be given, and we are waiting for Judge Chadwick's response.

NHS IT Programme

3.30 pm

Mr. Andrew Lansley (South Cambridgeshire) (Con) (Urgent Question): To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the future of the NHS IT programme, and if he will make a statement.

The Secretary of State for Health (Andy Burnham): I want to begin by challenging the myth put around by the hon. Gentleman that the NHS IT programme has been a waste. The programme has changed the way in which the Government pay for IT by creating a contract whereby we pay for what we get from suppliers only when it is fully delivered. Indeed, we have been praised by the National Audit Office for creating such a contract.

The national programme comprises a number of key elements that are already essential to the delivery of front-line services. For instance, digital X-rays and scans, which facilitate faster safer care, are in place in 100 per cent. of hospital trusts; electronic prescriptions are now the norm in general practitioner systems; choose and book—the electronic booking service—provides choice and convenience for patients; GP2GP—the electronic transfer of health records between GP practices—will in time support our policy of abolishing practice boundaries, giving patients more choice; and we also have the summary care record, whereby key information from the patient's GP record, including current prescriptions and reactions to medicines, can be made readily available.

To put it simply, the programme is a key part of delivering modern, safe, joined-up health care. It is supporting the ongoing reform of the NHS by giving choice and convenience to patients. The NHS could not function without it. However, in the current climate it is right to look again at efficiencies and value for money on all big projects, and at the Chancellor of the Exchequer's request—and that is what the Minister of State, Department of Health, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien) and I have been doing across my Department.

As part of that, I have looked closely at options for savings on the NHS IT system; it was to those that the Chancellor referred yesterday. The details of those discussions with the IT companies are commercially sensitive and ongoing, but I can give the House this update. My aim in conducting this exercise has been to ensure that the elements of the IT programme that can deliver most benefit to patients and front-line staff are taken forward, while cancelling certain additions to the system where it makes sense to do so.

Let me be absolutely clear: we have no intention whatsoever of cancelling the programme overall, not least because it is already making the NHS safer, more efficient and more convenient for patients. However, we are discussing with our suppliers potential reductions to the scope of the systems and the cost savings that could be generated. In addition, we are looking seriously into the internal savings that can be made from the costs of running the programme. In the light of that work, I can confirm to the House that we are working towards achieving a reduction of £600 million in the lifetime costs of the programme.

That means that we will now pare back the programme to the core elements that have been identified as critical by clinicians. Our aim is to give trusts more flexibility and choice of IT systems, within a framework provided by existing contracts, to keep the benefits of a national approach. Specifically, that could include the IT systems that clinicians have told us are most important to them, such as electronic prescribing; enabling local innovation to take place by linking national systems with those provided by local service providers; and allowing the NHS to design IT systems to fit its local needs.

The programme has already provided benefits, and we believe that this approach will accelerate the delivery of benefits to front-line services and patients across the NHS.

Mr. Lansley: Oh dear, Mr. Speaker. Rarely have we seen a more abject example of the Government's incompetence. They took central control of NHS IT—£7.5 billion in central contracts and £5 billion in associated costs on top of that. Seven years on, they are over budget and under-delivered. The electronic patient record is four years late at the very best—if it will ever happen. Everyone told them that big IT projects had to be user led, but that one was not. We told them that the system should be decentralised, with local procurement and patient control over health records, but they did not listen. Now the Chancellor of the Exchequer says it has to stop. The Secretary of State is clearly not in charge. The Government got it wrong and the Treasury is now belatedly putting a stop to the continuing disaster.

Let me ask the Secretary of State some questions. Will he now stop the centralised care record system and allow local procurement of care record systems to national standards? Will he allow general practitioners and hospital trusts to be purchasers of their own IT hardware and software from open sources of supply? Will he now be open about the contractual situation with the three local service providers, and about whether, as we suspect, it would now be possible to abandon the existing contracts without penalties—in either direction—because the costs of fulfilling the contracts to the companies exceed the value of the contracts to them? That could deliver up to £4 billion, unspent under those contracts, for support for front-line IT and other services in the NHS.

Will the Secretary of State now have the grace to acknowledge the Government's failure, the billions of pounds spent without delivery, the spiralling opportunity costs of delays, the confusion and frustrations over IT and choose and book, but—worst of all—the resulting lack of IT innovation in our hospitals, when it has the potential to be of such benefit to patients in managing their care and minimising errors in treatment? Will the Secretary of State just admit that they got it hopelessly wrong?

Andy Burnham: Let me begin with a phrase that the hon. Gentleman used towards the end of his contribution, about the "lack of IT innovation" in hospitals. I do not know how many he has visited recently, but I do not understand how he can make such a comment on the Floor of the House. The step change in the quality of images available to clinicians is evident to anybody who looks at the NHS today, and because people all around the hospital can view clear images, that has been a real benefit for patient safety across the NHS. I simply do not believe that there has been no innovation or improvement in services. Indeed, clinicians—not

[Andy Burnham]

Ministers—have today spoken in favour of the changes brought about by the national programme for IT across the NHS—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Mr. O'Brien, you have developed a bad habit of chuntering away from a sedentary position on the Opposition Front Bench, in evident disapproval of the answer from the Minister. The question has been asked: the answer must be heard.

Andy Burnham: Before I was so rudely interrupted, I was saying that it is clinicians who have come out today to say that they value the improvements that the national programme for IT has brought. The hon. Gentleman would do well to listen to those voices before he comes here and makes sweeping statements suggesting that that programme has brought no benefit to patients.

The hon. Gentleman said that the programme was over budget and under-delivered. In my statement I mentioned the views of the National Audit Office, and I hope that he will acknowledge that the programme has been praised by the NAO. Its 2006 report said:

"The Office of Government Commerce considered there to be many good features in the procurement process for wider application to government IT procurement. These included elements of contract innovation, which it has built on to develop its good practice guidance."

It is simply not true to say that this programme is flawed and has not delivered benefits: it has delivered considerable benefits to the NHS and has improved the way in which the NHS contracts for IT. We get what we pay for, and the NHS has learned the lessons of IT failures in the past.

The hon. Gentleman said that the programme was over budget and under-delivered: it is not, and never has been, over budget. The last NAO report confirmed that the cost of the original contracts had not changed and that the overall programme costs, including NHS costs and the costs of additional items such as payment by results and the 18 weeks, are substantially unchanged from the figure of £12.4 billion in the earlier NAO report.

The hon. Gentleman asked about the care records system. That will be a matter for local choice—[Hon. Members: "Ah!"] I said in my statement that we wanted to create a system in which acute hospitals had more choice and flexibility in relation to their IT requirements within a national system. He seems to reject the benefits of a national system across the NHS, but we do not. We believe that there are significant benefits from a national health service having a programme of IT that can link up clinicians across the system. We further believe that it is safer for patients if their records can be accessed across the system.

Let me finish with a comment on the hon. Gentleman's plans for IT in the NHS.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that we need to go into that. I know that the Secretary of State has been provoked by quite a lot of sedentary chuntering, which I have just deprecated, but may I urge him to be economical in his replies? I am keen to get Back Benchers in as well.

Mr. David Heath (Somerton and Frome) (LD): The Secretary of State was provoked into whistling in the dark by claiming that the programme had been a success. He quoted the NAO report, but did not the Public Accounts Committee conclude in January that the programme was, among other things, "very disappointing," and "not providing value for money," that estimates of costs were "unreliable", and that the system had "little clinical functionality", as well as reporting

"understandable concerns about data security"?

That does not sound to me like a system that is going well. Is this not the classic case of an IT programme that is too big, too expensive, too late and insufficiently planned? By building the system from the top down, the Government have smothered the option of local schemes with interoperability, which would, I agree, have been a better solution.

Do the enormous compensation counter-claims by suppliers of which we read represent a contingent liability against the NHS? If so, does that mean that they will be paid at the expense of front-line services? The Government's dithering over cancellations of quite large elements of the scheme has resulted in eye-wateringly large amounts of money being sunk in a scheme that has produced nothing like the benefits claimed for it, but which has, I am afraid, used a great deal of NHS money for very little result.

Andy Burnham: The hon. Gentleman also seems to have misunderstood the very nature of the contract. It was an innovative contract that meant that the NHS paid only once it received the system and the system had been passed over and was operational. That was a step forward in how the NHS paid for IT systems.

The hon. Gentleman quoted the NAO at me, but the NAO recognised the improvement in contracting that came with the system. If he is saying that it is not right, in the current climate, for me to take a look at the system and see whether we can make savings, then quite honestly I disagree with him. It is right that we should look at the system again in the current climate and, where we can, make savings.

Let us be absolutely clear: we are being led by clinicians on this issue. They are saying to us that they value the improvements in patient safety and the reduction in errors that have come with the national IT programme. The British Medical Association issued a statement today to that effect, and I think that I would prefer to listen to the BMA than to the hon. Gentleman.

We can make savings and pare the system down to the core elements that have been identified as important by the clinical community. If I may, let me give the hon. Gentleman a specific example of those changes. We have made a big investment in GP systems. GP systems are working well across the country and have high levels of satisfaction. GPs are happy with them and they are internationally recognised. Recognising that, we have agreed that we will not now go ahead with the replacement of further enhancements to that system, because people are happy with it. It is working well, and technology makes it possible for those parts of the system to talk to other parts.

We are looking at the system again in a new financial context, but the technology also makes possible other developments that were not available to us when the programme began. It is right that we should always re-examine the system in the context of current developments.

Andrew Miller (Ellesmere Port and Neston) (Lab): In rejecting the siren voices from those on the Opposition Benches, who clearly know very little about computer systems, may I ask my right hon. Friend to undertake some research into the productivity gains that some of the systems have produced? As a customer of the health service over a number of years and from discussions with consultants, I can say that it is unambiguously clear that massive improvements have been made. However, they need to be studied and published, so that people understand properly the value of that incredibly sensible investment.

Andy Burnham: I could not agree more with my hon. Friend. For instance, the widespread use of the choose and book system in general practice makes it much easier for GPs to have direct access to referrals in secondary care. I would argue that that cuts out significant amounts of time in the referral process. It is also better for patients, because they can see in their GP surgery, and have explained to them, the options open to them in booking a secondary appointment. I agree entirely with my hon. Friend: there are huge productivity gains to be had for the NHS and it is right that we press on with the system.

Mr. Richard Bacon (South Norfolk) (Con): I am left gasping by this woeful performance. The Secretary of State talked about GPs doing well, but GP Systems of Choice was the reason why they were doing well—and that system came before the national programme. It is also no accident that he referred to digital scanning. That was added to the programme in September 2004, and it is an example of something that worked; it had nothing to do with central patient records. I could go on about this for ages, but you would not let me, Mr. Speaker. Can the Secretary of State explain how the NHS could not operate without the system, as he says, while at the same time the Chancellor of the Exchequer says that it is of no value to the front line? Which is it?

Andy Burnham: I said clearly that there are elements of the scheme that can now be pared back. I also made it clear that one of those elements was the enhancement to the GP system, which is unnecessary because GPs are happy with how the system is working now. If the hon. Gentleman is saying that there have been no benefits for hospitals from the PAC—picture archiving and communications—system, I do not agree with him. There have been significant benefits for patient safety and the reduction of errors. The strong support from clinicians for the system that they now have refutes what the hon. Gentleman has just said.

Mr. David Anderson (Blaydon) (Lab): In conducting the review, will the Secretary of State also look at the business service authority's plans to outsource its IT infrastructure? In doing that, it has ignored the views of the work force about where the greatest savings could be made.

Andy Burnham: My hon. Friend raises a separate issue, and I promise to come back to him with a detailed reply. It is important in the coming period for the NHS to make savings from back-office functions. That is the right thing to do in the current climate, so that we can put every possible support into the NHS front line. I will give my hon. Friend a detailed answer on shared business services.

Mr. John Baron (Billericay) (Con): The history of this Government's involvement in major IT projects has been woeful, as was confirmed by the latest Public Accounts Committee report. For future reference, will the Secretary of State explain why this major IT programme was imposed from the top, rather than being user led?

Andy Burnham: It was both. There was a clear drive to improve IT across the NHS, and I make no apology for that. To support the reform in the NHS that this Government wanted to see, we needed a better IT system that reflected a national health service, and could be interoperable across the huge NHS system. Choose and book has facilitated the policy of giving patients choice, and I have mentioned the GP2GP system in which whole patient records can be transferred electronically. That will soon support the abolition of practice boundaries, so that people can have a full choice of GP. We are supporting reform in the national health service, but we have listened at all times to the voices of the clinicians. That is why they have come out today and strongly supported the system.

Mr. Gordon Prentice (Pendle) (Lab): A quarter of all prescriptions go to pharmacies electronically; I think that that involves about 155 million prescriptions. How will my Friend's statement today affect the future of the electronic prescription service?

Andy Burnham: My hon. Friend is right to focus on the potential benefit of electronic prescribing. In my view, it could be further developed. He cites a figure for electronic transfer between GP surgeries and pharmacies, and I think that there is scope for further progress so that we could move to a paperless system for prescriptions. I will give him an update in due course, but this is an important area that is working. As I said in my statement, where the system is working, we will press on and ensure that we derive full benefits for the NHS front line.

Dr. Richard Taylor (Wyre Forest) (Ind): If there is any further delay in the summary care record, will the Secretary of State look at the work being done by Coventry university and the City university, London? They are producing a most exciting, cheap, simple, personalised smartcard with an extendable memory stick, which could solve most of the problems of the summary care record.

Andy Burnham: I can give the hon. Gentleman an assurance that I will take a look at that particular system. As I said to the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) a few moments ago, as we hear of good practice around the system and as developments in technology make it possible for new developments to be considered, it is always right for us to reflect on them to see whether we can improve the system. Knowing the hon. Gentleman as I do, I suspect that that initiative has the strong endorsement of clinicians and has been led by clinicians, so I give him the assurance that I will take a further look at it.

[Andy Burnham]

Rob Marris (Wolverhampton, South-West) (Lab): Of the NHS IT programme, the Secretary of State said earlier today in the House that the Government would "only pay once it has been received and is operational". As a measure of the proportion of the NHS IT programme that is operational, will the Secretary of State tell the House what percentage of the cost has been paid by the NHS so far?

Andy Burnham: I have a precise figure, but it is not in front of me right now. I can tell my hon. Friend, from memory, that I believe that about 40 to 50 per cent. has been paid out so far. While the overall contract value has not changed, with this contract we pay only as we receive the benefits. I will come back to my hon. Friend with the precise figures. As of today, however, we are making clear our intention to make £600 million savings from the overall contract value, which will be achieved by paring back elements of the system that we do not believe are any longer necessary.

Mr. David Jones (Clwyd, West) (Con): Will the Secretary of State please say what the effects of the proposed cuts will be on the interoperability of the English and Welsh NHS IT systems? This has already been a cause of concern to, among others, the BMA in Wales.

Andy Burnham: I am afraid that I will have to reply later to the hon. Gentleman about whether the changes that we are announcing today will have any impact on hospital administration in Wales, but I give him an assurance that I will come back to him on that subject.

Mr. David Evennett (Bexleyheath and Crayford) (Con): We all listened with interest to the Secretary of State's excuses, and with some disbelief to his comments. However, can he advise us whether the taxpayer is likely to face any contractual penalties after his statement today?

Andy Burnham: We have relationships with the commercial sector here, and as I said in my statement, some are commercially sensitive. We want to deliver a successful system, while also recognising that the companies involved have contractual commitments. We are working through those issues; that is why I gave a broad update on the discussions. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman would accept that I cannot go into much more detail. Let me make one further point: this is about delivering a system that is affordable, but also does a good job. We are not going to do it on the cheap, as the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley) suggests. I fear that the proposal to hand over the job to Google or Microsoft, or whoever else the Opposition have in mind, would simply not do a secure job for the NHS. If the hon. Gentleman wanted to do things on the cheap, I think that he would pay the price later.

Mr. Peter Bone (Wellingborough) (Con): It is absolutely unbelievable that the Secretary of State can come to this House without knowledge of the contingent liability to the NHS resulting from the cancellation of the contracts. Will he please say now what the contingent liability is, and stop dodging the question?

Andy Burnham: That is not what I said; perhaps the hon. Gentleman was not listening or paying attention. We have a contractual commitment and, as I said to his hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) a moment ago, the discussions are commercially sensitive. I am afraid that I am not going to go into those details on the Floor of the House today, although if I can provide the hon. Gentleman with any further details through correspondence, I will do so.

Smarter Government

3.53 pm

The Chief Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Liam Byrne): With permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement on "Putting the Frontline First: smarter government", a Command Paper that I am presenting to Parliament today.

This Government are very proud of Britain's public services and Britain's public servants: our doctors and nurses, who treat 1 million people every 36 hours; our police teams, who have brought down crime by a third; the teachers and support staff in our schools, who have helped record numbers of young people get record exam results this year; our job centre staff, who have helped 2 million people move off unemployment since last November; and, of course, our armed forces, serving with such distinction in Afghanistan and around the world.

We always knew that with the right backing, Britain's public servants could transform the quality and standards of public service in this country, and over the last decade they have—not by some happy accident, but by the work of careful design and determined investment. NHS investment has doubled, education investment is up by 60 per cent. and investment in public order and safety is up by 50 per cent. All that was achieved while over-delivering by 20 per cent. on our Gershon review savings of £26.5 billion in the three years to 2008.

Thanks to that effort, we have reached a point at which the investment gap that we inherited in 1997 has been fixed. We have not only reached but exceeded international averages for spending on education and health. We are at a turning point. In the decade ahead we can capitalise on the great strengths that we have created, and set out a new way of driving standards in public services up, while we drive the deficit down.

I am laying before the House today a Command Paper showing how the Government will set about that task in the years to come. It draws together more than 12 months' work from literally thousands of people across public life, the private sector, charities and voluntary groups. I particularly thank Sir Michael Bichard, Sir Tim Berners-Lee and Nigel Shadbolt, Martha Lane-Fox, our efficiency advisers Gerry Grimstone, Lord Carter of Coles, Martin Read and Martin Jay, and those from across the third sector who have advanced the relationship between Government and civic society.

Today's Command Paper summarises what we have learned from that work, but our starting point is a relentless focus on standards. We are ambitious for Britain's future: we know that we can do well in the years to come. However, we know that if Britain's families are to do well in the future, they will need first-class public services to support them. We will make first-class standards in public services not a privilege for the few but the right of all, by setting out—in health, education, policing and, in time, social care—new entitlements to high-quality public services, backed where appropriate by the force of law.

To help citizens to hold local services to account, we will revolutionise the free availability of comparative information on police efficiency, hospital costs, and Government and local authority spending. We will ensure that services, where they can, fit in with the demands of modern life by putting more services online, and we will redouble our efforts to persuade more people to use the internet. Today I can announce the provision of a further £30 million with the aim of getting 1 million more people online by 2012. We will free public data created using taxpayers' money, including Ordnance Survey mapping and boundary information. We will make it easier for civic society to contribute to public life by pressing ahead with a new social investment bank, and by testing social impact bonds.

Our second principle will be to free up the front line to innovate and collaborate by cutting back on ring-fenced budgets and national targets. I am therefore setting out today 10 steps that I, with the Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government, have drawn up to provide local councils with a range of trading, joint-venture and regulatory flexibilities. I believe that if we set in place strong rights to high standards and free up the front line to innovate, we can cut overhead costs at the centre.

We are already on track to deliver £30 billion of savings between 2008 and 2011, but today I am setting out steps to save £12 billion more, and in the pre-Budget report we will set out further difficult choices that will have to be made if we are to halve our deficit over four years.

First, we will reduce the costs of the senior civil service. I am announcing today that we will reduce senior civil service costs by 20 per cent. by 2012-13, and seek to move 10 per cent. of civil service posts that are currently in London and the south-east to other parts of the country in the medium term.

Secondly, Bill Cockburn, chair of the Senior Salaries Pay Review Body, will review senior pay across the whole of the public sector, reporting to Government in time for next year's Budget. In the meantime, I will personally review all proposals for salary offers above £150,000 set by Government.

Thirdly, we are publishing today plans drawn up by all Secretaries of State to increase the administrative efficiency for which they are accountable in human resources, IT, collaborative procurement and asset management. I am also publishing benchmarking information for all central Government Departments and major agencies, showing exactly where we will focus to deliver £9 billion of efficiency savings over the next few years. I am also today setting a goal of saving £1.3 billion by putting services online, halving the consultancy bill and reducing our marketing spend by a quarter.

Fourthly, I am announcing today the first results of a comprehensive review of arm's-length bodies, which will report by the time of the 2010 Budget. We will save £500 million a year from changes introduced by the review, and as an interim step we will abolish or rationalise 123 arm's-length bodies, subject to the necessary consultation and legislation.

Finally, I believe that, as part of this new future, the Government must either sell or transfer to different owners the things they no longer need to own. I am therefore publishing today an asset portfolio listing the state-owned assets that Government can commercialise over the medium term. It includes options for the future sale of the Tote, the student loan book, the Dartford crossing and the high-speed rail link, and potential alternative forms of ownership of British Waterways agreed by myself and the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs. Our policy will also include a new approach for testing where publicly owned assets should be transferred for use by the third sector.

[Mr. Liam Byrne]

The Government believe this country is both richer and fairer for the strength of our public services. We will never compromise on high standards, but neither will we ever compromise in our search for value for money. Today's Command Paper sets a new path for the future that draws on the strengths created through a decade's work, and I commend it to the House.

Mr. Philip Hammond (Runnymede and Weybridge) (Con): I am grateful to the Chief Secretary for letting me have a copy of his statement in advance—not that it, or the Prime Minister's speech this morning, tells us anything much that we have not heard before. The paper is a series of reheated announcements that underline Labour's failure over 12 years to get to grips with public service reform and to cut the waste and inefficiency that have been allowed to multiply.

We were told that all services would be available online, but Tony Blair pledged in 2000 that all services would be available online by 2005, and they were not. The Government tell us they will roll out a "tell us once" service for births and deaths, but they have already told us about "tell us once" three times. There is also the reannouncement of the sale of the Tote: that is a 1997 manifesto commitment that has been reannounced several times since, most recently about six weeks ago at that Dispatch Box. The story is the same for crime mapping, ring-fencing, NHS tariffs, e-auctions, and so on and so on. In addition to the reheated announcements, there is the usual sprinkling of stolen policies: the quango cull that the Leader of the Opposition announced in July this year, and the high-level sign-off for top public sector salaries.

There are also the pledges to undo some of the damage the Government themselves have done during their 12 years in office. The Prime Minister said in this morning's speech that the Government will cut marketing and communications spend by 25 per cent.—after more than quadrupling it since 1997. Since 2000, they have poured billions of pounds of taxpayers' money into unreformed public services, borrowing and spending like it was Monopoly money, and talking about efficiency but never delivering it.

That has happened not because the Government do not understand—the Prime Minister said in a speech to the Institute of Directors in 2001:

> "The efficiency we seek in the private sector we demand in the public sector...Government at every level—national, regional and local—must raise its game."

It is also not because they did not have good advice—tens of thousands of man-hours spent on reviews and report writing have identified tens of billions of pounds-worth of potential efficiencies. But the Government have not been able to translate that into real cashable savings. Gershon identified £21.5 billion-worth of savings, and while the Chief Secretary has just claimed some fantasy figure for delivered Gershon savings, the National Audit Office says the Government only delivered £3.5 billion in real, hard cashable saving. That is less than 0.1 per cent. of total public spending over the period in question.

Today, Sir Peter Gershon has joined our public services advisory board, along with Mr. Bernard Gray, the author of the defence procurement report whose conclusions were so damning that the Prime Minister tried to suppress it, and Dr. Martin Read, whom the Chief Secretary has just mentioned and who chaired the Government operational efficiency review. They will advise us as we develop our agenda for a truly radical, bottom-up reform of public service delivery, based on the principles of transparency, alignment of incentives, freedoms to innovate and support for change. They will help us to deliver a genuine culture change in Government and public services by ensuring that efficiency gain and productivity improvement become a central part of the day-to-day business of our public sector, not some alien imposition visited upon it whenever an election is approaching.

The truth is that our front-line public services can be protected for future generations only by genuine reforms—reforms that will close the productivity gap and ensure that those services are affordable for future generations. For 12 years, Labour has demonstrated that it can talk about efficiency but it cannot deliver. The Government's record speaks for itself. Between 1997 and 2007, according to the Office for National Statistics, public sector productivity fell by 3.4 per cent. while private service sector productivity grew by more than 20 per cent. That is a measure of the scale of Labour's failure on public sector efficiency. When the Government have failed so comprehensively for 12 years, why should anybody believe that they will succeed with this mishmash of reheated announcements and stolen clothes in the dying months of their rule?

The Government are ducking the hard questions. The Chancellor is talking about reducing spending while the Prime Minister is making new spending pledges at his party conference and the Schools Secretary and the Transport Secretary are telling us that their budgets will not be cut. Will the Chief Secretary confirm today that there will not be a departmental spending review before the Budget in the spring? Is that what the Chancellor of the Exchequer was telling us yesterday?

As the Chief Secretary has adopted a raft of our policy proposals, let us see whether he will match some of our pledges. Will he, for example, match our pledge to cut by one third the administrative cost of Whitehall bureaucracy and quangos during the lifetime of the next Parliament, saving £3 billion a year for the front line? Will he cap the biggest Whitehall pensions, as we have pledged to do, so that the taxpayer will not contribute any further to pensions that are already worth £50,000 or more? Will he give some clear purpose to these efficiency savings by matching our pledge to deliver real-terms spending increases year on year to the national health service, protecting our most important public service?

The Prime Minister said in his speech this morning that > "there will be no hiding place for Ministers or civil servants who fail to drive increasing efficiencies".

Let me tell him that there is no hiding place for a Prime Minister who has not only failed to deliver value for money in public spending, but been the roadblock to real reform for a decade. Today's offering is too little and, for the Prime Minister and his Government, it is too late.

Mr. Speaker: May I say for future reference that the response from the Opposition Front-Bench spokesman was longer than the statement itself, and we really do not want that to happen again?

Mr. Byrne: I shall be brief in my reply, Mr. Speaker. That was an extraordinary response. The hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge (Mr. Hammond) claims that there has been no reform in public services. Crime down by a third is reform. He says that there is no reform, but exam results are 50 per cent. better for our young people. That is real reform. He says that there is no public service reform, but getting people in to hospital in four and half weeks instead of 18 months is real reform that the public care about.

The hon. Gentleman prayed in aid the NAO. The truth is that when the NAO considered the Gershon savings, it said:

"Projects across the Programme are making"

real

"improvements to the efficiency of public services."

It went on to say that all of the £26.5 billion savings met the most robust category in its conclusions. The hon. Gentleman went on to talk about productivity and tried to pray in aid some contributions from the ONS. Of course, the ONS said:

"These are experimental statistics and work continues to develop the measures."

I know that there is a taste for experimentation among some people on the hon. Gentleman's team. I hope, however, that it does not extend to the selective use of statistics.

The hon. Gentleman talks about our matching his plan to save £3 billion from Whitehall. We are saying that we will save £12 billion, not only from Whitehall but from the wider public sector, over the next three to four years. Of course, there are a few proposals that I have examined in drawing up these efficiency plans today. I could, for example, have set out proposals to scrap ID cards, which I was told by some quarters would save £2 billion. In fact, on closer inspection, it turns out that that would save no more than £50 million to £100 million. I was told that abolishing regional development agencies would save "a huge amount." It turns out on closer inspection that it would save merely £180 million. I was told that capping public service pensions at £50,000 would save hundreds of millions of pounds. In fact, it turns out that it would save but a small fraction of that. I was told that taking child credits away from families who earn more than £150,000 would save £400 million a year, but it turns out that it would save only £45 million a year. I was told that bringing forward changes to the retirement age could save £13 billion a year, but it would make no impact whatever on the deficit in the next Parliament.

The truth is that every one of those proposals was put forward by the Conservatives, but it turns out that none of them was worth the paper it was written on. No wonder the hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge has had to hire a group of Government advisers to answer an SOS—stand up our savings—from the shadow Chancellor, and no wonder he told us this morning that the front line would suffer under the Conservatives, because he has nothing else to pay for the £10 billion-worth of tax cuts that he has promised to people who are rich enough not to need them.

Dr. Vincent Cable (Twickenham) (LD): Much of the statement is uncontroversial and, indeed, blindingly obvious. Let me start with the efficiency savings. Is not there a basic problem with announced efficiency savings in Government? If they knew that there was inefficiency, why had not they dealt with it already? To what extent is this new?

Let me pick up on a particular item to clarify what the Government are doing. They say that they are cutting the consultancy budget by 50 per cent., but 50 per cent. of how much? What is their consultancy budget? There are estimates that it could be in the order of £20 billion. We discovered on Friday that they are paying more than £100 million a year for consultants who are advising on the bail-out of the banks alone, so what is the consultancy budget that is now being cut by half?

The Chief Secretary said that he is personally going to vet pay of more than £150,000 a year. He is going to be a very busy man. How many people in the public sector are paid more than £150,000 a year, whose salary he will vet personally? Are we talking about GPs and dentists, heads of quangos and the dozens of people in the BBC who are paid more than the Prime Minister? Whom does he mean and how many of them are there? Are we talking about hundreds or thousands of people?

The Chief Secretary also suggested that he will save lots of money by reducing the number of targets for, and the amount of, monitoring of local government. That is admirable, but I understand that the Government currently spend £1 billion to £1.5 billion on various audit bodies, notably the Audit Commission, in overseeing local government. How much of that budget will be saved and how many officials who are employed in overseeing local government will no longer be required? If he is genuine about restoring autonomy to local government, why does not he consider ideas such as giving them significantly greater freedom over the business rate system?

Let me make a specific point. The Chief Secretary says that the Government are to give away, free of charge, data from the Met Office and the Ordnance Survey. That sounds straightforward, but those organisations survive by selling data, so if they have to give their data away for free, how will they function as organisations, especially now that the Government plan to privatise them? How can the Government privatise organisations that do not have any income?

Mr. Byrne: I am grateful for the hon. Gentleman's welcome for at least some of these measures. I think that there is a direction of travel in some of the reforms that Liberal Democrat Members will welcome, not least the move towards greater freedom and flexibility for local authorities. When he has had time to study the report in some depth, I think that he will welcome some of the flexibilities that we have talked about. On Wednesday, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor will announce further measures, which attempt to bring a degree more freedom from the regime of inspection and performance setting that has helped to drive up service standards over the past 10 years. We will be able to retire some of that regime in the years to come, and there will be significant savings as a result. It is right that many of the relevant reductions in targets should wait until the next comprehensive spending review, so that the plans that are drawn up reflect the resources that are provided.

[Mr. Byrne]

The hon. Gentleman asked some specific questions that I will try to answer. First, he asked about consultancy bills. My goal is to save about £512 million from the consultancy bill by 2011-12, by reducing it by 50 per cent. He asked about pay, and I reiterate that we have asked Bill Cockburn, the chair of the Senior Salaries Review Body, to draw up proposals on how to bring greater transparency to the system of setting senior sector pay and how to make sure that value-for-money bodies such as the Audit Commission and others are given a greater role in scrutinising those offers. The simple answer is that I believe that too many people are paid more than £150,000, and my goal is to exert downward pressure. That is partly why I say that we should cut the costs of, for example, the senior civil service by 20 per cent. in the next couple of years.

On data, we must get the balance right. Organisations such as Ordnance Survey can make a great deal of money by supporting specialist engineering and mapping companies with high-quality data. Ordnance Survey runs one of the best—if not the best—mapping services in the world. When there are opportunities to make available information such as low-resolution maps or boundary data, the public should be able to get hold of it free of charge.

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North) (Lab): Does the Chief Secretary agree that some of the biggest public expenditure is on late intervention and is the cost of failure—of prisons, magistrates courts, welfare benefits and so on? Does he therefore accept my welcome to the green shoots in the Green Paper, including the social investment wholesale bank—perhaps we can tidy up the names—and the social impact bonds? Those constitute early intervention and are cheaper and much more efficient because they ensure that society benefits from the consequences of success, rather than suffering those of failure.

Mr. Byrne: May I put on the record my personal thanks to my hon. Friend for his work in not only championing new approaches to early intervention, but bringing pressure to bear on finding innovative forms of social finance? Social impact bonds appear in today's Command Paper partly because of his work in lobbying for such change. In my authority of Birmingham, we have found that investment in early years can produce savings later in life. I think that Birmingham city council found that for every pound invested in early years, something like £4 could be saved in the criminal justice system later. Sometimes, different agencies from those responsible for early intervention reap the rewards of such intervention. Social impact bonds are a new way of bringing some of the incentives back into line. It is therefore right to test them out.

Mr. Michael Fallon (Sevenoaks) (Con): The Prime Minister said this morning that in health, schools, policing and social services, there had been

"excessive salaries and unjustified bonuses".

Why were they allowed?

Mr. Byrne: The hon. Gentleman knows that in the British administration a great deal of flexibility is given to, for example, local authorities. That is why it is right to look hard now at not only what constitutes the right level of pay for senior executives in different parts of the public sector, but the legislative changes that may be required to enable Ministers, when necessary, to exert downward pressure. I do not think that such legislative power is currently available in some parts of our public life, such as universities, further education colleges or local councils, but we have asked Bill Cockburn and his advisers to tell us a little more about that.

Geraldine Smith (Morecambe and Lunesdale) (Lab): I am delighted that my right hon. Friend is looking to scrap or rationalise 123 quangos for starters—not before time. One chief executive of a quango told me that he was on £1,000 a day. That is disgraceful when there are public sector workers at the bottom who are paid £10,000 a year. We need to protect them and keep them in work to keep the economy going, and we need to ensure that we get rid of some of the fat cats.

Mr. Byrne: There are obviously some complicated parts of public administration in this country. For example, the health service is a big and important organisation, which spends somewhere north of £90 billion a year. We want first-class people running such organisations. However, in such times, it is incumbent on senior leaders in public life to show leadership on pay. The Government have therefore said to the pay review bodies that we expect a pay freeze for the senior civil service, and pay awards of no more than zero to 1 per cent. for civil servants more generally.

Justine Greening (Putney) (Con): The Chief Secretary has talked about reducing senior civil service costs by 20 per cent. by 2012-13. What has he planned for redundancy costs? Will redundancy be voluntary or involuntary?

Mr. Byrne: Obviously, we hope to achieve most of our cost savings through voluntary redundancy, natural wastage and so on, but I certainly cannot stand here today and rule out the possibility of compulsory redundancy. The hon. Lady will know that we introduced reforms last week to the compensation arrangements available to civil servants, which are projected to save something like half a billion pounds over the next couple of years.

Andrew Mackinlay (Thurrock) (Lab): The Chief Secretary will remember—and you will, too, Mr. Speaker—that about six weeks ago, I asked him about this crackpot proposal to privatise the Thurrock-Dartford crossing. I asked how it was going to be done and what his brief said, and he held up a blank sheet of paper. He will understand why I am irritated. What is the answer to my question of six weeks ago, and how is he going to do it, bearing in mind that tolling is only allowed under the European directive as a mechanism against congestion? It is not a cash register for the Treasury. How does he propose to sell this and offer the purchaser some return? I just do not understand it; it is crackpot—daft.

Mr. Byrne: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that question.

Andrew Mackinlay: What is the answer?

Mr. Byrne: The answer is that there is no European or other legal impediment to the proposal that we have introduced for the future of the Dartford crossing. My hon. Friend will know that it remains within the Government's power to regulate tolls on the crossing.

Sir Patrick Cormack (South Staffordshire) (Con): Will the Chief Secretary do me a very great favour? Will he read an account of Britain after 12 years of Labour rule written in plain, simple English, shorn of the jargon with which his statement was laden? It is "Bog-Standard Britain" by Mr. Quentin Letts.

Mr. Byrne: Sometimes I am forced to read the words of Quentin Letts, but I tend to avoid it when I can.

Andrew Miller (Ellesmere Port and Neston) (Lab): Will my right hon. Friend reflect on the exchange that took place earlier today about disability living allowance, and look at this as an opportunity to re-examine business processes and why we do things in a particular way? There are lots of areas in which we can make significant productivity gains by making delivery more customer-focused. DLA is a classic example, but the relationship between, for example the Department for Work and Pensions and housing benefit is another, and there are many others in which a more customer-focused approach would benefit not only the customer but the Treasury, too.

Mr. Byrne: My hon. Friend is right and, as I said, I am particularly grateful to Sir Michael Bichard and public servants across 65 local authorities and a number of constabularies and primary care trusts who are looking at how we can bring together the administrative services run by central and local government to eradicate exactly the kind of inefficiency to which my hon. Friend points. We will have more to say about how we take those findings forward in the Budget next year.

Stewart Hosie (Dundee, East) (SNP): I thank the Minister, both for the statement and for giving us early sight of it. Some of the measures are sensible, not least the ending of ring-fencing for council budgets. The Scottish Government have already done that. At its heart, though, this is £12 billion of additional cuts, some beginning next year, over and above the 10 years of austerity promised by Lord Mandelson. Given that even the CBI has argued that additional fiscal tightening should not take place until 2011-12, lest it risk a fragile recovery, what steps has the Minister taken to ensure that the cuts in the document do not lead to the weakening of recovery from recession?

Mr. Byrne: If we want to grow our economy in the years to come, we have to make sure that we have strong public services in this country that stand behind families who want to get on in life. The hon. Gentleman knows that if we want to raise standards in public services at the same time as halving our deficit, we must make sure that our economy grows and that we make the right decisions on public spending and on tax. That is a presentation that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor will make to the House on Wednesday, but the hon. Gentleman will surely admit that if we want to raise standards and investment in front-line services, it is right to look for inefficiencies that we can cut at the centre of government, and today's plan sets out a way to do that.

Mr. Brian Jenkins (Tamworth) (Lab): I am very pleased that my right hon. Friend has decided to keep standards at the top of his agenda and to axe many of the targets and inspectorates that maintain those standards, but can he elaborate on how he expects consumers of monopoly suppliers who know no other standards to raise those standards? What role does he see for professional external scrutinisers in maintaining or raising standards?

Mr. Byrne: There are two ways in which we can exert greater popular pressure to push up standards in front-line services. The first thing that we can do is set out a range of guarantees to high-quality public services. That means, for example, the right to see a cancer specialist within two weeks if a specialist is worried that a patient has cancer, the right to a good local police team and the right to one-to-one tuition for a child who is falling behind at school. With those rights in place, it is much easier to judge whether public services are delivering for consumers. That is why, in today's Command Paper, we have set out steps to free up the kind of comparative information that allows people to see how services in their area are doing compared with others, and whether they are performing in a more efficient way than others.

Mr. Rob Wilson (Reading, East) (Con): Neither in the statement nor in the earlier urgent question has the Minister made it clear how much he will save on the NHS supercomputer. The NAO says that the Government have spent £3.6 billion already. Can he confirm that that figure from the NAO is accurate?

Mr. Byrne: I would need to check the date of the figure that was published by the NAO. The basic point is that, at a time when we are trying to drive standards up and the deficit down, in some parts of Government we will have to make difficult decisions about whether programmes that are in place are contributing enough to front-line care or whether they can be put off. There will often be difficult decisions. The decisions that we have set out in the Command Paper are difficult but doable.

Mr. Gordon Prentice (Pendle) (Lab): Will not the smarter state end up looking very stupid if we outsource, sell off or transfer to the private sector and then are ripped off down the line? Are there any functions from which the Government intend to withdraw entirely? Does my right hon. Friend worry, as I do, about the morale of those working in a public sector that is constantly denigrated and told that it is useless?

Mr. Byrne: I do not have quite the same apoplectic vision of public service reform as my hon. Friend. Sometimes there are efficiencies to be had through outsourcing certain services, particularly in finance, IT and so on. I make no apology for that. The prospectus that we set out this afternoon will be enthusiastically received by front-line public servants, not least because of its promise of greater freedom to innovate and do things in a different way locally.

Mr. Peter Bone (Wellingborough) (Con): I do not know whether the Chief Secretary has been watching too much of "Bargain Hunt", but it is clear that the Government are keen on selling off the family silver.

[Mr. Peter Bone]

His listed a raft of things that would be sold off, but he did not mention Urenco. Will that still be sold off?

Mr. Byrne: We will certainly explore options for commercialising our stakeholding in Urenco, yes.

Rob Marris (Wolverhampton, South-West) (Lab): I welcome my right hon. Friend's statement, but I urge him to go a little further in respect of quangos. He suggests saving only £500 million by abolishing or rationalising 123 of them. May I ask him to give me an early Christmas present—less quango for Marris?

Mr. Byrne: I think I can promise that. The final report from the review of arm's length bodies will be published at the Budget next year. The 123 arm's length bodies that I set out this afternoon are merely an interim step.

Point of Order

4.29 pm

Mr. Philip Hammond (Runnymede and Weybridge) (Con): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. During his remarks in response to me earlier, the Chief Secretary referred to the Opposition hiring certain former Government advisers to advise them. Would the right hon. Gentleman like to take this opportunity to make it clear that he understands that no money is changing hands in any of these transactions, and that anyone who has made the decision to advise the Opposition has done so because he believes that that is in the best interests of this country?

Mr. Speaker: The Chief Secretary may offer a brief reply if he wishes, but he is not under any obligation.

The Chief Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Liam Byrne): I am happy to offer the clarification that that is my understanding. I spoke to Dr. Read last night and he made that point to me very clearly.

Mr. Speaker: I am grateful.

Energy Bill

Second Reading

4.30 pm

The Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change (Edward Miliband): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

Today is an appropriate day to discuss the Energy Bill—at the opening of the Copenhagen conference and before the ministerial meetings that will take place in its second week. Those talks are an essential part of the context of the Bill that we are debating, and in the past two weeks we have seen signs of progress from China, India and the United States. They have all put targets on the table, and we are determined to use our influence to get the best agreement that we can, consistent with the science. We are determined also to show the maximum ambition in our own plans, and that explains the Bill that we have brought before the House.

Given recent events, I should also like to say that we are here to debate a Bill that is driven in large part by the science of climate change. It is important to take this opportunity to restate briefly the case on the science, because it underlies today's debate. The science is not from politicians, but from scientists: the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, whose work is based on 4,000 experts; the national academies of science of the G8 developed countries and the five leading developing countries; and, here at home, the Met Office, the Natural Environment Research Council and the Royal Society. All those organisations are clear that the science is unambiguous—that climate change is real and man-made.

Of course the science is not static, but we must not somehow suggest that robust and near universally accepted science is merely of equal validity to the views of a very small minority of people, many of whom are not scientists. Importantly, one chain of e-mails does not undo decades of climate science, and particular responsibility lies with Members of this House and, indeed, of the other place not to seek to sow doubt or to replace the view of the science with their prejudices.

Mr. Robert Goodwill (Scarborough and Whitby) (Con): Does the Minister share my concern that the media—some of the tabloid press, in particular—choose deliberately to misrepresent the science just to sell a few more papers?

Edward Miliband: I actually think that, by and large, members of the press, including the tabloid press, have during this year embraced the idea of climate change and the need to tackle it. However, the hon. Gentleman makes an important point: in this process, we rely partly on the press to make clear the burden of evidence and views and where they lie, and, indeed, the balance of views and where they lie. Anything that the press can do to help us to make that case is very important, because we are debating difficult decisions—and nobody should be under any illusion that they are not difficult. If people come away with the impression that the science is somehow not settled, or that there is an easy way out, we will face difficulties.

Nigel Griffiths (Edinburgh, South) (Lab): Does my right hon. Friend accept that the validity of the arguments and the scientific case for the existence of climate change is completely undermined by people such as Lord Lawson and the Conservative M[illegible]ichard Helmer; and, that the Conservatives must do more to ensure that they align themselves with our policies and the policies that the British public want?

Edward Miliband: The truth is that we need as much of a consensus as we can get on these issues—from all parts of the House. That is very important, and that is why I emphasise the importance of us all showing responsibility, rather than setting ourselves up as scientists and somehow substituting for the views of the science. It is important that politicians act on the basis of the science, and that is what we seek to do.

Justine Greening (Putney) (Con): The right hon. Gentleman talks about acting on the evidence of the science, but he knows that in the case of Heathrow airport, involving an important decision that will affect the environment, the only costed emissions were those of outgoing flights, not of incoming ones. How can he be serious about taking good decisions if his own Department does not get its maths right?

Edward Miliband: The hon. Lady has a long history of campaigning on this issue. I agree with her about the need to make decisions such as that on the third runway at Heathrow in the proper context. That is why we are the first Government in the world to say that we will stabilise aviation emissions at 2050 levels. Indeed, there will soon be a report from the independent Committee on Climate Change on that precise point.

Bob Spink (Castle Point) (Ind): The Select Committee on Science and Technology was in absolutely no doubt about the validity and strength of the case that climate change is happening and that it is the result of man's activity since the industrial revolution. Even if some of the science can be questioned, the consequences for the planet and mankind are so dire that the precautionary principle should be observed, and I congratulate the Government on taking that line.

Edward Miliband: The hon. Gentleman is completely right. The precautionary principle was emphasised by the hon. Member for Bexhill and Battle (Gregory Barker) in a debate that we had a few weeks ago. It is right that we should follow the precautionary principle in this process; in a way, that is an important part of the argument. However, in emphasising the precautionary principle we must not give a sense—I know that the hon. Member for Castle Point (Bob Spink) is not doing this—that the science is not settled and that we would be better off being cautious. The science is clear and overwhelming, and the precautionary principle adds extra weight to that.

Dr. Brian Iddon (Bolton, South-East) (Lab): Whether one believes that emissions of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere produce climate change is a big argument, but does my right hon. Friend agree that there are two other important reasons why we should not be burning fossil fuels? First, we are acidifying the sea almost beyond the point of no return. Secondly—I speak passionately as a chemist—producing energy from carbon fuels is a very inefficient process, and we need those carbon fuels as larders of chemicals for the generations of the future, so it is a sin to burn them.

Edward Miliband: My hon. Friend speaks with great knowledge; indeed, much greater than mine. My chemistry is probably as bad as my brother's physics in terms of his performance at school. My hon. Friend is completely right about that point and about ocean acidification, which is a serious issue that lots of oceanographers and others are very concerned about.

Simon Hughes (North Southwark and Bermondsey) (LD): The Energy Secretary is clear that he is persuaded by the science and that the scientific evidence is overwhelming, which is the view of those on the Liberal Democrat Benches and on the Conservative Front Bench. Can he confirm that the logic of that is that the UK Government, this week and next, on their own and with the European Union, will go for the toughest, strongest, clearest binding agreement so that we can not only follow the precautionary principle but remember that we are going in to bat for a world where countries such as Bangladesh and the Maldives have the chance of a future, not just countries such as ours which caused the bulk of the problem in the first place?

Edward Miliband: I think I can say yes to that intervention. I agree with the hon. Gentleman that we need the toughest and most ambitious agreement possible and the shortest track to a legally binding treaty.

Mr. Tobias Ellwood (Bournemouth, East) (Con): The right hon. Gentleman gave his maiden speech just after I gave mine; I congratulate him on his epic rise to fame on the Front Benches.

Taking up the issue of fossil fuels, we now know that nuclear capacity is running out and that we are running out of oil and gas. What have this Government done for the past 10 years? It is as though the Secretary of State is the boy scout who has turned up late for camp and finally realised that he was responsible for lighting the fire, so everybody will get very cold and angry. Have we not just had a wasted decade?

Edward Miliband: If we are talking about responsibility, I have to say that the alarmism that Opposition Front Benchers have engaged in on these issues is of no help at all. The answer to the hon. Gentleman is that we have very clear plans, as I will explain, on renewables, where we are now the leader in offshore wind, on nuclear power—opposed tooth and nail by the Opposition, whose leader said that it was a last resort—and on clean coal.

Mr. Mike Weir (Angus) (SNP): I very much agree with what the Secretary of State has said, but even if we get an agreement at Copenhagen, there is still the problem of having to explain to people what the figures actually mean. If we are talking about 80 per cent. reductions, that will mean massive changes in our economy. I am not convinced that the people of this country really understand what it means as yet.

Edward Miliband: I agree with the hon. Gentleman that, as I said at the weekend, there is a mountain to climb and a huge amount to do to explain to people the scale of the changes that we are making, such as 10,000 wind turbines between now and 2020, more nuclear power stations and the clean coal technology that I have talked about—and that is just in the energy sector. Those are big changes, and I will not pretend that they are not.

The central response to the challenge of the science must be for the Government to understand their role in making the low-carbon transition happen. The truth underlying the Bill is that markets left to their own devices do not put a price on carbon emissions and will not bring forward the investment and industrial policy that we need, nor will they provide the right energy mix for the future. Our low-carbon transition plan, which was published in the summer and widely welcomed, sets out sector by sector what needs to change to meet our commitment to a 34 per cent. reduction by 2020. I believe that we are the first country in the world to do that. It builds on the fact, which Opposition Members often forget, that we are one of the few countries to have met and exceeded our Kyoto targets, with greenhouse gas emissions 21 per cent. below 1990 levels.

Previous legislation, including the Climate Change Act 2008, provides us with many of the powers that we need. In the Bill, which is relatively short because of the length of the Session, we provide for legislation on three particular matters that are central to the task that we face. First, to clean up our energy supplies, it legislates for a levy to provide unprecedented investment in clean coal. Secondly, to improve the deal for consumers, it strengthens the power of the regulator and ensures that it must be proactive for the consumer. Thirdly, to deliver fairness, we are introducing compulsory cut-price energy for the most vulnerable customers.

Mr. Michael Clapham (Barnsley, West and Penistone) (Lab): Does my right hon. Friend agree that carbon capture and storage is important for the UK, because it will give flexibility to the energy mix, but even more important for the world? Exporting post-combustion technology will allow the bolt-on application that will help to reduce carbon dioxide throughout the world and help us to reach the 2050 targets?

Edward Miliband: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. We have said that there will be up to four carbon capture and storage projects, up to two of which will be post-combustion and up to two pre-combustion. That is not just for domestic reasons but for the international reasons that he mentions.

My hon. Friend's comments take me to one of the central purposes of the Bill, which is to provide for a levy for clean coal technology. In total, the new levy will provide up to £9.5 billion over the coming two decades. It is fair to say that in a world of tight resources, it must be right to provide a dedicated stream of funding for clean coal and CCS. It is the largest single investment in CCS by any country in the world, including the United States. Let me be clear about the timetable, which has been raised with us: if the measure is passed, the new levy will come into force in 2011. Next year, before its introduction, we will launch a competition for the up to three additional projects that will benefit from it, alongside the current competition. We need to move quickly on CCS, that is what we will do, in support of our central aim to demonstrate CCS and make it ready for widespread deployment by 2020.

The importance of that is that it is right not just for our environment but for our economy. As many hon. Members know, the CCS industry could provide Britain with up to 60,000 jobs by 2030. Furthermore, CCS can be good for our long-term energy security, as my hon. Friend has pointed out on a number of occasions, because it will give us greater diversity in our energy sources. As we develop it and make it viable, there will be future steps to ensure that it can be applied to gas-fired power stations as well.

Mr. John Grogan (Selby) (Lab): The Secretary of State mentions consumers, so is there not now a compelling case for him to use his powers to refer the big six energy companies and the relationship between consumers and wholesale prices to the Competition Commission—that is supported by Consumer Focus, the statutory consumer body—given that the commission alone has the powers to break down barriers to entry to the market and that the enhanced powers for Ofgem in the Bill will not come fully into effect until 2011?

Edward Miliband: My hon. Friend has thought deeply about this issue and we have discussed it. The Competition Commission remains a potential last resort, which I still consider it to be. Let me explain why. For a Competition Commission inquiry, we are looking at one to two years, and further remedies will take longer. The commission looked into the liquefied petroleum gas market, but it was five years between the initial investigation and the final remedies being introduced—not that I hold the commission responsible for that.

However, the intent behind my hon. Friend's question is right in the sense that we have cause for concern, including about what Ofgem has shown today, but the Government need to think about a policy response, and we have work going on around the road map for low carbon that will be published in the spring. It is better to look at policy options—Ofgem will indeed have a report out early in the new year—rather than at a lengthy Competition Commission investigation.

Sir Robert Smith (West Aberdeenshire and Kincardine) (LD): The Secretary of State mentioned in passing that CCS would be rolled out to gas-fired power stations as well. Nothing in the Bill does that, so how will that step be taken?

Edward Miliband: I think the urgency is to make coal carbon capture work—CCS for gas is farther down the road. We know that coal-fired power stations have approximately double the emissions of gas-fired power stations. The North sea industry, for which the hon. Gentleman campaigns vigorously, can play a crucial role in that area of CCS—indeed, I enjoyed a recent visit to Aberdeen.

That takes me to the second part of my remarks, which is about the consumer. I welcome the fact that in the past year, we have seen an improvement in certain areas; for example, for prepayment retail customers, which has long been campaigned for by hon. Members. A year ago, people on prepayment meters paid £41 more for their energy than standard credit customers; today, that differential has been effectively eliminated.

However, there is a lot further to go, as I said in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Selby (Mr. Grogan), and the Bill provides for three important changes in regulation. Central to the Bill is reforming the duties of Ofgem. It is wrong to think that competition alone can protect the consumer, so the Bill makes it clear that Ofgem must use all the measures at its disposal, not just competition. It is wrong that generating companies can unfairly exploit market power to overcharge consumers, so we are responding to a request—such a request was turned down some years ago by the Competition Commission—to provide Ofgem with new sanctions against market power exploitation in the generation market. It is also wrong that companies can escape penalty if abuse is not discovered for more than a year. To ensure that the enforcement regime provides an effective deterrent, the Bill extends the time limit within which Ofgem can impose penalties for licence breaches from 12 months to five years. That suite of new powers significantly strengthens the powers of the regulator to ensure that the costs of energy are fairer.

Mr. David Heathcoat-Amory (Wells) (Con): As the Secretary of State is going to change Ofgem's powers and duties, has he considered doing so in relation to new grid transmission lines? He will be aware of a new proposal by National Grid for a high-voltage line across the Somerset levels. Only two options have been proposed, but a sub-marine option up the Bristol channel was excluded even before consultation began. If he is considering making changes, will he put additional obligations on National Grid to consider other options for that type of environmental project?

Edward Miliband: The right hon. Gentleman raises a local issue that is of some importance, but I confess that I do not know the details. On the question of grid access, which is a significant and wider problem, he will perhaps be aware that I exercise powers—under the last Energy Bill we had, in the summer—to set the terms of grid access, which has been a perennial problem in relation to renewables. We pledge that that process will be completed by the summer of 2010, and we are on track to do that. On the local issue, he may wish to write to me or one of my colleagues and we will look into it.

Miss Julie Kirkbride (Bromsgrove) (Con): The Secretary of State is right to say that there are some important issues connected with being fair to consumers given some of the monopolistic powers of the energy generators. Why has he rejected the suggestion of a legal requirement for gas storage, as is the case in other European countries? Some people believe that that allows those countries' markets to behave in a fairer way towards consumers, whereas our market, which has such a limited supply of gas storage, has enabled some of the suppliers to behave poorly.

Edward Miliband: We do need more gas storage, and the hon. Lady, as a member of the Select Committee, has expertise in these matters. The reason we are worried about the proposal that she recommends—we will shortly respond to the recommendations of the Wicks review, which looked at some of these issues—is the danger that it could take the pressure off the companies in terms of what they need to do to build more gas storage. If we substitute our judgment in these matters for their judgment about what is necessary, the danger is that we increase costs to consumers and inhibit future plans for gas storage.

[Edward Miliband]

The third issue is the question of vulnerable consumers, which is very important to hon. Members. As well as strengthening general powers of regulation, the Energy Bill will do more for vulnerable consumers. We need to help those most in need through higher incomes, energy efficiency and prices. That is why we have introduced and increased the winter fuel payment and brought in higher cold weather payments. Since 2002, 6 million homes have received loft or cavity wall insulation, and we are on the way to loft and cavity wall insulation for all houses where it can work by 2015. But we need to go further. Today we are announcing pay-as-you-save pilots in five parts of the country to test out a comprehensive, whole-house approach to energy efficiency, supported by finance, as is necessary to make it happen. This is on the way to whole-house refurbishment, beyond loft and cavity wall improvements, for 7 million homes by 2020 and for all by 2030. This will help save money for consumers.

But we also need action on tariffs. The current voluntary agreement on social assistance with energy companies has already helped more than 1 million customer accounts. However, the powers in the Bill will mean that rather than a voluntary agreement, there is a compulsory money-off energy deal for vulnerable customers. We will increase the total amount of help, up from the level of £150 million in the final year of the current voluntary agreement. We want the new system to ensure that older, poorer pensioners in particular receive assistance with their energy bills and we will set out more detailed plans in the coming weeks.

John Robertson (Glasgow, North-West) (Lab): How will that scheme be paid for? Will it be the taxpayer who ultimately pays or will the companies be expected to use some of their profits to pay for it?

Edward Miliband: As for many of these levies, the cost will be spread across other bill payers. Alongside that, we need the tough regulation that I am talking about, which bears down on prices as much as possible. It is right that we take action to help the most vulnerable consumers in our society, and a voluntary agreement is inadequate in the current circumstances. We will have more to say about that in the coming weeks.

Several hon. Members rose—

Edward Miliband: I have been generous in giving way, but I will give way to the Chair of the Select Committee.

Paddy Tipping (Sherwood) (Lab): I welcome the announcement about mandatory social tariffs. The Secretary of State said that the poorest pensioners will benefit, but will he look at the case of people with long-term chronic illnesses and, in particular, the campaign run by Macmillan for people with cancer?

Edward Miliband: My hon. Friend asks about the debate that my hon. Friend the Minister of State is looking forward to in Committee about the groups that should be helped by the social tariffs. There are lots of strong cases to be made, but the point is that there is a balance to be struck. Because the costs are spread across all consumers, as I said in response to an earlier intervention, we need to strike the right balance between the groups that are helped and how targeted the measures are.

Nick Ainger (Carmarthen, West and South Pembrokeshire) (Lab): My hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Paddy Tipping) referred to the sectors that are not covered by the social tariff. My right hon. Friend said that the issue would be debated in Committee, but would he like to comment now on the fact that although approximately 4 million-plus consumers are not on the gas network, but are instead dependent on liquefied petroleum gas and heating oil, they do not qualify for any social tariff? That is a genuine issue.

Edward Miliband: That is something that many hon. Members have campaigned on. I refer to my earlier answer. There was a Competition Commission inquiry into that issue which lasted five years and was designed to bring some relief. That is a warning to us all as we advocate a Competition Commission response to other energy issues. We are looking at measures to help those groups of consumers through Warm Front and other schemes, although I recognise the case that my hon. Friend makes.

As I approach the end of my speech, let me say, as I always say on these occasions, that we want as much of an all-party consensus as possible. Unfortunately, we have no clarity about where those on the Conservative Opposition Front Bench stand on the measures. When we debated the Gracious Speech, I posed five questions to the hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells (Greg Clark), including about the Bill, but I am afraid that he gave satisfactory answers to none of them. However, I am a fair-minded person and I believe in second chances, even for members of the Conservative party—indeed, he was not always a member of the Conservative party, so perhaps he deserves a special offer.

Today the hon. Gentleman gets the chance of a resit on the questions that I asked him previously. I shall narrow those questions down, but if he is to show that the Conservative party offers more than greenwash on such matters, he must show that he can answer some basic questions. First, does he support the CCS levy that we have put forward? We say that it will provide unprecedented investment in clean coal. He says that he will use money that is already accounted for in the Government's tax and spending plans. He says that revenues from the EU emissions trading scheme can get him 5 GW of new coal, but, as we might expect, that is a policy about image and not substance, and it would damage our ability to tackle climate change.

Secondly, the hon. Gentleman needs to answer the question that was posed brilliantly by my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Emily Thornberry) last time about his £150 billion scheme for energy efficiency. He says that it will cost no public money, whereas his hon. Friend, the hon. Member for Wealden (Charles Hendry) has said—[Interruption.] I know that the Opposition do not like to hear about their own policies, but they should be able to answer some basic questions. The hon. Gentleman said:

"The policy should be carried out and supported by loan guarantees from the Government to ensure that the energy companies can do it. That is how the task is done elsewhere."—[Official Report, Third Delegated Legislation Committee, 13 July 2009; c. 9.]

It would be good to hear today how those loan guarantees will be paid for, because the hon. Gentleman's colleague has said that loan guarantees are required.

Thirdly, there is the wider question of Europe, which I also posed last time. Frankly, again we see the Opposition hanging round with the wrong crowd in Europe.

Mr. Ellwood: Read out the list then.

Edward Miliband: I can read out the list if the hon. Gentleman—[Interruption.] He says that he is getting bored with it, but it is very relevant because action in Europe is essential to the Bill and to tackling climate change, yet the majority of the Conservative party's European partners voted against the motion that was put forward in last week's Copenhagen debate.

Martin Horwood (Cheltenham) (LD): On the subject of supporting European initiatives on energy, do the Government support the European super-grid yet?

Edward Miliband: We do support the European super-grid, which we think is an important idea.

We deserve answers from the Opposition today, not just the usual hot air. They need to come forward with some genuine policies rather than just image. Tackling climate change, protecting our energy security and protecting consumers all require significant change. The Energy Bill is key to making those changes and it deserves the support of all Members. I commend it to the House.

5 pm

Greg Clark (Tunbridge Wells) (Con): I have respect for the Secretary of State but I have to say that, with every speech that he makes, he sounds more like a member of the Opposition than a Secretary of State. He seems to be practising. The decisions on climate change and energy policy are so far reaching that the rest of the country looks to us to establish some common ground and speed things up, rather than make petty points. I will answer all the questions that he asked—I have no problem with that—but anyone looking at the Bill cannot help but be disappointed at this missed opportunity.

This is an anaemic Bill that lacks energy, even though it calls itself an Energy Bill. The Secretary of State has had a year in post in which to think about the issues and to reflect on and bring forward legislation. Who knows what will happen after the election? He might still be in post, he might be in a different post, or he might be in opposition. This was therefore perhaps his one and only opportunity to put on the statute book a Bill that could have lived up to the ideals that he no doubt shares, and that could have made a difference and provided a legacy of which he could be proud. The problems that we face are mountainous, and we deserve boldness in response.

I do not want to cast blame at this stage; there will be other occasions on which we can do that. The Secretary of State and I came into the House at the same time and, whatever his contribution might have been to our national economic success when he was chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, he was not in charge of energy policy at the time, so we cannot hold him personally responsible for that.

We can, however, agree on what the problems are. There are five in particular. We are facing power cuts and an energy crunch by 2017—[Interruption.] The Secretary of State says that that is rubbish, but he wrote an article entitled "We must work together to keep the lights on". Why would he write such a thing if he did not think that there was a risk of that happening?

Mr. Ellwood: Labour's lights.

Greg Clark: My hon. Friend is correct. In that article, the Secretary of State said that we needed to work together to keep the lights on. Great! I agree, but where are the measures to do that in the Bill? There is not one single such measure.

Miss Kirkbride: As part of the evidence that my hon. Friend is putting forward to the Secretary of State, he might refer to that given to the Select Committee last week by Alistair Buchanan, the chief executive of Ofgem, who clearly described the worrying scenario of the lights going off in the middle of the next decade. He is the man in charge of this policy.

Greg Clark: My hon. Friend is quite right. I am surprised that the Secretary of State has not taken that evidence into account. In fact, Mr. Buchanan went on to say:

> "The headline fact is that Britain is the single most exposed country among the big players in Europe".

That is what the Secretary of State's regulator says. I thought that this problem was something on which we could agree, and that the Bill might contain measures to solve it, yet it contains none.

The second threat was mentioned earlier. The fact is that during the years ahead we will rely more and more on imported gas. For understandable reasons, North sea oil and gas supplies have peaked and are in decline. Other countries facing this situation have adequate storage capacity. The French have 120 days' supply and the Germans have 99 days, yet we have only 15 days. Where is the proposal in the Bill to increase our level of gas storage?

My hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Miss Kirkbride) asked the Secretary of State a question on storage, and he gave a completely incoherent answer. He said that to advance the proposition that we should have the kind of storage on which other countries insist would somehow put off companies from investing. I do not understand what he meant by that. Perhaps the Minister of State will make a better job of explaining it when she winds up the debate.

Another problem is our pitiful progress on renewables. I know that the Secretary of State believes in renewables, as do I, and we want to accelerate progress. We agree that wind farms and other renewables projects tend to get bogged down in acrimonious planning disputes. He thinks that we should have more renewables projects, and so do I, but his approach is to go round the country shouting at people for opposing wind farms, like Lady Catherine de Bourgh visiting a disobedient relative to tick them off. But where is the policy in the Bill to provide incentives for local communities to take on such projects?

Mr. Jamie Reed (Copeland) (Lab): The hon. Gentleman correctly identifies the need for clarity in the planning system, and the need to speed up that system. Will he therefore support our proposals to do precisely that?

Greg Clark: We share a view about the need to speed up the planning process, and we think that the powers of the Infrastructure Planning Commission are absolutely right. It is also right that what are essentially national matters are decided nationally through planning statements. We have two points of difference, and we would amend the proposals on the IPC. First, we think such decisions should be accountable: the final decision should be taken by a Secretary of State who is accountable to this House rather than by some unelected official. We think it is right that people should be able to hold someone to account, but under our proposals there would be the same time limits and the same secretariat to advise, and the same process would apply, so it would be at least as quick, if not quicker, than under the Government's proposal.

Secondly, we think that the planning statements that are read out to the House—starting with the nuclear one, in which I know the hon. Member for Copeland (Mr. Reed) is as keenly interested as I am—are so important that they should be proofed against the inevitable legal challenges through judicial review that will be made against them. By subjecting them to a positive vote, the will of this House that the statements represent public policy will be expressed. If these statements are merely the utterances of a set of officials whose democratic legitimacy has not been established, that might be a problem that causes further delays. Therefore, we are at one with the hon. Gentleman in wanting these planning obstacles to be removed, and our amendments to the Government's proposals will speed that up.

Nigel Griffiths: Does the hon. Gentleman not acknowledge that his Front-Bench colleague, the right hon. and learned Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) opposes all onshore wind farms, which is rather typical of the Conservative position?

Greg Clark: Once again, I had hoped that we would seek to achieve unity on these issues. [Interruption.] When my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) made that comment, he said that he was speaking in a personal capacity and fully respected the Front-Bench viewpoint. The party in government goes around the country telling people that they are immoral to raise even a qualm about a wind farm in their area, but it has no policy response to it. If the Secretary of State has any policy suggestions, why do they not appear in this Energy Bill? The Bill is designed to solve a problem that the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Nigel Griffiths) seems to think exists—but the Secretary of State has no solution. [Interruption.]

Anne Main (St. Albans) (Con): My hon. Friend certainly does not need helping out; I think that the Minister does. The Bill is very much a missed opportunity for planning. There is to be no obligation placed on large pieces of infrastructure—in my constituency, for example, 3.5 million square feet of roof space is not being used in any way, shape or form—to incorporate green initiatives, green energy or any form of biodiversity to help support it.

Greg Clark: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. That is the point that I am making: this Bill is a colossal missed opportunity. If the Government think that there is a problem—we agree that there is—why do they not bring forward solutions? We have said that we need to cut people in to the benefits of renewable technologies, but nothing in the Bill addresses that.

Edward Miliband: I am astonished by the hon. Gentleman's response to my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, South (Nigel Griffiths). Since the hon. Gentleman aspires to be in government, how does he think a potential Government might function when the shadow Business Secretary, who is supposed to be an ally when it comes to wind farms, says:

"My view is that those few wild and open... spaces that we have left in Britain should not be used for wind turbines"?

Will that strengthen or weaken a potential Government when it comes to delivering on the renewables agenda?

Greg Clark: The right hon. Gentleman is speaking from his experience of the type of mind control that goes on in the Labour Government. We Conservatives are perfectly relaxed to have discussions about these things, knowing that we have strong policies that will make a difference. It is one reason why the country is getting a bit fed up with the government by pager that we get from Labour.

Martin Horwood rose—

Greg Clark: I will give way to the hon. Gentleman, but then make some progress.

Martin Horwood: I am now thoroughly confused about the Conservative Front-Bench position on wind farms. Would the hon. Gentleman have supported the private Member's Bill recently promoted by his hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Peter Luff), which sought to drive a coach and horses through wind power in this country? What is the Conservative position on such initiatives?

Greg Clark: As the hon. Gentleman well knows, private Members' Bills are not taken up by those on the Front Bench, but my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Peter Luff) made an interesting point, and if it is relevant, I am sure that it can be taken up in the discussions on renewable energy that the Minister will be promoting.

The Bill contains no strategy to deal with fuel poverty, one of the most pressing issues facing the country. Yes, it gives Ministers reserve powers to intervene, but where is the commitment to the only sustainable way in which to reduce fuel poverty—improved home energy efficiency? That is completely absent from the Bill, although it is surely beyond politics and is something that we should get on with. When people's fuel bills are £1,200 a year and more, and they can save money and carbon dioxide and create jobs by improving insulation, how can a serious Energy Bill possibly be completely silent on the issue? It beggars belief.

At a time when we need £200 billion of investment in new generating capacity, we know that that investment is not being made. That is partly because people are so uncertain about the policy environment, including the price of carbon, which has been low and very volatile. Where are the measures in the Bill providing for a more stable carbon pricing regime?

There is a better way. This was the moment at which the whole House could have united—as we did when we discussed the Climate Change Bill—in devising an ambitious, progressive solution to a crisis that commands all our attention. The Bill, however, contains nothing to close the energy gap, nothing to secure our gas supplies, nothing to accelerate renewables, nothing to improve energy efficiency at home, and nothing to address the price of carbon. What a disappointment it is. I am sorry if the Secretary of State has been distracted, whether by writing the manifesto or by the silly dividing-line nonsense that he tried earlier, when he should have been applying himself to turning his policy thoughts into proposals in the Bill.

Let me now deal with the Bill's contents, slight though they are. Given the scale of the challenges, it is a pitiful Bill, and not even a Bill that produces any action today. In the case of each of its three components—carbon capture and storage, Ofgem, and social tariffs—it merely enables Ministers to take powers that they cannot begin to implement without new statutory instruments in a new Parliament, probably following further consultations. Where is the ambition and the urgency that we require from the Secretary of State? Of the 37 clauses in the Bill, 34 are enabling, consequential or technical; only three make actual changes to the way in which things work at present.

Let me give my response to the three measures that the Bill does contain. It seems that we do agree on the importance of carbon capture and storage, but not on its urgency. Britain is ideally placed to be in the vanguard of the deployment of carbon capture and storage. We have depleted gas wells and saline aquifers in the North sea. We have along our coastline some of the industries that can lead the world in this regard: processing industries and marine engineering businesses. We have some of the best research establishments in the world, and we should be leading the world. It is important that we do, because carbon capture and storage corresponds to the experience curve: the sooner we get on with it, the more we can establish a lead. There is no great scientific breakthrough for which people are waiting.

Given that the present Prime Minister announced plans to support carbon capture and storage in his 2006 Budget, why did the Government wait a further 18 months before launching a competition to deliver a single carbon capture and storage plan? It took until November 2007 for them to do that. More than two years have passed, and we still do not have a winner. Meanwhile, the chance for Britain to lead the world is slipping away. China, Australia, Canada, Germany, Norway and Belgium have all used that delay to overtake Britain.

The Bill proposes a new levy on electricity to pay for carbon capture and storage. The first question to be asked is why we have had to wait for a Bill that cannot possibly receive Royal Assent until 2010 to pay for a scheme that was first mooted in 2006. If it needs this levy, why was it not in the 2006, the 2007 or the 2008 Queen's Speech? We believe that, when it came to payment, the first choice should have been the revenues from the European Union emissions trading scheme. The Secretary of State tells me that they have been spent, although they do not begin to accrue in this phase until 2012. If they have indeed been spent, there must be an assumption of the amount that they were going to raise. Let me ask the Secretary of State now what that estimate is, and where it appears in the Red Book. I am happy to give way to him. [Hon. Members: "No answer."] This is typical Labour party economics: the money has been spent on something that is completely invisible and the Secretary of State cannot even find it in the Red Book. No wonder we are in the mess we are in.

Mr. Jamie Reed rose—

Greg Clark: I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman. Perhaps he can provide an explanation for the missing billions of pounds.

Mr. Reed: In time. Can the hon. Gentleman confirm whether a future Conservative Government would support a Government subsidy for CCS, and if so, up to what level—and would he also make the same benefits available to the nuclear industry? The answer to that question will be listened to very keenly by international and domestic investors in this country.

Greg Clark: Of course we would support a subsidy for CCS; that is what we have been urging on the Government. The Secretary of State says he has spent the money, although he is unable to say how much he has spent or what it has been spent on. On nuclear, we have said that it is a mature technology, and should not be given a specific subsidy. I do not think there is any difference between us on that.

If the Secretary of State can convince us that the money has, indeed, been spent, it may be the case that the levy is what we will have to fall back on. I still do not think, however, that he can get away with saying that this money has been spent on something the Government cannot account for. [Interruption.] So far, it is impossible to tell what the impact of the levy will be, because, as the Secretary of State has just said from a sedentary position, he is merely proposing powers to charge a levy in the future.

If there were to be a levy, however, would that not offer the Secretary of State an opportunity to provide a clearer price for carbon, which is much needed? Why should suppliers of electricity from renewables, for example, have to pay a levy to support the capture of carbon when they do not generate any carbon dioxide in their production of electricity? Should not the "polluter pays" principle be followed, so that the levy is incurred in proportion to the CO_2 emissions generated by each supplier? The Secretary of State might like to consider that, since he has clearly not designed his levy properly yet.

Why are the Government restricting themselves to the same approach that they took in respect of the climate change levy: a stealth tax, which did not do what was described on the tin, as it were, because it had nothing at all to do with climate change? If the Government are serious about forbidding CO_2 emissions from new coal power stations, why do they not specify—as we have said we would—an emissions performance standard so that no coal-generating plant can be more polluting than the most efficient combined cycle gas turbine station? That must be a totem of their seriousness in this matter.

[Greg Clark]

If we are to have investment in CCS, in the hope that it will work and be demonstrated successfully, why will the Government not ensure that the pipelines for the demonstration plants are built oversize so that they can be made use of by future CCS plants, rather than be fully exhausted from day one?

Mr. David Anderson (Blaydon) (Lab): How much oversized should the pipelines be?

Greg Clark: They should be adequate for the potential in their area. The Secretary of State has talked about having clusters for CCS. It is possible to make an assessment of how many such future plants might be able to make use of the pipelines. It is wrong to spend public money on building pipelines that will be adequate only for the demonstration plant and then to have to repeat installation if the process is successful. That is a bonkers approach; it is a waste of public money.

Mr. Anderson: In Select Committee discussions it was said that, if this were a road, it would be either a B road or a motorway. They are hugely different. Has the hon. Gentleman costed his proposal?

Greg Clark: I am delighted that the hon. Gentleman is asking me questions that presuppose that I will be in office. I am saying, assuming that this project works and looking to the future, that it will be rather ridiculous if the Public Accounts Committee holds an inquiry in several years and asks why on earth the Secretary of State consented to spending public money on building a pipeline network that was not adequate for the coal plants that he hoped would be able to access it in future. That is a waste. Will the Secretary of State make clear the criteria for the clusters of CCS that have been promised—but which are mysteriously absent from the Bill? Many parts of the country are keenly awaiting the answer to that.

In particular, with the devastating closure—[Interruption.] The Secretary of State should listen to this, because thousands of jobs are affected on Teesside. The people on Teesside, who have lost 1,700 jobs in the last week with the closure of the Corus plant, could benefit if Teesside became a CCS cluster. Can he or the Minister, in the winding-up speech, say anything about whether Teesside can count on being a contender for the cluster and when he will make the decision? I am disappointed that he does not find the situation on Teesside sufficiently meritorious for him even to listen to it. In the interests of giving the Bill and the levy mechanism proper scrutiny, will the Secretary of State commit to publishing in draft form the regulations that he proposes to make before the Bill goes into Committee?

The second part of the Bill creates a framework for obliging energy suppliers to provide social pricing for vulnerable customers.

Malcolm Wicks (Croydon, North) (Lab): I have listened very carefully to what the hon. Gentleman has said about the critical issue of CCS, and he has talked about urgency. What would a future Government do that is not being proposed by the Secretary of State? I am not clear about that and I am not clear at all whether or not he supports the levy.

Greg Clark: Of course we will support the levy, if it indeed turns out that the funds from the emissions trading scheme have been exhausted. The detail of the levy requires scrutiny, which is why I have asked the Secretary of State to publish the regulations before the Bill goes into Committee so that we can ensure that there are no perverse consequences.

Mr. Ellwood: Has my hon. Friend noticed that the Bill is so slim and small that we have now lost interest in it almost in its entirety and have moved over to discussing Tory policy? That is all very well, but it is a waste of the time in which we are supposed to be focusing on the Bill. Does he agree that one thing that could have been [illegible] in the Bill, considering the threat that is now imposed on us, is what would happen if the lights went out? Should we not be considering an emergency plan in case we do not have power for Britain in the future?

Greg Clark: My hon. Friend is quite right. This should have been a Bill that enjoyed cross-party support for keeping the lights on. The Secretary of State said that we need to work together to keep the lights on, but he seems to have shrunk from an important opportunity to do that.

When average bills for domestic fuel are £1,200, high energy prices are a desperate problem for many families struggling with the consequences of the recession—especially now. There is an unsatisfactory delay in the publication of the fuel poverty statistics. As the Secretary of State knows, the last available figures, which were published in October, are for 2007 and show that 4 million households spent more than 10 per cent. of their income on energy bills. Since then energy prices have risen still further—domestic gas prices have doubled since 2004—and unemployment has risen. To use the Government's projections, it is thought that 6 million households—one family in every four—are in fuel poverty.

We desperately need a strategy to address fuel poverty, but the Bill does not provide one. Again, it does not even set out the Government's plans; it merely hands over another batch of regulation-making powers to the Secretary of State to be used in the future. So, if the Bill is passed into law, only then will the Government come up with detailed proposals. No doubt Ministers will want to consult on them, too, before laying a draft order before Parliament. Not only is that the very opposite of the urgency that is so badly needed, but, in all likelihood, vulnerable households will be lucky if they see a benefit by next winter, let alone this winter.

A serious fuel poverty strategy, as everyone in the House knows, must be based on tackling the cause, not just the symptoms. Our housing stock is appallingly inefficient and yet the Government's approach to energy efficiency, which saves everyone money, is to ration it. The Government's approach is that we should ration energy efficiency improvements. The funding that is available through Warm Front, for example, is, as we discovered from the Under-Secretary, being cut by £15 million from the next financial year.

Earlier, the Secretary of State briefly skated over his pay-as-you-save scheme. That is not surprising, because it amounts to an exercise in piloting an approach in 500 homes—only 500 homes, when we have a problem on such a scale. This must be the biggest and most gaping hole in the strategy.

Paddy Tipping: As I understand it, the hon. Gentleman would make available a loan of £6,500 for every house to be insulated. That is a big programme with a big cost. What will the cost be, at a time when his colleagues are talking about reducing spending significantly, moving from a big-state approach—and this is it—to a small-state approach?

Greg Clark: I am delighted that the hon. Gentleman has asked me that question, because it allows me to explain once more that not all investment is public investment. It is possible, especially when there are savings to be made, for people to bring about those savings and, given that the savings will exceed the costs, to pay for the scheme through those means. We will allow every household in the country up to £6,500 in approved energy efficiency insulations, and the system will be conditional on money being saved on their bills during the payback time. That is a win-win situation.

Let me refer the Secretary of State to his own words about his pay-as-you-save schemes. He is having pilots for 500 homes, but I do not know why if he does not think that they will work. He has said that the pilots

"will give households the opportunity to invest in energy efficiency…in their homes with no upfront cost. Householders will make repayments spread over a long enough period so that repayments are lower than their predicted energy bill savings, meaning financial and carbon savings are made from day one."

That is his press release from today. I do not know whether he has read his own press release, but it mentions that the limit of his ambition is 500 homes.

Edward Miliband: The difference between me and the hon. Gentleman is that I recognise that this proposal will have a cost: we are providing £4 million to make those pilots possible. This comes back to image versus substance. He wants to claim that he can give £6,500 to every household in the country, costing up to £180 billion, and that it will cost no public money. That is clearly a con.

Greg Clark: I regret allowing the right hon. Gentleman to deliver such a poor response. The difference between us is a lack of ambition. Every household in the country could benefit from energy efficiency improvements, but the limit of his ambition is to treat 500 homes. How can he introduce a Bill with such poor potential for success?

Let me address the third aspect of the Bill—the changes that it makes to the regulation of gas and electricity markets. We support in principle the clarification of Ofgem's objective and the clear role that is being given to enhancing energy security and pursuing our low-carbon obligations. We also support the extension of the time limit in which Ofgem can impose penalties for breaches of licence conditions. However, we need to be clear about the respective roles of the Government and the regulator. Ministers should make policy decisions and the regulator should execute them. The changes are necessary in so far as they allow Ofgem to implement decisions that are made or promoted by Ministers on grounds such as energy security. However, in the past 12 years—and for the past 15 Energy Ministers—there has been a policy vacuum, the solution to which should not be to look to unelected bodies to proliferate policy. Instead, they should implement policy that has been determined by Ministers. I hope that that is what the Secretary of State has in mind with these changes.

Once again, the other two elements in this part of the Bill are simply enabling clauses, and they fail to grasp the urgency of the situation. A year ago, I told the Secretary of State that he should ask for an immediate Competition Commission investigation into the relationship between wholesale and retail energy prices. Initially, his response—I think it was last November, but he will correct me if I am wrong—was to summon the energy companies in to growl at them in some fierce way, but he has proved to be a paper tiger, because nothing has happened and he has done absolutely nothing to protect consumers' interests. Ofgem has today published a report that says that "customer bill increases have consistently outweighed cost increases" this is in relation to the wholesale price cost of gas—since July 2008".

So, since July 2008, customer bill increases have consistently outweighed cost increases. On present trends, Ofgem expects customers to be losing £17 a month by September 2010, which will make a lot of difference to people's household bills. That should not come as a surprise to the Secretary of State because his own quango, Consumer Focus, told him last June that every household was then paying £74 a year too much. A swift, forensic investigation is needed to settle the matter once and for all. It is in no one's interests—neither those of the energy companies nor those of consumers—to have such a point of contention.

The Secretary of State's response to an intervention from the hon. Member for Selby (Mr. Grogan) on the matter was to say that he would examine the policy options in the spring. Meanwhile, we are approaching a winter in which, if we consider the figures from last winter, people will die because they feel unable to afford to keep the heating on to get them through. The matter has an urgency that I commend to the Secretary of State. I hope that he will think again rather than raising his eyes about a problem that is very real to our constituents.

Although we are, of course, content for the Bill to go into Committee, where we will try to strengthen it and remedy its deficiencies, it is a wasted opportunity. It could have taken urgent steps to keep the lights on, cut CO_2 emissions and create jobs. It would then have had broad-based support.

First, the Bill should include a green deal to give all households the energy efficiency improvements they need. Secondly, it should have an emissions performance standard to require all newly built electricity generation to cut emissions. Thirdly, it should include a requirement for gas storage to get us through the winter. Fourthly, it should provide for reform of the climate change levy to make it distinguish between high and low-carbon sources of energy. Fifthly, it should contain measures to require energy companies to say exactly what would have been saved on a cheaper tariff had a customer had access to it, and how to switch to that tariff.

[Greg Clark]

Sixthly, the Bill should have real incentives to allow communities that host wind farms to reap some of the rewards. Seventhly, it should provide for action to ensure that smart meters are fitted in every home, not by 2021—the Government's plan—but by 2017 at the latest. Eighthly, it should require immediate deployment of carbon capture and storage, with a network of pipes big enough for future use, not just for the proposed demonstrations. Ninthly, it should require the national grid to extend its network out to sea to harness the offshore wind, wave and marine energy that is available there. Tenthly, it should include the opportunity for Parliament to vote on the planning statements to ensure that there can be no further hold-ups in our nuclear programme.

The Secretary of State and the House could have been proud of such a measure—a Bill to keep the lights on, cut CO_2 and boost the economy. Had the Secretary of State possessed such boldness and ambition, he would attract the admiration of the House and the country. Instead, it will fall to a Conservative Government to take the decisive action that Britain needs.

5.32 pm

Paddy Tipping (Sherwood) (Lab): It is perhaps a coincidence that Second Reading takes place on the opening day of the climate change conference in Copenhagen, which Lord Stern described as perhaps the most significant international conference since the end of the second world war. Britain will show leadership at the conference. There may well be difficulties, but I hope that, at the end, we will get some sort of political agreement that can be translated into action.

It is important to recognise that the Bill's provisions link with the Copenhagen discussions. As has been said, the measure is modest, with 37 clauses and three subject areas. However, we all need to recognise the enormous challenge before us, and the big challenge of Copenhagen is to ensure that we move to having a robust and stable carbon price in future. Ofgem described the new investment required in the generating industry as being between £95 billion and £200 billion by 2020. It is interesting that Opposition Members have said nothing about nuclear power today. Is it still an option of last resort? Do they accept Zac Goldsmith's comment that the Tory policy is "No to nuclear power"? Where do they stand on nuclear power in their priorities for the future?

Greg Clark: I am delighted to have the opportunity to correct the hon. Gentleman. He will discover when he reads Hansard that I made it clear several times that we want to accelerate the deployment of nuclear power.

Paddy Tipping: What is the position then? Is nuclear power still a sort of last resort, ranking behind renewables? What does the hon. Gentleman say to his errant colleague Mr. Goldsmith, who says that his position—and he has been an adviser to the Tory party—is a no to nuclear power.

Mr. Ellwood: The hon. Gentleman is using tactics typical of those on his Front Bench. Instead of discussing the issues of the day and taking responsibility, he has shifted the argument to the Opposition. His party has been in power for 10 years, during which our nuclear power capability has shrunk. It took 22 years to get a spark out of Dungeness, but we have reached the point where nuclear power facilities are closing faster than we can replace them. That took place on the hon. Gentleman's watch; it was nothing to do with Tory policy.

Paddy Tipping: We need new investment in generation capacity of £95 billion to £200 billion. Companies such as EDF want to know whether the policy framework will be secure into the future, because in a difficult capital market it is hard to see where those sums will come from. We must remember that of the big six players in the UK, four are truly international companies. It is far from clear that money will be invested in this country, so we must ensure that we have a set of policies that can encourage investment into the future. At the cornerstone of those policies is a robust and high carbon price.

John Robertson: May I tell my hon. Friend not to take any history lessons from the Opposition, because the reinvention of history that we are hearing today bears no resemblance to what has happened in the past 25 years, particularly in the nuclear industry? Does he agree that the Government's policy of proceeding with the Planning Act 2008, the Climate Change Act 2008 and the Energy Bill is the right way forward, and that we should all get back to talking about what is important, which is the needs of the people of this country?

Paddy Tipping: And the need of the people of this country is to keep the lights on. There is a potential energy difficulty in 2015-17, and it is clear to me that we must encourage investment to ensure that we can keep the lights on. One way to do that, which my hon. Friend has always championed, is to bring on new nuclear generation. The Opposition may not like it, but they are Johnny-come-latelys to nuclear. There are differences between those on their Front-Bench team about nuclear power. If we are to ensure that the first new nuclear plant is open by 2017, we must ensure that companies such as EDF are confident that their investment will last into the future.

Mr. Jamie Reed: My hon. Friend will know, because he is a keen student of such issues, that every major nuclear decision in this country has been made by a Labour Government—from Calder Hall onwards. He mentioned the Copenhagen conference, but does he, like the rest of the policy-making world, believe that it is much harder for the Secretary of State to strike a deal with Environment Secretaries from other countries, because when they look at Britain's putative alternative Government they see that they increasingly consist of climate change deniers?

Paddy Tipping: My hon. Friend makes the point. It is clear from the discussion in the Chamber, and from the policies announced by the right hon. and learned Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) and by the right hon. Member for Haltemprice and Howden (David Davis), who used to be the shadow Home Secretary, that there are real difficulties about investment in the future. To put it simply, they just do not know what they are doing. As they say in my part of the country, they don't know their arse from their elbow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Michael Lord): Order. I shall not ask the hon. Gentleman to withdraw those remarks, but perhaps he should choose his words a little more carefully.

Paddy Tipping: I take your reproach, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Those words will be read down the coal pit in Welbeck in Edwinstowe, and the miners there will know what I am talking about, even if it offends some of the people in this Chamber.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has been a champion in the process of preparing for Copenhagen, but I am not confident that the discussions will produce that high and stable carbon price for the future. He describes getting an agreement there as plan A. We need to consider plan B. There is an argument that if we want investment on such a scale, we need to ensure that we in the UK can underwrite the price of carbon—that there can be a ceiling on that price, to drive the investment forward. It is not a decision that we need to take this year, pre-Copenhagen or straight afterwards, but ultimately a decision will have to be made about how we can promote new investment. The obvious way is to maintain a robust carbon price into the future.

One way of bringing on new fossil fuel plant—new clean coal plant—is through a carbon capture and storage levy. That is in the Bill, and I welcome it, even though it is a little late. The rules of the competition seem to have changed over time, and the end date, even today, is not entirely clear, but four new projects here in the UK will be a tremendous development. I want my right hon. Friend to initiate that quickly. I want him to listen to the miners in Nottinghamshire, who know that although Harworth colliery is mothballed, it could be reopened and new reserves could be accessed. That is what UK Coal, the owners, would want to do, if £200 million were available.

That sort of money is pretty tough to raise on the capital markets just now. In recognition of that, there have been discussions with the European Investment Bank about a loan. The discussions have gone well. The sticking point appears to be that the EIB says that any coal that comes from Harworth should be burned cleanly. At present there is no power station in the UK that can provide that. I want to stick up for and protect mineworkers in Nottinghamshire and steelworkers in Middlesbrough and Redcar, because we owe it to them. They have given their lives and their health to keep us warm, so anything that my right hon. Friend can do with the EIB would be extremely helpful.

My right hon. Friend ought to pick up on two other points about carbon capture and storage. The first is that it is important not to let the market operate, but to take a strategic approach. E.ON's development at Kingsnorth is long delayed, but were it to win the competition, there would be sense in talking to E.ON and the rival company, RWE, which has a power station just over the river at the Isle of Grain, to ensure that any demonstration plant at Kingsnorth was significant, with sufficient capacity to act as a cluster. We do not want stranded assets.

We should look at the work that Yorkshire Forward has been doing in the Yorkshire coalfield down the Humber valley and take a strategic approach to carbon capture and storage. In Committee we need to debate that and think it through extremely carefully.

We should be clear that the cost of the levy will fall on customers' bills. One of the Government's aims, in addition to security of supply and a reduction in carbon emissions, is affordable heat. As politicians we must recognise that there is increasing consumer resistance to rises in bills. The £2 billion cost of the levy will be passed on to customers. They are beginning to say, "But we're paying the social tariffs." About 1 per cent. of their bill is for social tariffs, and 9 per cent. is for environmental purposes, to deliver the ROC obligation. In future that could rise to 20 per cent. There will come a point when customers say, "Enough is enough," and in the immediate short term we need to ensure that bills are detailed enough for customers to understand what they are paying for. Given the rising bills—the hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells (Greg Clark) quoted the figures—it is important that we look at social tariffs. Some companies, such as Centrica, have an excellent reputation and record, but we need to go further, which is why I support mandatory social tariffs.

I look forward to discussing in Committee who might benefit from such tariffs, because they should apply not only to elderly people, but to people who are in fuel poverty generally. Last winter, 5 million people experienced fuel poverty, including a group below pensionable age with long-term illnesses. We need to look carefully for ways in which we can help them, and we need to discuss mandatory social tariffs in a wider context.

Sir Robert Smith: The hon. Gentleman, in his intervention on the Secretary of State, specifically mentioned Macmillan, which has taken this issue forward. It provides a helpline to support people with cancer, and one of the commonest questions asked is, "How do we cope with our energy bills?" That is because when someone is being treated for cancer, not only do they often become more sensitive to a shortage of heat, but their income falls at the same time, because their employment is disrupted.

Paddy Tipping: The hon. Gentleman has a long track record of following the subject of fuel poverty, and he is exactly right. I look forward to a more detailed discussion about how to tackle that problem.

As I have said, we need to set social tariffs in a wider context. The Warm Front budget is clearly under real pressure, and there needs to be a discussion about its future. The Minister of State, Department of Energy and Climate Change, my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Joan Ruddock), who will wind up the debate, has made some very welcome changes to Warm Front, but I want us not only to roll out smart meters but to give people real practical assistance with energy issues such as efficiency and insulation. I want us to roll out smart meters at the same time as we give advice.

John Robertson: Members in all parts of the House agree that smart meters are important, but, from what I have seen of them on television over the past week or so, I think that they will be quite technically challenging for some members of our communities, particularly the elderly, the frail, people with sight problems and so on. We really have to provide education as well as the meter.

Paddy Tipping: I am sure that that is right. Smart meters with a visual display will clearly be interesting for some people but a turn-off for others. Nevertheless, now that we have the technology to look at a minute-by-minute, second-by-second account of our energy use, it is clearly right that we structure the market to ensure that elderly people and those with visual handicaps know that they are getting the best deal.

[Paddy Tipping]

I talked about a wider discussion, and I am keen to discuss the winter fuel allowance. Last year it cost £2.7 billion, and I am not entirely confident that we get the best out of it. Of those who received the allowance, it is estimated that only 12 per cent. were in fuel poverty. We need to make some tough choices about how best to use our resources, and as part of a debate about mandatory social tariffs, Warm Front and Eaga we need to discuss whether the winter fuel allowance is the best way forward.

The final part of the Bill deals with, and extends, the role of Ofgem. My respect for Ofgem has grown over the past 12 months, when, under pressure from Government, it has become much more proactive. I welcome its quarterly reports, in which it is interesting to follow the tracks and see the gross margins that have been made by all the energy companies. We must extend Ofgem's role by giving it more investigatory powers and greater responsibilities, to ensure that customers benefit as soon as possible from those powers.

The case for going to the Competition Commission has been argued on both sides of the House today. However, let us be clear about this: it would probably take two years for that inquiry to come round, and during that period the big energy companies would not be investing. It is as simple as that. If people want £95 billion or £200 billion of investment, a Competition Commission inquiry would be completely the wrong way to go about getting it. It would stop that investment in its tracks, because companies such as E.ON and RWE would make decisions to invest elsewhere in the world, and we need that finance here.

The big issue for us at the moment is the renewal of our generating capacity by 2020. The Bill goes a small way towards achieving that, and I support it, although I am not entirely confident that it is supported throughout the House. I look forward to the debate in Committee, because it is a valuable, if modest, Bill, which could still be improved.

5.52 pm

Simon Hughes (North Southwark and Bermondsey) (LD): I am happy to follow the hon. Member for Sherwood (Paddy Tipping), the acting Chairman of the Select Committee on Energy and Climate Change, who speaks with a long-held interest in energy issues.

The hon. Gentleman ended where I begin: by contrasting the Bill before us with the great task that begins today across the North sea in Copenhagen. Earlier, I put it to the Secretary of State—he responded positively—that Copenhagen requires the United Kingdom and the European Union to be ambitious, bold and brave in reaching for the best possible permanent deal. That is obvious. We could also have had an ambitious energy Bill being debated in this country at the same time but, to repeat the word used by the hon. Member for Sherwood, this is a very modest Bill indeed.

Having been in the House throughout the period, my analysis is that, after nearly 13 years in government, Labour's energy policy is perceived by many of my constituents and those of many colleagues as having left millions of the British public out in the cold. They feel worse off, not better off, as a result of the energy policies of the past 12 and a half years—and they are worse off. Energy is costing them more and the future is less certain. The number of people who spend more than 10p in the pound on their fuel bills has gone up, not down, and that situation is likely to get worse, not better, given the price increases in oil and gas that they know they are to expect. If the Government had been really bold and determined, they could have said, "This is the opportunity to try to put high fuel bills that people cannot afford behind us once and for all."—in other words, to do the sort of social justice legislating that I thought Labour came to power to deliver. It is therefore sad that, on the first day of the Copenhagen conference, when people are calling for radical action abroad, we are not seeing extensive and radical proposals at home.

Over the past 12 and a half years, the response to variations in fuel costs has been a system that, although welcome when delivered, is very much one in which Labour makes people dependent on themselves. The winter fuel payment, which is a better system than the benefits system if people do not claim the benefits, has been given irregularly, spasmodically and unpredictably. There has not been a built-in subsidy for poor people, or a guaranteed, legislated-for provision so that people know they will be able to afford their bills. That is in the Bill—we are now seeing it for the first time ever—but it has taken 12 and a half years for a Labour Government to realise that without guarantees in law, people often end up paying much too high a price.

As we have heard, there are three issues before us. Many of us wish that there were many more and that this was legislation in which the Government nailed their colours to the mast of continuing to support and to develop support for the renewables sector, which is growing, but from a terribly lame and slow start. Of course, in some respects there is a difference between my colleagues and I and both the Government and the Conservatives. We do not think that the future lies in nuclear power, which is always expensive, always delivered late and always risky because of the fuel that we import and the failure to find ways to store, let alone to dispose of properly, the waste that is created. Nothing that has recently come to light suggests that nuclear power will become any more safe or secure in future, as the climate change crisis affects Britain and we get more floods, more storms and more risk of disruption, with the same things happening around the world. For this country, which is so well placed with our wind, wave and tidal power, renewables are a far safer and saner route forward, and that is the way we should go.

Mr. Ellwood: As I do with much Lib Dem policy, I am having a few problems understanding this. If the hon. Gentleman is against nuclear policy per se, why does he support the nuclear deterrent? From a safety perspective, he seems to have one rule for our service personnel working on nuclear submarines and another for the civilian population.

Simon Hughes: Those are entirely different arguments, as the hon. Gentleman well knows, having also been involved in this debate for a long time. I will not be distracted into a debate on defence, although I am happy to have it another time. The position we have always taken is that we have inherited a nuclear deterrent that, in the multilateral negotiations that are coming up next year, we should use to lever down the number of nuclear weapons in the world, with a world policy and a national policy of reducing dependence on things nuclear.

We believe that, having gone down the nuclear road in this country and seen that it is unsatisfactory—it was not at all successfully developed under past Tory Governments—it is completely the wrong road to go down under any prospective Government, whether Labour or Conservative, or with somebody else in the lead.

Mr. Goodwill: The hon. Gentleman talked about the security of fuel supply. As I recall, the main sources of nuclear fuel are Australia and Canada, which are surely much more secure places to get fuel from than the middle east or Russia.

Simon Hughes: Some of the sources of supply that we need for nuclear are not in those countries but elsewhere, and there are predictions that they may run out in the foreseeable future and that prices may become significantly higher. If the hon. Gentleman thinks that, in a world of uncertainty, transporting around the world things that are needed to create nuclear power is a safe and sensible thing to do, he can make that argument, but it is not finding much credence with the public, who, on all the opinion poll evidence, find the idea of renewables a much more satisfactory way forward than nuclear power.

Several hon. Members rose—

Simon Hughes: Let me make a bit more progress. I do not want to get bogged down in nuclear, which is not in the Bill, nor should it be. We are not in favour of it, and we hope that in the end the Government realise that they should not support it either.

The first item in the Bill is carbon capture and storage. Ministers know that we support CCS technology, which is vital if we are to make coal our servant in the years to come and ensure that it does not produce the same problems for our planet in the future that it has in the past. It needs to be seen to be commercially viable, and one difficulty has been that we have been really slow off the mark. That is not the fault of the Secretary of State or the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Joan Ruddock), but it was in 2006 that the Select Committee on Science and Technology said of carbon capture and storage:

"Multiple full scale demonstration projects using different types of capture technology and storage conditions are urgently needed."

The first demonstration project was in 1996 in Norway. Why have we been waiting? What has caused the delay? Why, for 12 and a half years, when the technology has been developed elsewhere in the world, have we not sought to advance the CCS that we have always known we would need? We are now going to have to try to catch up, but with other countries much further ahead, it might be as easy for us to take the technology from them as to develop our own.

I would be interested to hear from the Secretary of State why the Government have not yet come clean on their response to the results of their consultation, which ended in September, on having a framework of emissions performance standards for the whole coal industry. He did not allude to that in his opening speech, so I hope that the Minister of State will do so in her response. In the debate in the summer on a Bill introduced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ross, Skye and Lochaber (Mr. Kennedy), the Under-Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change said that he supported the general direction of it, but it was a sort of St. Augustine's reply—"But not yet." He said:

"The Government's position is that in our general policy direction, we are where every Member who has spoken has urged us to be. We have already commenced a consultation on the best way to get a detailed policy so that we can travel forward... I believe that consultation is a very good thing and an important component of getting policy right." [Official Report, 3 July 2009; Vol. 495, c. 636.]

The consultation has ended, and we are clear that there ought to be—[Interruption.] I know that the Government have responded, but we need to know what they will do now. It is generally accepted that the current carbon price is not the stable one that this country and the world need, and that it needs to stabilise at something much more like €50 or €60 a tonne than the present €14 a tonne.

Given the European Union directive on clean coal, which will come into force at the end of the next decade, we need a clear position on the future of coal in this country. There has to be a clear statement that there will be no new coal-fired power stations without carbon capture and storage working right from the beginning, not retrofitted later. Without that absolute parameter, the industry will not know where it stands, and Ministers know that we are likely to have new coal-fired, dirty coal power stations that will contribute to worsening the climate crisis rather than help to solve it.

Another question about the CCS levy has been asked a couple of times already. I assume that the Secretary of State—again, he was silent on the matter—does not expect the parts of the energy industry that do not release carbon into the atmosphere to contribute to the levy to fund CCS demonstration projects. I assume that under the regulations that he anticipates—like the hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells (Greg Clark), I believe that it would be helpful to see them in draft—the renewables sector will not have to contribute. It would be nonsense if the sector that does not contribute to the climate crisis and the emissions problem had to pay to develop the technology for making dirty coal clean.

One other point on the technology of carbon capture and storage has not so far been alluded to, and I would be grateful if the Minister of State mentioned it in her response. She has said before how important it is that we share the technology that we develop in this country with developing countries in other parts of the world. It is not just we in the rich west who will need CCS; it is eastern European countries such as Poland, as well as countries such as China. What will happen to the intellectual property of the technology that the prototype plants will produce? I hope that it will be shared and that we do not just develop it to be nationalistic. I understand that all the CCS interests are to be consortiums of companies, some British but mostly international, in locations up and down the east coast, so I hope it is clear that we will share the technology and intellectual property and ensure that we have the power to help the developing world and not just ourselves.

[Simon Hughes]

The second section of the Bill is probably the most immediately important to our constituents, because it is about how we deal with rising and, for many people, unaffordable fuel bills. The Government know how embarrassing their record on that is. Again, that is not because of this Secretary of State, but his Government should be embarrassed about the cost of fuel to the poor over the past 12 and a half years. They set a statutory target, which still exists in law, to eliminate fuel poverty in vulnerable households by 2010 and all households by 2016. I understand that 4.5 million or more households now spend more than 10p in the pound on their fuel bills, compared with 2 million or thereabouts only four years ago. We know that there are explanations for part of that and that there has been a massive failure to take up benefits and tax credits that could help to pay the bills. However, it is not just pensioners who are affected but single-parent families and those with long-term illness, who do not benefit from the winter fuel payment. The hon. Member for Sherwood alluded to that. The whole system has failed to ensure that the poor and the vulnerable are protected.

Another group affected, which is often spoken for by Liberal Democrat Members such as my hon. Friend the Member for West Aberdeenshire and Kincardine (Sir Robert Smith), is the large number of people who live off the gas grid. They may live near it, but they have not been protected at all by the system. They have had to buy their liquified petroleum gas or oil fuel and get it into the tank at the bottom of the garden, and nothing has protected them. There have been 12 and a half years in which some of the rural poor have not been assisted at all, along with many of the urban and suburban poor.

Ministers know that the Liberal Democrats are again going to criticise the fact that all the schemes for warm homes have been piecemeal, limited and inadequate responses. They have told us this year that only one in 80 homes in Britain is a warm home, so we need a scheme that encompasses everybody. The carbon emissions reduction target and Warm Front are inadequate. Age Concern tells me that it receives 5,000 complaints about Warm Front every year, and CERT does not have reducing fuel poverty as a key objective. I understand that Warm Front funding will be cut by half next year, from £350 million to about £176 million, because some of the money was brought forward. The size of the grant has been kept the same, but fewer and fewer people are benefitting. We have heard the example of the latest pilot scheme, which is for but a handful of people.

If Ministers had said that they wanted a scheme rolled out across Britain, led by Government and using local councils, to make every home a warm home within 10 years, as we have argued for, they would have had our support. [Interruption.] Of course it costs money, but there are ways of doing it and I have explained them in the House. The Government could underwrite a loan that was paid back over a maximum of 10 years. Of course there would have to be investment for that underwriting, but it would be worth it. It would save on CO_2 emissions, produce warm homes, reduce winter deaths and insulate housing.

I would have liked the Government to display that sort of ambition, and I would have liked them to tackle the problem of those who pay far more than average for their fuel bills because they are not connected to the gas grid. The figures that I currently have are that the average bill of someone on mains gas is £568 a year, that of someone on domestic fuel oil more than £1,000 a year and that of someone on LPG more than £1,300 a year. There is no justification for that inequity in this country today.

There is plenty of evidence and Select Committees have put the argument for change on an all-party basis, but the problem is getting worse. We know that last year, gas bills year went up by 58 per cent. and that this year, when gas prices came down, bills decreased by only 6 per cent. Last year, electricity bills went up by 28 per cent., but when prices came down this year, they decreased by only 8 per cent. The reality is that the system has not properly regulated bills according to the wholesale prices paid by the utility companies that supply the product.

There have been opportunities in this place to legislate along these lines. My hon. Friend the Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) introduced a Bill to deal with high fuel bills earlier this year, but the Minister resisted and talked it out, and did not let it proceed. The reality is that it is bit late now, in the last months of a Labour Government, to get a Bill through to paper over the cracks and to try to cover the embarrassment that they know they feel, in however limited a way. They have not delivered to their constituents, but far worse, they have not delivered to the public as a whole.

There is one very odd bit of the Bill that I hope the Minister can explain. Clause 14, "Schemes for reducing fuel poverty", states:

"For the purposes of this Part, fuel poverty is reduced if... (a) the number of people living in fuel poverty is reduced, or ...(b) the extent to which any person is living in fuel poverty is reduced" and clause 14(4) appears to give the Secretary of State by regulation the opportunity to redefine fuel poverty. I should like clarification of that, because we have seen plenty of figures massaged over the years. I know the Government are embarrassed, and they know they are embarrassed, but we need to be clear. If the general understanding is that when we talk about fuel poverty, we are talking about people who pay more than 10 per cent. of their income for fuel, that should remain as the definition. Ministers, whether of this Government or the next, should not have a chance to change it and to pretend that the problem is less than it is.

On the regulation of the energy market, if this was a Bill to really get to grips with Ofgem and produce a regulator that regulated in the consumer interest, people would say, "Amen." However, I sense the Bill will be not nearly as tough as that. The Secretary of State has spoken to Ofgem and told it that if it does not behave, there will be more draconian powers, but the Bill introduces only a modest change to its regulatory authority.

Of course, there is some good stuff. The provision to ensure that energy transmission costs, which could result in higher bills if companies argued that they had low capacity in the grid, cannot be a method of exploiting the consumer is a good thing, and we welcome it. It is also good that the time period for investigations will be extended. There have been lots of abuses. I have seen cases in the paper and I have spoken to people who have had repayments of more than £1,000 from npower, because there has been a fiddling of the tariff and a misrepresentation of the cost. Those cases were taken up and awards were made in favour of those people. What will happen to cases that are currently timed out, but in which there has been a clear breach? I am not asking for retrospective legislation, but what remedy is there for people who have a clear, justifiable complaint against utility companies that has not been met?

I am concerned that nothing in the Bill will make Ofgem more open to the consumer, accountable and transparent. Ministers know what Consumer Focus, Which? and others are asking for—that Ofgem meet in public and that it include representatives of the public. The regulatory body needs to be much more accountable if it is to have the confidence of the public.

There is now going to be, for the first time, an ability to change the rules on the method of payment and the Government will have the power to control such things. The current voluntary system to which, as I understand it, the energy companies have subscribed, means they do not currently charge more, for example, for prepayment meters. However, I am concerned that some of the companies have indicated, even this winter, that they may be willing to go back on the system and charge more. Scottish and Southern Energy, for example, has said that it intends to withdraw its offer of equalisation at the end of this winter.

The hon. Member for Sherwood led into my speech by saying that this is a modest Bill, which sadly it is. In Committee, we will seek to make it tougher. We will seek to make Ofgem's powers tougher and the rights of the consumer greater and to ensure that the schemes for making our homes in Britain warmer and better insulated are much more extensive. We will also seek to ensure that the CCS proposals do not penalise the renewables sector, which has just been re-incentivised by increased support. We need that support to go on growing, and we must not be seen as punishing or hindering such development.

We hope that we will make the Bill stronger and tougher. The Secretary of State has promised to be bold when he goes to Copenhagen in the next couple of days. I hope he will be, but I also hope that he will leave a message for his ministerial colleagues who will be in Committee that if the last of the Labour Government's Energy Bills is to be worth having, it needs to be much tougher, bolder and socially just.

6.16 pm

Dr. Alan Whitehead (Southampton, Test) (Lab): Hon. Members have this afternoon said that the Bill is a modest one. It is indeed modest if one goes by the number of clauses or what it provides by way of new legislation in the light of what we know are the challenges ahead. However, when considering Bills, it is important to understand clearly what we need to legislate on at particular times. It is important to ask what has already happened legislatively and what is still required. It is also important to ask what the role of regulation is and what are the roles of future initiatives, which stem from powers given by the Bill and other legislation, in meeting the energy challenge ahead of us.

The reality is that the Bill builds on the Energy Act 2008 and a number of other items of legislation to make some progress on issues relating to the energy challenge. In any event, regulatory powers are already available and financial investments can and are being made. There is a strategy for ensuring that a new low-carbon energy economy properly protects those in fuel poverty, and for ensuring that the future base load of our energy supply, which will inevitably concern coal and gas in future, is properly developed as far as the low-carbon form of energy supply and CCS are concerned. The regulator has the base powers to regulate the energy market as it becomes much more sustainable. They may appear to be modest legislative achievements, but they underpin a much greater step forward.

What we have heard this afternoon concerns me. The Opposition claim that they will allow the Bill a Second Reading and make changes in Committee, but they would, were they to have their way, have a huge legislative programme. They make declaratory statements on everything under the sun as far as energy policy is concerned, including on a great deal of legislation that, unless they have been completely oblivious of what has been happening in the House, they would notice has already actually been passed.

For example, we know that as a result of the 2008 Act, a feed-in tariff for smaller-scale electricity generation will be introduced soon. We know that the year after that a renewable heat incentive will come in. Incidentally, that will be the first introduced by any Government anywhere in the world to ensure that renewable heat is part of a programme of moving towards low-carbon domestic and commercial energy for providing heat.

Having that legislation in place will help when it comes to the next stage in energy efficiency for households and domestic properties, because that will require not just passive insulation and energy efficiency measures but active measures such as the installation of small-scale or district generation in domestic properties. That can reduce the carbon footprint of a house radically over time. Therefore the future relates to regulation following from legislation that has already been passed, and the will to ensure that that happens actively in the future. The claim that an opportunity to pass legislation has been missed in those areas is to misunderstand how one makes progress with a renewable and sustainable energy policy. I do not claim that that is a deliberate misunderstanding, but a misunderstanding it is, nevertheless.

It concerns me when that misunderstanding is compounded by simplistic claims about how progress can be made on these issues. We have heard the suggestion—it was repeated this afternoon—that every household should be given £6,500, and that that will sort out the whole question of insulation and active energy generation concerns. As a result, it is suggested, we will have fully insulated and approaching zero-carbon households, but it is akin to the other short-lived policy we heard about a while ago, whereby everybody was to put £8,000 into the pot and they would then have their health and social care needs taken care of for the rest of their lives. That policy ran into similar mathematical difficulties.

The mathematics of the £6,500 policy—over and above requiring loan guarantees of some £160 billion to £170 billion to be injected into the economy if the guarantee is from the public purse—would require savings of £360 a year, if the loan is to be serviced and assuming that it would not be just given out to householders.

Mr. Goodwill: The hon. Gentleman is making one or two errors in interpreting our policy. The amount would be up to £6,500, because not every home would require the same level of cost-effective investment. Any private company that can save money on its electric bills by investment is doing so: the problem with individuals is that they cannot borrow the money in the same way as businesses. This scheme would enable them to draw down their future energy savings to invest in the energy efficiency of their homes. It seems a bit of a no-brainer to me.

[Mr. Goodwill]

Dr. Whitehead: I am delighted that the hon. Gentleman intervened at the moment that he did and in the way that he did because he has completely anticipated my next point. Despite the fact that the leader of his party insisted that every family in the country could spend £6,500 on their household energy efficiency—and the shadow Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change emphasised that point in the House recently—the truth of the matter is that in practice it would be nothing like that sum. And if it were £6,500, it would be unsustainable to support, in terms of the investment required to underpin it. It is only because the sum would be nothing like £6,500—it would be more like £1,500 on average under the Conservatives' blue-green energy proposals—that funding the policy even starts to become conceivable for most households. Indeed, the savings suggested for an expenditure of £1,500 are the full £360 that would be needed to underpin the £6,500 in terms of the interest that would be lost through granting that sum. It is claimed that those savings would result from measures such as the installation of low-energy light bulbs, cavity wall insulation and roof insulation, all of which have already been legislated for to a considerable extent, or are under way. By 2011, for example, low-energy light bulbs will be in place across the whole of the UK. The Conservative's policy does not take seriously the real job that needs to be done, especially on fuel poverty, or the investment in efficient homes that it will be necessary to undertake.

The recent White Paper, which does take the issue seriously, proposed that all homes should have a whole-house package—to be achieved not by legislative means but through other measures—to include cost-effective energy saving measures plus renewable heat and electricity measures as appropriate by 2030, and all lofts and cavity walls to be insulated, where practicable, by 2015. It also included the development of new ways to provide financial support so that people could make more substantial energy saving and renewable energy improvements. Does it not appear sensible to work out how that can be done properly in order to pursue the policy, instead of magicking a sum of money out of thin air, which would be completely insupportable in the real world? Would it not make more sense to examine placing a charge on the district network operator for the supply to the household? Would it not make sense to consider how loans could come into the equation to overcome the capital costs of such energy-saving devices? Would it not make sense to consider the option of leasing, or to pilot some of these schemes so that what we say and what we can do are the same thing? In a future low-carbon energy economy, the savings will need to match up to the investment so that the householder will be in a win-win situation in terms of their energy bills as well as the security of a well-insulated, low-carbon house.

We need to be clear that whatever the oscillation in energy prices in the future, they will be high and will get higher. There is therefore a particular onus on us to bring forward serious and well-thought-out programmes to ensure that those people who are not able to afford their energy bills now—let alone future higher energy bills—are proofed against those bills for a long time to come.

We need to be looking at a quantum shift in our understanding of what an energy bill should consist of and what those in fuel poverty face in paying their fuel bills. For the future, I envisage that happening in much the same way that council tax is paid—everybody pays it, but there is a rebate for those in less fortunate financial circumstances—so that a number of people are thereby effectively excluded or only partially included in the process of paying energy bills. Having a requirement in the Bill that social tariffs be introduced by legislation in future, rather than by voluntary agreement, seems to be a move towards that idea. We are all in this together, in ensuring that we have a low-carbon energy economy, alongside what we know will be high prices for energy supplies, but at the same time ensuring that the effects of that high-cost energy economy are not brought to bear in a most cruel way on those who can least afford to finance such an energy economy.

Therefore, a fuel poverty strategy should combine several different factors, not all of which will exactly correlate with each other. It is not the case, for instance, that everybody who is in fuel poverty lives in a badly insulated house, although a good proportion do so. Therefore, a strategy that moves rapidly towards ensuring that the standard assessment procedure ratings—the SAP ratings—of houses across the country are raised substantially, in order to fuel-poverty proof those houses as far as possible, seems absolutely essential. However, it is also not the case that simply doing that will cause everybody who is now in fuel poverty not to be in fuel poverty. It is also not the case that everyone who is in fuel poverty stays in the same house. Therefore, a programme to ensure social tariffs, tariff reductions and affordable tariffs for those in fuel poverty—these might be related as, in effect, a gateway benefit, in respect of other indicators of the fact that a person in fuel poverty lives in a house that is not well insulated—would seem to be a way forward in ensuring, as far as possible, that fuel poverty becomes a thing of the past in our future energy economy.

We have to be honest and reflect on the indicators of fuel poverty. Although it is widely accepted that those who spend more than 10 per cent.—10p in a pound—on their energy bills are in fuel poverty, that definition rises or falls precisely with energy prices. Some 40,000 people will be in fuel poverty if fuel prices rise by 1 per cent., yet they will apparently come out of fuel poverty if fuel prices fall by 1 per cent., regardless of their objective circumstances before or after that price rise or fall. Therefore, attempting to secure a combination of factors in fighting fuel poverty, so that people are fuel-poverty proofed as far as possible, seems to be the right way forward. That will require a combination of legislation and regulation on a series of important fronts. It is therefore interesting to note that the code for sustainable buildings, which will ensure by 2016 that the building of new houses is carbon-neutral as far as possible, which will, among other things, help to increase the SAP rating of UK housing stock, is not based on legislation.

Martin Horwood: Does the hon. Gentleman agree with us that it is important to have consistent measures of fuel poverty, so that Governments of any colour cannot wriggle out of their responsibilities, and that therefore clause 14, to which my hon. Friend the Member for North Southwark and Bermondsey (Simon Hughes) drew our attention earlier and which appears to give the Secretary of State the power to change and flex the definition, is rather dangerous and ought to be removed?

Dr. Whitehead: There is a distinction between ensuring that the definition of fuel poverty works in the way that I have described and a clause in a Bill that enables a Government simply to declare that fuel poverty does not exist. As the hon. Gentleman says, it would be a bad outcome if a Government were able, by a legislative ruse, to declare that fuel poverty did not exist. However, as we all know that it does exist and as we have a definition in the Bill that is not to be removed, the question is how we ensure, through a combination of fuel-poverty proofing, social tariffs and reduced tariffs, and through how they cross over for people living in particular houses, that fuel poverty is combated rather more effectively than previously.

I want to say a few words about the future of our energy supply. As my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Paddy Tipping) mentioned, the test of the success or otherwise of our whole strategy of moving towards a low-carbon fuel economy will be the extent to which we effectively replace the 40 or so per cent. of our existing electricity supply with a low-carbon electricity supply. Over the next 10 to 15 years, all but one of our nuclear power stations will go out of commission, as will all our coal-fired power stations, a number of gas-fired power stations and, as things stand, all our oil-fired power stations, through a combination of age, end of life, the European large combustion plant directive and associated activities. It is imperative that that process should take clear note of the need to ensure, first, that we have a base load capacity in our fuel economy and, secondly, that we do not require investors in new plant—let us be clear: by and large, the investors in any new plant will be the energy companies that currently supply our energy investment in the UK—to invest in plant that will become redundant or a stranded asset as soon as it is installed.

That will require two things to happen. First, we need to ensure that the capacity exists to invest in both coal and gas, while at the same time squaring the circle of that investment for a future low-carbon economy. Secondly, it is absolutely right that we should send out strong signals about carbon capture and storage for those new investments. It is also absolutely right, therefore, that we should put in place a legislative framework through this Bill to move ahead with carbon capture and storage, both pre-combustion and post-combustion, coupled with a serious tranche of new powers for the regulator to ensure that the energy market works in a more carefully regulated way.

One thing to emerge as a result of those changes is that in future we will live in a far more regulated energy economy. Indeed, it is right that we should do so, because we have serious targets to reach, a short time in which to reach them and a series of replacements that we need to make in our generating capacity to enable us to reach them, rather than standing against them. Therefore, a combination of this legislation and Ofgem being able to recast the market arrangements for the generation of electricity, so that it underpins new investment in a positive way, will be a good achievement of the Bill should it become law.

If we are to regulate positively to achieve our aims, it is important that we all face in the same direction, and that we do not place on the statute book legislation that resiles from those aims. I was therefore concerned to hear proposals from Conservative Members for legislation to prevent onshore wind energy from being put in place anywhere in the country if it is less than a specified distance from a house or dwelling. The aim of that proposal is not, as has been suggested by Opposition Front Benchers, to involve communities more in onshore wind development. It is simply to stop onshore wind farms being put in place.

Giving that kind of signal through legislation would prevent the investment in our energy supply that we need to replace our ageing equipment, and create uncertainty in the market. Our claim to be able to move forward on to a low-carbon economy would effectively be rugby tackled by legislation that would make that impossible to achieve. I am sorry that, when those on the Opposition Front Bench were given the opportunity to repudiate that approach today, they simply ducked the question and said that it was nothing to do with them. It is something to do with them.

We should place on record that we will put on the statute book legislation and regulations that will move us solidly in the direction of a low-carbon economy, to ensure that the people who are going to be paying their bills in such an economy are not so disadvantaged by what that economy is going to produce that they cannot take part in it. We should all face in the same direction on this, and we must make it clear that we do not support anything that goes against that. I hope that when the Opposition Front-Bench spokesman sums up their case on this Second Reading debate he will take the opportunity to repudiate that it is any part of their policy to stop the development of onshore wind farms by placing distance barriers in the way of such developments, thereby preventing them from going ahead.

6.43 pm

Mr. Tobias Ellwood (Bournemouth, East) (Con): It is a pleasure to follow the hon. Member for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead), but I must begin by correcting him. He has spent the past 10 minutes talking about Tory policy, and I hope that that theme will not continue through the debate. I want to clarify the fact that my hon. Friend the Member for Tunbridge Wells (Greg Clark) put clearly into context the remarks about wind farms made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke).

It was, however, the comments made by the right hon. Member for Sherwood (Paddy Tipping) [Interruption.] I have inadvertently promoted him. The hon. Member for Sherwood made a thoughtful speech, and he made two points that I hope those on both Front Benches will listen to. First, he talked about the rising cost of winter fuel allowances, which needs to be addressed. Is it right that we should pour so much money into heating houses, rather than making them capable of requiring less heat by insulating them? He also raised the possibility of power cuts in 2017—I see him nodding—which is a prospect that the Secretary of State refused to acknowledge even though he wrote about it not long ago.

[Mr. Tobias Ellwood]

We have gathered here today to debate the Second Reading of this Bill, but there is another gathering taking place in Copenhagen. That involves a significant grouping of international leaders who are hoping to move the debate on the 1997 Kyoto protocol forward. We must all wish that conference well, but also bear in mind that it took more than eight years for much of that protocol to become law. Our hopes are high that we shall see agreement on the targets for greenhouse gas emissions, on financial support for adaptation to climate change in developing countries and on the carbon trading scheme. I shall not hold my breath while waiting to see any of that put on the statute book, however, because of the slowness of planning and the delays involved in Government agreements. All that goes against the grain of what we have heard on both sides of the House about the urgency of dealing with climate change and the demise of this country's natural resources.

I visited Cumbria last week. We do not know whether the flooding there was caused by climate change, but many of the images that we saw on television are still vivid in our minds. I want to place on record the fact that Cumbria is very much open for business. Yes, there have been problems in Cockermouth, but Lake Windermere is back to its normal levels, and the people there are calling for tourists to visit the area. When we debate climate change, we need to be careful not to label or identify places that have been affected and simply leave it at that. We can incur damage if we do not subsequently confirm that repairs have been made. The fighting spirit of the people in Cumbria has got it back to business as normal, and we owe them a debt of gratitude. We can show that gratitude by sending out the message that the Lake district is very much open for business.

I am delighted to be participating in this Second Reading debate, not only to underline my own views on climate change but to comment on the demise of our own natural resources. As I said in my interventions on the Secretary of State, I am very concerned about what has happened to those resources over the past decade. History will look back on that decade with concern that we did not do enough in time to make people aware that our resources were being so greatly reduced.

The risk of blackouts in the future is now a reality, yet we hear denials of that from those on the Government Front Bench. Instead, we get lists of initiatives. Some of them are very good: we have just heard about the longer-lasting light bulbs initiative, and that is fantastic. Unfortunately, however, it does not address the question of what we should do when the oil and gas run out. That is exactly what is happening. In addition, our nuclear power capability used to contribute 30 per cent. of the UK's energy needs; the figure is now down to 12.5 per cent. and falling. We have had many discussions on the further use of coal, but it is now seen as too dirty to use on its own. Extra investment is required, as is further research, because the scale on which we could use carbon capture and storage has yet to be confirmed.

We have also had big debates about renewables. The subject was just raised by the hon. Member for Southampton, Test. I do not doubt that there have been problems over planning in Conservative councils and in others across the country. It is worth putting on record the fact that there are more Conservative councils than there are Labour and Liberal Democrat councils put together, so of course there will be more issues and question marks in relation to those matters. I would like to see more incentives provided by the Government so that councils, regardless of their colour, would be encouraged to look at renewables as opposed to other energy sources.

David Taylor (North-West Leicestershire) (Lab/Co-op): I do not think that that point has substantial weight. The same sort of attitudes were present before the major wave of new Conservative councils was elected two years or so ago. Often, in the more balanced councils—in terms of political control—it was the Conservative councils that led the opposition to energy initiatives of this kind, so I am not sure that the hon. Gentleman's point is all that significant.

Mr. Ellwood: I did not quite understand that intervention.

The point is that today, we are where we are. If councils are not embracing the opportunity for renewables, we need to look at ways of incentivising them to do so. What is wrong is that despite 10 years of commitment by this Government, the contribution to Britain's energy requirement made by renewables has gone from 1 per cent. to 1.3 per cent. That is not good enough, considering the pressure that we are under to find other ways of providing our energy. It is almost as if a pilot were to take off without knowing how much fuel was in the tanks and then started searching around for somewhere to land to refuel. That is not sensible planning for the future. That is my basic argument. What has happened in the last 10 years, as the oil and gas have been running out? The initiatives that we need to prepare ourselves for the future when the lights may be threatened, or indeed turned out, have not been forthcoming.

In Germany it is against the law to run out of fuel while driving a car on the motorway: one has to plan ahead. I wonder what the fine would be for a Government who were running towards empty, or if their tank ran out completely. It would probably be more than this Government could afford.

It is helpful to remind ourselves of our energy needs. It is fair to say that for many years we have been blessed with energy efficiency in this country, as we have had an ample supply. Our requirement is roughly around 60 GW, although it is likely to decline this year, simply because of the recession and the consequent reduction in requirements. Current capacity is 76 GW, so one might ask what all the fuss is about. According to the Government's own statistics, our energy requirements are likely to increase by around 40 per cent. over the next 20 years.

Let us look at our resources more closely. We have known for years that North sea oil is on the decline. Surely the recent oil price spike at $147 a barrel would have set the alarm bells ringing to say that what we are doing is not sustainable. We clearly cannot carry on this way—and not only on account of the cost of the fuel, because it is simply running out. Labour has watched, like a rabbit caught in the headlights, as the North sea oil dials swing round towards empty.

The story with gas is not much different; about a third of our requirements are now imported. UK storage capacity has also changed little. That was pointed out a number of times to the Secretary of State, who gave the most waffly reply I have heard in this Chamber about the reasons why we cannot have a legal requirement, as France and Germany do, to keep a certain number of days' supply of gas in storage in the UK. In France it is 125 days; in Germany it is 95 days; in the UK we average around 15, but last winter we went down to just four days' capacity, coming very close indeed to running on empty.

The question has been raised—the hon. Member who raised it is no longer in his place—about an issue that the Front-Bench teams need to answer: rough storage, and who owns the gas itself. Germany owns a number of the companies that operate in the UK, but is it right that when they are running low on gas, they can remove gas from rough storage here in the UK and take it back to Germany to look after their own residents? The Government should provide an answer to that question.

The nuclear story provides another tale of woe. Again, 30 per cent. of energy needs were once being met, but we are now down to 12.5 per cent. The Magnox fleet is going to disappear almost completely over the next few years, as are pressurised water reactors. These cannot be replaced overnight. The Government are at last waking up, but they will turn around and say, "What are the Conservatives going to do?" That is not a powerful argument, when it is under their watch that the nuclear power capability has been reduced to the point at which we cannot replace those power stations, like for like, in time to meet the same energy requirements as before.

As I said in an earlier intervention, it took 22 years to get planning permission to build the Dungeness nuclear power plant. The processes have been speeded up, but the technology is no longer here in the UK. Virtually every nuclear power station is different—unique—as we have built one, learned from it and then moved on to build another one. That is not a good story. Much of the technology and the people have moved elsewhere, to places such as South Africa, Canada, the United States and France. We should be looking to international organisations to come over here to teach and train us so that we have the right nuclear capability to meet our needs in the future.

Mr. Jamie Reed: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his comments about Cumbria, but on the subject of the nuclear industry, I urge him please not to talk down the capability of the UK industry. Many of the points that he has made are not true. I know he is supportive, which I welcome, but let us stick to the facts.

Mr. Ellwood: I am sticking to the facts. I am on the all-party nuclear energy group, and we have made a number of visits across the globe. We meet British people—now slightly aged, I have to say—who worked in the British nuclear industry and have now moved away from it. I could mention the CANDU systems in Canada, the pebble-bed systems in South Africa, and other systems developed in France and Sweden, all of which benefited from British interest and British know-how, as they started off here in the UK.

The second absence from the Bill is any mention of nuclear fusion, and I suspect that not many Members are aware of what is going on in that connection. The Minister of State shakes her head, and if she were to intervene now, she would no doubt say, "Oh, that's 20 years away." Well, it will continue to be 20 years away, so long as we continue to fail to invest in it. Given that that is effectively nuclear power utopia, I cannot understand why we are not doing more to find something that would allow us to build only one more set of nuclear fission reactors before moving over to nuclear fusion. Nuclear fusion combines hydrogen, turning it into helium, creating water, so it is very safe: there is no radioactive material and there are no CO_2 emissions, making it extremely clean. Yet we are doing nothing—no research, no discussion in the UK of how to move that debate forward. Scientists know that that power can be harnessed, but because it a long time in the future, the attitude is that it will not happen on our watch; I am afraid that that is not the right attitude.

As for coal, we have a supply, but as we have known for a long time, it is a big polluter. If we have known that for a long time, why are we only now coming to terms with the challenges, issues and benefits of carbon capture and storage? Again, it is all too late in the day.

Paddy Tipping: The hon. Gentleman will remember the project to develop clean coal technology at Grimesthorpe—but it was closed by the last Tory Government.

Mr. Ellwood: I repeat that that took place before I had the opportunity even to comment on it; I was still at school studying chemistry. The hon. Gentleman has been in the House for 10 years now, and this Government have been responsible for 10 years, so at what point do the Government finally stop using, "Oh, it was the last Government's fault," as an excuse to cover what they are not doing now. That debate is getting very old indeed.

I put it to the Minister that the levy that the Bill introduces will penalise the entire industry, including those who do not produce any CO_2 emissions. Would it not be an incentive for the producers of electricity and energy—and, indeed, the consumers—to move over to greener forms if they knew that they would not then have to pay the levy? I am ready to give way to the Minister to explain, but it does not look as if she is going to intervene. We will wait for her summing up.

Finally, on renewables, the point has been made that we have managed to increase our capability in the UK by only 0.3 per cent. There are more imaginative ways of using renewables. The point has been made that there are so many buildings—council-owned buildings and other public buildings—that would readily provide a place for wind turbines of varying sizes, in order to increase our contribution. Those are not all Tory council town halls either, as there are myriad places where we could do that. That is the approach that we need.

To have 10,000 wind turbines by 2020 is a fantastic target, but this Government did not manage to save a major wind turbine company close to my constituency, in the Isle of Wight. What a shame that it has now gone out of business. I am afraid that this provides another example of people upping sticks and moving out of this country: their experience, technology and resources have now left these shores.

Simon Hughes: I share the hon. Gentleman's regret about the fact that the Danish company Vesta is ending its activities on the Isle of Wight, but I hope that he will be open enough to accept that one of the causes of its frustration was the consistent opposition to those activities by the Tory-run council there, and by his Tory colleague the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Turner). When those at Vesta's headquarters asked what support it was receiving locally, it had to answer, "Very little, if any."

[Simon Hughes]

Mr. Ellwood: The hon. Gentleman has made a fair point. As I think I said at the beginning of my speech, we need to find ways of incentivising all councils, whatever their colour or persuasion. If it is true that councils are turning their backs, we must think about how the situation can be reversed. However, I see nothing in the Bill that would take us down that route. I see nothing in it that would persuade councils on the Isle of Wight, in Felixstowe or anywhere else to invest more in technology of this kind.

The position in Europe is just as bleak as it is here in the United Kingdom. Europe is already largely dependent on imports—90 per cent. of oil, 80 per cent. of gas and 50 per cent. of coal come from outside Europe—but we cannot lean on our neighbours and depend on them to provide long-term support for our energy needs. That raises the question of security of supply—another issue that is absent from the Bill. I had an opportunity to visit Georgia and observe the development of pipelines there. A political game was being played, involving the geography of the placing of pipelines in Europe. What is worrying is that Russia is now in a strong position to turn the taps on and off, and we may see prices fluctuate across Europe. We must not find ourselves in that position again, particularly as we approach another tough winter.

We are seeing an abdication of responsibility by the Government. I do not understand the reason for the delay in the introduction of smart meters, and of charging points for electric cars—those were mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Tunbridge Wells, and the nation is calling out for them—and the upgrade of the 50-year-old grid. Moreover, surely an energy Bill should focus on reducing heat requirements, given that they constitute 42 per cent. of our energy requirements. It should also focus on greener transport systems. The introduction of TGV-style trains would reduce the need for aeroplanes, and an increase in the number of light railways might encourage people to use their cars less. A particular interest of mine is the introduction of grants or other incentives for councils to provide safer bike lanes, to reduce the need for cars for the school run—a major contributor to road pollution.

There is little in the Bill with which we can disagree—but then there is little in the Bill anyway. As the Copenhagen summit gets under way, I hope that none of the delegates are turning their eyes in the direction of this Chamber to see whether they can learn anything from what is being said here. I fear that they would be sadly disappointed.

From an energy perspective, Labour's period in office will be seen as a wasted decade, and the Bill represents a wasted opportunity. The nation can rightly ask why we have not planned for the future. Our oil and gas are running out, our nuclear power stations are grinding to a halt, and our coal is becoming too expensive and dirty to use. Why has more not been done not only to ensure that we can generate the power that we need, but to ensure that our homes are more energy-efficient? More fundamentally, what has been done to keep the lights on in the future? I believe that we have just 15 days of supply—although that may have been reduced to four days. The test will be the coming winter. I shall be interested to hear about the Minister's plans for the winter, and the emergency procedures that may be required should it be as harsh as winters have been in the past. We are gambling with people's lives, as was proved by the increase in death tolls during last year's harsh winter.

Earlier generations created the problem of greenhouse gases through ignorance. The Government are compounding that problem with arrogance, by doing so little. We have had 15 Energy Ministers in 10 years. That is recycling at its worst. It seems that we must wait for a Conservative Minister to take the neglect of our energy requirements seriously.

7.4 pm

Dr. Desmond Turner (Brighton, Kemptown) (Lab): I shall not be as churlish as Opposition Members about the Bill. It is indeed a modest Bill, but I think it unreasonable to expect a compendium Bill dealing with every outstanding energy issue to go through Parliament in the limited time that we have before the general election. For obvious reasons, this Bill focuses on what is needed immediately.

I welcome the Bill, and I gather that, in a way, the Opposition do as well, so I assume that they will not vote against it. [Interruption.]

Madam Deputy Speaker (Sylvia Heal): Order. There are too many sedentary exchanges.

Dr. Turner: My apologies, Madam Deputy Speaker.

As I was saying, this is a modest Bill. Only three issues, in my view, have not been addressed at all, or have not been addressed as much as they might have been. The reason why we need the Bill is clear, however. We have a liberalised electricity market, for which we must thank the Opposition in their former role as the Government. I sometimes think that our problems with energy policy would be much easier to deal with if we still had the late, lamented dear old Central Electricity Generating Board. If that were the case, we could simply say, "We are going to do this," rather than having to act through a purely commercial market. All change is not progress, and the liberalised electricity markets have created more problems than solutions.

Low-carbon or zero-carbon technologies cost more than fossil-fuel technologies. It is as simple as that. Deploying those technologies requires market support mechanisms, or, to put it more crudely, subsidies. There is no way of getting around that in the present circumstances, and it is the reason for part 1 of the Bill. No one will invest in the building of plants with carbon capture and storage without a subsidy to cover the extra cost. That basic fact applies to renewable energy and, indeed, to the nuclear industry. If the nuclear industry had to compete with gas or coal-fired power generation on costs, it would not have a chance. It has made that clear through a number of darkly muttered remarks, for example, about the need for a sufficiently high carbon price to underpin its investment. The industry would also like long-term supply contracts, thank you very much, to guarantee it flat-out running of its reactors and make it as economic as possible.

Mr. Goodwill: The playing field would, of course, be more level if the fossil-fuel generators had to take care of their own waste. At present, they simply expel it into the atmosphere for us or future generations to deal with. At least the nuclear industry contains and processes its own waste. Surely that is the point of what we are discussing today.

Dr. Turner: I think that one of the best ways to level the playing field is to have a realistic carbon price. We currently have a ludicrous price in the EU emissions trading scheme. I know that one of the things that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hopes will emerge from Copenhagen is an internationally agreed means of increasing the carbon price.

Mr. Weir: I was somewhat astonished by what the hon. Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Goodwill) said about cost. Would the hon. Gentleman care to remind us of the current cost of the Nuclear Decommissioning Authority to deal with historical nuclear waste, never mind new nuclear waste?

Dr. Turner: It is about £70 billion, but I have slightly lost track; there is, however, a mounting pile of both waste and cost. I should add that the nuclear industry does not want to know about making a level playing field.

Returning to my theme, the whole process would be made a great deal easier if we had a sensible carbon price. If we had such a carbon price, we would not need to exact as much money through a levy from electricity consumers. It is the electricity consumers who will have to pick up the tab for the levy, and £9.5 billion is quite a lot of money. It could be raised through a carbon tax—that was a Freudian slip. I have long advocated our having a carbon tax, but I should have referred to it being raised through a carbon price—although that does not really matter because a sensible carbon price would, in effect, be a carbon tax, so that is just semantics.

It has now become really quite respectable to suggest that we should have a mechanism for underpinning the price of carbon. That has now been suggested by Lord Turner, chair of the Committee on Climate Change, and by many others. If we had a realistic carbon price, that would help to level the playing field for competition in generation. We need to do that, because it is unrealistic to think we can continue to subsidise everything, as we have to do now to get decarbonised electricity supply.

We cannot do that through regulation because of the liberalised market. We could regulate, however, to say not only that no coal-fired power station will be built without CCS in place, but that there will be no coal-fired generation at all. Under that restriction, only zero or low-carbon generation technologies would be licensed, but we would not get those power stations built, because the capital markets are in such a bad state that no one would invest in them. We are therefore, in effect, having to cough up subsidies to satisfy bankers. It all comes back to bankers—I am sorry to have to say that, but it is true. They want to see returns on their investments, and the only way they can get them is through subsidies: in this case, it would be the CCS levy, and in the case of wind and other renewables, it would be renewables obligation certificates. Either way, there has to be the subsidy.

That brings me on to the first matter that I would have liked the Bill to address. As has been mentioned, we have some of the best raw energy-producing resources of any country in the world in terms of wind, wave and tidal stream, but although some of our wave power and tidal stream technologies are at the point of being ready for commercial exploitation and deployment, that will not happen under our current market support regimes. Even if the double-ROCs for offshore wind could be accessed, it would not be enough because such new technologies have higher capital costs, which can only come down with increased scale, the development of supply chains and so forth.

Other countries, notably Germany and Denmark, have deployed market support systems that will develop technologies so they reach the point of cost reduction. In the process, although such countries may have to invest a bit, they will gain enormously in terms of the green industries they develop. We could have had the wind industry in Britain if we had done that. Like Germany, we might now have had 250,000 extra jobs and several billions of pounds-worth of turnover from the manufacture of wind turbines. We have an opportunity with wave and tidal stream technology, but it will not happen unless we put in place a market support mechanism—to be brutally honest, a subsidy—that will bring that through.

I would have liked to have seen a provision in the Bill to extend the levy principle to support and foster new technologies, because none of the current market support systems are doing the job. We could have a magnificent tidal stream industry in this country, as exemplified by the first commercial machine, SeaGen, in Strangford lough. There is a danger, however, that those involved in the industry will be forced to go to other countries, where there is a market support mechanism.

Mr. Elliot Morley (Scunthorpe) (Lab): My hon. Friend is making a very good argument. On market mechanisms, does he not agree that we might look back at a previous Bill on feed-in tariffs? I know it depends on the scale of generation, but there is a possibility of helping emerging technologies through the feed-in tariff applied. Although the Department of Energy and Climate Change has put in place a very good tariff structure, is there not an argument for having a higher rate—perhaps only temporarily, for a few years—to encourage those new technologies?

Dr. Turner: I absolutely agree, and I thank my right hon. Friend for that intervention. I do not mind whether the measure in question is called a feed-in tariff, a multiple ROC or a special levy, as long as it does the job. Obviously, it would be temporary and tied to the state of development of a given technology. If we do not do that, however, we run the risk of losing an industry that this country could have—it is on the point of development—and that could produce gigawatts of power that could, in turn, produce great industrial benefit. If that does not happen, we will still want to deploy tidal stream power in this country, because we have so much of it, but instead of being the manufacturer and getting 100 per cent. of the added value of deploying the technology, we would get very little—perhaps about 10 per cent. We would be a client. We would be importing machines made abroad that could have been made in Britain, and we would lose a potentially huge export industry as well.

[Dr. Desmond Turner]

I therefore make the following serious plea: we should examine the possibility of incorporating in the Bill a new support mechanism for emerging technologies, so that we no longer have to try desperately to get the Treasury to agree to tweaking the existing mechanisms. That just is not happening, and that is extremely frustrating for those in the industry, those who want to see it develop, and all of us who want this country to have the low-carbon electricity it can produce for us and the contribution it can make towards our climate change efforts. I think we have now had enough of that whinge, although it is intended to be a very constructive whinge.

It is inevitable that energy prices will increase. I cannot think of a single factor that would bring them down. Oil and gas prices are going up and the recession will not counter that. The general trend is inexorably upwards, just as the general trend in climate change is of global warming and temperatures moving inexorably upwards. It is vital that the increased burden of decarbonising energy is shared reasonably and that it does not fall on the poorest sections of the community, so I very much welcome the social tariff provisions of the Bill. I think that they are long overdue. We need to ensure that they bite the energy companies. It means that the rest of us have to pay, but I have no objection to that. Some of us accept that principle with taxation, although I cannot say that everybody does.

That is vital, but the tariff is not the only thing. Quite a lot has been said already about energy efficiency, and a social tariff regime needs to go hand in hand with increased energy efficiency. Whatever financial difficulties there are, we need to explore alternative mechanisms of ensuring that those people at the lower end of the income spectrum who will benefit from the social tariffs can also benefit from support for increasing the energy efficiency of their homes. That is the other gap in the Bill as I see it. Such an approach will not necessarily involve great expenditure on the part of the Treasury and it can be done by manipulation of the market. I would like to see that explored.

Finally, we come to my concerns about Ofgem. Those who are easily bored might remember that I have been having a pop at Ofgem for many years now, trying to get some responsibility for sustainability into its mandate. Ofgem has resisted that quite strongly. However, my efforts achieved something in 2004, when sustainability was added to the secondary responsibilities of Ofgem—I cannot remember the list of them now, but it was quite long. There it stayed, but it made very little difference to Ofgem's behaviour in practice because Ofgem has focused almost entirely on competition and security of supply up until now. I am very pleased that the Bill puts sustainability and climate change at the top of Ofgem's primary responsibilities.

It will be extremely interesting to watch the behaviour of Ofgem when it has to consider such matters as its primary remit, with everything else following them. That should produce a culture change that is long overdue. Ofgem's role is central to all energy policy, so if it is singing from the climate change hymn sheet, we might see some real progress towards large-scale deployment of renewable energy.

Martin Horwood: I am broadly in sympathy with the hon. Gentleman's argument. It is long overdue that sustainability should take a major place in Ofgem's remit. Is he satisfied with the rather circuitous and convoluted way in which the Bill attempts to do that, by redefining sustainability as one of the consumer benefits?

Dr. Turner: That is an interesting question, but I do not think it matters. The provision states quite clearly that sustainability is a primary part of Ofgem's responsibility and, of course, it is a consumer benefit. Fighting climate change is as much a consumer benefit as anything else. In fact, I think that it is probably one of the greatest benefits that we can give to successive generations of consumers. I do not have a problem with that. As long as Ofgem finally starts to go green, I shall be quite happy.

The other thing that worries me about Ofgem is that, although for years it has been rather tentative in its regulation and how it has tackled abuses of the energy market by energy companies, it needs more powers. Even if it has the will to go in a particular direction of enforcement, it definitely needs more powers. The Bill contains some. Although I have not worked through the issue enough to define the extra powers that I think Ofgem might need, this is one part of the Bill that will need very careful scrutiny in Committee. It could well be expedient to increase further Ofgem's powers beyond those that are already in the Bill.

I endorse the Bill, although I think it can be improved. I realise why it is a modest Bill. It fits within a time setting. It is what it is and can only be what it is. However, even within the limited time that we have left of this Parliament, I think that it can be usefully improved. I sincerely hope that the whole House will at least give it a Second Reading.

7.27 pm

Mr. Robert Goodwill (Scarborough and Whitby) (Con): It is a pleasure to follow the hon. Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Dr. Turner).

We have become accustomed to relying on an uninterrupted supply of electricity in this country although, as the hon. Member for Sherwood (Paddy Tipping) mentioned and as I also read in a report from the Environmental Audit Committee—in fact, only the Minister has not recognised it—we are heading for a situation in which the lights could well go out in 2017.

Every aspect of our modern life is plugged into the grid. There are usually no back-up arrangements, except perhaps for hospitals or dairy farmers who need to keep their milking machines going. For many vulnerable people and families, the prospect of losing power supplies is a real concern. Even our gas central heating systems and cookers rely on electricity to function, so there will be no Christmas dinner without electricity. In fact, a couple of years ago in my part of north Yorkshire there were power cuts on Christmas day, which created particular problems.

We have identified two serious challenges. The first, as I have mentioned, is security of supply of electricity and gas. The experience in Ukraine a couple of years ago, when Gazprom decided to turn off the supplies, showed that this is all too great a threat for many parts of the world. Of course, the United Kingdom is at the end of the pipeline, and we have heard it asked whether Germany could pull back supplies that are already in the UK should there be a strategic problem.

The second challenge—and this is the really big one—is CO_2. When the North sea oil and gas run out, our major indigenous supply of energy will be the coal that stretches from under the south Yorkshire area to under my constituency in north Yorkshire to where the Barnsley seam extends.

One decision that the Government have made, which I think was right, is to embark on a new generation of nuclear power stations in this country. I am disappointed that the Liberal Democrats have still got a head-in-the-sand attitude, whether it is out of political opportunism or whether they just sing too much to the tune played by Greenpeace and Friends of the Earth. They need to wake up and realise that the nuclear industry has a vital part to play in delivering our CO_2 targets.

Martin Horwood: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Goodwill: I thought that the hon. Gentleman might intervene.

Martin Horwood: I am grateful for the hon. Gentleman's contribution to the Liberal Democrat policy debate, but is he aware that no nuclear power station has ever been built on time and to budget and that we are still paying between £1 billion and £2 billion to clean up the last generation of nuclear waste? We have still not found anywhere or anyhow to dispose of the waste from the last 40 years of nuclear waste generation; why on earth would we want to go down that route again?

Mr. Goodwill: If the hon. Gentleman spoke to the Canadians, he would find that they are delivering nuclear power stations to places such as China and Korea to budget and on time. As for legacy waste, much of it has come from our military nuclear developments. The incremental amount of waste that will be produced by the new generation means that that is not an insurmountable problem. I visited a nuclear power station in Canada with some people who had never been in a nuclear power station before and who had no experience of nuclear. When we saw some waste in a tank, they were asked how much they thought there was—a week or a year's supply—but the tank contained the past 15 years-worth of waste. The nuclear industry's waste is manageable.

The hon. Gentleman should speak to the Canadians about how they address their waste problem. They picked the Canadian equivalent of Jonathan Porritt, a lady called Elizabeth Dowdeswell, to set up a commission, and it became apparent that the problem of nuclear waste management and disposal is not a technical or scientific issue but a purely political one, and that courageous decisions have to be taken to enable waste to be managed and for closure on that issue.

Martin Horwood: I have to accept that even a Liberal Democrat Government would have to find some way of managing that waste—that is inevitable, as it is already in existence—but will the hon. Gentleman tell us when, how or where the last generation of nuclear waste will be disposed of? An answer to one of those three questions would do.

Mr. Goodwill: The current generation of power stations has a credible plan to store waste in tanks until it cools down. It could then be transferred to air-cooled silos for 40 or 50 years. In the long term, the answer would be long-term geological storage—not disposal, but storage—because future generations might need to access that nuclear fuel again to use in a new generation of power stations, perhaps in 100 years' time. I believe that the Government have made the right decision in embarking on a new generation of nuclear power stations, although it is true that the nuclear industry in the UK has had a somewhat unfortunate history.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Ellwood) talked about bumping into nuclear engineers from the UK in different parts of the world. When I was in Canada, I was told that the premier league engineers had been in Britain building our gas-cooled reactor fleet. The theoretical design behind those reactors made them the safest in the world, but the problem lay with the practicalities of building the power stations, particularly as no stations were built to exactly the same design. I think that there was a similar strategy behind the building of Concorde: we thought that we were the best engineers in the world and that we could engineer our way through anything. Perhaps, as lessons were learned, we should have gone down the route of the Americans and French with the pressurised water reactor, which was originally designed to be put into a nuclear submarine or aircraft carrier, as that has turned out to be the most dependable and reliable reactor.

Nuclear has a bright future. The only problem is that the decision to build has been left 10 years too late, and so we might have a problem keeping the lights on in the meantime. Certainly, there is plenty of fuel for the nuclear industry. When I was in Canada, I spoke to representatives of the nuclear uranium mining industry who told me that there was enough fuel for at least 40 years. The problem is that there is no incentive for anyone to prospect for more fuel in places such as Canada and Australia, given that the likely return will be more than 40 years away. Some of the scare stories that have been put about by the Liberal Democrats have more to do with political opportunism than with the best interests of the UK economy and the world climate. It is all very well their saying that renewables are the answer—and they are, absolutely, part of the answer—but so is nuclear. I am pleased that we will have a new generation of nuclear power stations, and I hope that they will be a start. I hope that, in years to come, when we look at future generations, we consider having still more nuclear.

If we get to the point at which nuclear supplies more than just the base load supply, we should look at how the surplus generation can be used. Our coal and gas stations can be turned on and off; at half time in the World cup final, in which I sincerely hope England will be playing, when everyone goes to put the kettle on, those gas and coal stations can be cranked up. The nature of nuclear generation means that those stations have to be on permanently so, looking a little further ahead than the Bill envisages, we should consider ways we can use our successes.

Martin Horwood: I am extremely grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving way again. He is being very generous, given that I am criticising his points, but I cannot let him get away with the idea that nuclear power has ever been on constantly in this country. Can he name any period in which all our nuclear power reactors have been working at once?

[Martin Horwood]

Mr. Goodwill: I recall having just mentioned the technical problems that we have had with advanced gas-cooled reactors and that that is why we changed to the technology that the French and Germans developed—the Sizewell technology—which has been proved to be more dependable.

As I was saying, if we have that base load supply at night when people are not boiling kettles, we will have to think about how to deal with that. I read an interesting paper about developing a hydrogen economy. We already have motor cars that will run on hydrogen—BMW and other manufacturers have taken the lead on that. It would certainly be practical to use hydrogen that is generated by electrolysis at night, or by a process that the Americans are looking into of producing hydrogen directly in a reactor core—I get notes from the hon. Member for Copeland (Mr. Reed), who knows more about the nuclear industry than I do. It would be practical to pump hydrogen around the existing gas network—hydrogen is a little more porous than the current natural gas that we put in there—and have a hydrogen economy based on our existing gas network. That idea looks a little further ahead than even the Bill envisages, but we do not want to close the door to such ideas.

I welcome the news from the Government about electric cars, and I am sure that even if there were a change of Government, that approach would not change. However, I think that some people are making claims that cannot be substantiated by research or data about how green electric cars are at the moment. I am not sure how green an electric car can be if it is being charged up using coal power, but it is important to allow the industry to develop electric cars because we will in due course have green electricity that they can use. Another issue to consider is smart metering and how car batteries can be used as a resource when they are on charge. We might be able to smooth out some of the peaks in supply and demand by using the resource of all those car batteries, when they are plugged into their chargers, to augment the grid at certain times.

Recently, at Imperial college, London, I looked at some very interesting developments involving fuel cells for domestic use. There was a boiler that looked every bit like the kind of normal combi boiler that we would have in our flats and homes, but it was producing electricity using a fuel cell that used natural gas, and the waste heat that was being produced was not being wasted as it is in big power stations in south Yorkshire, where it goes up as waste heat through cooling towers, but was being used to heat domestic water for the house. I hope that we will see that interesting technology go forward.

The Minister of State, Department of Energy and Climate Change (Joan Ruddock) indicated assent.

Mr. Goodwill: The Minister nods. It would be one way of having micro-generation in every home in the country and utilising that waste heat.

It was not clear to me, from the Secretary of State's introductory remarks, whether the research and development that we are embarking on will be kept as a UK possession, or whether we will share around the world the benefits of any new knowledge on carbon capture and storage. I suppose there is a difficult line to tread between allowing the UK to capitalise on and profit from the investment that we will put into that research and allowing the rest of the world, including developing countries, to benefit. Perhaps when she sums up the Minister will give us some idea of how the ownership of that technology, which will be funded partly by the Government but largely by electricity consumers, will benefit the UK. Will she tell us what degree of co-ordination there has been between the major economies, which are all looking into this type of technology, to make sure that we are not duplicating work that is being done elsewhere? Certainly, sequestration and carbon capture and storage are part of the solution. The most wonderful part of that would be an ability to burn biofuels in our power stations, capture the carbon and pump it down into the ground. That would be genuine sequestration: taking CO_2 out of the atmosphere from the biofuels and getting rid of it in a hole in the ground.

I think that there has been an element not of complacency but perhaps of thinking, "Well it's just going to happen. If we throw enough money at this research, it will definitely happen. Whatever research we put in, we'll come up with a solution." Although we could technically come up with a post-combustion or pre-combustion system and make it work, the problem is the cost and the energy loss. The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change report suggested that there would be a 25 to 40 per cent. energy loss from carrying out such processing of gases. I recall the regulation that we passed more than a decade ago on fuel quality for diesel and petrol vehicles, whereby we took the sulphur out of the diesel and petrol. There was a 10 or 15 per cent. energy loss at the refinery from that. For every environmental step forward, we sometimes have to take a short step back. Of course, a 40 per cent. energy cost in that sort of process will have a severe impact on people's energy bills.

We need to ensure that we are not missing the point on other sorts of technology that we should identify. We have been criticised for missing some of the low-hanging fruit. The proposals of my hon. Friend the Member for Tunbridge Wells (Greg Clark) to allow people effectively to borrow against the savings on their bills so that their homes become more fuel efficient seem a sensible way forward. Most businesses are doing that already. If they go to their bank manager with a proposal for investing £100,000 to save £25,000 a year, the bank would go with that. We want that sort of scheme to be extended to ordinary domestic consumers.

We also have a long way to go in heating our homes. We fitted a new central heating system in my home recently and put thermostatic valves on the radiators. However, the bedroom heating does not need to go on till perhaps 9 o'clock at night; the living room heating does not need to go on till 5 o'clock. In many homes, when the heating is on, it is simply on, and people do not go around the house adjusting their thermostatic valves. I hope that we will examine ways in which heating systems in houses can become more intelligent to allow people to make savings.

When I was in Canada, those generating electricity there told me that their peak load is not in winter, but in summer because of air conditioning. I hope that we will examine more carefully ways of using natural ventilation. In Parliament, if one has an office in Portcullis House, it is impossible to open the window. However, I am pleased that the temperature in the Chamber today indicates that we are leading by example in keeping the dial turned down.

My big disappointment with the Bill is that it does not refer to energy from waste through incineration and anaerobic digestion. There was a scheme in my constituency—everybody calls it the Seamer Carr tip; I think the council has a better name—which foundered because of the technology not working. It was a pyrolysis scheme, whereby waste was heated to produce gas, which was burned in an engine. The Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs put a lot of money into that scheme, which unfortunately did not come to fruition. That is an example of how we cannot always assume that technology will work.

It is interesting to consider other European Union countries, which comply with the landfill directive and incinerate their waste and capture the energy from it rather than continuing to throw it into holes in the ground. I suspect that it will not be long before the European Commission has something to say about that.

Mr. Andrew Pelling (Croydon, Central) (Ind): Is it not also important to try to gain the public's confidence about incineration? In south-west London, there is a great deal of controversy about the prospect of the polluting effects of an incinerator. Perhaps more work needs to be done on technology so that people can feel reassured that their environment will not be compromised by such incinerators in urban areas.

Mr. Goodwill: My hon. Friend is right. In Vienna, there is an aesthetically as well as environmentally nice incinerator in the middle of town. People in Austria understand that the standards that the large combustion plants directive imposes on new incinerators mean that they are in more danger from airborne pollution from a neighbour who has a garden fire and throws some plastic or other waste on to it than from a properly run incinerator—not a toxic waste incinerator, but a normal domestic waste incinerator. We face quite a challenge in persuading people that such incinerators are not a threat to their health or their children's health. Indeed, it is a sensible method of harnessing the energy in waste in a way that will save not only the planet but their bills.

Some local authorities—certainly in the borough of Scarborough in my constituency—go for recycling targets by, for example, targeting green waste, which many people previously simply composted in their gardens. That has increased the mass of waste that has been collected. The local authority also collects a lot of unseparated waste—thereby creating costs—which people would previously have perhaps taken to a collection area, where they could separate it themselves. The value of waste has been somewhat compromised by the wish to increase weight rather than value. We need to consider the incineration of waste and take the people with us to persuade them that it is a good thing for their community and the environment. The other way we can get energy from waste is through anaerobic digestion.

Although I welcome the Bill, it is the sort of step in the right direction that a person takes when their shoe laces are tied together. I hope that we will have the opportunity in Committee to improve the measure and make it more fit for purpose.

Several hon. Members rose—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Before I call the next speaker, I reassure hon. Members that the temperature in the Chamber is not cool because the authorities and I are not trying to improve it. We have closed windows and are doing our best to increase the temperature so that it is a little more comfortable.

7.47 pm

Mr. Jamie Reed (Copeland) (Lab): It is a pleasure to follow the thoughtful and informed contribution of the hon. Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Goodwill), who made some relevant points.

Like the Bill, I will be mercifully brief. I declare an interest at the outset, as I will mention nuclear power and the nuclear industry throughout my contribution. You would be surprised if I did not, Madam Deputy Speaker. Sellafield is in my constituency and I therefore declare rather more than my interest: I declare around 17,000 interests—the number of jobs that it provides in my constituency and in west Cumbria, including for many of my family and friends. I am a former employee of the site—a third-generation nuclear worker

The Bill does not specifically affect nuclear generation. Many hon. Members have pointed out that previous Bills have attended to that. However, the measure raises issues, particularly on public subsidy, which are germane to future electricity generation from nuclear and other sources.

Before I continue, I thank the hon. Member for Bournemouth East, (Mr. Ellwood) for saying that Cumbria is open for business. We were badly affected by the floods. Our economy relies very much on tourism, and the roads, hotels, hostels and guesthouses are open. Please come and spend money there this Christmas.

There is a limit to how far we can play the blame game. There has been some of that in the Chamber this evening about specific elements of policy, in particular how we have arrived at the current nuclear policy. Having said that, the genesis of the malaise in the nuclear industry, which we have begun to remedy, is in the previous Government's failure to address the long-term waste disposal issues. I think that we have resolved that with the laudable and overdue creation of the Nuclear Decommissioning Authority and the effective prosecution of a properly informed, thoughtful, well-understood long-term radioactive waste management policy for this country. That commands support from hon. Members of all parties.

The hon. Member for North Southwark and Bermondsey (Simon Hughes) raised the issue of nuclear fuel, and the environmental consequences and security of supply issues affecting the new generation of nuclear reactors in this country. The answer is very simple: we already reprocess our spent fuel and, moreover, we continue to manufacture fuel in my constituency at Sellafield and at the Westinghouse facility at Springfields.

[Mr. Jamie Reed]

I shall make a brief pitch for something for which I have been pushing for four and a half years. There are 40,000 tonnes of uranium oxide—that is a commodity, not waste—and 100,000 tonnes of plutonium oxide, which is also a commodity and not waste. If we turn those materials into fuel, not only do we obviate the need to dispose of them, saving £3 billion to £4 billion, but we could run three new nuclear reactors at Sellafield over a 60-year period, eliminating the need to emit more than 0.5 million tonnes of CO_2 in the same period while providing 6 per cent. of the UK's electricity-based generation. That is a prize worth pursuing. In addition, we could provide perhaps the most comprehensive and effective way for the nation to meet its non-proliferation targets. That policy should be championed by any Government of any colour in future.

With that in mind, I welcome the Bill's main objectives. The establishment of carbon capture and storage technology—and consequently ours, and the world's, ability to reduce emissions of CO_2—the protection of millions of customers from energy price exploitation, and much-needed steps to end fuel poverty are at the heart of the Bill. It is a scandal in the world's fourth largest economy, at the beginning of the 21st century, that anyone in the UK should be affected by, or live in, fuel poverty. It is even more distressing to note that, inevitably, it is the least well-off, including thousands of elderly people, who find themselves in fuel poverty for lack of what is a basic essential need. As my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead) pointed out, the days of cheap energy are well and truly over, so it is right for the Government to mandate energy companies to discount bills for some people on the lowest incomes.

I pay tribute to the Secretary of State for taking up cudgels against electricity providers. That has been mentioned fleetingly, but I believe that he was right to intervene. His intervention was significant, and will be welcomed by people living in fuel poverty. As has been said, about 1 million households receive discounts and other help with their energy bills. However, that voluntary arrangement will end in March 2011. The Bill will ensure that when it does so, discounts for the most vulnerable will continue in law through compulsory social programmes, which should be welcomed by Members on both sides on the House.

It is right that we should spend more to take people out of fuel poverty, and I welcome the fact that new resources will be targeted at the most vulnerable consumers. I have mentioned the elderly, and I pay tribute to Age Concern for its interest in this issue over many years and its advocacy on behalf of elderly people in fuel poverty. Not only is it morally and socially right that we attend to the most vulnerable people in fuel poverty—as I have said, very often they are elderly people—but I am sure that there is a body of work about to be done somewhere demonstrating the value to the nation in policy areas such as the NHS of taking elderly people out of fuel poverty. It must be significant, and somewhere there must be a figure that we can put on that.

It must also be said that the fight against fuel poverty is a real test of the deregulated market. Historically, consumers have benefited financially from increased competition driving down the unit price of electricity. I do not think that anyone would doubt that, but in recent years the deregulated market has not so much driven down prices as resembled a multinational cartel. I am not suggesting for a second that the creation of fuel poverty was ever an aim of the market or of its constituent parts, but it is a consequence of the way in which it has conducted itself in recent years.

There are two alternatives to that model: first, the complete re-regulation of the energy markets, which may well be the inevitable consequence of continued failure; and secondly, the creation of a stronger regulator, with more socially responsible practices deployed by the energy utility companies, and a stronger framework established by Government designed to protect the most vulnerable consumers—not quite a public-private partnership, but not far from one. That is what the Bill strives to achieve, and I support it.

The House should make no mistake: the strength of feeling about fuel poverty is such that unless that second alternative works, re-regulation will become a necessity. This is the last chance for the energy utilities to prove that the current model of regulation can be effective and even beneficial, so I urge them to make it work. They must not follow the route of the banks. If the market cannot deliver for the people of this country, we will have no choice but to intervene.

Carbon capture and storage is a phenomenally important issue, and a great deal has been said about it today. If that technology can be proven to work, it may well rank in importance alongside the invention of the internal combustion engine, the advent of powered flight and the splitting of the atom. Given the nature of the challenges posed to human life by climate change, it may in time prove to be even more important than any of those landmark achievements. Again, it is right for Government to facilitate CCS. The Bill will introduce a financial support mechanism for up to four commercial-scale demonstration projects for CCS, and it will also permit the retrofit of additional CCS capacity for those projects, should it be required in future.

The benefits of CCS, as we have heard, are enormous. It will create truly green jobs. In the UK, 30,000 to 60,000 jobs in engineering, manufacturing and procurement will be created by 2030. It will leverage investment for the UK, and could create £2 billion to £4 billion a year for the economy, or a total of £20 billion to £40 billion between 2010 and 2030. It will develop a genuinely new industry for Britain, thus providing a massive regional opportunity for Tyneside, Teesside, the Thames Gateway, the firth of Forth, the Humber, Merseyside and other locations with industry sources that are CO_2-intensive, and offer a great opportunity for the establishment of British CCS business centres. In my view, those are jobs in the right areas.

CCS will also bring an end to unabated coal. The conditions that the Government propose are the most environmentally ambitious of any country in the world, and it is right that at the advent of the Copenhagen conference we should lead. Our plans will make the UK a world leader in technology that will help us to avoid the most severe effects of climate change. Something that has not been mentioned is the fact that CCS technology could be of real benefit in helping to facilitate or smooth the transition to a post-oil economy. When, inevitably, we begin to exploit tar and oil shale reserves and so on, CCS technology will be vital in enabling us to use them.

I fear, however, that the public at large do not yet know enough about CCS. I am concerned that there is a belief that CCS is a panacea or a silver bullet for the climate change challenge facing us all, but it is not like that. The Government are right to support and subsidise CCS, as it is a strategic and environmental necessity for the nation. Again, I draw a comparison with the nuclear industry.

CCS must command well-understood public support, so there is a job of work to be done. In many ways, as the hon. Member for Scarborough and Whitby suggested, the challenges of CCS make the challenges of radioactive waste disposal look like a walk in the park. We know a great deal about radioactive wastes—their properties, their effects, their half-lives, how to contain them, for how long, and the costs and engineering challenges associated with containment. As much as I support CCS, can we really say the same of it right now? How and where will carbon be stored? What are the public liability implications? How will it affect the unit price of electricity? What are the effects of storage on the environment? What would happen in the event of a leak or catastrophic failure? We must address all those questions, because CCS is too important to fail. However, it does not follow that it will succeed just because we want it to. Nevertheless, the signs are encouraging.

I support the necessary subsidy of CCS, and I place on record that I support subsidy in principle for any technology that will help us to ensure the security of our energy supplies and help us to combat climate change. Let me be explicit. If it is necessary, I would agree with state support for the nuclear industry and all aspects of it—although I do not believe it is necessary. I refer to power generation, fuel reprocessing, fuel manufacture, waste disposal and decommissioning. Will such an approach work? Ask the French.

The Secretary of State heads for Copenhagen well armed, able to demonstrate leadership and able to make British industry central to whatever policy initiatives and agreements emerge. We should all support him in doing so. These issues require cross-party political consensus, so it is a matter of regret that so many front-line Conservative figures are leading what can only be called a counter-revolution in the scientific and political consensus regarding climate change. It beggars belief that the Leader of the Opposition will not publicly denounce these senior figures in his party and his hand-picked non-dom environmental policy advisers, who have holed his attempted rebrand below the waterline—the rising waterline.

Instead of supporting the Government in an effective and non-partisan fashion for the benefit of the planet and entirely within the national interest, the Leader of the Opposition is presiding over a party that increasingly believes that the established science which attributes climate change to manmade activities is a sham. It is worse than neo-conservative flat earth science. So obsessed are they, many of them, with the size of government that they do not believe that the Government can achieve any good, even when the future of the planet depends upon it. That is not a philosophy. It is an illness. The right hand does not seem to know what the extreme right hand is doing.

The Leader of the Opposition currently resembles the Quisling of the climate change deniers, so if he seriously wants to bridge the chasm between his rhetoric and the reality of so many in his party, he should have the basic decency and courage to do that publicly. We need a consensus or else we invite failure. If we fail—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Michael Lord): Order. I am not very happy about the word that the hon. Gentleman has just used. Perhaps he would like to withdraw it.

Mr. Reed: Which word in particular, Mr. Deputy Speaker? [Laughter.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. Gentleman not aware of the word that I am talking about?

Mr. Reed: I am afraid not, sir.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He might consider withdrawing the word "Quisling".

Mr. Reed: Absolutely, sir.

If we fail, our children will never forget and they will never forgive.

8.2 pm

Mr. David Jones (Clwyd, West) (Con): Before those somewhat churlish closing remarks, I was going to say what a great pleasure it was to follow the hon. Member for Copeland (Mr. Reed), who speaks with great knowledge of the nuclear industry.

As many other Members have pointed out, it is not wholly coincidental that we are debating the Second Reading of the Bill on the first day of the Copenhagen summit on climate change, which has been described by some as the most important conference in human history. Although there may be some hyperbole in that description—I seem to recall that Yalta was quite important—the question of climate change is certainly the dominant one for our generation. Notwithstanding the local difficulties at the university of East Anglia's climatic research unit, it is clear to most sensible commentators that the world's climate is indeed changing. Whether climate change is caused by human activity is still a matter for debate.

A few years ago I was fortunate enough to pay a visit to the Argonne national laboratory in Chicago. My visit and the presentation that I received there left me in no doubt whatever that since mass industrialisation, the world's climate has warmed and is continuing to warm significantly. I, for one, am entirely satisfied that human activity is contributing significantly to global warming, and it is clear that for the sake of future generations we must take what action we can to attempt to slow that process and to adapt to it.

As other hon. Members have pointed out, however, the Government have been somewhat slow to respond to this phenomenon. Given that some 47 per cent. of carbon emissions are produced in energy generation, the Government's energy policy was for many years timid, with a refusal, for example, to accept and recognise the urgent need to replace our ageing fleet of nuclear power stations. Very late in the day they have recognised that nuclear generation should be an important part of the energy mix of this country, and that it will be necessary to build new nuclear reactors.

[Mr. David Jones]

The Government's slowness in recognising that fact means that there will be a hiatus of many years between the closure of our last remaining nuclear stations and the commissioning of the new ones. During that time the country will be prone to serious power cuts, and when the lights go off, the British people will remember who is responsible for that.

Nevertheless, there are signs in the Bill that the Government have belatedly recognised that security of supply should be central to our energy policy. To that extent, I welcome the amendments in clauses 16 and 17, which provide that the principal objective of both the Secretary of State and Ofgem is to protect the interests of consumers in relation to gas and electricity—interests which include the reduction of emissions of greenhouse gases, and security of supply. Indeed, security of supply must be a prime objective.

With the depletion of North sea oil and gas and the decline in our nuclear generating capability, it is all the more important to ensure that our supply of gas and electricity is as secure as it may be. This will undoubtedly mean employing various fuels for the generation of electricity, including nuclear, gas, conventional fossil fuels and renewables.

We in Wales have a significant interest in all matters relating to energy, which is perhaps unsurprising, given that we are sitting on large coal reserves, are in a particularly windy part of the country, and have coastlines that lend themselves to the production of tidal power, to say nothing of the fact that we are on the coast of the Severn estuary. We also have one of the last remaining operational nuclear power stations, at Wylfa, and I was pleased to see that only last month the Secretary of State indicated that Wylfa was a preferred location for one of the new fleet of nuclear power stations.

We also have Trawsfynydd, which is in the process of decommissioning, and which I have visited. It provides an example of an impressive exercise in the handling of a retired nuclear power station. I was told by the work force there that one of the things they would like most of all in that area is another nuclear power station, because nuclear power stations provide high-value jobs in areas where frequently there is no other work at all.

We also have the Dinorwig and Ffestiniog pump storage schemes. I am sure many hon. Members have visited those schemes. They are remarkable feats of engineering, able to fire up from complete shutdown in 12 seconds, giving an enormous and reliable boost to the energy supply in the grid.

Some three years ago, the Welsh Affairs Committee conducted an important inquiry into energy in Wales, and produced a follow-up report a couple of years later. Those reports were important contributions to the debate on energy production in this country, and I commend both of them to hon. Members. Some of the themes touched on by the Committee in its inquiry have to some extent been addressed by the Government and feature in the Bill. In particular, I welcome the proposals to take forward the development of carbon capture and storage technology, as set out in part 1.

Coal is an important resource for future generation in the UK. However, it is clear that if we accept, as I believe we must, that emissions from conventional power stations are contributing significantly to global warming, the problem of those emissions must be addressed.

The Select Committee on Science and Technology has indicated that in the long term, some 85 per cent. of carbon dioxide emissions could be stored safely through the development of carbon capture and storage technology, so it is highly desirable to do as much as we can to develop that. We are fortunate in this country in that we already have significant expertise in exploiting the North sea's resources, which themselves could be turned to the development of CCS technology. Exhausted wells in the North sea could also prove to be ideal locations for the storage of captured carbon. The Government therefore need to press on with the development of CCS technology, and I welcome the Bill to the extent that, in its own faltering way, it provides the launch pad for that development.

However, I have concerns about how CCS will be funded. My constituency—indeed, much of Wales—is largely rural, and I know from conversations with constituents that fuel poverty is a significant concern. Indeed, it has been estimated that more than 740,000 rural households in the UK live in fuel poverty, and that amounts to about 8 per cent. of rural households. Further, some 42 per cent. of rural households are not connected to the gas mains, as compared with only 8 per cent. of households in urban areas. As a consequence, many rural households rely upon liquified petroleum gas or fuel oil to heat their homes, and the Commission for Rural Communities has estimated that heating a three-bedroom house in the countryside costs some £1,300 per annum using LPG and £1,044 using domestic fuel oil, as against only £568 using mains gas.

Clause 4 provides that CCS demonstration projects will be funded by a levy on electricity suppliers. As other hon. Members have said, that levy will undoubtedly be passed on to consumers in the form of higher electricity prices, and although the levy will affect all consumers, it will have a disproportionate affect on rural households, which already pay considerably more than urban households to heat their homes. Clause 4(4) provides that the Secretary of State may make regulations exempting certain types of electricity suppliers from the levy, so I ask the Secretary of State to consider the disproportionate impact that electricity price increases will have on rural consumers, particularly because they will not benefit from the schemes in part 2 for reducing fuel poverty, because those do not apply to either LPG or fuel oil.

Returning to clause 17, I should say that the new statutory focus on greenhouse gas emissions will, or should, clearly lead to the development of new sources of renewable energy. At the moment, the principal form of renewable energy in Wales, as indeed in most of the rest of the country, is wind power. There is no doubt that wind should form part of an energy mix, but it is illusory to suggest that it can ever constitute a reliable form of base load generation. Its efficiency—at some 27 per cent. as opposed to nuclear power's 95 per cent.—is worryingly low, and the reasons why are obvious: wind by its nature is intermittent, and when the wind does not blow the turbines do not turn.

Wind can at best, therefore, constitute only an ancillary source of generation. However, in Wales and many other parts of the country, wind appears to be the only form of renewable generation that is being pursued, and the inherent hazardousness of that is self-evident. During the five coldest days last winter, very few turbines turned, and those days were just the period when we needed as much electricity as possible. The reason why they did not turn is quite simple: a large anticyclone was sitting over the British Isles, and as every schoolboy knows, anticyclones in winter tend to produce cold conditions without wind.

Nevertheless, wind farms continue to be built, and that is a significant phenomenon in Wales, where the Welsh Assembly Government's infamous technical advice note 8 provides a planning presumption in favour of wind farm development in the so-called strategic search areas, which tend to be located, interestingly enough, on Forestry Commission land, the rental income of which passes to the Welsh Assembly Government. Consequently, large areas of Welsh upland are being progressively colonised by wind turbines.

Indeed, the Hiraethog area of my constituency contains numerous small wind farms that have been consented to under town and country planning legislation. RWE npower renewables, however, now has plans to build in the Clocaenog forest a wind farm with an output of more than 50 MW, for which an application will soon be made to the Department of Energy and Climate Change under the provisions of the Electricity Act 1989. If that is consented to, the cumulative impact of development on the Hiraethog area will be to turn a beautiful rural landscape into an industrialised one—for a source of generation that is only 27 per cent. efficient.

Part of the problem is the way in which renewables obligation certificates are structured, a point that the hon. Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Dr. Turner) touched on briefly. ROCs are a very blunt instrument that reward the developers of wind farms at precisely the same rate as the developers of other renewable technologies—with one certificate per megawatt-hour. The Department has proposals for banding ROCs to encourage the development of other forms of renewable technology. However, wind farms would still have the benefit of one ROC per megawatt-hour under the Government's new proposals. That is particularly worrying, because other forms of renewable technology, if exploited, could prove significantly more efficient than wind.

In that respect, I agree entirely with the hon. Gentleman. He mentioned tidal power, which offers the most obvious advantages. The tide, after all, ebbs and flows with absolute predictability twice a day, every day, and Wales has many locations where tidal stream technology and tidal lagoon technology could be developed commercially. Swansea bay and Kimmel bay, which is off the coast of my constituency, offer particularly exciting potential for the development of tidal lagoons.

Indeed, evidence taken by the Select Committee on Welsh Affairs indicated that the Kimmel bay site had a potential generating capacity of 432 MW, which is by any standards a significant power station. However, ROCs have hitherto not differentiated between the various forms of renewable technology, so developers have tended to opt for the low-hanging fruit of wind turbines, with all their inherent unreliability, as opposed to tide. The Department's proposed re-banding will not settle that.

Wind turbines are relatively cheap and easy to construct, so developers will continue to opt for them, but the Government should reconsider their proposal for the banding of renewables obligation certificates as a matter of some urgency, so as positively to encourage the development of new technologies.

As other Members have said, this Bill is a step in the right direction, but it is a somewhat timid and faltering one. The Government need to be bolder and to act more quickly and decisively. Twelve years have elapsed, and only now are we really getting to grips with a problem that will affect our children very significantly indeed. We need to develop the nuclear power stations and to facilitate development of the reliable renewable technologies that the country needs. I believe that this will be done, but that the Government who achieve it will be a Conservative one.

8.19 pm

Nick Ainger (Carmarthen, West and South Pembrokeshire) (Lab): I was interested to hear what the hon. Member for Clwyd, West (Mr. Jones) said about wind energy, in particular. As one who also represents a rural constituency, I understand the concerns that many residents have about the impact of wind turbines on the landscape. However, we have to accept that this is a proven technology and that many other countries have developed their wind industries in areas that are important to their citizens in terms of landscape value. Perhaps the way forward is a policy that states that the wind industry should not develop in national parks and areas of outstanding beauty, but that elsewhere we must accept compromises because ultimately they give us the prize of low-carbon, low-emission generation. I accept what the hon. Gentleman says about its efficiency compared with base-load generation, whether in nuclear, gas or coal, but we must accept that it was never intended as a base-load form of generation.

I was somewhat concerned by the references to security of supply made by Conservative Front Benchers and several Conservative Back Benchers. What is missing from their equation is what is already happening in relation to the building of new generation facilities. In my constituency, the construction of a 2,000 MW gas-fired power station is under way. There is Staythorpe, a large gas-fired power station in Nottingham, and another such facility in Plymouth. Some Conservative Members gave the impression that the Government have done nothing, not recognising that the large combustion plant directive means that several coal-fired power stations will have to close because they have reached their decommissioning date, and several nuclear power stations will be phased out as well. Several projects are already in the pipeline and under construction. There is also a substantial expansion in wind generation, particularly offshore, which the Government were right to encourage. The offshore wind industry will start to deal with the problem of renewables development, which we must accept has been too slow in this country. It also presents many opportunities, not only for CO_2 reductions in our own economy, but through the expertise that Britain has developed, particularly in our offshore oil industry. There are real opportunities for British companies to develop offshore wind farms around the world.

Another aspect of security of supply, which was not mentioned by Conservative Front Benchers or anyone else, is what has happened in the new market that has developed for liquefied natural gas. At Milford Haven, there are now two large LNG terminals which together can supply 30 per cent. of the UK market for gas—just from one part of Wales. The development of a new LNG terminal at the Isle of Grain provides further opportunities for substantial imports from—in terms of the middle east—relatively stable regions. We also import gas in LNG form from the Caribbean. There are already several developments taking place that will provide us with security of supply in the gas industry. Unlike continental Europe, which has very little indigenous gas supply, we have had North sea gas. Basically, the industry grew on the back of that and used those gas fields as a storage facility. We are now moving on: supply from the North sea is declining and we must depend on imports. I emphasise that we import our LNG from stable areas, unlike continental Europe, which has depended on a Russian gas supply that, sadly, has been unpredictable, let us say, in recent times. That is why continental Europe has such substantial storage capacity—it is aware of that instability in its source of supply.

[Nick Ainger]

I welcome the Bill. The fact that we are now legislating for essential new technology indicates that the market has not worked. The science and technology behind carbon capture and storage is not new, but ways of converting it to a practical form, so that it can work in large coal or even gas-fired power stations, have yet to be developed and proved. It is clear that the market was not prepared to take the risk of such a development on its own, and given those circumstances it is right that the Government have said that this is an absolutely essential technological development, and we have to support it.

A number of Members asked whether it was fair to expect those who are on a green electricity tariff to make a contribution in their bills to the development of CCS. As the hon. Member for Clwyd, West said, the green tariff source of energy is not available to some people. Whether electricity is from a coal, nuclear or gas-fired station or a wind turbine, it all comes down the same cable at the end, so the idea that the contribution should be across the board is a relatively fair and reasonable compromise.

We should be saying to the industry now that we are going to set carbon emission targets for future new generation. As I am sure many Members did, I received a briefing from a number of organisations, including the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, arguing that the Bill should include a mandatory emissions performance standard for any new applications for fossil fuel power stations. That is a reasonable concept, because at the moment the large combustion plant directive means that generators know that they have to meet certain standards on emissions of sulphur dioxide, nitrous oxide and so on to prevent acid rain and other pollution. We should say to them now, "If you build any fossil fuel power station, we will set a mandatory emissions standard that you will have to meet." We should give them notice of that.

In my constituency, RWE npower has started building a large, 2,000 MW power station. During the planning process, the Countryside Council for Wales expressed concern that the waste cooling water that would be taken from Milford Haven, then returned there having gone through the plant, could cause environmental problems. The solution that it suggested would have required the construction of cooling towers. Although they would have been electric-powered, rather than the traditional very large ones that give off a plume of steam, the power station would have been significantly less efficient and its CO_2 emissions would actually have increased. In trying to address one environmental problem, we create another.

If, right from the word go, an emission performance standard had been set for the amount of CO_2 per kilowatt-hour generated, perhaps the company could have come up with an alternative use for the excess heat from the waste water. To be fair to the company, it is now trying to deal with the problem. It is considering developing, with another partner, large glasshouses for the production of fruit and vegetables or flowers. That interesting suggestion could perhaps be explored in Committee.

I intervened on my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to ask about social tariffs. I welcome the fact that we are now moving to mandatory schemes. The arrangements that have been made with some companies are welcome, but the identification of those who should, in my view, be eligible for social tariffs, is a major problem. Many such people are on benefits, and when it comes to identifying them, there are data protection issues. The fact that there will now be a mandatory scheme will hopefully encourage the Department for Work and Pensions to become involved in the decisions about who qualifies.

There are two issues related to social tariffs. First companies currently give social tariffs almost exclusively to pensioners, but Citizens Advice has informed us that not many pensioners remain in fuel poverty because of the effect of the winter fuel allowance. However, significant numbers of younger people, certainly below pensioner age and some who have children, go to citizens advice bureaux with major problems with fuel debt. It is fair to assume that if people have problems with fuel debt, they have problems with fuel poverty. It would therefore appear that a significant number of people who would benefit from a social tariff—perhaps a significant majority—cannot currently access one.

I hope that any mandatory scheme will definitely include those younger people. For example, a single pensioner on pension credit receives £130 and under-80s also qualify for the £250 winter fuel allowance, but a single person aged 50 on long-term incapacity benefit would have a total weekly income of £91.80, no winter fuel allowance and the same sorts of needs. There is also a very strong argument behind the Macmillan campaign for assisting those with cancer, to which hon. Members have referred.

The second issue, which has also been referred to by hon. Members, is that 4,300,000 households are not connected to the mains gas system and depend on heating oil or LPG for their central heating and hot water. A number of figures have been bandied about, but Citizens Advice estimates that someone who is not connected to the mains gas system has an average fuel bill of £1,700, whereas those who are connected to the mains gas system have bills of just under £1,200—approximately £500 difference, or £10 a week, purely because people have no connection to the mains system.

The sale and distribution of LPG and heating oil are not regulated, but they should be. We are talking about a significant number of people—4,300,000 households, almost exclusively in rural areas. It is the oil companies that are supplying the distributors of LPG and heating oil, so I do not see why they cannot be regulated for that part of their business by Ofgem. The mandatory social tariff should also be available to those people who are dependent on LPG and heating oil. I hope that in Committee we can make that happen. It is essential, as a matter of fairness, that we do so, given that the average consumer in a rural area has to pay at least £10 a week more than the average urban consumer. That is wrong, and we need to address the issue, especially for those families and individuals on low incomes.

I am glad that clauses 16, 17 and 18 will change the responsibilities and duties of Ofgem, and I hope that part of its responsibility will stretch to transmission capacity. Areas such as Wales have a strong electricity distribution system in the north and in the south, but very little in the middle, and wind farm developers are having a real problem—not in finding the funding to invest in building the turbines, but in obtaining a connection to the national grid. The hopes of achieving a significant offshore wind industry, especially down the west coast of both Wales and England—and Scotland, although I do not wish to speak for Scotland—depend on a submarine cable network. I hope that the Bill will provide sufficient powers to ensure that such development takes place as quickly as possible, so that we can take advantage of the major opportunities that it will bring. The regular wind provided by nature down our west coast should be exploited, and the main stumbling block appears to be the connection with the national grid.

I welcome the Bill, and I hope that it can be improved along the lines that I and other hon. Members have suggested. I hope that the Minister of State, who will take the Bill through Committee, will be able to accommodate some of the sensible suggestions that have been made in the debate so far.

8.39 pm

Mr. Mike Weir (Angus) (SNP): In this debate, we have had a canter around various parts of energy policy and climate change. It has been said that this is a modest Bill, but it is an important one that covers three distinct areas that impact on us all. Indeed, the Bill impacts on some issues that I have spent many happy hours debating in the Chamber over the years.

Part 1 deals with the framework for establishing carbon capture and storage, which follows the Budget announcement in April of "a new funding mechanism to support up to four carbon capture and storage demonstration projects, and £90 million to fund detailed preparatory studies."

The original carbon capture and storage project, or contest, seems to have been grinding on for some considerable time. The hon. Member for Sherwood (Paddy Tipping) was on the mark when he said that the rules seemed to keep changing. A shiver ran up my spine when the Secretary of State mentioned a contest for the remaining three projects. I hope that they will be an awful lot quicker than the contest we are going through, although better late than never.

Ministers are keen on telling us about our world leadership in carbon capture and storage technology, although sadly I doubt whether that is entirely correct now. We had an excellent opportunity to be in the lead with the proposed development of the gas station in Peterhead, but unfortunately that was lost, owing to endless dithering by the Government, and the project is now proceeding in Abu Dhabi. It appears that the reason the Government did not want to proceed with that project was that they wished instead to concentrate on pre-combustion processes, which they hoped would lead to an export industry, particularly to developing nations such as China. Unfortunately, that dithering led to China developing its own industry. Indeed, one of the few commercial projects that is up and running is the one in Beijing. We could end up importing such technology instead of being in the lead, and if we had developed it in the first place, we could well be in the lead.

Peterhead could also have helped to develop a method that would have been of particular benefit to the UK, as it would have allowed gas stations to de-carbonise and the carbon to be stored in the North sea's depleted oil and gas reserves. Sadly, it appears that the prejudice against gas continues, as I note that clause 6 defines a CCS demonstration project as "a project to demonstrate and assess carbon capture and storage technology through its use in commercial coal-fired electricity generation".

Gas seems to be specifically excluded by that definition. I wonder whether the Minister could explain in summing up why gas is excluded and why only coal is to be helped by the scheme. That point was also raised with the Secretary of State, who said that gas could come in further downstream, but we already have a lot of gas-fired stations and we still have a lot of gas in the UK continental shelf, although obviously it is diminishing. It therefore seems crazy not at least to look at the prospects of carbon capture and storage for gas, and instead of putting all our eggs in the basket of coal, important though that is.

That said, CCS provides an important opportunity. I strongly support the claim of the Longannet project, which is being developed in Fife, as a strong candidate for help from the scheme, especially given its proximity to the North sea and the ability, therefore, to enable the current infrastructure of the North sea oil and gas industry to be utilised in the development of CCS. The hon. Member for Carmarthen, West and South Pembrokeshire (Nick Ainger) made the good point that the oil and gas industry could develop to include aspects of CCS. There is a huge opportunity to ensure the transfer of those skills to new industries after the run-down of oil and gas, as many of them will be useful in CCS, particularly if it is developed by storing the carbon under the North sea.

The Scottish CO_2 study has concluded that there is a possibility that the North sea could store up to 200 years of CO_2 emissions, bringing in a huge amount of work and billions of pounds to the economy over a long time. Indeed, the EU is interested in a North sea grid to help to develop CCS and seize the potential for development in the old oil and gas fields and the saline aquifers. However, that brings up another issue that is not covered in the Bill and that the Government will need to address: how do we ensure that the North sea infrastructure is in place to enable that development to happen?

Much of the existing infrastructure of the oil and gas industry is now becoming fairly elderly. As the main fields in the North sea begin to wind down, there is a danger of losing that essential infrastructure unless action is taken to ensure that it is retained. Many of the new discoveries in the North sea are of much smaller fields, where the oil and gas industry perhaps needs a different set of infrastructure, but what is now in place for the depleted fields could be important for CCS. Given that we are probably still a decade away from the technology becoming commercially viable, will the Minister tell us whether either the Department of Energy and Climate Change or the Treasury have been in discussions with the oil and gas industries to try to agree on a regime that would ensure that that infrastructure is maintained and available for CCS?

[Mr. Mike Weir]

Part 2 deals with fuel poverty, an issue in which I have taken a great interest over the years. I hope that many of these measures will be entirely non-controversial. I warmly welcome the efforts to replace the existing voluntary schemes operated by the energy companies with a mandatory scheme. That is welcome and long overdue. One of the great problems with the existing system has been the bewildering variety of schemes that have been marketed by the energy companies. It is sometimes difficult for people to find out what the best social scheme for them might be. The new system should be much simpler for consumers, and will be a huge improvement.

Like many other Members, however, I regret that a vital element among the fuel poor has once again been omitted from the statutory regime—namely, those who rely on liquefied petroleum gas or home fuel oil to heat their homes. The Bill specifically defines the suppliers as electricity and mains gas suppliers. I appreciate that there are difficulties with the LPG and home oil market. There has been a Competition Commission inquiry into this matter, which ran for years and came to no real conclusions. The market is much more complex than that for electricity and gas supplies, which contains only a limited number of large companies, but this is none the less a serious issue for its customers. Many of them live in rural areas, where the gas mains will never reach, and their choices are very limited indeed.

The hon. Member for Carmarthen, West and South Pembrokeshire mentioned the difference in cost between the average mains gas bill and the average home fuel or LPG bill, but another factor that works against consumers in this market is that the problem is exacerbated by the fact that many face minimum delivery amounts. This means that they sometimes have to pay substantial sums up front in order to get a delivery of fuel. Those on low incomes—many of whom live in rural areas, and suffer disguised rural poverty—suffer particularly badly because of this. They simply do not have the funds to pay up front for large amounts of fuel oil. This can lead to their being unable to get the fuel, and unable to heat their homes. That is unacceptable in this day and age.

I appreciate that efforts are being made to get alternatives such as small-scale renewables to those consumers, but again there is a problem of cost. Many small-scale renewables, such as heat pumps, are very expensive and therefore outwith the reach of many people, even with the grants that are available. I agree with the hon. Member for Carmarthen, West and South Pembrokeshire that it is simply wrong that that group of people do not have the same access to social tariffs as those on mains supplies. Ministers must look again at this issue, which has plagued the whole fuel poverty debate for a considerable time. This is discrimination, pure and simple, against those people who are fuel-poor in rural areas. We must do something about this, and ensure that they get the same benefit as those who live in towns and can access mains gas. I also echo what has been said by others about those with long-term medical conditions who need more heat.

One of the impacts of ensuring that we meet our carbon targets and improve our infrastructure is that increasing amounts of subsidy are being paid by consumers through their energy bills. Centrica is the first to put a percentage on that, but I am sure that the other companies will do so. The CCS levy will inevitably be another part of that, as will all the other subsidies that are coming through.

People who do not benefit from the various tariffs or the winter fuel subsidy are going to find it increasingly difficult. It is simply unfair that those who require more heat because of long-term medical conditions do not get the help available to pensioners. Again, that must be looked at—as was said earlier, energy bills are not going to go down in the near future. Indeed, when Ofgem was before the Select Committee last week, I believe it said that up to 20 per cent. of the bill could come from various subsidies within a few years. That is a worrying statistic for those who have to pay the full amount of their electricity bills.

Part 3 deals with the change to the regulation of gas and electricity markets and the role of Ofgem. In my time in the House, I have had many spirited discussions with Ofgem about its actions, particularly regarding the hoary old issue of transmission charges. It has always seemed to me that Ofgem had a totally blinkered attitude defined by its ideological interpretation of its principal duty to look at the interests of consumers. That seemed to give it the idea that all generation should be based near the main centres of population, which meant that many renewable energy developments in the more remote areas of Scotland—having listened to the hon. Member for Carmarthen, West and South Pembrokeshire, I appreciate that this may also be a problem in Wales—where much of the wind and many of the waves actually are, faced very discriminatory transmission and access charges over the years to be able to get into the grid and transport the energy to market.

I appreciate that the Secretary of State is taking powers, which deals to some extent with the access charge problem, but there is still a transmission charge problem, although it has been slowly improving. I very much hope that the changes brought about by clause 17, which ensures that climate change and security of supply will become much more important for Ofgem to consider in coming to its decisions, will mean that much of the ideological baggage of the past will have to be jettisoned. I would caution, however, that before this can be done, there will have to be a major cultural change at Ofgem. It is one thing to put these clauses in the Bill, but strong action is needed to ensure that they are given the required weight in Ofgem's decisions. The recent report that Ofgem was seeking to undermine the introduction of feed-in tariffs is a matter of huge concern and shows that it is one thing for a Government to declare a policy and for Parliament to pass a Bill, and quite another to ensure that it is energetically followed through.

I am not sure that clauses 18 to 25 are so welcome, as they might have a negative impact on investment in energy generation in Scotland. These provisions relate to various constraints within the energy distribution system, and it has been a particular problem at the Cheviot gap between Scotland and England, which has rumbled on for quite some time.

At the moment, there are constraints on transmission under the British electricity trading and transmission arrangements. Generators in Scotland pay to be connected to, and to use, the Great Britain transmission system. Annually, such payments amount to 40 per cent. of the total transmission charges, which, allowing for the fact that Scottish generation represents only 12 per cent. of total generation, means that Scottish generators contribute approximately £100 million a year more than what would be a fair share. In return for the payments, generators are entitled to access and to use the transmission system to move their generated electricity to market. Consequently, when they cannot have full access to the system because of inadequate grid capacity, they should be entitled to compensation for the resulting loss—and these are referred to as constraint payments.

Electricity generation in Scotland already exceeds the capacity of the network, and additional renewable generation in Scotland will exacerbate the situation. Neither National Grid nor Ofgem has previously taken sufficient steps to address the capacity shortfall, even though the problem has been known about since well before 2005. There is an ongoing programme of infrastructure reinforcement works to increase capacity, but it will be several years before the interconnector capacity between Scotland and England is sufficient to eliminate constraints.

National Grid and Ofgem previously put forward a proposal that appeared to target Scottish generators. They wanted to change the system of balancing costs so that constraint payments would effectively be charged back to the same generators, which is to say that generators would pay constraint charges for not being able to access the system, which seemed bizarre in the extreme. Thankfully that proposal was junked. However, the Bill seems to be trying to achieve much the same, although I can see that its proposals are slightly better than the original one. They are limited to the balancing market, there are good appeal mechanisms, and there is a sunset clause that will remove the provisions when the much-delayed upgrades have been introduced.

Placing artificial limits on the level of compensation that Scottish generators would receive—irrespective of the value that they provide for National Grid or the losses incurred by generators—seems daft, but the proposal also seriously undermines the confidence of those who might otherwise invest in Scotland's thermal and renewable energy sectors, including carbon capture and storage. We are placing a great deal of faith in the future of CCS to meet our emission targets, and we need to do everything possible to ensure that that happens. We cannot discriminate against existing and future Scottish generators, because that would call into question the validity of the British electricity trading and transmission arrangements.

I ask Ministers to consider the matter again, and to ensure that they do not introduce a measure that will work against future generation. We need investment in new generation, regardless of whether it involves renewables or not, but such investment will not come about if constraints of this kind are imposed.

Another part of the Bill intrigues me. I may be completely—as we say in Angus—up the wrang dreel, but I should be obliged if the Minister would clarify the meaning of clauses 27 to 31. Clause 27, entitled "Adjustment of charges to help disadvantaged groups of customers", empowers the Secretary of State to adjust charges if he thinks that some consumers are paying unfair charges. So far, so good; none of us, I hope, would disagree with that. I fully appreciate that the clause constitutes, in effect, more or less a restatement of powers that exist in the Utilities Act 2000. It seems to me, however, that the definition of the categories of customers covers all the customers of the energy companies as set out in subsection (5). That is important because of subsection (3), which states that disadvantaged customers can constitute all the members of the group specified in subsection (5).

In theory, the upshot of that is that the Secretary of State would have the power to decide that all the customers of one energy company, or indeed all of them, were paying too much for their energy, and could decide that everyone's bills should be reduced. That might be welcome, but I think we need to know exactly what the clause means. One interpretation is that it would give the Secretary of State power to decide the level of charges that energy companies could impose.

Despite the reservations that I have expressed in regard to certain clauses, I support what the Government are trying to do. If I am fortunate enough to be selected as a member of the Committee, I shall look forward to many happy hours debating the issues. This may be a small Bill, but it contains a great deal that is very important to the future of energy generation in this country.

8.58 pm

Anne Main (St. Albans) (Con): One of the delightful aspects of speaking late in a debate is that one has heard so many wonderful speeches. However, the theme that has typified the speeches today is that the Bill is lacking in many respects—that it is a light Bill. A Labour Member, who is not present now, described his own comments as a constructive whinge. I had thought that it was up to the Opposition to produce constructive whinges, so it was good to hear so many of them, and to hear a long list of things that should have been in the Bill but—as has been freely admitted—have not been included because time constraints made it impossible to include anything of note.

I can think of a few measures that could easily have been included, as they touch on the theme of the Bill, but sadly they are not there. One involves the production of biodiesel from used cooking oil. I drew this to the attention of the Under-Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change in a Westminster Hall debate in October. It was a very lively and well-attended debate, and he said he would reflect on the point. I therefore hoped he might have inserted some constructive measures into the Bill, but I am sorry to say that thereare none.

That debate was about the production of biodiesel by recycling used cooking oil of UK origin. That is a highly sustainable way to produce energy. We have hundreds of restaurants, fast-food premises and commercial food producers, all of which use large quantities of cooking oils. When used, they become a waste product, and they can be both costly to deal with and difficult to dispose of. Within manufacturing industries, huge quantities of fats and oils are used, with significant quantities of waste food oils resulting from processing methods. When recycled properly, it can be a truly sustainable fuel, and we all want to increase our use of such fuels as much as possible. The Bill should have gone a little further in this regard, because it is ridiculous to dispose of such waste oils when they are ultimately a valuable recyclable resource. If we are worrying about the lights going out and shortages of fuel, it is also ridiculous that, despite the fact that the huge amount of waste from used cooking oils could be used highly efficiently as a truly recycled product, people are paying to get rid of it.

[Anne Main]

Earlier this year, I discussed this matter with Richard O'Keefe, director of Green2Go. He was the inspiration behind the debate in October. His company was established in 2007 with the express intention of providing renewable and sustainable heat and power solutions. We are hearing a lot about dirty solutions, such as coal, having to be made greener, but this is a green solution.

Green2Go is a relatively small company, but it is a key proponent of this effort. It estimates that there are currently 250 million litres of the waste product of used cooking oil available from commercial sources and significant further amounts from domestic sources. In areas that pride themselves on trying to increase recycling, such as St. Albans, we are also getting rid of this product at the domestic level.

Biodiesel, which can be manufactured from used cooking oil, is a particularly sustainable renewable fuel, whose use can reduce lifecycle carbon emissions by up to 90 per cent. If we were to use that fuel, it would help us deliver on our challenging energy targets. Used cooking oil does not cause additional deforestation, as it is a waste product that would otherwise have to be disposed of by professional collectors at significant cost—in the debates on this, it has been mentioned that sometimes it is not disposed of properly and it goes down into rivers and drainage and there is then the high cost of cleaning that up as well. Certain green pressure groups have great worries about whether the steps we are taking to try to ensure that the lights do not go out are green, but this is certainly green. It does not cause any land-use change, and the fuel is consequently one of the lowest-carbon forms of biodiesel. Converting to biodiese used cooking oil that might otherwise have gone to landfill is an excellent example of a sustainable biofuel.

The Under-Secretary of State agreed with all this in our earlier debate. As he said it was a valuable debate, I am hoping I shall hear some more from him about the issue today. This type of biofuel contributes to reducing carbon emissions and waste minimisation. As it uses a waste product, there is no resultant pressure on land use and no impact on food prices. There is a big concern about third-world countries that should be growing crops to eat but that are instead exporting crops for making biofuels. This does not contribute to that concern. Vital resources are not diverted from a valuable existing land use.

Methanol is commonly used in the process of producing biodiesel from used cooking oil. However, in March 2009—not very long ago—Ofgem reversed an earlier position and ruled that the use of methanol made from natural gas in biodiesel production discounts the fuel from being included in the renewables obligation scheme. That cannot be right. Many right hon. and hon. Members who are present have served on the Select Committee, and I see its acting Chairman, who will remember when the Committee was discussing this part of our energy remit. I raised the discounting with a witness who was giving evidence to the Committee, and he described it as a "bonkers anomaly".

A bonkers anomaly was introduced under this Government's watch in March 2009. As the Government are aware of this bonkers anomaly, I would have thought that they would have taken the opportunity in the short time left to them to address it. The ruling was made following consultation and discussion with the Department of Energy and Climate Change. As a result of the presence of that very small portion of fossil fuel derived from methanol in some biodiesels, we have this bonkers anomaly. The ruling is based on a very literal interpretation of the law, which classes the entirety of the biodiesel produced in such a way as a fossil fuel under article 9 of the renewables obligation, despite the fact that the fossil fuel element of the fuel, made from used cooking oil, is relatively small—about 11 per cent. by mass.

Members of the UK biofuels industry believe that the Ofgem ruling on biodiesel is likely to have a significant effect on the UK's industry and would have ramifications for our future domestic supply of renewable energy. That is what the Bill should be considering—to ensure that we have domestic supplies of renewable energy so that the lights do not go out. That is why there is a real missed opportunity in the Bill. I hope that we will have a chance to raise that issue in Committee.

Energy production in the UK has been set extremely ambitious long-term targets for renewable sources, yet many feel that the 2009 legislation—or at least Ofgem's interpretation of it, and I note that Ofgem is mentioned regularly in the Bill and it should have its attention drawn back to the anomaly—does not offer any incentive to use such a form of renewable fuel in the generation of electricity and heat. When I mentioned that to the Under-Secretary, I was encouraged. He agreed to meet representatives of the industry who had raised the anomaly with me to discuss it in more depth. I had heard that they were having trouble getting hold of him and I hope that he will tell me tonight that they have met. I would love to hear any update about any meeting that he has had with them. If he has not met them, I press him to renew tonight that commitment to meeting them.

The renewables obligation came into effect in 2002 to support renewable electricity projects in the UK. Under the obligation, suppliers are required to meet their obligations by presenting sufficient renewables obligation certificates—it is a mouthful, so I shall call them ROCs—which are green certificates issued to an accredited generator for eligible renewable electricity generated. The 2008 consultation by Ofgem, which led to this decision, focused on the detail that the methanol used in the process was normally derived from natural gas, itself a fossil fuel. Ofgem therefore set out that it was difficult to view biodiesel made in that way as a renewable fuel as set out in the Electricity Act 1989 and in specific parts of the Renewables Obligation Order 2006 (Amendment) Order 2007. Instead, Ofgem argued that biodiesel produced from the reagent will in turn fall within the term "fossil fuel"—that is, the whole of the biodiesel—under article 9 of the renewables obligation and concluded that biodiesel produced in such a way should be classed as fossil fuel generation under articles 9 and 18.

I believe that the Government do not want this anomaly and that, in October, the Minister saw that the argument in favour of it was nonsense. Given that the ruling stated that where fossil fuel-derived alcohols are used no ROC will be issued, even for the biomass-derived portion of the biodiesel involved, will he—or whoever speaks on behalf of the Government—take up the suggestion that we made in October to have 0.9 of a ROC to recognise such a truly renewable biofuel and the greenness of the energy provided by it? Electricity generators cannot receive the renewable obligation on electricity that is produced from that fuel. That is despite the fact that the fuel element is so comparatively small and despite the fact that the majority of the fuel is truly recycled from the waste stream and would have no other purpose.

There was widespread industry reaction to the Ofgem ruling on the basis that exclusion from the scheme would not encourage the generation of renewable energy—something that we have talked about at length tonight. Ofgem itself has concluded that its ruling ran counter to the desires of the majority of respondents to the 2008 consultation. Ofgem has further admitted that the issues that many such respondents raised are policy decisions that are the responsibility of the Department of Energy and Climate Change and are outside the remit of Ofgem's role as the scheme's administrator.

I have raised this issue in a sitting of the Energy and Climate Change Committee, in which we discussed low-carbon technologies in a green economy—I note that our acting Chairman, the hon. Member for Sherwood (Paddy Tipping), is nodding. When I raised it with Greg Archer of the Low Carbon Vehicle Partnership, he did not hold back; as I have said, he described the situation as a "bonkers anomaly". He is not the only expert who has misgivings about the situation. I hope that the Minister will update me regarding the possibility of introducing a 0.9 ROC. He has agreed to investigate that idea, and I am sure that he will have made some progress in that regard. Used cooking oil can produce significant carbon savings and is an excellent way of using a waste product to create energy, but it currently seems to be uneconomic for many producers to do that. Will the Minister re-examine the legislation covering the treatment of biodiesel that is produced from used cooking oil to see whether anything can be done to iron out the anomaly? I would also welcome a statement on the implementation of the renewable energy directive.

Mr. David Jones: Before my hon. Friend leaves that point, will she enlighten the House as to what form of fossil fuel is comprised in that 0.1 of a ROC or that 10 per cent., of cooking oil? I should not have thought that cooking oil could possibly comprise any fossil fuel.

Anne Main: I probably have not explained that point well enough. Some 89 per cent. of the fuel will be from used cooking oil and 11 per cent. will be from the methanol that is used, which is derived from gas. That is the fossil fuel element that has unfortunately given rise to the bonkers anomaly.

I believe that every encouragement should be given to green initiatives and technologies, and that green technologies should be used on all new, large-scale development projects. If they cannot be used, there should be a good reason why not. Some used cooking oil is converted and used—I know that the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Martin Horwood), who also spoke in my previous debate on this issue, has a used cooking oil company in his constituency. Such investment by companies is welcome, as is the fact that used cooking oil is being used in that way.

It has been in the news today—I do not know whether anyone has been reading the papers—that the famous supermarket chain, Tesco, has opened its first zero-carbon store in Ramsey, Cambridgeshire. I understand that Tesco is combining a host of energy-saving features in the store, which is part of its plan to make the company a zero-carbon business by 2050. The store is powered by an on-site generator that runs on renewable sources such as vegetable oil. The store's heating is provided by the generator, and there are a host of other green features. All that must be welcomed. It demonstrates what is possible, as well as the company's commitment to being zero-carbon.

Much is being done to reduce the impact of domestic properties, particularly in the new-build sector, but large industrial and commercial buildings often have very little provision for saving energy. I have to ask why such measures were not included in the Bill. Other hon. Members have raised this issue, and my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Ellwood) has said that there should be more joined-up thinking in that regard, particularly in relation to planning. That is the way forward. There is nothing in the Bill that will commit large projects to having to explore at least some form of green energy and microgeneration on their sites. That is a totally missed opportunity.

I will give an example of a missed opportunity. I do not want such a development in my constituency, but the totally non-green plans are there for everyone to see for a massive strategic rail freight interchange at the former Radlett aerodrome site. They include huge warehousing, covering more than 3.5 million square feet. The hangars are colossal—hon. Members can imagine the amount of roof space. The development will concrete over acres of green-belt land. It is claimed that a rail freight development is a green initiative. However, although the plans provide for aesthetic improvements to the surrounding area, there is little foresight about energy use and environmental impact.

Bill Wiggin (Leominster) (Con): My hon. Friend is making an important point about the use of extra space. It is a tragedy that Germany, France, Japan, Spain, Norway, America and Korea all outperform the UK on solar photovoltaic installation. Does she agree that that would be an excellent use of the roof space that she just described?

Anne Main: My hon. Friend has knocked the nail on the head. I have heard much in the debate about wind farms and how people are resistant or otherwise to them. Yet so little attention is paid to the vast amounts of space, particularly industrial space, that could be used efficiently. I believe that people who intend to develop large projects that communities are supposed to accept should be compelled to consider that. It would make them greener and improve their carbon footprint and could overcome some of the resistance in communities to built development.

[Anne Main]

There are no plans for the solar energy generation that my hon. Friend just mentioned. There are no plans for water recycling and no microgeneration provisions for the site. It is a scandal and a huge wasted opportunity. As I said, wind farms have been much criticised today. Why are we talking about building wind farms, nuclear power stations, and so on on the green belt, when we are not saying that buildings that are already being constructed should be made as energy efficient as possible and hopefully generate energy that would go into the grid?

Surely more should be done to encourage applicants to build and invest in environmentally sustainable structures. That would lower their carbon footprint. Such disregard for green technology should mean a rejection. We should not allow plans to go ahead if they have not made even a nod to green technologies. How on earth are we supposed to meet our stringent targets when developers can simply build what they like without having to do that? That is important.

David Taylor: The hon. Lady referred to wind turbines. I believe that her party, were it elected, is likely to introduce a policy whereby wind turbines would not be allowed within a minimum distance of any houses. What sort of distance does she consider appropriate for such an embargo?

Anne Main: I am afraid that I am not good on planning distances, but I am good on the planning distance for the rail freight terminal, which will come within 100 yards of some houses. If the Government allow that, I shall look to the hon. Gentleman to ensure that he gets his yardage right, too. The development is totally wrong.

Chris Ruane (Vale of Clwyd) (Lab): Will the hon. Lady give way?

Anne Main: No, I have only a few minutes left. It has been a long debate and the Labour Benches were empty for a while, so I hope that the hon. Gentleman will forgive my not giving way, given that I have sat through the graveyard shift, as it is sometimes called.

Part 2 deals with fuel poverty. The Bill includes various schemes to reduce fuel poverty, and that must be welcomed. The most recently available sub-regional split of fuel poverty figures, which relate to 2003, showed that there are approximately 1,900 fuel-poor households in St. Albans—which is considered to be an affluent constituency—and around 22,200 fuel-poor households in Hertfordshire. Since then, the number of fuel-poor homes nationally has risen sharply from 1.2 million in 2004 to 3.5 million. I can extrapolate rises of a similar magnitude in my constituency. This year, the Government announced that 4.6 million households in England could be fuel poor, despite a pledge to end fuel poverty by 2016. Does the Minister agree that an undelivered pledge is a worthless pledge?

I agree with the Macmillan campaign, of which I am a patron, that many groups must bear the cost of having to heat their homes. The ill, particularly people who have terminal cancer, are an important group. If we cannot get fuel poverty measures right for the Government's designated groups, I hold out little hope that we can get them right for people with long-term illnesses, such as those who are supported by the Macmillan campaign.

9.20 pm

Martin Horwood (Cheltenham) (LD): It is a pleasure to follow the hon. Member for St. Albans (Anne Main). We do not always agree, but I warmed to her defence of the green belt and agreed with it. She is exactly right, too, about utilising used cooking oil for biodiesel. As she said, I have raised the issue, and I was pleased that the Under-Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change agreed to meet my constituents and me. We all look forward to positive announcements, if not today, then perhaps in the pre-Budget report on Wednesday. We live in hope.

Liberal Democrats have given this limited Bill a broad welcome. The revisions to Ofgem's remit to take account of environmental considerations are long overdue, as is a more consistent framework for social tariffs. Millions endure fuel poverty, and social tariffs are patchily applied by private sector companies. Liberal Democrats have called for a more uniform framework ever since, in the case of my right hon. Friend the Member for Gordon (Malcolm Bruce), the time of former Prime Minister Mrs. Thatcher, so measures to tackle the problem more consistently are long overdue.

The measures to promote carbon capture and storage are welcome, too. CCS is a critical technology if we are to achieve our aims in tackling climate change, and while we—I hope—make the transition to a more renewable energy economy in the long-term future, we need transition technologies. I certainly support CCS, rather than nuclear power, as a means of keeping the lights on. I was astonished by the speeches by Conservative Members, which featured consistent attacks on renewable energy, particularly wind energy, and consistent support for nuclear power.

Chris Ruane: I share the hon. Gentleman's concern about Conservative policy on wind power. Does he agree that the description by the Leader of the Opposition of wind turbines off the coast of north Wales as giant bird blenders is despicable?

Martin Horwood: Not only despicable but wrong, as modern wind turbines, especially the larger ones that avoid providing perches for birds, have turned out to be perfectly safe for most bird life. Such an ill-informed attack on wind power is exactly the kind of thing that we should reject.

The Conservatives' support for nuclear power worries me just as much. That technology costs us billions even today, and we do not how, when or where to dispose of nuclear waste, which will leave a toxic legacy for future generations for as long as 1,000 years. I was struck by the speech by the hon. Member for Copeland (Mr. Reed), which was well informed and technically accurate. He is a gentleman who knows the nuclear industry very well, so it is instructive that he made a plea to open the door to public subsidy for the nuclear industry. I hope that the Government will take the opportunity tonight very firmly to reject that out of hand.

We agree with some of the criticism of this limited Bill. The encouragement of social tariffs is welcome, but it is very little and, I would say, much too late. There are weaknesses in the Bill, and there is still not a clear ban on differentiated fuel tariffs according to the method of payment, which have been widely condemned. However, there is not an absolutely clear commitment in the Bill to remove that inconsistency. We have heard a great deal about the lack of attention to rural fuel poverty in particular.

The steps towards more carbon capture and storage are welcome, but there is a loophole in the Bill, which I have mentioned to the Secretary of State on several occasions. There is no guarantee that by the 2020s, coal-fired powers stations will not emit large amounts of carbon, with only a proportion of their output subject to CCS. Ministers are nodding their heads, but I cannot do better than quote the progress report to Parliament by the Committee on Climate Change, issued in October. It is concerned that we have not given a strong enough signal that "for any plant not fitted with CCS there will be little or no role further into the 2020s".

The report goes on to say:

"The Government should make it absolutely clear now that whether or not CCS can be deemed economically viable any conventional coal plant still operating unabated beyond the early 2020s would only generate for a very limited number of hours."

We still have not heard that commitment from Government.

We have been debating the Bill in an enjoyably cool environment. When Madam Deputy Speaker was in the Chair earlier, she considered turning the heating up so that we were all warmed up during the debate. I know that the Minister was feeling particularly chilly, but it is entirely appropriate that on the first day of the Copenhagen summit we have resisted that temptation, and for once seem to have saved some energy in this place and reduced the amount of hot air in the Chamber—which many of our constituents might think could be done on many other occasions.

As it is the first day of the Copenhagen summit, it is right that I should take a moment to express our unity across the House. We are critical of Government policy from time to time. We are critical of many aspects of the Bill, but when the Secretary of State goes to Copenhagen, if he goes to press for a tough deal on climate change and for a clear timetable for binding commitments—early in 2010, I hope—he goes with our best wishes and our support. It is quite possible that the future of human civilisation as we know it may rest on decisions taken in Copenhagen over the next couple of weeks. That obliges us to put aside national and party political divisions for the common good. To that end, we wish him well.

9.26 pm

Charles Hendry (Wealden) (Con): We have had a thoughtful, constructive, well-informed debate which, on rare occasions, related to the content of the Bill. Most of the rest of it dealt with wider energy issues. The Secretary of State would probably say that the Bill is so good that we did not need to discuss it in the Chamber.

I listened in vain for the words that one usually hears—the senior Back Bencher who says, "This is a great Bill, which deals with the challenges that we face," or the energetic young Back Bencher who is keen to get promotion in the remaining few months, who says, "My constituents will be very grateful that the Government have had the vision to bring forward these vital measures," but they have not been here. The word that has run through the entire debate is "modest". After 12 years, 15 Ministers, countless reviews, consultations and White Papers—more consultation than one could imagine possible—the culmination is a modest Bill.

The issues that have come through are clear. The first theme that has run through the debate is the lack of detail in the Bill. We do not know at what level the levy for carbon capture and storage will be set. The hon. Member for North Southwark and Bermondsey (Simon Hughes) asked who would be exempted from the levy. We need to understand that. We need to understand which technologies might be exempted. Will it be low-carbon technologies or zero-carbon technologies? Will micro-generation be exempted? We need a great deal more detail before we can give the Bill the approval that it needs.

On the fuel poverty issues, the hon. Member for Sherwood (Paddy Tipping) asked who would benefit from the fuel poverty measures. My hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, West (Mr. Jones) and the hon. Member for Angus (Mr. Weir) spoke about the need to protect people who live in rural areas and who are dependent on oil or LPG. We need to understand who the Government have it in mind to exempt.

My hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Goodwill) asked who would own the intellectual property from the carbon capture projects. The hon. Member for Angus wanted to know whether the changes in the transmission arrangements would be damaging to investment in Scotland. If the Bill is to get the necessary agreement to proceed to Committee, we must have answers on those details. They cannot be left vague for the Secretary of State to decide in future. We need to know what is in the Government's mind, so that people can clearly understand what is being supported.

The second theme of the debate has been the lack of ambition. The hon. Member for Sherwood talked about carbon capture and storage as a competition without end; the hon. Member for North Southwark and Bermondsey talked about the slowness of the whole procedure, which has resulted in Britain moving from the top of the international league in CCS and slipping down the table; and the hon. Member for Angus talked about the need to understand the role of gas in the carbon capture model.

The hon. Member for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead) talked a great deal about his concern that there was not more ambition on energy efficiency, but he also managed completely to reinvent Conservative party policy. He was wrong about what it includes, what it might cost and how it would be paid for—but apart from that, he was pretty close.

The hon. Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Dr. Turner) talked about the need to be more ambitious in using the carbon price as a key driver of low-carbon technologies, and many hon. Members called for the need to be more supportive of emerging technologies. The hon. Gentleman talked about marine renewables and the absolute insistence that, with all our natural potential for such technology, we should not end up in 20 years' time looking back and saying, "How did we lose that advantage? Why did the Germans, the Danes and the others manage to master that technology? Why didn't we have the leadership that was necessary in those areas?"

[Charles Hendry]

My hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby talked about the importance of developing energy from waste technologies, because we must change our whole way of thinking. We have to think of waste as a resource, not just as a cost. We have to do so much to reduce the amount of waste that goes to landfill or landrise, and we must ensure that we deal with it by addressing both the waste issue and the energy issue. My hon. Friend the Member for St. Albans (Anne Main), warming to the cooking oil theme that she has made her own, also made sure that we start to address those issues.

My hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, West talked about pump storage and what we are going to do to realise the potential in that area. The hon. Member for Copeland (Mr. Reed) mentioned nuclear power and gave a broadly thoughtful and sensible speech, until it was taken over by some raging creature, and he launched into a vicious attack on the Opposition parties while trying to say that he sought consensus. It was the sort of speech that, when he re-reads it in the morning, may make him wonder whether he got the balance quite right.

Running through the debate is the issue of missed opportunities and the recognition that the Bill does not rise to the challenges that we face on energy policy. We face a genuine crisis, but we do not see any measures to address it. Again, I return to the hon. Member for Sherwood, who is the acting Chairman of the Select Committee on Energy and Climate Change. I always thought that he would be a very good Energy Minister. Indeed, there is still time—we have a change every few months—and he could still have the chance to be the Energy Minister before the next election.

The hon. Gentleman's words made it sound as if he were being critical of the Conservative party, but, when one listened to what he was saying underneath, one found that he was actually putting the boot into his own Government. There he was, talking about the £200 billion of investment that is so essential, and which we must make. He said that the investment needed a secure framework—but we have been waiting for that for 12 years, and we are still waiting. He talked about the need to work harder to encourage international companies to invest in Britain and to understand the potential that is here, and he also talked about power cuts.

The Secretary of State says, "No, there's no risk of cuts," but he writes articles saying that there may be power cuts. Even the Government's own documentation mentions power cuts: there they are, on page 86 of the UK Low Carbon Transition Plan, although it does not say "power cuts", but "demand unserved", which is Government-speak for power cuts, and the equivalent of a city the size of Manchester being without electricity every night for three months. Nevertheless, the hon. Gentleman told us where we were failing to respond to the size of the challenge.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Ellwood), in a very powerful critique, talked about the serious challenge that we face on gas storage. We have just 15 days' storage, and in January we exported through the interconnector 25 million cubic metres of gas a day—the equivalent of 250 Albert Halls of gas every single day being pumped out of this country. Just as we were approaching a dispute between Russia and Ukraine, during the coldest winter for 18 years, our gas storage was down to just four days. Nevertheless, here we have a Bill, and in it the Government do not have a single word to say about gas storage.

We have also missed, particularly on this day when the Copenhagen summit is starting, the challenge of discussing what more can be done urgently to tackle the problem of CO_2 emissions. Nowhere in the Bill does one see a driving sense of urgency. There is a little movement and change, but no sense that this is a crisis that has to be addressed. The hon. Member for Carmarthen, West and South Pembrokeshire (Nick Ainger)—I am delighted to see him coming in on cue—talked about a lack of the strategic thinking that is needed if we are to see the development of marine technologies such as offshore wind. The Government must take the lead and put in place down the coastline the high-voltage DC cables to connect up those facilities.

In terms of failing to recognise the challenges, most telling of all was the Secretary of State's indication that the Government would come forward with a strategy on fuel poverty in the spring. The numbers of people in fuel poverty have gone up, and they need help now, not proposals after the winter. We need a sense of urgency and a recognition that the Bill must do more than it currently sets out to do.

I turn to the key elements in the Bill. On the CCS levy, there has to be a funding mechanism to make carbon capture and storage happen—we completely support that. However, let me ask the Secretary of State again: where is the money from the third round of the EU emissions trading scheme that was promised? How much is in it, and what has it been allocated to? He says that it has all been spent, so what has been done with it? We recognise that if it is not available, the levy may be a way of trying to support that. However, if the Bill is to go into Committee, we need from Ministers a clear explanation of what has happened to the Government's expected revenue from the third round.

However, the levy is just part of this. We still do not have the leadership that we require if we are to lead the world in CCS. We were leading, but we have been overtaken by America, Canada, Germany, Abu Dhabi, Norway, Australia and China— critically, given that this whole project was designed to develop a technology that we could sell to the Chinese. We must have more strategic leadership. How will the whole process be handled? What aspect of Government will make CCS happen? Who will be responsible for scoping the potential sites? Will there be oversized pipelines to facilitate the development of clusters? Can we not do still more to speed up the pace of this competition, which has been absurdly slow? We need to move towards a conclusion, and to know who is going to be the winner on the pilot project.

The whole aspect of social tariffs and support for consumers brings home how far away we are from achieving the fuel poverty targets set out by the Government, with the legally binding commitments that by 2010 all vulnerable households would be taken out of fuel poverty and that by 22 November 2016 every household in the country would be out of fuel poverty. The Secretary of State may not know if that will happen in the morning or the afternoon of 22 November; nevertheless, it is a clear commitment, and the Government must now recognise that all the movements are in the wrong direction.

As the hon. Member for Brighton, Kemptown said, prices will be rising, and everything that is necessary will be expensive. Of course we support social tariffs, but we want the Bill to go much further. We want much more information on bills so that people can see how much electricity they are using in comparison with their neighbours in similar houses. We want information on bills about CO_2 emissions. We want people to be able to see how much less their bill would be if they were on the lowest tariff available from the company, and, perhaps, information on environmental charges. We want those things because they are the ways in which we can help to deal with fuel poverty. In addition, we need a great drive forward on energy efficiency. It is extraordinary that in a Bill that deals with fuel poverty, energy efficiency does not get a mention.

The Bill includes proposals on the remit of Ofgem, which has interpreted its new role well. Project Discovery shows that it has been giving good consideration to the issues that face us. However, we need to understand more clearly who is in charge. The Bill suggests that there are equal powers as between the Government and Ofgem, but it is clear to us that in policy terms Government should have primacy.

The Bill will do many worthy things, but it is simply not up to the scale of the challenge that we face. We need to attract £200 billion of investment in the next 15 years.

Rob Marris (Wolverhampton, South-West) (Lab): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Charles Hendry: I will not, because I am keen to ensure that the Minister of State has plenty of time to respond.

We need to do more to secure that investment, and the Bill simply will not do it. Those who are looking to invest in nuclear power need much more certainty on the price of carbon, and the Bill fails to give them any reassurance. If we are to become more reliant on gas imports—many predictions suggest that 80 per cent. of our gas will be imported by 2020—we need much more action on gas storage, and the Bill has not a single word to say about that. If we are to drive forward investment in renewables, the Government have to accept that they have a strategic role in requiring high-voltage DC cables to be put in place, and providing much more support for embryonic marine renewables. They must ensure that we develop a real spirit of partnership, so that when applications for new renewable facilities come to our communities, they know that there is something significant in it for them if they decide to host those facilities.

The Bill is not so much a plan of action as a statement of intent that the Government will think about consulting and having a review of whether they should change their energy policies. We need firm government and decisive action: time is not on our side, and the Bill is not up to the challenge. The Secretary of State is a very ambitious man—so ambitious, we are told, that one day he would even like to be Leader of the Opposition. The Bill is not ambitious, and if it goes to Committee we hope to work with the Government to find consensus and address many of the issues that have been left out of it.

9.41 pm

The Minister of State, Department of Energy and Climate Change (Joan Ruddock): Combating climate change while maintaining secure and affordable energy supplies is one the greatest challenges that our Government face. This is a landmark year in the fight against climate change and today, as many contributors have said, is the start of the discussions at Copenhagen. The world has come together in an attempt to reach a new international agreement to tackle climate change. We are going into the negotiations with a clear plan of the ambitious, effective and fair deal that we believe all the world's nations must agree, and confident that the UK has a track record of taking real action at home to tackle our own emissions. The low carbon transition plan, which we launched in July, sets out a clear pathway that will lead us to a low-carbon world with secure energy supplies and protection for the most vulnerable. The Bill puts into place legislation that will implement that plan.

Let me comment on the speeches that have been made today. The hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells (Greg Clark) simply gave an alarmist account of what this country faces, without any positive reference to the measures in the Bill, some of which tackle the need for energy security in future. He constantly referred to matters that were not in the Bill, reciting a huge wish list of things that he believes could be legislated for. He failed to notice that most of the measures of which he spoke are already under way and do not require primary legislation. It was complete nonsense of a speech.

The hon. Gentleman said that there was a possibility of power cuts, which has been repeated by Opposition Members over and over again. [Interruption.] I shall come to what my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Paddy Tipping) said in due course, but at the moment I am dealing with the opening Front-Bench speeches. We challenged the hon. Gentleman on the need for assistance to households to make their homes more energy efficient. We still do not know how the Conservatives plan to fund the provision of £6,500 to households. He challenged us by saying that we have only 500 homes in our pilots, but why do we have pilots? To work out what is the best way of incentivising people and how the public are most likely to respond. That is why the pilots are critical. The hon. Gentleman is not able to tell me tonight how the up-front payments for those energy efficiency measures will be made, and he has never been able to say.

David Taylor: Is it not the case that the sum involved would be £6,500 times 20 million or so, so we are talking about £160 billion—a figure not unadjacent to 10 per cent. of gross domestic product? Surely the official Opposition must have thought in more detail about how they can fund that.

Joan Ruddock: My hon. Friend is right. One would have thought they would have done so, but it appears they have not.

The hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells spoke about how vital an emissions performance standard is and again said that such a measure was not in the Bill. The fact is that it does not need to be in the Bill. We do not need primary legislation and can adopt an emissions performance standard without new legislation if we wish to do so—[Interruption.] I will come to that in due course.

The other point on the emissions performance standard is that we think it better to gain a proper understanding of the potential of CCS before considering how the regulatory and financial measures relating to emissions from power stations will be affected. We will continue to maintain a rolling review of progress, as we have clearly stated, with CCS technologies. By 2018, we will publish a report—[Interruption.] It is not far off. By 2018, we will publish a report that considers the case for new measures to drive a move to clean coal.

[Joan Ruddock]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I apologise for interrupting the hon. Lady, but there is a constant chorus of chuntering from those on the Opposition Front Bench. Mr. Barker, you need to sit quietly and listen to the Minister's speech. Stop chuntering—I do not want to hear it.

Joan Ruddock: I am so grateful, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells spoke of the UK falling behind in the race to build CCS. That could not be further from the truth. A number of other hon. Members, including the hon. Member for Angus (Mr. Weir), mentioned China, but no project in China is on the scale of any of our projects, and no construction is under way for capture, transportation and storage on the scale that our projects propose. It is therefore complete nonsense to suggest that other countries have overtaken us. We are still in the lead. We are co-operating with other countries, which is the most reasonable thing for us to do.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood, the acting Chairman of the Energy and Climate Change Committee, made a very thoughtful speech and we are glad that he welcomed our CCS proposals. He spoke with passion about the mining communities and the future of coal mining in this country. Of course, it is CCS that can offer a guarantee of a future for those activities.

My hon. Friend spoke in more moderate and reasonable terms about a possible energy supply gap around 2016, but I must tell the House that the evidence does not support that view. It is true that 18 GW of electricity generation is due to close by 2018, but nearly 20 GW is under construction or has planning consent. Industry is responding to the signals of the need for new generation by getting on with the building. The latest analysis issued by the Government has shown that there is no gap. Ofgem's "Project Discovery" presents a wide range of scenarios and shows that electricity supplies would meet demand in almost all foreseeable situations.

Rob Marris: Is my hon. Friend as surprised as I am that Conservative policy on the energy gap still seems to be to sit on the fence about nuclear and say, "If we need a nuclear power station, we'll just pop down to the supermarket and get one"? That is a crazy policy.

Joan Ruddock: My hon. Friend is absolutely right, but perhaps the most remarkable thing the hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells said was that he was entirely relaxed about the shadow Business Secretary's comments about wind turbines. It is quite clear that the Conservatives do not want the new generation capacity that we believe is so vital.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood asked about the consideration of clusters. We understand that co-location of CCS demonstration projects could reduce the overall costs of the demonstration programme, but the competition process could be weakened if that is a requirement. It is not a requirement, but clearly those who come forward in the competition might propose that making a cluster is an attractive feature of the offer.

Anne Main: The Minister has a long history of opposing nuclear power. What caused her to change her mind?

Joan Ruddock: May I correct the hon. Lady? I have a long history of leading a campaign against nuclear weapons.

The hon. Member for North Southwark and Bermondsey (Simon Hughes) said that he wanted to see more ambition in the Bill, although he welcomed many aspects of it, and we are grateful for that. He challenged us to say whether there would be new coal that did not have some sort of constraint on emissions. We have made it clear that all new coal will have to have a degree of carbon capture, and that if the technology is proven, there will be retrofitting. As he knows, other old stations will go out of use, so it is clear—

Martin Horwood rose—

Joan Ruddock: I am not giving way on this point. It is clear that under our proposal, if the technology works, we will end up where we want to be. To suggest that it should be in place from the beginning would be to defeat the progress of the technology completely.

The hon. Member for North Southwark and Bermondsey also asked about CCS and intellectual property. We want to have the maximum sharing, and that is why we are working with China. We want to see the sharing and development of technology. It will be necessary, of course, to have some intellectual property rights, but we do not envisage those standing in the way of the kind of co-operation that we need.

The hon. Gentleman, and other hon. Members, asked about fuel poverty and argued that those off the gas grid are not protected. One way to deal with the situation would be to put the social price support on electricity bills. In that way, we could assist everyone who had an electricity supply, which is virtually everyone in the country. That would mean that we did not disadvantage those who are off the gas grid.

Sir Robert Smith: That is an interesting proposition. Does it mean that those who are off the gas grid would get a greater reduction in the electricity social tariff to make up for the fact that their heating comes from oil or LPG?

Joan Ruddock: What will be done is a matter for extensive consultation, when the hon. Gentleman will have an opportunity to make those points. I offer that suggestion as a way out of the dilemma that hon. Members mentioned.

I was asked about clause 14 by the hon. Member for North Southwark and Bermondsey. The Secretary of State already has the power to amend the fuel poverty definition under the Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Act 2000. We are not, however, looking to change that definition. The hon. Gentleman also asked what we could do those customers already suffering harm, but whose cases had been timed out. The legislation will not apply retrospectively, as I think he understood, and that is why we are extending the provision to enable breaches of licence going back more than 12 months—indeed, up to five years—to be tackled.

My hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead) said that the Bill might be modest, but it represents a real step forward. He is so right. He recognises that this limited Bill will do a lot that is complementary to the huge programme of change that is already under way. He demonstrated his deep understanding of the relationship between the three elements of fuel poverty—prices, energy efficiency and incomes—and I am grateful for his welcome of the investment and regulatory approach that we are taking in the Bill.

The hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Ellwood), in an alarmist speech, spoke a great deal about gas storage. He accused us of coming late to new nuclear, but it was his party that said that it was a policy of last resort. We are getting on with the job while his party has been dithering. He spoke about Vestas, which is producing blades not for the UK market, but for the US market. He said that there is nothing in the Bill to incentivise wind turbines—that is incredible, because we have the renewables obligation certificates—and nothing for local communities, when of course there are jobs and investment.

Mr. Ellwood: Will the Minister give way?

Joan Ruddock: I cannot; I do not have time.

The hon. Gentleman asked what we would do if this winter was as harsh as last winter. National Grid, which is most closely involved in protecting security of supply, tells us that although unforeseen events could occur, overall supply and demand in gas and electricity look relatively comfortable. We have the highest generation margin for many years and gas import infrastructure has increased by 500 per cent. over the past decade.

My hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Dr. Turner) spoke about the carbon price and suggested that there should be a mechanism for underpinning it. That is not something that we are going to adopt, at least not at present, because we see significant risks in attempting to manage the carbon price. For example, introducing a price floor would set a precedent for intervening in the market and lead to increased calls for a price ceiling in times of higher economic growth. He also argued that market support is not sufficient for the development of marine technology. We always keep the way to incentivise such development under review. I also point out to him the investments that we are making in the south-west in marine renewables.

The hon. Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Goodwill) made a strong and constructive speech in favour of nuclear and is obviously a keen advocate of new technology—he made a reference to my old college, Imperial. He can be assured that we will be co-ordinating with others in the various CCS projects, as I have indicated.

My hon. Friend the Member for Copeland (Mr. Reed) spoke on behalf of his constituents, as always, about their keen interest in all things nuclear. He welcomed the social price support, but asked us to do more. We are always looking to do more on fuel poverty and will consider everything he said. On CCS, he referred to the huge potential opportunities, including job opportunities, for areas with CO_2-intensive industries. We agree with him and believe that CCS will be adaptable to many industries.

The hon. Member for Clwyd, West (Mr. Jones) asked whether the Secretary of State would exclude rural communities from the CCS levy. That is not one of our plans, but all such issues will be a matter for debate in Committee. He was also not keen on the proliferation of wind farms in Wales, but we are talking about a technology that can be used now and ought to be used now, and we should be getting on with that.

My hon. Friend the Member for Carmarthen, West and South Pembrokeshire (Nick Ainger) gave a helpful account of gas import and storage. He welcomed the Bill, and we appreciate his support. On fuel poverty, he argued that pensioners were not an absolute priority, but I have to tell him that, regrettably, the majority of people in fuel poverty are still pensioners.

The hon. Member for Angus (Mr. Weir) posed a lot of questions that I think I have dealt with already. [Interruption.] I am being urged to come to the end of my remarks by everyone around me.

This is an important Bill. It is important to implement the measures to decarbonise our electricity supplies, help more vulnerable customers with their energy bills and provide the clear market framework needed for a transition to a low-carbon economy.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read a Second time.

ENERGY BILL (PROGRAMME)

Motion made, and Question put forthwith (Standing Order No. 83A(7)),

That the following provisions shall apply to the Energy Bill:

Committal

1. The Bill shall be committed to a Public Bill Committee.

Proceedings in Public Bill Committee

2. Proceedings in the Public Bill Committee shall (so far as not previously concluded) be brought to a conclusion on Thursday 21 January 2010.

3. The Public Bill Committee shall have leave to sit twice on the first day on which it meets.

Consideration and Third Reading

4. Proceedings on consideration shall (so far as not previously concluded) be brought to a conclusion one hour before the moment of interruption on the day on which those proceedings are commenced.

5. Proceedings on Third Reading shall (so far as not previously concluded) be brought to a conclusion at the moment of interruption on that day.

6. Standing Order No. 83B (Programming committees) shall not apply to proceedings on consideration and Third Reading.

Other proceedings

7. Any other proceedings on the Bill (including any proceedings on consideration of Lords Amendments or on any further messages from the Lords) may be programmed. (Mr. Mudie.)

Question agreed to.

ENERGY BILL (MONEY)

Queen's recommendation signified.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith (Standing Order No. 52(1)(a)),

That, for the purposes of any Act resulting from the Energy Bill, it is expedient to authorise the payment out of money provided by Parliament of—

(1) any expenditure incurred by the Secretary of State by virtue of the Act,

(2) any expenditure incurred by the Gas and Electricity Markets Authority by virtue of the Act, and

(3) any increase attributable to the Act in the sums payable out of money so provided under any other enactment.—(Mr. Mudie.)

Question agreed to.

ENERGY BILL (WAYS AND MEANS)

Motion made, and Question put forthwith (Standing Order No. 52(1)(a)).

That, for the purposes of any Act resulting from the Energy Bill, it is expedient to authorise—

(1) the imposition of charges in connection with the provision of financial assistance relating to the development and use of carbon capture and storage technology, and

(2) the payment of sums into the Consolidated Fund.—(Mr. Mudie.)

Question agreed to.

Business without Debate

DELEGATED LEGISLATION

Mr. Speaker: With the leave of the House, we shall take motions 5 to 7 together.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith (Standing Order No. 118(6)).

Health Care and Associated Professions

That the draft Health Professions (Hearing Aid Dispensers) Order 2009, which was laid before this House on 22 October, in the previous Session of Parliament, be approved.

Income Tax

That the draft Tax Credits (Excluded Companies) Regulations 2009, which were laid before this House on 19 October, in the previous Session of Parliament, be approved.

Corporation Tax

That the draft Distributions (Excluded Companies) Regulations 2009, which were laid before this House on 15 October, in the previous Session of Parliament, be approved.—(Mr. Mudie.)

Question agreed to.

Electoral Commission

Ordered,

That the Motion in the name of Ms Harriet Harman relating to the Electoral Commission shall be treated as if it related to an instrument subject to the provisions of Standing Order No. 118 (Delegated Legislation Committees) in respect of which notice of a motion has been given that the instrument be approved.—(Mr. Mudie.)

REGIONAL SELECT COMMITTEE (LONDON)

Motion made,

That Ms Karen Buck, Jeremy Corbyn, Clive Efford, Siobhain McDonagh, Mr. Andy Slaughter and Mr. Andrew Pelling be members of the London Regional Select Committee.—(Mr. Mudie.)

Hon. Members: Object.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE

Motion made,

That—

(1) Standing Order No. 14 (Arrangement of public business) shall have effect for this Session with the following modifications, namely:

In paragraph (4) the word 'eight' shall be substituted for the word 'thirteen' in line 42 and in paragraph (5) the word 'fifth' shall be substituted for the word 'eighth' in line 44;

(2) Standing Order No. 90 (Second reading committees) shall have effect for this Session with the following modification, namely:

In paragraph (2) the word 'fifth' shall be substituted for the word 'eighth' in line 21; and

(3) Private Members' Bills shall have precedence over Government business on 29 January; 5 and 26 February; 5 and 12 March; 23 and 30 April; and 7 May.—(Mr. Mudie.)

Hon. Members: Object.

HUMAN RIGHTS (JOINT COMMITTEE)

Ordered,

That John Austin be discharged from the Joint Committee on Human Rights and Fiona Mactaggart be added.—(Rosemary McKenna, on behalf of the Committee of Selection.)

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS (JOINT COMMITTEE)

Ordered,

That Michael Jabez Foster and Mr. David Kidney be discharged from the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments and Jeff Ennis, Judy Mallaber and Chris Ruane be added.—(Rosemary McKenna, on behalf of the Committee of Selection.)

TAX LAW REWRITE BILLS (JOINT COMMITTEE)

Ordered,

That Mr. David Gauke and Mr. George Mudie be discharged from the Joint Committee on Tax Law Rewrite Bills and Mr. William Bain and Mr. Andrew Tyrie be added.—(Rosemary McKenna, on behalf of the Committee of Selection.)

Asylum System

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—(Mr. Mudie.)

10.1 pm

Clare Short (Birmingham, Ladywood) (Ind Lab): I have secured this Adjournment debate in order to plead with the Government to reconsider the disgraceful arrangements that have been in place since 14 October this year for processing new claims from asylum seekers who are already in the UK. I have discussed this with the Minister, and it is my view that the whole international asylum system needs reorganising, and that the existing convention is out of date and needs renegotiating. For example, it is ridiculous that people cannot apply for asylum in the UK without arriving here, and they have to pay people-smugglers to get here. The possibility of applying for asylum is therefore controlled by criminal networks.

I also believe that the £2 billion a year that the Government spend running a large bureaucracy designed to refuse as many cases as possible could be much better spent elsewhere. However, the inadequacies of the international system do not excuse the way in which people already in the UK are subjected to a refusal to allow them to work, and given very mean benefits, which have recently been cut further. As soon as their claims are refused, all support is cut off. We therefore have significant numbers of destitute, homeless asylum seekers scattered throughout our cities. It is the conclusion of almost everyone who works in this field that this cruelty is deliberately inflicted to encourage asylum seekers to leave the UK, and to discourage others from arriving.

I see many such cases in my constituency advice bureau. The people who have been refused have often waited for many years for a decision. They are destitute and homeless. Not surprisingly, many of them suffer from depression and other mental and physical illnesses. Heartbreakingly, for example, two weeks ago, I saw a man from Gaza who had been here for two or three years. He was trying, through the Red Cross, to contact his seven brothers and sisters who were still in Gaza. He did not know whether they had survived the Israeli bombardment that took place a year ago. He had recently been very badly beaten up in Stoke, and came to me with a medical report saying that he had severe post-traumatic stress disorder. He was frightened of all authority and distrustful of everyone. He was destitute, and reliant on another asylum seeker to help him to deal with the authorities and find some kind of food and shelter. I frequently feel ashamed that this is how we are running our asylum system in Britain in 2009.

May I ask the Minister in passing to ask the National Asylum Support Service to review the placing of asylum seekers in Stoke? I have heard of more than one case of asylum seekers there being very badly beaten up. We know that the British National party has considerable representation on the council there. I really think we should do something about that.

Fortunately, in this bleak picture, there are some good people in Birmingham and elsewhere to whom those in great distress can turn. I am particularly impressed by the work of ASIRT—Asylum Support and Immigration Resource Team—in Birmingham, which helps people to sort out their legal position and make properly organised new applications. Then there is my old friend Geoff Wilkins, who with others runs a destitution fund, supported by various charities and Church groups so that we can help people with small amounts of money and provide temporary housing for homeless women and children while they are helped to submit properly organised new applications, which enable them to apply for hard case support from the UK Border Agency.

Similar organisations in other parts of the UK, report the same experience. In October 2008, for example, members of the Asylum Support Partnership, plus a number of other agencies run by the Red Cross and others, recorded the number of visits made by asylum seekers in one month. The study found that destitution is most common among refused asylum seekers and that 1,178 visits from among this group took place in October, and that 62 per cent. of the destitute asylum seekers have been destitute for six months and more. Of them, 70 per cent. were from Iraq, Iran, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Sudan, Eritrea, Zimbabwe, Afghanistan and Somalia—all deeply troubled countries likely to generate asylum seekers. Similar studies in Leeds and Leicester showed an increase in the number of destitute asylum seekers this year compared with 2008, an increase in long-term destitution and also an increase in those reporting physical and mental health problems, including HIV/AIDS, pregnancy and tuberculosis.

The Children's Society contacted me when it noticed that this Adjournment debate would be taking place. It reminded me that in 2008 it published a report that revealed, in its words, "shocking evidence of children growing up in households without food, heating or toys, mothers forced to prostitute themselves to survive, young people in care cut off from any help and at 18 becoming homeless".

It pointed out that the main cause of destitution was lack of legal representation during the asylum claims and concluded that the lack of proper legal advice was directly responsible for the failure of many asylum claims.

Since then, the Children's Society has set up the west midlands destitution project to work with Church partners and others to help such families. Many families were found to be destitute either because, having been refused asylum, they had their support cut off or through delays in bureaucracy after applying for support. It concluded that the effects of destitution on children were very serious indeed. Many of the children considered in the forthcoming report, which I believe is due shortly, were displaying, in its words,

"signs of mental and physical ill-health".

That was the rather shameful situation that refused asylum seekers faced in the UK. Let me repeat that many were refused because they did not have adequate legal representation when they made their first application. Then, on 14 October 2009, without any notice or consultation, the UK Border Agency announced the establishment of an even worse new set of arrangements that required new asylum submissions to be made in person and not by post. A ministerial statement explained that because there were parts of the system where information "is not gripped quickly"—I think those were the Minister's words—applications from those who have been refused cannot in future be made by post.

[Clare Short]

Instead, people have to make an appointment and then go in person to Liverpool if they first applied before March 2007, or to a regional centre if they applied after that.

Simon Hughes (North Southwark and Bermondsey) (LD): I am very grateful to the right hon. Lady for allowing me to intervene. As someone who has a huge number of asylum cases in his constituency, may I say that this is one of the most unacceptable changes in policy ever, as it is impractical and completely arrogant and insensitive? I am glad that the right hon. Lady has sought this debate and I hope that her plea to the Minister will make him realise, as I believe his officials do already, that this system cannot justifiably be allowed to continue.

Clare Short: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman and I really cannot believe that the Minister intended this to be as bad as it has proved to be. I am hopeful that he will agree to review and change the situation.

In order to receive hard case financial support—which is also known as section 4 support, and is the only support of any kind that is available to asylum seekers who have been refused once—people must present their applications to Liverpool, and the UK Border Agency must validate their claims. Incidentally, to accommodate the change, the office currently deciding on hard case support applications that have already been submitted has been moved from Liverpool to Croydon, and the Refugee Council's Birmingham office tells us that as a consequence the number of decisions made has declined from five per day to five in two weeks. That inevitably means more destitution and homelessness for those who are in the queue for hard case support.

When we ask the UK Border Agency how destitute people are to get to Liverpool—and they are advised to bring family members if their names are to be added to applications—the agency makes it clear that it will not provide funds for travel, let alone for overnight accommodation if families cannot travel there and back in a day. When questioned, it said that the voluntary sector should fund such travel. That is a disgraceful suggestion, particularly at a time when charities are hard pressed because of the general recession.

Part of the madness of the new arrangements lies in the fact that the system has recently been reorganised and regionalised. There are offices in Birmingham and other regions, but people from Scotland, Dover, London, Bristol and Birmingham must go to Liverpool if they first applied before March 2007. Moreover, there will be no interviews when they get there. Papers are simply to be handed over, and no interpreters are available. It is impossible to understand the intentions behind the new arrangements without concluding that they were designed to make it as difficult as possible for people to make new applications and to apply for hard case support.

I am afraid, however, that the position is even worse than I have described so far. Applicants cannot simply turn up in Liverpool with their applications; they must first make an appointment by telephone. The formal opening hours of the telephone line are between 9 am and 4 pm, Monday to Friday, but there are only 80 appointment slots per day, and the system will not allow an appointment to be made more than 10 days in advance. When all the slots have been used up, the line is closed. I understand that it has been closed at noon on most days recently, but desperate people do not know that. They telephone constantly and hear an engaged tone as other desperate people telephone and the lines clash. Eventually they may get through, but then an answering machine tells them that the line is closed.

The reason for this Kafkaesque system is, I understand, that the case resolution department has been set a deadline of 20 days to decide whether new submissions are valid, and whether those making them can therefore receive hard case support and cease to be destitute. The 20 days run from the day on which the appointment is made—so the answer is to close the line and not make appointments, and leave people destitute beforehand so that the 20-day target can be met. Kafka would be proud of those arrangements.

The new system has made provision for exceptional cases. It is theoretically possible for someone who is very ill and cannot travel to Liverpool to apply by post, but to obtain permission to do that the person must—guess what?—telephone the same number to which it is almost impossible to get through. I recently heard of a traumatised and severely ill asylum seeker who had been viciously beaten in Stoke-on-Trent. I have not been able to discover whether he is my Gazan constituent. He has also been diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder, and is incapable of travelling to Liverpool. His further submission has been refused because it was posted, and he therefore cannot obtain hard case support and continues to be destitute. I also know of an adviser who spent eight days repeatedly telephoning before finally managing to secure an appointment.

On top of all that, when people do present themselves in Liverpool, they are often met by a security guard who gives them a slip and sends them away. If that is the system, why not just post the submission? Clearly this has nothing to do with getting a grip on the information.

It is impossible to explain these changes without concluding that the ending of postal applications is simply designed to make it more difficult to make an application. This will inevitably increase destitution and homelessness among this very vulnerable group of people. Legal practitioners have concluded that the courts will strike down these arrangements, as they have struck down previous arrangements. In the meantime, however, terrible suffering is being inflicted.

I sincerely ask the Minister to undertake to review the situation, as I cannot believe he intended that it should work in this way. I ask him to revert to having postal applications, and to make arrangements for there to be very quick responses to valid applications for hard case support. Otherwise, to our deep shame, we will see growing numbers of homeless, destitute, mentally ill asylum seekers spread across the UK over Christmas and beyond.

10.16 pm

The Minister for Borders and Immigration (Mr. Phil Woolas): I thank the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Clare Short) for raising these issues with her customary sincerity, conviction and consistency. I shall try to respond directly to the points she has made, and I undertake to look into any matters where I am unable to do so.

There are some misunderstandings. The right hon. Lady started off by saying that the existing convention is out of date. I am on record as saying I also believe that to be the case, but I suspect that that is for different reasons. She suggested that it should be possible to make asylum claims out of country, but I suggest that that would not be practical and would not achieve the desired intention. We are very proud of the United Kingdom's work through the United Nations, and particularly the gateway protection programme. We have a very good record compared with those of other advanced countries; that is frequently recognised by the UN.

The right hon. Lady also asserted that asylum support has been cut. Again, I think that is a misunderstanding. I have double-checked the figures since her letter to the Prime Minister, and I have sent a reply to her on this point. The increase in asylum support was 5.1 per cent. That is in line with the September consumer prices index, rather than the December index, which we had the option of choosing. We chose the September index, because I felt it was right to do so. There were some changes, particularly in the 25 to 26 age bracket and the single parent bracket. Nobody has lost money in real terms as a result of those changes—I have checked the figures in the right hon. Lady's letter—but what has changed is that the number of children has been recognised in respect of that support.

To turn to a particularly serious point, the right hon. Lady said that destitution was a deliberate policy. That is not the case.

Lynne Jones (Birmingham, Selly Oak) (Lab): Exactly how much money are these asylum seekers receiving?

Mr. Woolas: If time permits, I shall come on to deal with the detail of that. The letter in reply to the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood will outline the figures and give that answer. A number of other changes have been made.

The right hon. Lady made a very important point about Stoke-on-Trent. There is a political difficulty here, which has also arisen in other towns where the activities of the organised far-right may be designed to achieve the objective of stopping asylum support. This is a very important point which I will look into. I have received two pieces of correspondence that I am aware of about this issue: one of them is from a housing provider, and the other is from an hon. Member.

The right hon. Lady made points about changes in respect of Liverpool, and I shall come straight to them. It is already the case that an asylum claim that is not made at a port of entry—there are such cases, of course—must be made in person, at Croydon or one of the other centres.

Our policy is to improve the decision making and to make quicker and better quality decisions. The problem in the past has been that the backlog has built up. A year ago, in my speech to University college London, I put it on the record that the failure of successive Governments to provide support has caused division in communities and hardship for the people applying. Our policy is to improve the decision making and the Select Committee has concentrated on getting rid of the legacy backlog. That is what we are doing.

In order to provide good legal advice early in the process, which is our policy—it is in the interests of a fairer system to do so—we have the Solihull project, which we are examining, whereby legal advice can be provided earlier rather than later to avoid some of the problems that the right hon. Lady has mentioned. As a constituency MP, I recognise that point.

Let me return to the right hon. Lady's point about Liverpool. A further submission must, in most cases, be treated as a fresh application. It is not the case that the UK Border Agency does not provide support for people who cannot attend. Indeed, I recently met Scottish colleagues to discuss that point, given the geographical distances involved. Just as new applications that are not made at the port must be made at Croydon, a further submission, which is treated as a fresh application under the Court of Appeal rulings, must also, we think, be dealt with in person. To allow a fresh application to be dealt with by post would simply result in a further legacy backlog and further hardship and destitution.

Simon Hughes: The Minister knows, because I have worked closely with his colleagues to try to get a better system, that there is now a regional allocation of immigration staff in his Department who work with MPs in the regions of England and separately in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. That suggests that a perfectly competent system could be arranged regionally to allow people to take in their application. Applications from MPs with further representations could still be considered, as all it would mean would be that people could come to MPs rather than having to go in person.

Mr. Woolas: My policy is to clear the backlog. My policy is that we should take decisions fairly and quickly, commensurate with fairness. I have looked at the Croydon figures as a result of the changes that we have made, and it is not the case that the number has fallen, as the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood has suggested. Indeed, the overall numbers applying at Croydon have diminished as we have cleared the backlog and got more on top of the situation.

Let me give examples of some of the policy measures that we have implemented.

Clare Short: To repeat the suggestion made by the hon. Member for North Southwark and Bermondsey (Simon Hughes), will the Minister please consider allowing pre-March 2007 applicants to take their new application to their regional or local office, where they have to go anyway every so often to sign on? That would overcome lots of the difficulties that I have just outlined.

Mr. Woolas: Let me outline some of the policy measures, because I think that I can address that point. When a failed asylum seeker asks us to reconsider their claim due to a change in their circumstances, in the past we simply have not dealt with them fast enough. It becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy. By definition, as time goes on circumstances change. People's lives do not freeze as we consider the legacy. Dealing with the decisions quicker, but commensurate with fairness, is critical to our policy. We are achieving that. The backlog is being dealt with and decisions are being taken within our objective of 60 per cent. within six months. The figure of 40 per cent. is not because we are not fit for purpose, as some might say, but because some of the cases are inherently more complicated, particularly those that deal with families.

[Mr. Woolas]

Our policy is that we have been working since 2005 to require asylum seekers to make initial claims in person. As the right hon. Lady rightly said, this October we brought the process for further submissions into line with that by introducing a requirement to make a further submission in person. The reason for that change is to make the system better. We cannot be asked to treat a further representation as a fresh application and then to deal with it by post, because there would be abuse, corruption and exploitation, which I have a responsibility to address.

The change helps to minimise the risk of fraud, because we often receive applications, or fresh representations, from people who are not the person in whose name the application is made. It also discourages abuse of the system by people who attempt to frustrate a removal. All of us know, from our experience as constituency MPs, that there are, sadly, people who attempt to frustrate the system. Out of fairness to genuine applicants and their rights, we have to address that issue. In making this change, we are reducing the incentive for individuals to make unfounded further submissions. Again, it cannot be denied that there are legions of unfounded further representations. Anyone who has looked at a case that has been strung along—sometimes for years, and often not to the benefit of the child where a child is involved—will know that that is the case.

The change helps to ensure that those who need our protection get it as early as possible, because it enables us to deal with cases more quickly. Are there exceptions and facilities for people to make further representations, or fresh applications if one takes the court's definition? That is the case if they genuinely cannot appear to make the application, and we consider such situations on a case-by-case basis. I believe that the House will find that the impact of this policy will not be what is feared; indeed, it will be the opposite.

The right hon. Lady has raised a number of points. I will check the Croydon figures and come back to her about what I recognise to be a critical point. If she is right and I am wrong, I will need to review the policy.

Simon Hughes: I do not wish to take up any more time, but I hope that the Minister will respond to me as well as to the right hon. Lady. This issue could be dealt with just as well and as efficiently, addressing all the relevant objectives, if it were dealt with regionally, without the huge disadvantage that the present system of going to Liverpool causes to individuals and their families. All the policy objectives could be achieved in that way, there would be face-to-face engagement and the system would be just as efficient.

Mr. Woolas: I do not rule out that possibility, and I see that point. I hesitate to say that the hon. Gentleman is being naive, but the system has been subject to frustration, to the detriment of genuine applicants. I have raised this issue with our directorates in Scotland and Northern Ireland, and we have mechanisms in place to allow what he suggests. If something positive can come out of this debate, I shall reconsider that point.

Let me briefly consider destitution. The idea that a Government—especially a Labour Government—would deliberately cause destitution genuinely worries people and must be taken seriously. Putting aside the asylum system, let us consider the Government's commitment to end rough sleeping. Of course, it has not ended completely, but a sea change has happened. The "no one left out" strategy has a goal of ending rough sleeping by 2012. The right hon. Lady raised some cases with me recently and I have looked at the figures. I recognise that the methodology might not be perfect and I am not so naive as to think that everyone who is destitute sleeps on the pavement. They may sleep in empty buildings or in places where our systems do not reach them, but there is significant evidence to show that rough sleeping has decreased significantly.

Now we get to the difficult matter of what to do when the end of the appeals system, the legal consideration and the decision making has been reached. Of course, if somebody has failed to be granted leave under the asylum system and cannot, through no fault of their own, return to their country, support is available. However, when that is not the case, we have a difficult dilemma. Are we to say that the taxpayer should continue supporting a person, when there is no obstacle to returning, especially given the voluntary return system, which our constituents criticise heavily? The easy political option for the Government would be to give in to those pressures and not provide support for the voluntary return system. Indeed, there have been several high profile cases recently, and I, with my colleagues' support, have resisted that pressure on us. The Refugee Integration and Employment Service and our work with the International Organisation for Migration—

10.31 pm

House adjourned without Question put (Standing Order No. 9(7)).

House of Commons

Tuesday 8 December 2009

The House met at half-past Two o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

BUSINESS BEFORE QUESTIONS

QUEEN'S SPEECH (ANSWER TO ADDRESS)

THE VICE-CHAMBERLAIN OF THE HOUSEHOLD reported to the House, That Her Majesty, having been attended with its Address of 18th November, was pleased to receive the same very graciously and give the following Answer:

I have received with great satisfaction the dutiful and loyal expression of your thanks for the speech with which I opened the present Session of Parliament.

I also have to inform the House that the Address of 2nd December praying that Her Majesty will appoint Professor Sir Ian Kennedy to the office of Chair of the Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority and the right hon. Lord Justice Scott Baker, Jackie Ballard, Ken Olisa and Professor Isobel Sharp to the office of ordinary member of the Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority was presented to Her Majesty, who was graciously pleased to comply with the request. The appointments of Professor Sir Ian Kennedy, Jackie Ballard, Ken Olisa and Professor Isobel Sharp became effective from 3rd December 2009. That of the right hon. Lord Justice Scott Baker will become effective from 12th January 2010.

BEVERLEY FREEMEN BILL [LORDS]

Bill read a Second time.

Oral Answers to Questions

COMMUNITIES AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT

The Secretary of State was asked—

Private Rented Housing

1. Linda Gilroy (Plymouth, Sutton) (Lab/Co-op): What recent progress has been made on his Department's plans for the private rented housing sector. [304597]

The Minister for Housing (John Healey): We consulted over the summer on our response to the independent review of the private rented sector conducted by Julie Rugg. We received more than 250 responses, and I intend to publish a summary of them shortly.

Linda Gilroy: May I ask the Minister about the next steps? Might they include measures to address the concern that is felt in my area and others that contain a large amount of rented private sector student accommodation?

John Healey: They may include such measures. My hon. Friend will be aware that we have also consulted on proposals to strengthen local authorities' ability to deal with houses in multiple occupation, which sometimes give rise to the concern to which she refers. She will have to be a bit patient and wait for my summary, which will be available shortly to her and to all other Members throughout the House who take an interest in the issue.

Sarah Teather (Brent, East) (LD): There are 8 million people in the private rented sector. At present, if a landlord's property is repossessed, the first that such people know about it is when they come home to find that the locks have been changed. A succession of Ministers have promised to legislate. When will the Minister act? When will he take on mortgage lenders and keep his promise to tenants?

John Healey: In fact there are 3 million households in the private rented sector, not 8 million, but the hon. Lady has a point. The number is rising, and last year it was up to about one in seven.

The hon. Lady is rightly concerned about the position of those who may be renting from landlords who are struggling with their mortgages, and who may not be aware that those landlords are having problems. My hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, South-East (Dr. Iddon) proposes to introduce a private Member's Bill, to which I am more than prepared to give every assistance and a fair wind because it constitutes exactly the sort of legislation that I think the hon. Lady wishes to see. I hope that, in the best tradition of private Members' Bills, it will receive support from Members in all parts of the House.

Mr. Clive Betts (Sheffield, Attercliffe) (Lab): May I suggest two measures that could be considered? First, the Government could try to persuade local authorities to become more proactive in dealing with the worst landlords, particularly through the use of discretionary licensing arrangements. Secondly, they could try to persuade institutional investors to invest for the long term in high-quality developments, and also in long-term management arrangements The properties should be built, and then there should be high-quality management.

John Healey: My hon. Friend is a member of the Select Committee on Communities and Local Government, and is one of the House's experts on these matters. He is right to suggest that local authorities have an important role which could be reinforced, allowing them to take action against the worst landlords who provide the worst housing, and we are considering doing exactly that. It is one of a number of actions that we need to take to bring the general standard of the private rented sector up to scratch.

Grant Shapps (Welwyn Hatfield) (Con): As was pointed out by the hon. Member for Brent, East (Sarah Teather), in May the Government pledged at the earliest opportunity to change the law and give tenants at least two months' notice if their landlords' properties were being repossessed. Here we are, six months later, and nothing has happened. Why have the Government not taken advantage of an amendment to the recent Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009, and why did the Queen's Speech contain no measure to deal with the problem? Do not the Department's own estimates show that 1,200 people will be evicted at short notice in the next year simply because the Government have failed to act? We now understand that they will have to do so via a private Member's Bill. Is that not the opposite to "Real help now"?

John Healey: The hon. Gentleman recognises that primary legislation is required. Perhaps I can take it from his question that he and his party's Front-Bench team will support the private Member's Bill to be presented by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton South-East—and if so, I warmly welcome that.

Thurrock Council

2. Andrew Mackinlay (Thurrock) (Lab): What recent discussions officials in his Department have had with representatives of Thurrock council on the posts of its chief executive and senior managers; and if he will make a statement. [304598]

The Minister for Regional Economic Development and Co-ordination (Ms Rosie Winterton): Officials from the Government office for the east of England discussed the appointment of a permanent chief executive and other matters with the leader and senior managers of Thurrock council on 9 November. In addition, the Under-Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government, my hon. Friend the Member for Dewsbury (Mr. Malik), will in his role as Minister with responsibility for the Thames Gateway meet the leader of the council on 9 December—tomorrow.

Andrew Mackinlay: Since 2004, there have been two permanent chief executives and three interim chief executives of Thurrock council, at enormous cost and loss to the taxpayer, and now there is an interim treasurer and an interim head of housing. There is a culture of paying off people to go away, without any real examination of that. Is it not time that there was publication and full disclosure of these top salaries in Thurrock council and other councils, and that a kick up the backside was delivered in order to get this dysfunctional council working properly?

Ms Winterton: I can tell my hon. Friend that the Audit Commission is conducting its "boomerang bosses" inquiry. I can also assure him that the Government have been taking a close interest in developments in Thurrock because of the matters he raises. We have put in a level of support through the Government office for the east of England and local government organisations, which are supporting the council and the interim chief executive. We are working closely with them to ensure that a permanent chief executive is appointed, and the Government office and the Audit Commission will continue to monitor whether more formal intervention is required.

Housing Transactions

3. Mr. Andrew Mackay (Bracknell) (Con): How many completed transactions there have been under the (a) mortgage rescue scheme, (b) homeowners mortgage support scheme and (c) rent to homebuy scheme. [304599]

The Minister for Housing (John Healey): By the end of September, there had been almost 100 completions under the special mortgage rescue scheme and 1,800 rent to homebuy completions. Homeowners mortgage support scheme figures will be published later this month.

Mr. Mackay: Even without the unpublished figure, which is presumably pretty bad, is this not a sad little tale? It is all hype, spin and nonsense. It is about spending taxpayers' money to set up schemes that have benefited hardly anybody. Would the Minister care to apologise?

John Healey: I am stunned. What on earth does the right hon. Gentleman say to the 100 families who are still in their own homes because of this special back-stop scheme? What does he say to the 1,000 families whose applications are in the pipeline? What does he say, too, to the 330,000 families who have had help across the range of advice from Government over the past year, which has helped them when they have been struggling with their mortgage repayments and helped them to stay in their own homes without running the risk of repossession, and which is testimony to the fact that this Government have been ready to act, unlike what happened in the 1990s? That is why repossessions are running at half the rate of the last recession.

Dr. Phyllis Starkey (Milton Keynes, South-West) (Lab): As the housing market recovers and house prices rise, there will be a temptation for some lenders who have hitherto exercised forbearance to move to repossess properties. Will the Minister ensure that the measures that have been put in place to protect home owners are kept in place until we are completely out of the woods, in order to avoid a second spike of repossessions?

John Healey: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. Our experience tells us and our forecasts say that, as the economy moves out of recession during next year, the pressure on repossessions will increase. I can do better than she urges me: we will not only look to keep the current support in place, but we will extend and strengthen it. We are extending the campaign that allows people to get access to free advice. We are toughening up the rules in court, too. Through the Financial Services Authority, we are also looking at toughening up the regulations on lenders, so that any repossession is genuinely a last resort. In this way, we can get ahead of the pressures we anticipate for next year, and try to ensure that more families are able to stay in their own home, which is where they should be, despite the pressures of recession.

Julia Goldsworthy (Falmouth and Camborne) (LD): The Minister spoke of the need to extend and strengthen the schemes. Specifically, will the Department be looking at monitoring the impact that unsuccessful applications have on individuals? A constituent of mine took several months to make what was eventually an unsuccessful application. As a result, their personal financial circumstances were worse, not better. Does the Minister's Department not need to understand that impact, so that it can be sure it gets the scheme right?

John Healey: The hon. Lady did not mention which scheme she was talking about. I assume that it was the mortgage rescue scheme—

Julia Goldsworthy indicated assent.

John Healey: She might like to know that we have almost trebled the number of housing associations that are part of the scheme. We have a fast-track team in place that takes referrals directly from lenders and we are doing exactly as she urges—we are learning from the experience of the scheme so far and improving it so that it is better at providing the support that is needed. If the hon. Lady would let me have the details of her case, I shall certainly look into it.

Mr. Paul Goodman (Wycombe) (Con): The Minister is giving the House a lot of figures, so can we ask for one more? How many people to date have actually bought a home through the rent to homebuy scheme?

John Healey: The hon. Gentleman might not have been listening when I gave my first answer. At the end of September, the figure was more than 1,800.

Mr. Goodman: We are very grateful to the Minister for that answer. Perhaps he will be able to tell us in a moment exactly how much that cost per person, given that expenditure on the scheme was £115 million.

The mortgage rescue scheme was meant to help up to 6,000 households at a cost of about £47,000 each. Since it has helped only 92 households to date, that works out at about £3 million per person helped. Is that the value for money that we can expect from tomorrow's pre-Budget report?

John Healey: I am disappointed in the hon. Gentleman. He was on the shadow Treasury team for a while, and perhaps we have seen why he is now on this team. He confuses expenditure with budgets. Not only have nearly 100 families stayed in their own homes because of the mortgage rescue scheme back-stop, but some 1,000 applications are in the pipeline and more than 11,000 families have had help and advice directly from their local authority that is part and parcel of the scheme. That is only part of the help that we have put in across the piece to help home owners who are struggling with their mortgages to stay where they should be—in their homes.

Sustainable Communities Act 2007

4. Mr. Mark Lancaster (North-East Milton Keynes) (Con): What his timetable is for completing the implementation of the Sustainable Communities Act 2007. [304600]

The Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Mr. John Denham): The Government are committed to implementing effectively the Sustainable Communities Act. I shall update the House later this month on how we are progressing with local spending reports. The timing of decisions on whether local proposals should be implemented will depend inevitably on the number and complexity of the proposals shortlisted.

Mr. Lancaster: Given that the Local Government Association is due to submit its proposals by the end of the month, can the Secretary of State not simply commit to making a final decision by the Easter recess?

Mr. Denham: We need to look at the proposals once they have been shortlisted by the LGA. As the hon. Gentleman says, they are due—this is my understanding, although it is not in my control—before the end of the year. We then need to assess the complexity and practicality of the schemes that are proposed.

David Taylor (North-West Leicestershire) (Lab/Co-op): "Planning for Prosperous Economies"—planning policy statement 4—has a lot to say about sustainable communities and particularly about the viability and vitality of town centres. Will the Secretary of State say what the Government are doing to reaffirm a commitment to "town centre first" policies and adopt a presumption against out-of-town developments, which seem to be creeping back in, and whether there has been a definition of what is meant by "town centres"?

Mr. Denham: My hon. Friend raises an important point. He will know that some years ago the Government introduced the planning guidance to which he refers with the intention of protecting town centres. Further development of that guidance is under discussion, as he will know, but I assure him that we remain as committed as we ever have been to the effective protection of town centres from unplanned and badly planned out-of-town shopping developments.

Mrs. Caroline Spelman (Meriden) (Con): Yesterday, the Government published a Command Paper, "Smarter Government", in which the Prime Minister himself claimed to "put the frontline first" by allowing flexibility in local spending, yet nowhere in all 68 pages is there a single mention of local spending reports. Is it the Department for Communities and Local Government or, once again, the Treasury that has no interest in supporting this flagship policy of the Sustainable Communities Act?

Mr. Denham: The hon. Lady perhaps has not grasped the fact that the proposals for making data publicly available set out in the White Paper published yesterday are far more extensive and ambitious than those discussed when local spending reports were proposed. I made these points in a debate in the House just a few weeks ago. At that time I promised that, as we developed the work being led by Sir Tim Berners-Lee and Professor Nigel Shadbolt and his panel of experts on making local data widely available, we would not drop our commitment to developing local spending reports in the interim. That is why I shall bring forward our proposals setting out where we will go next on local spending reports, as I promised, before the end of the year.

Mrs. Spelman: There are of course only five sitting days left before the Christmas recess, but we look forward to receiving that information. There might have been no reference to local spending reports in the document, but there was a clear reference to arm's length bodies costing the taxpayer a massive £18 billion a year. What about asking those 750 quangos to reveal in local spending reports how much they spend, or would the Minister prefer taxpayers to be kept in the dark about how much money is wasted on central bureaucracy?

Mr. Denham: We have debated this point before. The hon. Lady regards the doubling of spending by the quango known as the Higher Education Funding Council as a waste of money, but I do not. I believe that it is represented by a significant investment in universities and by opportunities for young people and older people. It is right that we want to bear down on costs and on salaries that are too high. In our previous debate on this issue, I undertook to bring forward another report on local spending reports, because I took the point that it would be useful for local spending reports to give access to available data from organisations such as the funding council and the Learning and Skills Council. The hon. Lady is quite wrong to say that every penny that is spent by an organisation that funds our universities is wasted money, but she keeps saying that.

Regeneration (Liverpool)

5. Mr. Peter Kilfoyle (Liverpool, Walton) (Lab): What plans he has for the regeneration of north Liverpool. [304601]

The Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Mr. John Denham): Her Majesty's Government recognise the importance of regeneration in north Liverpool. There has been significant investment in the area, including £34 million of housing market renewal funding, £40 million to support business and create jobs, £18.4 million of European regional development funding, and £8.6 million through the future jobs fund, creating 1,320 jobs. I am also pleased that the £5.5 billion Liverpool Waters plan is moving forward, as is the £150 million Project Jennifer redevelopment of Great Homer street. We will continue to support the regeneration of north Liverpool.

Mr. Kilfoyle: I am grateful to my right hon. Friend for that answer, although I barely recognise the picture that he paints. May I invite him to visit my constituency to see for himself the result of 10 years of malign neglect under Liberal Democrat council control? While he is there, will he advise us on how Everton and Liverpool football clubs could be used to lever in the kind of regeneration funding that is still desperately needed, notwithstanding the roll of honour that he has just related?

Mr. Denham: I assure my hon. Friend that the investments that I have described either are or have been taking place or are anticipated in the future. I shall welcome the opportunity, if it arises, to go to his constituency; I always welcome an opportunity to inspect the malign neglect of Liberal Democrat councils.

Mr. George Howarth (Knowsley, North and Sefton, East) (Lab): As my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Kilfoyle) has just made clear, the regeneration of north Liverpool is intricately linked to the regeneration of Kirkby. Will my right hon. Friend welcome the efforts that are being made by Knowsley council, Tesco, the Government office for the north-west, the Northwest Regional Development Agency and the Minister for the North West, my hon. Friend the Member for Oldham, East and Saddleworth (Mr. Woolas), to put together a modified application for the regeneration of Kirkby, which I hope will be presented to my right hon. Friend in due course?

Mr. Denham: I pay tribute to the efforts that my right hon. Friend has consistently made to support his constituency and regeneration. My decision on that planning application was taken on the basis of planning guidance, planning law and the conclusions of the inspector's report. However, I am very pleased that, following discussions with me, the Regional Minister and others are engaging with the council and others to see what is the best way forward for the regeneration of Kirkby.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

6. Chris Ruane (Vale of Clwyd) (Lab): What recent progress has been made on the licensing of houses in multiple occupation. [304602]

The Minister for Housing (John Healey): Since the introduction of the licensing provisions for houses in multiple occupation, councils in England have received applications for about 30,000 HMOs, and have issued licences for about 20,000.

Chris Ruane: I thank the Minister for his response. Last year, I asked Denbighshire county council how many HMOs it had licensed in a three-year period. The answer was just 33. After pressure, it has agreed to apply for additional and selective licensing, and next year it will start on licensing 433, taking the council from the worst to the best in the country. What lessons has the Minister learned from the Welsh experience in increasing the number of HMOs that are licensed?

John Healey: The whole House will have heard my hon. Friend and learned the lesson that local authorities that are prepared to tackle the worst landlords in their area, and to build up concentrations of HMOs that change its nature and character, are able to put in place additional licensing schemes. I am glad to hear about the successful campaign that he has run to persuade his council in that regard. That is precisely the way ahead, as we want councils to make maximum use of the provisions that are in place at present.

Greg Mulholland (Leeds, North-West) (LD): Landlord licensing is one solution, but the use classes order is far more significant in many areas with concentrations of HMOs. Will the Minister give me an update on the progress of the Government's examination of that? Does he agree that restrictions on the number of HMOs in such areas will increase the balance of the community and be in the interests of all?

John Healey: Indeed, and that is why our general policy is to promote mixed communities, as they tend to be better balanced and more stable. The hon. Gentleman asked for an update on our examination of whether changes to the use classes might help us pursue our objectives. At present, we are sifting the 900 or so responses that we have received to the consultation, and I hope to be able to update the House on this shortly.

Gas Storage Facilities (Planning)

7. Martin Linton (Battersea) (Lab): What guidance his Department issues on the permitted distance between high-rise developments to gas storage facilities. [304603]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Mr. Ian Austin): Government circular 04/00, "Planning Controls For Hazardous Substances", provides that the Health and Safety Executive must be consulted on any proposed development near hazardous substances installations such as gasholders and that, in view of its acknowledged expertise, any advice from the HSE that planning permission should be refused should not be overridden without the most careful consideration.

Martin Linton: Is my hon. Friend aware that planning permission was granted in Wandsworth for a 42-storey tower only 18 metres from a gasholder? That was against the HSE's advice, which said that the risk from a fireball was "unacceptable" and 17 times higher than the level at which it would normally advise against. Is it not a matter of concern that planning committees have the power to disregard HSE advice even when it is expressed so strongly, and that it is so often left to public inquiries to assess the real risk to the public?

Mr. Ian Austin: We are working closely with the HSE to ensure that local planning authorities are fully informed about the advice available to assess risk around major hazards, and to make that advice more accessible. I cannot comment on the specific planning application that my hon. Friend has raised, but an inquiry into the development of the Ram brewery site in Wandsworth is currently under way. The inspector will submit his report and the Secretary of State will determine the application as soon he reasonably can.

Mr. James Gray (North Wiltshire) (Con): I well understand the concern of the residents represented by the hon. Member for Battersea (Martin Linton), but what does the Minister have to say about the fact that we in Britain have only 15 days' strategic gas storage? That compares to 92 days in Germany and more than that in France. Elsewhere across the world we have large quantities of gas. What is Britain going to do to stimulate investment in gas storage, taking into account the concerns of residents such as those that have been raised?

Mr. Austin: That is probably a matter for the Department of Energy and Climate Change, and I will make sure that the hon. Gentleman is written to. However, the question that he ought to be asking his Front Benchers is why the Conservative party continues to refuse planning applications for wind turbines.

FiReControl Project

8. James Duddridge (Rochford and Southend, East) (Con): What his most recent estimate is of the cost of the FiReControl project. [304604]

12. Christopher Fraser (South-West Norfolk) (Con): What his most recent estimate is of the cost of the FiReControl project. [304608]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Mr. Shahid Malik): The estimated cost of delivering the FiReControl project is £420 million.

James Duddridge: At the start of this debacle in March 2004 we were told that tried and tested methods would be used for IT, and that the project would be done and dusted by November 2007. There has been a little bit of slippage on the time scale, but is the Minister serious and does he stand by the words of his predecessors? Was the IT really tried and tested, because that clearly does not seem to be the case?

Mr. Malik: The case for FiReControl is absolutely compelling—[Hon. Members: "No, it is not!"] It is interesting, because I met representatives of the Chief Fire Officers Association only last week, which is as committed to FiReControl as ever. The idea that the Opposition are better placed to talk about national resilience in the context of the fire service than the CFOA is frankly laughable. FiReControl will improve national resilience and bring unprecedented levels of co-operation and interoperability—[Interruption.] That is a difficult word as well. For the first time, we shall have a national network with nine regional control centres, all of which will be able to operate at peak times in a way that we have never seen before.

Christopher Fraser: Given the vast over-cost and the considerable delay, does the Minister believe that taxpayers are seeing value for money?

Mr. Malik: We would not have engaged in the project if we did not believe that it was value for money. All the major stakeholders believe that it is value for money. Sometimes I think that the Conservatives seem to know the cost of everything and the value of nothing.

Mr. Stewart Jackson (Peterborough) (Con): The set-up costs of the FiReControl project are already £400 million over budget, the project is years behind schedule and the Local Government Association and the Chief Fire Officers Association—previous supporters of the Government on the project—are bailing out. In his written statement of 15 July, the Minister promised to underwrite all pre-cutover upfront costs of the project. Is he still in a position to meet that undertaking?

Mr. Malik: We are fully committed to ensuring that FiReControl is achieved as set out. The idea that there is a £400 million overspend is so far off the mark that it is frightening. The reality is that when rescheduling took place in July this year the cost went up from £380 million to £420 million. Those costs will all be reaped back from EADS via royalties and a reduced fee for FiReControl operations.

Public Service Delivery

9. Mr. Michael Clapham (Barnsley, West and Penistone) (Lab): What recent assessment he has made of the effectiveness of local authorities in delivery of local public services. [304605]

The Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Mr. John Denham): Local government has improved significantly during the past decade. It plays a key role in local areas, ensuring that citizens receive high-quality public services from all local providers. In yesterday's White Paper we announced increases in flexibility and reductions in bureaucracy, which will help fulfil that role more effectively. Tomorrow, we will see the first comprehensive area assessment results, which will provide transparent information, enabling citizens to hold local service providers to account.

Mr. Clapham: I am grateful to the Secretary of State for that answer, but does he agree that in localities such as the Barnsley metropolitan borough council area the regional development agency plays a very important part in ensuring that the effectiveness of local authority services is improved, by being able to focus on the wider issues of transport and employment to help in creating the jobs that Barnsley needs so much?

Mr. Denham: I completely agree with my hon. Friend. That is exactly the role that regional development agencies play. In many other ways, they support growth and the improvement of public services, which is why the CBI, the House Builders Federation and many others are so appalled at Conservative proposals to abolish regional development agencies and the essential role they play.

Mr. Peter Bone (Wellingborough) (Con): Is the Secretary of State not completely right to say that local authorities have improved enormously over the past few years, because most of them are now Tory-controlled?

Mr. Denham: The reason why local authority services have improved is that real spending and real investment by central Government in local authorities has improved by 37 per cent. over the past 10 years. That is a sharp contrast with the 7 per cent. real-terms reduction when the Conservatives were last in power. Local government has improved because for the first time there has been comprehensive and effective inspection and accountability of those services, and I am proud of the role that this Government have played with local councils of all parties in improving the quality of services to local people.

Council Housing

10. Clive Efford (Eltham) (Lab): How many local authorities (a) submitted successful bids in round 1 and (b) have submitted bids in round 2 of the Government's council housing new build programme. [304606]

The Minister for Housing (John Healey): Forty-nine local authorities were successful in bidding for grant to build new council homes. All are set to start on site, with 217 schemes, before the end of March, which makes it the largest council house building programme for nearly two decades. The deadline for round 2 submissions was the end of October, and I hope to make announcements on successful bidders early in the new year.

Clive Efford: May I congratulate my right hon. Friend on his excellent work in making resources available for council house building? However, he will be aware of speculation about the demand for those resources, so will he consider making a statement to support new bids for council housing where the demand for resources outstrips what has been allocated so far?

John Healey: My hon. Friend, who knows a great deal about those matters, is right. The level of interest and the number of bids that we have had for the second round of the council house building programme has certainly been greater than that which we received for the first. When I announced the £1.5 billion of extra funding in the housing pledge, I made it clear that the four elements of that pledge, and the budgets allocated against them back in the summer, included the capacity to flex some of that spend between those parts of the programme, and I am certainly ready to do so if there is a good case.

Mr. Graham Stuart (Beverley and Holderness) (Con): This Labour Government have let down the poor in so many ways, but I shall not mention spiralling youth unemployment, falling educational standards or, indeed, failing public health. Instead, I want to ask why this Labour Government have built fewer affordable houses than were built in any year of the previous Conservative Administration. Why is that? Why have this Government let down the poor on housing?

John Healey: May I say that this Labour Minister in this Labour Government is pleased to have been able to offer the hon. Gentleman's Tory council money to build council homes, which are needed in the East Riding of Yorkshire just as they are throughout the rest of the country.

Ms Karen Buck (Regent's Park and Kensington, North) (Lab): When the Mayor of London published his draft housing strategy, he tore up the commitment to make 50 per cent. of all new homes affordable, saying that his target of producing units would help us to deliver more affordable housing. Given that this week it has been announced that he will miss that target, too, will my right hon. Friend have urgent discussions about how we can deliver the much-needed homes to tackle overcrowding and homelessness in London?

John Healey: The jury is very much out on Mayor Johnson and the pledges he made more than 18 months ago. In housing, more than any other area, there is a big shortfall if we compare what he promised in the run-up to his election with what he has been able to deliver so far to meet the very serious housing needs that exist throughout the capital.

Home Information Packs

11. Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby) (Con): What assessment he has made of the effect of home information packs on the housing market since their introduction. [304607]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Mr. Ian Austin): We are currently working up proposals to evaluate the effectiveness of the HIPs programme, and we expect the results to be available in 2010. However, early independent research undertaken by Europe Economics and published in November 2007 concluded that the introduction of HIPs would not have a negative impact on the housing market.

Mr. Robathan: Let me add my voice to the research, because all my constituents tell me that they find the HIPs to be—[Hon. Members: "All?"] Those constituents who raised the matter with me tell me that they find HIPs to be untimely, expensive, bureaucratic and, really, a waste of time. They quite like the energy performance certificates, so will the Government realise the error of their ways, realise what a waste of time—time, effort and money—the process has been, and scrap it?

Mr. Austin: The hon. Gentleman does not need to ask ludicrous questions like that to confirm to the House that he is not exactly the sharpest tool in the box. [Interruption.] However, thousands of jobs and hundreds of small businesses depend on the HIP process. Some 13,000 people—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I realise that there is some enjoyable badinage, but I actually want to get down the Order Paper and reach some questioners lower down. I know that Members will want to take that into account—rudeness notwithstanding.

Mr. Austin: Thousands of jobs and hundreds of small businesses depend on the HIP process. Some 13,000 people have invested thousands in training as energy assessors, so the Opposition need to explain why they would put all those jobs and all those businesses at risk, and the hon. Gentleman needs to explain to all the people in his constituency whose livelihoods depend on that process why he wants to put them out of work.

Mr. David Jones (Clwyd, West) (Con): Does the Minister not realise that most house purchasers would far rather rely on searches and inquiries carried out on their behalf by a solicitor of their choice than by a home information pack provider, of whom they know nothing?

Mr. Austin: The Leader of the Opposition swans off to the Arctic to hang around with huskies, but the hon. Gentleman and the Opposition are showing today why nobody will take seriously anything they say about climate change. As a result of HIPs, 2 million home owners now have an energy assessment and energy recommendations that can help them to cut their fuel bills by up to £300 and reduce carbon emissions. Is it not extraordinary that even today, as the world gathers in Copenhagen, the Opposition are still committed to abolishing the HIP, which is one of the main ways of helping home owners to cut carbon emissions and tackle climate change?

Local Housing Development

13. Mr. David Heathcoat-Amory (Wells) (Con): What recent representations he has received from district councils on the effect of planning policy statement 25 on local housing development. [304609]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Mr. Ian Austin): No recent representations of this nature have been received by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The tragic events of the past few weeks underline the importance of reducing flood risk to new development. Planning policy statement 25 provides a robust policy framework for local planning authorities to avoid, manage and reduce flood risk to new development, as endorsed by Sir Michael Pitt in his review of the lessons learned from the 2007 floods published last year.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Is the Minister aware that the Somerset levels are low-lying and very prone to flooding, both from the sea and from river water? Why, therefore, have the Government placed almost the whole of my constituency in flood zone 3, which will prevent almost all development, including housing development, while failing to provide funding or means for flood relief? Does the dull instrument on the Treasury Bench—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister can deal with the point now.

Mr. Austin: This is a very important issue. That is why we have produced a clear, strengthened planning policy statement, PPS25, to reduce flood risk to new development and to deliver safely, without exposing people to unnecessary flood risk, the level of house building we want to see. I am not aware of the particular circumstances in the right hon. Gentleman's constituency, but I would be happy to meet him to discuss that in more detail.

House Building Targets

14. Bob Spink (Castle Point) (Ind): What account the Government took of the economic situation in setting their targets for house building. [304610]

The Minister for Housing (John Healey): There has long been a mismatch between the supply and building of new homes and the demand for those homes. That mismatch led the Government to consider and set the house building targets in the first place. Clearly, the situation has got worse as a result of the global economic downturn, with the demand and need for housing continuing to grow and, particularly in the private sector, the level of building falling through the floor. That is why we stepped in over the summer to put extra money—£1.5 billion—into building the homes we need right across the country.

Bob Spink: But surely the economic crisis and the subsequent fall in net immigration that we saw as a consequence has caused a reduction in forecast demand for new housing need. Can the Minister therefore now reduce the target for new housing need so that we can increase the protection of our green belt, which is most important to our constituents?

John Healey: I said a moment ago that there was a long-term mismatch between the houses we are building and the demand and need for them. Taken over the long term, that continues. Migration is cyclical. It is a relatively small part, but a part nevertheless, of the projections of the need for housing in future. A bigger factor is demographic change in our own country, with the number of households increasing, people growing older and living for longer, and the need for greater mobility within Britain. We are trying to ensure that we can build the homes to meet those factors in future.

Mr. Lindsay Hoyle (Chorley) (Lab): My right hon. Friend is right—there is a mismatch. The mismatch in Chorley is between lots of house building but no social housing; the council collects section 106 money for social housing but never spends it. What is he going to do to ensure that social housing is provided in the Chorley constituency?

John Healey: I am disappointed to hear my hon. Friend's report about his local council and the attitude it is taking towards affordable housing. I have to say that this is not the first time I have been disappointed to hear his reports about Chorley borough council. There is a great deal more that it can and should do to ensure that the affordable homes needed in his constituency are provided. It can play a much greater role in that, and I hope he will not cease in his campaign to try to ensure that it does so.

Flood Risk (Planning)

15. Mr. Eric Illsley (Barnsley, Central) (Lab): If he will require local planning authorities to act on objections by the Environment Agency to planning applications on the grounds of the risk of flooding. [304611]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Mr. Ian Austin): Again, the terrible events of the past few weeks underline the importance of these issues. Our planning policy requires local planning authorities to re-consult the Environment Agency where the agency objects to a planning application on flood risk grounds. This is backed by a direction requiring planning authorities to provide the Secretary of State with the opportunity to intervene where the agency sustains an objection to major development proposals.

Mr. Illsley: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that reply. I recently read a briefing which said that about a quarter of local authorities were ignoring Environment Agency recommendations against developments in areas prone to flooding. Does that cause him some concern?

Mr. Austin: This issue will concern many members of the public, and my hon. Friend is absolutely right to raise it. We have made the Environment Agency a statutory consultee on planning applications in areas at risk of flooding. The figures I have suggest that in about 97 per cent. of cases in which the agency objects on flood risk grounds, the final decision is in line with its advice. I know how seriously he takes these matters, and I would be delighted to meet him to discuss in more detail the figures that he has.

Miss Anne McIntosh (Vale of York) (Con): Will the Minister go further and join in our calls to make water companies statutory consultees as well, to ensure that where there are major new developments, sewage can fit into waste water pipes to prevent future flooding?

Mr. Austin: I have not considered that issue, but I would be very happy to meet the hon. Lady and talk about it in more detail.

Business Rates (Public Houses)

16. Chloe Smith (Norwich, North) (Con): If he will conduct an impact assessment on the effect on public houses and other businesses of the 2010 business rates revaluation. [304612]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Barbara Follett): Regular revaluations are a statutory part of the business rates system and as such do not require impact assessments. However, we have carefully considered the impact of the 2010 revaluation on businesses, including public houses, and are introducing a £2 billion transitional relief scheme for the minority facing increases. An impact assessment of that scheme has been conducted and was published on 17 November. From 1 April, we will also offer extra help to individual public houses in rural areas by increasing their rateable value relief threshold from £10,500 to £12,500.

Chloe Smith: I thank the Minister for that answer. Does she not agree that it is irresponsible not to conduct a full impact assessment on such policies, especially in the case in question? The distortions that accrue from using April 2008 property figures may bake property boom prices into business rates for pubs in urban areas and businesses next door to them.

Barbara Follett: The hon. Lady is quite correct to point out that the system contains problems, as it values properties backwards so that the 2008 values are reflected in the 2010 figures. That is exactly why the multiplier is set at a 17-year low of 15 per cent., and why we have implemented a transitional rate relief scheme this year and had an impact assessment.

Topical Questions

T1. [304623] Simon Hughes (North Southwark and Bermondsey) (LD): If he will make a statement on his departmental responsibilities.

The Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Mr. John Denham): I want to ensure that councils are performing as efficiently as possible and making the best possible use of every pound of council tax. I am pleased to be able to confirm today that councils have forecast efficiency savings of more than £3 billion by March 2010, making good progress towards the target of £5.5 billion by March 2011. "Smarter Government", published yesterday, sets out how Government will support councils in continuing to deliver improved services with improved value for money.

Simon Hughes: I thank the Secretary of State for his answer. Many people in communities such as Southwark and Bermondsey live near major developments from which they get no necessary personal gain. Will he look sympathetically on the proposal to allow development gain money, traditionally called section 106 money, to be used to build or renovate housing for rent in the area affected?

Mr. Denham: I understand the hon. Gentleman's point. He will be aware that we are already committed to the development of a more flexible and strategic approach to development gain. We will introduce the community infrastructure levy to supplement and replace section 106, which will give local authorities greater flexibility in the use of development gain money.

T5. [304627] Chris McCafferty (Calder Valley) (Lab): Can the Secretary of State tell the House what steps he is taking to reduce carbon emissions in the existing housing stock, particularly in houses such as those in my constituency in which there is no possibility of cavity wall insulation?

The Minister for Housing (John Healey): My hon. Friend is quite right to say, particularly in this week as we build up to the Copenhagen international conference on climate change, that we need to do a great deal more with our homes in future. More than a quarter of our total emissions in this country come from our homes, which requires us to design, build and plan to a new standard in future—I have set out in some detail the plans from 2016 on—and to undertake a national refurb programme, the details of which I and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Communities and Local Government and for Energy and Climate Change are currently working on following the heat and energy saving strategy, which we published earlier in the year.

T2. [304624] Sandra Gidley (Romsey) (LD): Does the Secretary of State agree that we need to protect agricultural land for future food use? If so, what steps will he take to prevent allotments being included in local authority development plans?

Mr. Denham: I think the hon. Lady would agree with me that local authorities need to be able to draw up appropriate development plans for their areas. I am not sure whether she is suggesting that we should specifically limit the way in which they approach these issues, but we are working with third-sector organisations in this area to promote the importance of allotments and to encourage local authorities to make allotment land available. I share with her the view that adequate provision of allotments is a very beneficial thing for local authorities to include in their local planning.

T6. [304628] Mr. Lindsay Hoyle (Chorley) (Lab): The market in the historic market town of Chorley is under threat from a new Asda being built in the town centre. I welcome the Asda jobs, but I am concerned that this will have a dire effect on the market and the small independent retailers. What help and support can this Government give to ensure that markets will survive, along with the independent shops?

The Minister for Regional Economic Development and Co-ordination (Ms Rosie Winterton): I know my hon. Friend has a historic market in his constituency—I think it dates back to the 15th century. It is not quite as old as Doncaster market, but it is still a very valuable one. Under the draft planning guidance—planning policy statement 4—it is possible for local authorities to look very closely at the effect that, for example, an out-of-town development would have on the market. Such effects could include social and economic effects, and perhaps consumer choice would be reduced. That, plus the ability to look much more closely, under the economic assessment duty that is being introduced, at what can be done to assist local markets better are new powers that are being given to local authorities. We also have a retail markets group, which I chair, which will be reporting to Ministers with more ideas as to what we can do.

T3. [304625] Mr. Andrew Mackay (Bracknell) (Con): Following my earlier question, the Housing Minister responded to my hon. Friend the Member for Wycombe (Mr. Goodman) by saying that 1,800 homes had been purchased through the rent-to-homebuy scheme. That seems at variance with the written answer the Minister gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Grant Shapps) on 16 October, when he said that the number was zero. Has the Minister inadvertently misled the House and would he perhaps like to put the record straight?

John Healey: I do not believe so. The right hon. Gentleman's hon. Friends on the Front Bench indicated their question on that matter earlier. If the right hon. Gentleman consults the record, he will see that in response to his original question, I said that up to the end of September, about 1,800 rent-to-homebuys had been completed—I did not use the word "purchased". However, I have indicated to Conservative Front Benchers that I will check the record, particularly in relation to the second exchange between myself and the hon. Member for Wycombe (Mr. Goodman). If I made a mistake the second time around, I shall clearly correct it, but if the right hon. Gentleman consults the record, I think he will find what I have explained now, and I am grateful to him for the opportunity to do so.

T8. [304630] Ms Karen Buck (Regent's Park and Kensington, North) (Lab): The most recent homelessness statistic published by the Department for Communities and Local Government shows a continued fall in the number of acceptances as homeless by local authorities. Does my right hon. Friend agree that there is no such thing as a free lunch? Is he aware that in the case of approximately half the homelessness diversions in the private rented sector, we are substituting affordable social housing for astronomical rents in the private rented sector? Will he continue urgent discussions with the Treasury and the Department for Work and Pensions to make it clear that that is not actually a sustainable and efficient use of money over the longer term?

John Healey: Indeed I will; my hon. Friend has been very forceful in making that point to me and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, so we will certainly do so.

T4. [304626] Christopher Fraser (South-West Norfolk) (Con): In answer to the question put by my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Chloe Smith), did the Minister say that the transitional rate relief will cover in full the increases proposed over the next five years, or does she finally accept that the increases will be unbearable for many businesses?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Barbara Follett): I certainly accept that it will not cover all of them, but in most cases it will cover a percentage of the increases. Also, under the business rates deferral scheme, businesses will be able to extend their payments over a period of three years.

T9. [304631] David Taylor (North-West Leicestershire) (Lab/Co-op): Further to the earlier answer given to me about the planning of town centre developments, the handling of much needed major commercial proposals for the heart of Coalville by Tory North-West Leicestershire district council has been an utter fiasco.

Will the Minister press the Government office for the east midlands to respond to my urgent request for a call-in, because to describe the present position as a dog's breakfast would be a grossly unfair slur on canine eating habits?

Mr. Denham: I hear the point that my hon. Friend makes. Obviously, call-in proposals are considered by Ministers on the basis of the case that is made, but he has made his views very clear this afternoon.

Mr. David Burrowes (Enfield, Southgate) (Con): Does the Minister not understand that the transitional relief scheme will not mitigate the huge business rate hike for businesses in my high street, which face an increase of 120 per cent. in their liability? Is this not the wrong time to push through a revaluation based on 2008 inflated prices, when many of my businesses are struggling to cope in the recession?

Barbara Follett: May I suggest to hon. Members whose businesses are rightly concerned about business rate increases—there are increases, although the majority of businesses will see a decrease as a result of the 2010 revaluation—that they go on to the Business Link and the Valuation Office Agency websites and make the calculation, because there is a cap on the increases? For small businesses, the cap is 5 per cent. and on large businesses it is 12.5 per cent. If we take into account negative inflation, that drops to 3.5 per cent. and 11 per cent. I am very sorry that businesses are getting so concerned about this when measures are in place to help them with it.

Alison Seabeck (Plymouth, Devonport) (Lab): What measures are the Department taking to protect council tax payers against botched asset sales such as those we saw under the previous Government, and which Plymouth city council has now embarked on with its sale of Plymouth City Bus? The figures appear not to stack up.

Mr. Denham: My hon. Friend makes an important point. Of course the Government do not oppose asset sales per se, but they have to be carried out properly, in the public interest and with the values properly established to ensure that the council tax payer does not lose out. I hope that her council is not like Southampton council, whose leader said a few months ago that the council would privatise for ideological reasons. That is not the way to approach such an important issue.

Mr. Mark Lancaster (North-East Milton Keynes) (Con): In light of the economic downturn and the reduction in new homes being built, what assessment has the Secretary of State made of models such as the Milton Keynes tariff in delivering development for local communities?

John Healey: We looked at this very carefully when we were considering proposals that were part of the Planning Act 2008 and the community infrastructure levy. Shortly, I will be able to set out final decisions and regulations to put that levy in place from 1 April. While the hon. Gentleman is right about the fall-off in building new homes for private sale, he is wrong about the reduction in building for affordable homes. Because of the action the Government have taken, that number is up.

Chris Ruane (Vale of Clwyd) (Lab): The Electoral Administration Act 2006 made tens of millions of pounds in additional, unhypothecated funding available to the Department for Communities and Local Government for electoral registration. Can the Minister guarantee that all the money given to the Department for electoral registration was spent on that, and can he liaise with the Ministry of Justice to ensure that proper funding is available for that purpose?

Ms Rosie Winterton: A certain amount of money is given to the Electoral Commission to look at electoral registration, and that is closely monitored. On discussions with the Ministry of Justice, I shall pass on my hon. Friend's comments and get back to him.

Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby) (Con): May I take the Under-Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government, the hon. Member for Dudley, North (Mr. Austin), back to home improvement packs? Will he put his undoubted, enormous intellectual talent, of which you will be aware, Mr. Speaker, to answering a simple question, without resorting to his trademark personal abuse? What proportion of home buyers and sellers, when surveyed, responded that they found the HIP useful?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Mr. Ian Austin): The hon. Gentleman spent half an hour dreaming up that question, which confirms the point that I made about him earlier. The figures to which he refers actually show that already, in such a short period, nine out of 10 buyers are using the HIPs and one out of three said that it had helped them to decide whether to make an offer. [Interruption.] That is a massive improvement on the figures shortly after the HIPs introduction— [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I feel sure that the outbreak of disorder on the one hand, and the presence of the Under-Secretary and the hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) on the other, are entirely unrelated.

Mr. Austin: Those figures are a big improvement on the position shortly after the HIPs introduction and show that the system is becoming more helpful to home buyers all the time.

Points of Order

3.31 pm

Mrs. Theresa May (Maidenhead) (Con): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I seek your guidance on a matter relating to the accuracy of the official record? In the debate on the Queen's Speech on 25 November, the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, when speaking about Government action, said, "It is bringing unemployment down." There was some reaction in the Chamber, given that unemployment has been rising for many months. She did not resile from that statement, but the official record does not include those words. It includes a softer version. May I seek your guidance, Mr. Speaker, on how I can ensure that the words that the Secretary of State said are the words that appear on the record?

Mr. Speaker: I say to the right hon. Lady that I shall happily check the record, and I shall come back to her when I have done so. I am grateful to her for her point of order.

Colin Challen (Morley and Rothwell) (Lab): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wrote to you on Friday about this matter. I seek assurances that no decision by the Members Estimate Committee, or subsequent decision by the House reliant on the MEC's recommendations, will prejudice a Member's right to challenge a final decision, relating to so-called paybacks or restitution, in a court of law or an employment tribunal, that no deductions from salary or allowances will be attempted in respect of those payments until its legality is demonstrated in a process that is independent of the House of Commons and its Officers, and that such deductions should not be made until a Member has had the opportunity to test the issue of repayment in a court of law or employment tribunal.

Mr. Speaker: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for his point of order. The matter that he raises on the Floor of the House this afternoon by this device is one that he has raised with me in correspondence. I am grateful to him for that. I can only say to him today that the issues of concern to him are properly matters for discussion in the Members Estimate Committee, which will meet next week. He can be assured that the concerns that he has raised with me will be relayed to colleagues on the Committee and will be considered.

Opposition Day

[1ST ALLOTTED DAY]

Disability Benefits for the Elderly

Mr. Speaker: I inform the House that I have selected the amendment in the name of the Prime Minister.

3.33 pm

Mr. Andrew Lansley (South Cambridgeshire) (Con): I beg to move,

That this House recognises the vital support that attendance allowance and disability living allowance provide for people with disabilities; notes that these benefits are intended to meet the additional costs of living with an impairment or long-term health condition; further notes with concern that approximately 2.87 million people in the UK who receive disability living allowance or attendance allowance are not eligible for social care services; acknowledges that some 20,000 individuals have petitioned the Prime Minister and many more have petitioned individual hon. and right hon. Members to ensure that these benefits are secured; welcomes the Government's announcement that disability living allowance for people under 65 years will not be scrapped; and urges the Government to ensure that attendance allowance and disability living allowance for people aged 65 years and over are secured and not abolished as part of any future reform of the social care system.

The House will no doubt be aware that the motion is in exactly the same terms as early-day motion 1.

Bob Russell (Colchester) (LD): Bless you!

Mr. Lansley: The hon. Gentleman reminds me—I was going to say this anyway—that early-day motion 1 stands in his name and that of 105 other hon. Members. I claim no authorship of the early-day motion, as he will no doubt verify. He composed it no doubt. He might have done so with others, but he did not compose it in direct association with me. None the less, I was happy to sign it, and I and my colleagues agree with it.

Bob Russell: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving way. I am also grateful to the charity Scope, which provided the background. I readily put on the record the fact that Scope is the organisation that helped me. When the vote comes later, I look forward to seeing the 41 Labour MPs who have signed early-day motion 1 voting for what it says in the Lobby.

Mr. Lansley: I am grateful that the hon. Gentleman has provided that confirmation and that he has referred to the cross-party nature of the support for his early-day motion, which is represented by all parties in the House. Because it relates to benefits, which are a United Kingdom matter, Members other than those from England alone have had occasion to sign it.

For some years we have made it clear that we need a consensus about how we can achieve sustainable and high-quality social care for the longer term. We have had years in which reports have come and gone, including the royal commission on long-term care, the long-term care charter, the Wanless report, which was produced for the King's Fund, and the Green Paper, which was published in July. As I made clear to the Secretary of State at this Dispatch Box when he made a statement accompanying the Green Paper on 14 July, I am quite clear that I do not regard the Green Paper as providing a sufficient range of options on the basis of which we can take forward the future of long-term care and, in particular, the funding of it.

[Mr. Lansley]

On page 15 of the Green Paper, the Government said:

"In developing the new system, we think there is a case for drawing some funding streams together to enable us to deliver the new and better care and support system we want to create. We think we should consider integrating some elements of disability benefits, for example Attendance Allowance, to create a new offer for individuals with care and support needs."

When the Green Paper was published, it asked people a number of questions—Members will no doubt recall the questions that were set out in chapter 7—but none of them asked whether the organisations and individuals responding to the Green Paper thought that it was a good idea to transfer attendance allowance and other disability benefits into the funding of the national care service.

I do not know whether a Minister or the Secretary of State wants to let us know about this, but on the face of it, the implication of using attendance allowance as an example of disability benefits—in the plural—in the Green Paper is that other benefits would also be included. We have assumed, as have others, including disability organisations generally, that it would be wholly discriminatory and perverse for the attendance allowance to be withdrawn and incorporated into the funding of the national care service, and for that not to be the case in relation to disability living allowance for those beyond the age of 65. I will continue on the basis that we are essentially talking about those two benefits for that purpose, unless Ministers were to tell us otherwise.

With the exception of the "pay for yourself" option, each option in the Green Paper implies the integration of those disability benefits into the funding of the national care service. Notwithstanding the fact that the Green Paper did not ask a specific question about this, we know that many organisations and individuals who responded highlighted the implication that is set out in the Green Paper and responded to it. I therefore invite the Secretary of State to tell us what proportion of the Green Paper responses received up to 12 November supported incorporating attendance allowance and disability living allowance into the national care service. I wonder whether Ministers know the answer to that. [Interruption.] Apparently not.

Let me help Ministers on this subject. On the Downing street website, as we now know, there are opportunities to petition the Government on the subject, and 24,000 people have now signed such a petition—the sixth most popular petition on the Prime Minister's website—expressing their opposition to the proposal. The Disability Alliance asked its members whether they supported the proposal to absorb attendance allowance into care budgets, and 93 per cent. said that they did not. The Parkinson's Disease Society asked the same question, and 95 per cent. were opposed. Carers UK asked the same question, and 96 per cent. were opposed.

Age UK, which incorporates Age Concern and Help the Aged, said in response to the Green Paper:

"We oppose funding the National Care Service from Attendance Allowance…We do not feel that the proposals will provide a system that sufficiently replicates the very important role that Attendance Allowance plays in promoting independence."

I note from the debate on the Queen's Speech in another place that the Minister, when challenged on who supported the options in the Green Paper, quoted Carers UK in a general sense, but not its response to the Green Paper that stated:

"We are concerned and against the proposal to take Attendance Allowance and place it into local care budgets. We believe that this will disenfranchise and impoverish carers and their families."

The Parkinson's Disease Society said in response to the Green Paper that

"our findings warn the Government that scrapping Attendance Allowance and other disability benefits could be detrimental to the independence of people with Parkinson's."

Macmillan Cancer Support said that

"we are strongly opposed to the proposal…to merge the Attendance Allowance funding stream with current social care funding streams to pay for the new National Care Service."

It is important for us to recognise why these organisations feel so strongly about this. The arguments against using this mechanism for funding the care service are compelling, not least because attendance allowance and disability living allowance were not introduced simply to pay for the costs of personal care. They were intended to compensate for the high living costs associated with disability, and not simply to provide for specific care needs.

The White Paper that introduced disability living allowance stated clearly that it was for "better coverage of assistance with the extra costs of being disabled".

There are also costs that are distinct from, and additional to, social care needs, as described in the Green Paper. That is precisely why disability living allowance and attendance allowance payments have never been calculated on the basis of what is required to provide for social care needs. Rather, they have been calculated on the basis of what might add to the overall cost of disability. They were never intended to provide enough to pay for a professional care service, and it would be wrong to take them as being designed for that purpose. If Ministers were to proceed in the direction indicated in the Green Paper, it would constitute a fundamental change in the purpose and definition of disability benefits.

There is ample evidence of the costs that those benefits go to meet, and they go far beyond being strictly associated with the costs of social care. The Green Paper describes the kind of personal needs involved. They include washing, help with eating and toileting, and so on, but what is provided for and supported by disability benefits goes far beyond that. The benefits are not just spent on direct care services; they have had a big impact on people's lives. They pay for additional heating costs, different diets, and a whole range of support for informal and family carers.

Steve Webb (Northavon) (LD): The hon. Gentleman is raising some serious issues in a measured and thoughtful way, but is not that at odds with the way in which his party has approached this issue, in its scaremongering towards existing recipients? I have here a copy of the template for the press release for Conservative party candidates, which carries the words:

"(name), (position)—insert here—voiced (his/her) opposition".

It says that

"an average of £3,400 a year will be snatched away from 2.4 million pensioners".

Can he confirm that that figure refers to the current recipients of those benefits? Is it not the case that the Government have said that that money will not be snatched away?

Mr. Lansley: Of course, the hon. Gentleman has never in his life issued a press release prepared by his own central headquarters. Age UK, which he will acknowledge is an organisation encompassing Age Concern and Help the Aged, has said:

"Without any detail in the public domain people are right to fear the worst".

The problem with that—

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Jonathan Shaw) rose—

Mr. Lansley: No, I am answering the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb). I will come to this point and set it out in detail.

Ministers have said in the Green Paper that, within the national care service, they are proposing to withdraw these benefits from existing recipients and to provide what they describe as equivalent support. However, it is entirely unclear what equivalent support means in this context. The hon. Member for Northavon makes exactly the point that I am making. If one is currently in receipt of disability benefits and what one spends the money on includes—the Disability Alliance has conducted research on this—attending hospital or medical appointments, the cost of transport, support with housework and gardening, higher heating and water bills and a whole range of other things, only 24 per cent. of the money is actually spent on care services as such, so the fact that one is having this income taken away and having personal care services provided does not mean receiving equivalent support—it means receiving something different.

Jonathan Shaw: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving way; he needs a break, as he is not doing very well at the moment—he can check the Hansard. Let me inform the House that existing claimants in receipt of attendance allowance and disability living allowance would see no cash loss in their benefits during a transitional process to a new system. If he were part of a Conservative Government, is he saying that he would never rule out making any changes to AA or DLA for pensioners?

Mr. Lansley: I am sorry, but the hon. Gentleman did exactly the same thing yesterday: he came before the House and—

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Phil Hope): Just answer the question.

Mr. Lansley: I am just answering the question. Instead of talking from a sedentary—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must say to Mr. Hope that there has been quite a lot of sedentary chuntering taking place. I know that there are strong feelings on these matters, but the effect of this sort of chuntering is to crowd out Back Benchers and I want there to be plenty of time for Back-Bench contributions, which I hope means mercifully brief Front-Bench speeches.

Mr. Lansley: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall, of course, be as brief as the argument allows, but I tend to allow Members to make interventions and I am certainly happy to respond to them.

The Minister kept saying yesterday in response to questions that those who are currently entitled to these benefits would, under the Government's proposals, receive the same "cash support", but the amendment to the motion does not say that. It states that which is the same language used in the Green Paper and the same language used by Health Ministers in responses to questions. There is a complete difference between those two things. If it is cash, what is the point of taking away a cash benefit from people in order to give them the cash back? If it is not cash and it is paying for the national care service, our precise point is that there will be a difference between what people use disability benefits to pay for now and what will be provided to them as personal care services under a national care service. There is a major discontinuity between those two things, which Ministers do not seem to understand at all.

"those receiving the affected benefits at the time of reform would continue to receive an equivalent level of support",

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Lansley: I give way to the hon. Member for North-West Leicestershire (David Taylor).

David Taylor (North-West Leicestershire) (Lab/Co-op): Further to the point raised by the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb), it is a full 20 weeks since the publication of the Green Paper and the start of the present campaign on attendance allowance and disability living allowance, so will the hon. Gentleman confirm the rumour that the leader of his party will sack the head of the section for opportunism and scaremongering in Tory party headquarters for tardiness and incompetence?

Mr. Lansley: I am astonished at the meaning or purpose of that intervention. The hon. Gentleman signed early-day motion 1, and what we have tabled for debate on the Order Paper today is couched in exactly the same terms and it seems to me to be perfectly reasonable.

Lembit Öpik (Montgomeryshire) (LD): My constituents have a simpler concern than the one about how the Conservatives choose to organise their party. If the Conservatives form a Government, will the hon. Gentleman give an assurance that my elderly and disabled constituents would not be materially worse off? I am more concerned about the sums, however delivered, than the process of delivery, and I am sure that my constituents are, too.

Mr. Lansley: I think the hon. Gentleman is right that people are concerned about that, and I am glad that he also signed the early-day motion, which makes an important point. I do not know why the Government should think that our argument is just about those currently in receipt of attendance allowance and disability living allowance, as we are debating what should be the long-term future of social care. The Green Paper was not about what is going to happen in the next six months, but about what ought to happen in the longer term. I am looking to find out what should happen in the long term for obvious reasons. I am making clear on behalf of my party our belief that the continuation of disability benefits, such as attendance allowance and disability living allowance in their current form, will give current recipients of such benefits and those who will be recipients in the future an opportunity, on a non-means-tested basis, to gain access to cash benefits that will enable them to buy a wide range of services such as informal care, family care, support for travel and support for house improvements on the basis of their own personal choice and control.

[Mr. Lansley]

I find it astonishing that today is the day on which the Department for Work and Pensions chose to publish a document relating to other disability benefits, entitled "Making choice and control a reality for disabled people". It is clear from that document that the reason the Government did not include attendance allowance, for example, in the "right to control" policy is that it is already a cash benefit. People receiving a cash benefit gain personalisation and choice, but if a Government were to withdraw direct access to that cash benefit and distribute it through the national care service, by definition they would create a lack of personalisation.

I have always considered that to be an agreed common objective. It has been our objective since the 2006 White Paper, and the Government have also moved in the direction of direct payments and personal budgets for social care. More recently, they have moved in the direction that we urged them to follow, which included access to some aspects of health care as part of an overall personal budget. The point is that the budget is a cash budget, and there is an issue over how it should work.

On page 102 of the Green Paper, the Government say:

"We know that disability benefits such as Attendance Allowance are highly valued by the people who receive them, and that they give people control over how they spend their money to meet their care and support needs. However, we also recognise that there are inconsistencies of approach between disability benefits and social care within the current system. This is because the social care and disability benefits systems have developed in isolation from each other and these two largest portions of government care and support expenditure are being allocated on different bases. This can lead to inconsistent and unfair outcomes."

To me, the issue seems perfectly straightforward. If there are two sources of support for people and if one relates to social care and is means-tested while the other is based on an assessment of need, is not means-tested and is in cash form, and if there are inconsistencies between the two in relation to the assessment, what is the answer? The answer is to adopt a common process applying to both the assessment of need for the disability benefits and the assessment of need for access to social care. The answer is not to abolish the cash benefits and combine them in a single system. The Government have said—and it is in the amendment—that there should be a single assessment process; I hope they mean that, as we have agreed, there should be a common assessment process.

On 14 July, in response to the Secretary of State's announcement of a Green Paper, I said to him—I apologise for quoting myself—[Interruption.] It was right then, and it is right now. I said:

"I am sure the right hon. Gentleman will agree that we need national standards—some consistency of assessment. We have long argued for that, and of course there needs to be central Government support, but we do not need a nationalised social care service." [Official Report, 14 July 2009; Vol. 496, c. 160.]

That seems to me utterly consistent with the view—which the Government have apparently supported, in rhetoric—that there should be personalisation, that whenever possible there should be cash budgets over which people have more control, and that abolishing access to disability benefits would be a retrograde step.

John Mason (Glasgow, East) (SNP): The hon. Gentleman has been making a powerful point about the advantage of cash benefits in giving individuals control. Does he accept that even if the Government concede that current recipients will continue to receive the cash, there will be a huge loss to future generations who will not receive it?

Mr. Lansley: I agree that it is important to have in mind the longer term, and to bear in mind those who may be recipients of benefit and care support in the future. However, I do not think the Government have said—and they do not say it in the amendment—that current recipients will receive the same cash support. They say they will "receive an equivalent level of support."

Therefore, unless Ministers are willing to amend their amendment to the motion today, I am afraid that it simply does not answer this point.

Alistair Burt (North-East Bedfordshire) (Con): My hon. Friend might care to know that the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb) is a master of the lurid headline. His website reveals that he has issued press releases entitled:

"Docking alcoholics' benefits fundamentally inhumane" and

"New benefits scheme shunting ill onto lower support", as well as the astounding,

"Benefits changes will leave millions without social security".

Therefore, so as far as lurid titles are concerned, the hon. Gentleman obviously knows his stuff.

Mr. Lansley: My hon. Friend makes a very good point better than I could have done.

Part of the argument on this matter is that attendance allowance is effective; it works. The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions said much the same thing last month to the Select Committee on Work and Pensions:

"One of the things we have said is that Attendance Allowance provides very important support for an awful lot of people across the country in a way that they hugely value. In particular it gives people control; it gives them control themselves over the way in which they get support and it is a budget that they can spend themselves."

The universities of Essex and Anglia Ruskin

"found no evidence that Attendance Allowance is paid long term to significant numbers of people who do not have accompanying health problems".

When someone receives both the allowance and care services, the allowance itself is taken into account through the financial assessment.

Those people who use this allowance often do so to save some money to meet higher occasional payments, such as for a wheelchair. An Age UK survey of older people who received attendance allowance found that the allowance supports older people

"to live in their own homes for as long as possible with a reasonable quality of life given their health...it would be no exaggeration to say that Attendance Allowance transforms people's lives."

In summary, people use the attendance allowance and disability living allowance to help them, under their own control, to create a quality of life for themselves that helps them to remain independent. That is precisely in line with the policy we are all trying to pursue. It is clear that if one narrowly focuses only on care needs, we will miss out much that goes to constitute well-being, and there is no health without well-being, and there is no independence, without sustaining people's quality of life.

The Secretary of State for Health (Andy Burnham): I am listening carefully to the hon. Gentleman's remarks, and now that he has come to the core of his argument, I have to respond to him. His motion suggests that anybody in receipt of attendance allowance would receive no help from a national care service, and he is repeating that suggestion in the House, whereas in fact we are proposing to replicate the cash control in a new system so as to give people who would receive those benefits the same control and cash in the future. The central plank of the hon. Gentleman's argument is therefore knocked away, and I would be grateful if he would acknowledge that his motion's comments about no help for so many million benefit recipients are simply not true.

Mr. Lansley: I am sorry, but the Secretary of State is completely wrong about that. We are not asserting that people will get no help. We are asserting that existing recipients will not get access to cash benefits in the form in which they currently do, and they will therefore be able to exercise less choice and control because this will be routed through the national care service, which will have its own parameters and will not necessarily enable them to spend that money in the same form as they can now. Ministers have not said in their amendment that current recipients would get cash. Besides, the point is not just about current recipients; it is about future recipients and future reform. The last part of the motion

"urges the Government to ensure that attendance allowance and disability living allowance for people aged 65 years and over are secured and not abolished as part of any future reform of the social care system."

This therefore refers to "future reform."

Andy Burnham: I am grateful for that clarification, but let me read to the hon. Gentleman from his motion. It

"further notes with concern that approximately 2.87 million people in the UK who receive disability living allowance or attendance allowance are not eligible for social care services".

The crux of his argument is his scurrilous campaign to frighten those people and to suggest that they would receive no support under a national care service. He knows what he is doing—he is raising concern and, frankly, it is gutter politics.

Mr. Lansley: That is rather astonishing, is it not, Mr. Speaker? We have never said anything remotely like that. We always make it absolutely clear that we are opposed to the scrapping of attendance allowance and disability living allowance and their incorporation into the Government's proposed social care service. We want to give people access to cash benefits, personalisation and choice.

Roger Berry (Kingswood) (Lab): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Lansley: I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman, who was among the initial signatories of the early-day motion.

Roger Berry: I hope that I can explain. The hon. Gentleman says that he said nothing like that. However, is it not the case that in your press release of 19 November, you vowed to "fight against Gordon Brown's plan"

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must say to the hon. Gentleman that I have said nothing of the sort.

Roger Berry: I apologise, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Gentleman said, in his press release of 19 November, that he was leading a "fight against Gordon Brown's plan to scrap benefits for the disabled."

Is it not disgraceful to suggest that anyone is planning to scrap benefits for disabled people?

Mr. Lansley: The Government's Green Paper is clearly intended to propose that disability benefits should be "scrapped", which is the word I used, in order to fund a national care service. That is something that the Government have proposed. I know and respect the hon. Gentleman, but he is trying to find a way not to vote for the early-day motion that he signed.

I have not come to ask the House to endorse my press releases. I have come to ask the House to settle this issue. If it is the Government's view—[Interruption.] No, I will not withdraw the motion. The Government should withdraw the amendment, which is clearly flawed, as they are saying that their policy is different from the amendment. If the Government believe that their policy would be consistent with our motion, they should vote for the motion. The debate is on our motion, not on something else.

Roger Berry: Does the hon. Gentleman seriously believe that proclaiming that the Government are planning to scrap disabled people's benefits is not causing enormous concern among the most vulnerable individuals and communities in our society? Should he not be ashamed of saying that?

Mr. Lansley: I am not ashamed. We are doing the job that the Government should have done, which is to get out there and explain to people what is in the Green Paper. What is shameful is publishing a Green Paper, at the heart of which is the major proposal of the abolition of cash benefits and their incorporation into funding a care service. The Government are happy to put out a proposal that states, "Would it be a good idea if the Government were to pay a quarter to a third of your care costs upfront?" and people say, "Yeah, that would be a good thing. That would be very nice, thank you." What the Government do not tell them is that, in the process, if they are in receipt of disability benefits, they will lose those benefits in order to pay for it. That is a completely different debate. Fortunately, we have organisations such as Age UK, Carers UK and the Parkinson's Disease Society who went out—we did not do it—and said, "Have you seen what is in the middle of this Green Paper?" They argued against it.

If the hon. Member for Kingswood (Roger Berry) and the Secretary of State want to put a stop to this now, they simply have to vote for the motion. Then the House will have spoken. There are a range of issues, including the impact on the overall income of pensioners. Some 40 per cent. of all attendance allowance recipients would be living below the Department for Work and

[Mr. Lansley]

Pensions poverty threshold if their disability benefits were removed. As for taking away a cash benefit and providing a care service instead, Ministers talk about equivalent support but they do not talk about equivalent support for future recipients. If the benefits were to be taken away and replaced by the care service, there would be a serious potential impact on the disposable income of many pensioners. Those issues are not explored in the Green Paper. There is no economic modelling associated with the Green Paper and no understanding of what the overall impact on people's disposable incomes would be. There is no evidence about the relationship, in detail, between disability benefit recipients and those who would be the recipients of the national care service so that we can understand the implications for poverty and well being. I am afraid that that simply is not good enough.

The Government's response has been first to deny that they are going to do that, then to get angry and now to engage in abuse. It is like when someone cuts you up when you are driving and then swears at you; first, we get injury from the Government and then insults. It is no good Ministers blaming people's anxieties on us. The organisations that represent disabled people have been at least as voluble as we have been in making this point and in urging the Government to change their policy. We have been clear about the policy that we pursue, but we question whether the Government will be clear. Scrapping disability benefits to pay for the national care service would be a serious mistake and a retrograde step. It would undermine personalisation and control for care users, which they say they are in favour of, and it would undermine family and informal care as opposed to formal and council-arranged care. Members of the House who have followed the consultation on the Green Paper have the right to say no to that. Ministers should accept the motion and move on. That would not be such a big retreat after all the retreats that we have seen in recent months. I say to the Secretary of State, "Just do it. It will only be only painful for today, and tomorrow you will be in a better place as a result." I urge Members on both sides of the House to help the Government to get off this hook. I commend the motion to the House.

4.6 pm

The Secretary of State for Health (Andy Burnham): I beg to move an amendment to leave out from 'House' to the end of the Question and add:

"welcomes the Government's proposals to create the National Care Service, the first national, universal, entitlement-based system for care and support in England; notes that the proposals will deliver real benefits to people including wider provision of prevention services, a single needs assessment across England and information, guidance and advice for all; recognises that in 20 years' time, 1.5 million more people will have care and support needs, whilst the number of people aged over 85 will have doubled; further notes that around 400,000 people will benefit from enactment of the Personal Care at Home Bill, which contains no proposed changes to disability benefits; acknowledges that the Government is considering responses to the Big Care Debate consultation before any decisions are made between a range of options for the National Care Service; understands that changes to disability living allowance for under-65s as part of the introduction of a National Care Service have been ruled out; and welcomes the reassurance that, if disability benefits for older people were to be reformed as part of the National Care Service, those receiving the affected benefits at the time of reform would continue to receive an equivalent level of support."

Let me begin by saying that I welcome the debate, which deals with a subject that matters greatly to many people in this country. The hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley) and the shadow Secretary of State for Work and Pensions should be thanked for securing the debate, but I cannot stand the simplistic, petty and partisan manner in which the hon. Gentleman introduced it. So far, the approach has been nothing more or less than crude electioneering. The nasty party—the shadow Work and Pensions Secretary knows all about that—is back in all its glory, and it is showing its unpleasant side in the Chamber this afternoon. The debate deserves a higher standard of comment than that which the hon. Gentleman has given today.

Mr. Simon Burns (West Chelmsford) (Con): Given what the Secretary of State has just said in his preamble to his speech, will he explain why 41 of his hon. Friends have signed early-day motion 1?

Andy Burnham: I am going to come to that point. Let me say to the hon. Gentleman right now that this debate raises difficult questions. If one seriously intends to embark on a reform of social care in England, one cannot, as the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb) rightly said, reduce it to simple press releases that are designed for electioneering, in the crude, simplistic and crass way that the Conservative party seeks to do. The debate deserves better than that and is more complicated than that, and we would expect a better level of engagement from Her Majesty's Opposition than they are offering.

Justine Greening (Putney) (Con): I am listening to the right hon. Gentleman with interest, but I seem to remember that every time there is an election, we knock on pensioners' doors and they confront us saying, "The Labour party has told us that you're going to take away this benefit and that benefit." That is the Government's strategy in every election, so the right hon. Gentleman will forgive me for saying that this is a case of the pot calling the kettle black.

Andy Burnham: Is that the best the hon. Lady can offer? This is crude electioneering. She has just owned up to it in the House. She has said, "That is what we are doing; you do it, so why can't we do it?" She has let the cat out of the bag.

Let me set out the important context to this debate.

Mr. David Chaytor (Bury, North) (Lab): Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Andy Burnham: I shall give way in a moment.

Mr. Burns: Aah!

Andy Burnham: I have already given way to the hon. Gentleman.

Let me set out the important context. Some 61 years ago, the House agreed to the establishment of the national health service to end the unfairness that the people with the greatest needs faced the highest costs and that the people who had the least were in danger of having their needs left unmet. Today, the same unfairness exists in social care. A person who happens to develop dementia in old age, rather than cancer or heart disease, is yet to find the freedom from fear that Nye Bevan promised as the goal of the NHS.

Mr. Chaytor: My right hon. Friend has brought us on to the very point that I was going to make. He referred to the difficult issues that the Green Paper raises. Is not one of them that so many elderly people on the standard level of attendance allowance cannot be persuaded to apply for the higher level, even though their needs would certainly make them eligible for it? Is not one of the other difficult issues that so many people with disabilities or incapacities of any kind do not get the care they currently need precisely because of the absence of a national care service? The analogy with the formation of the NHS is absolutely the right one.

Andy Burnham: My hon. Friend puts it very well. It is because the system has grown in a piecemeal way over the years that it has become confusing and in many ways a lottery. It varies very greatly around the country, according to the eligibility criteria operated by councils and a range of other things. That means that the system is a lottery, and the serious purpose that lies behind the Green Paper is to create a fairer care system for all, in which the people with the greatest needs have those needs met and society as a whole shares the risks and costs of providing that care. In creating such a system, we will provide a better standard and quality of care.

As I said, those who suffer the most face paying the most. It is an enduring unfairness that was not resolved in the post-war settlement, but it becomes more evident and urgent as people increasingly live longer. This House has failed to address the problem, but I do not believe that that can continue. In my view, all parties should commit to reforming social care in England in the next Parliament.

One in five people will need care that costs less than £1,000 during their retirement. One in five will need care that costs more than £50,000. In the worst cases, the sum can exceed £200,000. This cruel lottery leaves us with no way of predicting our risk and makes it hard to protect ourselves against it.

John Mason: The Secretary of State mentioned England for a second time just now. Does he accept that, if something happened to attendance allowances, that would also affect Scotland, Wales and, potentially, Northern Ireland? Has he decided how that would be dealt with?

Andy Burnham: The hon. Gentleman will know that social care is devolved, but he is right to point out that any change to attendance allowance, which is a UK benefit, would have implications for Scotland. Of course we would work with colleagues in Scotland, and with the First Secretary, on making progress with any changes.

The current care system is piecemeal and complicated. Many do not know that care is means-tested. People face a battle to access the care that they need. When they succeed, the care can be of a poor quality, but not always. Resources are not channelled to where they are needed the most and, as we all know, carers often do not get the support that they need to make life tolerable and to enable them to provide the care and support that they want to to their loved ones, while also balancing other aspects of their life, such as work.

This much we know, and we know that the problem will become more pressing as the population gets older. When the NHS was created, there were eight working adults for every retired person. Today there are four, and by 2050 that figure will fall to just two. If the system is left unreformed, there are real questions about its sustainability in the long term.

I turn now to the Green Paper that we brought forward in July.

Jim Sheridan (Paisley and Renfrewshire, North) (Lab): My right hon. Friend is absolutely right to identify the excellent work that carers do. Will he expand on exactly what the Government are doing to provide for carers, who in turn help elderly people to stay in their own homes?

Andy Burnham: My hon. Friend raises a very important point. In years to come, this will be as important as Sure Start is in helping young mothers with children to balance work and home. That is something that we have discussed in our debates about child care. We must give people looking after elderly relatives quality support that they can draw down when they need it, because that gives them the ability to work and to balance work with caring for their relatives. If we cannot provide that support, there will be an economic consequence for the country.

We have taken steps to support carers, and my Department has made funds available from our budget to support respite care. My hon. Friend is right to raise the issue. A crucial part of any national care service is to provide quality support for carers so that life becomes tolerable and they can carry on with their work and other responsibilities, knowing that there is good-quality support for their loved one when they are not with them. For all those reasons, we brought forward a Green Paper.

Mrs. Madeleine Moon (Bridgend) (Lab): Quality is really important to elderly people, and it takes two forms. It relates both to care workers—their training and their capacity to understand people's care needs—and to when care is provided. Care should be given at times convenient for the person receiving it—when they want it rather than when it is convenient for the care agency. Are the Government eager to address and rectify that issue?

Andy Burnham: My hon. Friend is quite right, and that is why direct payments and personal budgets will lie at the heart of any proposed national care service. We want that level of control at the heart of any reformed system. She is also right to raise the issue of quality. Although there are good examples around the country, and many councils are doing their best, the system is stretched and—if we are honest—it is not systematically providing quality to people across the country. Many people who work in social care earn at or close to the national minimum wage, so in some parts of the country it is difficult to recruit care staff to provide the services that are so desperately needed. For all those reasons, and to put quality at the heart of the work force, we need to pick up the work on strategy in social care being done by the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Phil Hope), who has responsibility for care services. If we can do what we did successfully for the NHS work force, we shall develop a clear career structure, putting money behind training and development to ensure we have a high-quality, motivated work force. For all those reasons, the debate is important and complicated. It cannot be reduced to the level the Conservative party seeks—it is more complicated than that.

[Andy Burnham]

We have had a detailed debate on our Green Paper and the consultation has attracted a huge number of replies. Overwhelmingly, people support the principle that the system has to be reformed. The hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire did not say that, but it is what people are telling us. Of course there are difficult views about the nature and shape the reform should take, but people are agreed that worst of all would be to leave the system as it is, with more and more people's needs unmet as we go into a future with an ageing population.

Mrs. Joan Humble (Blackpool, North and Fleetwood) (Lab): Will my right hon. Friend comment on the key role of qualified social workers in that scenario? They will have the important responsibility of assessing the needs of elderly people and vulnerable disabled adults before considering the care package that is needed. As he knows, social workers do an excellent job but, sadly, they do not get praise for their excellent work.

Andy Burnham: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. That point came out strongly last week when the social work taskforce reported its conclusions. It pointed out the need to raise the status of social work as a profession and talk up the changes it makes in helping people to live better lives and give them more opportunities. The point was also well made by my hon. Friend, and we have to work hard to make it a reality. Everything in our Green Paper depends on those professional voices in social work. Helping people to unlock the benefits of personalisation and steering them through the system is crucially dependent on a motivated social work profession in adult services. Young people today want to make a difference. One of the biggest differences they can make is to go into social work, be it for children or adults. On both sides of the House, we need to work hard to communicate that message very strongly indeed.

Our Green Paper set out a vision of a national care service that is fairer, simpler and more affordable, underpinned by national rights and entitlements and personalised to individual needs. It set out a system with quality at its heart, whereby people get the care and support that they need. People would know exactly what to expect, what they were entitled to and what they needed to do to get it. The national care service is about helping people to live their lives the way that they want to. It is about putting the person's needs and wishes first, and helping them to keep up relationships with family and friends, to live in their own home for as long as they can and, where possible, to continue to work and contribute to their community.

Mrs. Anne McGuire (Stirling) (Lab): Does my right hon. Friend agree that there is absolutely no inconsistency in the reform of social care service and the Government's priority of independence, choice and control for disabled people and older people?

Andy Burnham: My right hon. Friend is absolutely right. The two systems are coming together. With the introduction of direct payments, we have seen council support beginning to replicate the benefits system, and the two systems have been slowly merging. Reform would continue and deepen that process, placing individuals with the most need in control of their budget so that they can draw down the support and care that they need. My right hon. Friend is quite right to make that point.

Every citizen would stand to benefit under that new system. As well as helping people who need care, the national care service is about changing the lives of the friends and relations who support them. Many carers in this country have told us about the daily battle they face to get the support that they need, and we want to end that battle by providing a reliable, transparent and accessible system that makes it easier for them to manage their responsibilities. We intend to publish a White Paper in the new year, setting out our proposals for the future of care and support, based on the replies that we have received to our consultation.

I turn now to disability benefits. The current care and support system is provided through a combination of local and central Government funding, personal contributions and benefits. It is complicated, it is not clearly targeted at levels of greatest need and it is not sustainable. In each case, the amounts are increasing. Local government expenditure on adult social care has gone up by more than 50 per cent. since 1997; and the total fees paid by people who use the services have increased significantly over the same period. Today, there are more than 1.5 million recipients of attendance allowance, amounting to expenditure of more than £5 billion a year; and there are more than 790,000 disability living allowance recipients who are over 65 years old, totalling expenditure of some £4 billion a year.

By 2026, we can expect that 1.7 million more adults will need care and support than is the case today, and the cost of disability benefits for the elderly could rise by almost 50 per cent. in real terms. Demographic and financial pressures on that scale cannot easily be met within the current unreformed system, so we have to find a better way to provide support to older and disabled people, and there may be a case for bringing together some disability benefits within adult social care. That is the argument that we are putting forward.

The Opposition's motion refers to people who currently receive disability benefits but are not eligible for social care, and it is true that many people today do not get help from the state towards their care costs. However, that is precisely why this Government are showing leadership and looking at how we can best support care and reform services. As I said in my intervention, it is completely wrong to suggest that all those who currently receive disability benefits but do not receive support from social care services would lose out under a new system. The hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire made a big point of stating that he did not say that, but I am afraid that anybody who has picked up a Conservative party leaflet or a local newspaper recently will have been given a different impression from that which he has given the House this afternoon. He says one thing here and his party's parliamentary candidates say quite another in constituencies throughout the country. If he is serious about this debate, he must get his story straight now. He needs to say here—at that Dispatch Box—the same thing as his candidates say throughout the country. I am afraid that he has been found out today, and he was very helpfully smoked out by the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb).

Mrs. McGuire: Does the Secretary of State realise that it is not only the Opposition party's parliamentary candidates who are saying that? I shall quote another person, who says:

"And to top it off, unbelievably, they're cutting disability benefits for the oldest and most vulnerable members of our society."

That was the Leader of the Opposition, on "The Blue Blog", on 19 November.

Andy Burnham: I agree with my right hon. Friend: it is unbelievable. Conservative councils up and down the country are cutting day centres and nursing homes for older people—cutting social services budgets—and then the Conservatives make that kind of opportunistic statement that comes from a deliberate misreading of the situation in order to give fuel to their candidates in constituencies around the country. Whatever the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire says today, the reality is what my right hon. Friend has just read out, and it is now on the record for all to see.

It is completely wrong to say that people will lose out under a new system. This is not about using benefits to support the existing system. We want to create a new care and support system that goes beyond that and is fit for the 21st century. We accept that that means we need to carry people with this reform. We also need to protect people in the interim. We have therefore categorically ruled out using disability living allowance for the under-65s. No other decisions about benefit reform have yet been taken. However, we have been absolutely clear that if disability benefits are reformed as part of delivering the national care service, those currently receiving benefit will not lose out financially. To put it simply, there would be no cash losers from this reform. That will remain the case for life. Existing benefits recipients will keep the cash and keep the control—it could not be clearer.

People like disability benefits because they provide a universal entitlement, they provide a cash budget that can be spent on the services that people want, and they support lower-level needs that help people to stay well for longer. Those three principles will all be important features of the new care and support system that we seek to introduce.

Bob Russell: May I seek clarification from the Secretary of State? Is he referring to people currently over the age of 65 who are in receipt of benefit or those over the age of 65, who will in due course require benefits? Will they have those benefits secured as well?

Andy Burnham: The hon. Gentleman is right—I am talking about existing benefit recipients. We are saying that, in future, we propose having a new system of support for people with care needs, but it is not correct to say that that means that support will be withdrawn, which is the argument that the Conservatives are advancing. Our whole aim in this reform is to give more help and support to the people who need it most. We believe that at the moment the money in the system is not properly targeted at those who need most support. That is the difference between our two positions.

Mr. Lansley: Will the Secretary of State clarify what he is saying? He seems to have changed the policy. The policy up to now, including in the Green Paper and as stated in the Government's amendment, has been:

"if disability benefits…were to be reformed as part of the National Care Service, those receiving the affected benefits at the time of reform would continue to receive an equivalent level of support."

He has just, in effect, replaced the words,

"an equivalent level of support",

with the words, "the same amount in cash"—that is, no cash loss. That is a completely different policy—which one is it?

Andy Burnham: I am sorry, but "equivalent level of support" is pretty plain—it means no cash losers. It is an equivalent level of support: that could not be clearer. I have said very clearly that people will keep the cash and keep the control. We have said that all along, but the hon. Gentleman has been choosing not to listen because it did not suit the grubby campaign that he has been mounting for the past couple of weeks. We have made this absolutely clear. He may not like it, because it does not suit his purposes, but it could not be clearer.

As I said, the three principles in the benefits system will all be important features of a new care and support system. [Interruption.] If the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire will stop chuntering, let me say that cash payments will be at the heart of a new system. The care services Minister, my hon. Friend the Member for Corby, and I have been saying that every day since we launched the Green Paper. That is what means. The hon. Gentleman has chosen not to listen to that because it was inconvenient—[Interruption.]

"an equivalent level of support"

Mr. Speaker: Order. I apologise for interrupting the Secretary of State, but I must say to Ms Milton that there seems to be a competition among Front-Bench Members for the dubious accolade of chunterer-in-chief. [Interruption.] Order. I do not require any help from the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns)—he is often competing for that accolade himself

Mr. Burns: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: And we need no further intervention from him. I simply say to Front-Bench Members that they need to simmer down. It is good that there is a lively debate, but I want Back Benchers to be heard.

Andy Burnham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The point that the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire seems to have missed is that we have said all along that cash payments will be part of the new system. I said in response to my right hon. Friend the Member for Stirling (Mrs. McGuire) a moment ago that in recent years, we have begun to see a merging of the local authority support system and benefits, with the introduction of direct payments. That is a trend that we want to continue. It is not about giving people's benefits to councils, as the press releases accuse us of. People in the care system are already getting used to getting cash budgets, and the number of people receiving them has risen by 28.9 per cent. over the past year. Including carers, 115,000 people have received them, and our reforms will take the process further. Let me be clear: we will reform disability benefits only if we are certain that the new system can better support the needs of older and disabled people.

The hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire is often good at taking a big position without any reference to what other people in his party say. His whole thesis today was to raise the spectre of the loss of benefits, and he gave the idea that any reform of benefits means somebody losing out and that we cannot possibly raise these issues without trying to cut support. However, I have before me a speech that the right hon. Member for Witney (Mr. Cameron) made in Scotland on Monday 16 October 2006. It was a long and, I may say, quite good speech about how to provide better support to disabled people in the long term. I shall come to the crux of it, because it is important that the House hears the right hon. Gentleman's peroration. He said:

[Andy Burnham]

"So there are the problems in the benefits system. It is too complex. It does not incentivise work sufficiently. And it relies too much on large government agencies…Our policy review is examining the option of a radical simplification of the benefits package for disabled people. I welcome the principle of Individual Budgets. But I'd like to go much further."

It is unbelievable—he was giving exactly the same argument that we have been mounting, which underpins our Green Paper. [Interruption.] Hear me out, there is more. He went on to back us up even further, saying:

"Instead of the half-dozen different benefits a disabled person can receive—each with its different conditions and its own application form"—[Interruption.]

They are not listening now, are they? He said that "we should be moving towards a single assessment process, and perhaps even a single benefit."

There it is in black and white, in a speech, the same thing that we are talking about—the simplification of the support system, perhaps through a single benefit. Yet the Conservatives have brought the motion before the House today because, three years on from that, it suits their purposes to issue press releases and frighten disabled and older people up and down the country.

Mr. Lansley: I am still utterly unable to reconcile what the Secretary of State is now saying about the Government's change of policy with what is in the Green Paper. The use of disability benefits to pay for the national care service is intended to back what was clearly one of the preferred options, the partnership model. Page 109 of the Green Paper even has a helpful diagram showing how, under the current system, there is a big shift from people paying for themselves to people getting part of their care free. The Green Paper states that "those who were on the lowest incomes would continue to get all their care for free."

Is he really telling us that under the national care service as he proposes to introduce it, existing disability benefit recipients will continue to get the exact cash benefit that they currently get, plus their social care free? In that case, where is the money to come from to provide universal care for others?

Andy Burnham: Can the hon. Gentleman tell me what part of "no cash losers" he does not understand? Interestingly, just as I was coming to a rather sensitive and difficult part of my speech for the Conservatives, he got up and raised a different point. He did not like hearing what I was saying, did he, but he was quick to come back with a red herring. The policy is "no cash losers" and it could not be more simple.

That brings me to the Personal Care at Home Bill. There are still huge challenges in the care and support system. The Green Paper sought people's views on how we resolve those and create a sustainable system for the long term. In our view, those with the greatest needs cannot wait, and we cannot stand still in meeting the challenge of rising costs. Currently, an estimated 80,000 older people in the highest need receive free personal care, but 40,000 pay part of their costs, and 50,000 pay all their costs.

Mrs. Theresa May (Maidenhead) (Con): Will the Secretary of State give way?

Andy Burnham: No—I am making progress. Among younger adults, an estimated 90,000 receive free care, while 20 per cent. pay all or part of their own costs, so we want to start now with reform, by helping people to live independently for longer in their own homes for free, which is something they tell us they really want. Our Bill will do just that. It will end the postcode lottery in care for those most vulnerable members of our society. Let us not forget that many have already paid significantly out of their own pockets to fund their own care—[Interruption.] The hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire says, "Second Reading on Monday." We are putting forward reforms that support people in their entirety—support for older and disabled people—and I am very sorry that he considers that unimportant.

Mrs. Moon: Does my right hon. Friend remember the scaremongering that took place when our party was introducing the Care Standards Act 2000? We were told that we would drive agencies and care home owners out of business, and that we would not raise standards or improve the quality of care. Some companies went out of business, but they could not provide quality care. The Bill is the next step in the reform of care that will improve life for the elderly and disabled. As such, should not everyone welcome it?

Andy Burnham: My hon. Friend makes her point very well. The Conservatives have a track record on these issues—a track record of opposing any step forward that has given more dignity to older people, particularly those in residential or nursing care. I remember that on the day we launched the Green Paper in the House, a distinguished Member of the Opposition stood up to complain about the burden of the national minimum wage on care homes and asked whether more could be done to give more deregulation to care homes. Quite frankly, that is their true voice—that is what they have done in their past. When they come here with the pretence of speaking up for older people, I am afraid it just does not wash.

Mrs. May: As the Secretary of State has changed the Government's policy this afternoon, I think it would be helpful if the House could understand exactly what he is saying for those existing pensioner recipients of either attendance allowance or disability living allowance. Is he saying that under the Government's proposals, those people will no longer receive attendance allowance or DLA, but instead receive a cash payment? Is he also saying that, as with attendance allowance and DLA, they will be free to spend the payment on whatever they choose, or will they be able to spend it only on the provision of social care?

Andy Burnham: I do not think the shadow Work and Pensions Secretary has been listening this afternoon, nor do I think she listened yesterday at Work and Pensions questions, when the Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, my hon. Friend the Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Jonathan Shaw), said quite clearly that an equivalent level of support meant no cash losers. She has not been listening to this debate nor indeed did she listen to the debate yesterday.

The right hon. Lady asks if our proposals mean that people can have the control to buy what they need. How many times have I said that this afternoon? The crux of what we are building is the power and control that people get in cash benefits—that is at the heart of the national care service. It could not be clearer and she clearly has not been listening to anything we have said.

We want to go further. In the Personal Care at Home Bill, we want to build a system that does all it can not just to pick up the pieces when people need help, but that has prevention at its heart. We want to invest resources in re-ablement—services to get people back on their feet and to give them intensive support after illness, an operation or a fall, so that they can live independently at home. The hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire is only proposing to help people who end up in residential care. What kind of a vision of the future is that—giving people an incentive to go into residential care? Surely the best way forward for care is to invest in prevention, to give people support to live independently at home and, at all times, to support them to live in their home. That is what they tell us that they want.

Alistair Burt: Before the Secretary of State finally moves away from the clash of press releases, will he comment on the quote in the Health Service Journal today from a national health service source? Under the headline "NHS to take responsibility for social care", the report outlines the Government's plans to take more responsibility and states:

> "Social care is currently provided by local authorities, the majority of which are now Conservative controlled. A move towards greater control of social care by the NHS has been described to HSJ by an NHS source as one way to 'rip the guts out of' Tory-controlled councils."

Will he take the opportunity to condemn that quote and find the NHS source it came from?

Andy Burnham: Some 1.3 million people work in the NHS, and I cannot be responsible for what all of them say at all times. It is my judgment that, whatever happens, more money from the health budget will have to be spent closer to the line with social care. That is just the way things will have to go, and that is why I am talking about finding resources from within my Department to fund re-ablement services—intense support to get people back on their feet after a vulnerable or low moment in their lives. Because we do not provide such support at the moment, people end up at the door of the NHS or asking for support from local authorities. We want to expand the level of support. We should also be less precious about spending health resources on equipment and telecare to help people to live in their own homes. That is all part of my vision. We have to break down the approach of the past that has said, "The health service pays for this and councils pay for that", and we argue about the bit in the middle. We can no longer sustain that—the hon. Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Alistair Burt) is nodding in agreement. The hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire should listen to more distinguished voices on his Back Benches if he wants some good advice about policy. The hon. Member for North-East Bedfordshire has a long track record in these areas.

This is an ambitious vision and it will not happen overnight. It raises complex and difficult questions that this House needs to consider carefully before proceeding with any reform. It cannot be a debate that is reduced to crude electioneering, because that would block out and shout down the debate. That is what we have heard from the Conservatives this afternoon. We have raised the issue of social care and the response from them is to shout it down and frighten people. The Conservatives cannot open up the debate because they do not have the ideas to put into the debate. Let us have a few more ideas and constructive comments, rather than the low politics that we have heard from them this afternoon.

The Prime Minister has committed to making social care our top domestic priority in the next Parliament. That shows that we have the ideas, the courage and the confidence to tackle the big issues that the country faces. I believe that the national care service could be a major social reform that will stand alongside some of the major reforms of the last century. It would be easy to say that it is too difficult. We have been under pressure this afternoon to say that we will drop it all, as the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire invited me to do at the end of his comments. But we will not do that: we will see this through. If we fail to act, we will make the choices more difficult, the unfairnesses will grow year on year and this post-war generation—it includes people who own their own properties and who will live longer, which is a good thing—will face ever more unfairness than their parents did. These are big challenges. The Government believe that we have the right ideas to address them, and I urge my hon. Friend to oppose the motion.

4.45 pm

Steve Webb (Northavon) (LD): As we have heard, we are effectively debating early-day motion 1, which was tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester (Bob Russell) after a night spent in a sleeping bag to ensure that he was in the Table Office to table perhaps slightly more than one early-day motion. However, of all the issues that could be brought to the House's attention, he chose this to be the first motion of the new Session, and rightly so. I congratulate him.

The subject of our debate is important, and I am delighted that the Conservatives have put the words in my hon. Friend's motion on the Order Paper. He was quite surprised when I told him last night that they had done so—he was slightly surprised too that they did not tell him directly, but never mind. However, the debate gives us the chance to put to rest, I hope, something that has caused great anxiety among millions of disabled people in Britain.

We have all seen the press release being talked about, and as much as the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley) might pretend otherwise, it is transparent that the release that he is encouraging his party's candidates to put out is designed to alarm current recipients of the allowances. All the statistics that his office—I assume that it is his office—has inserted into the press release relate to current recipients. It refers to 2.4 million pensioners who are current recipients. It reads: "In (constituency),"—fill in the gap—"this would affect (x) pensioners (y) who receive Attendance Allowance"—note the present tense—"and (z) who receive Disability Living Allowance". It is designed to frighten people.

[Steve Webb]

John Mason: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Steve Webb: In a moment.

I hope that the Department will reflect on whether its language in the Green Paper should have been more unambiguous and should not have left the door open to such campaigning. It is helpful that the Secretary of State said clearly this afternoon that there would be no cash losers; that was not the phrase used in the Green Paper. For the avoidance of doubt, and for those 2.4 million people, I shall describe, as faithfully and as accurately as I can, on the strength of the conversations that we have had, what I understand the Government's policy to be. If I get anything wrong, I hope that Ministers will correct me.

John Mason: The hon. Gentleman has made the exact point that I was going to put to him. The Government have said that people will be guaranteed an equivalent level of support, but that could mean anything. We assumed, as did many vulnerable people, that it meant that people's disability benefits were under threat. Does he agree that the Government themselves have been the main cause of the problem?

Steve Webb: As I said, I think, perhaps with the benefit of hindsight, that the wording in the Green paper could have been more unambiguous. The draft press release states:

"Conservatives will protect (area's) pensioners and fight against Gordon Brown's plan to scrap benefits for the disabled."

That rather extends what the Green Paper might have been thought to mean. For the record, however, I shall describe what I think the Government are saying. Under the proposals, existing recipients over pension age of disability benefits—attendance allowance and DLA—will continue to get, first, the same amount of cash; secondly, they will be as free as they are now to spend it on what they like; and, thirdly, if, in addition to those cash benefits, they receive social care from a local authority, that will continue as well. Those are the three strands that I understand are present from what Ministers have said.

Jonathan Shaw indicated assent.

Andy Burnham indicated assent.

Steve Webb: That is helpful.

The proposals therefore raise questions for future recipients—that is what I am now talking about—and I hope that Ministers will address some of those questions. For example, if DLA is to remain for under-65s but perhaps not for over-65s, there will be a question about the transition from under to over 65. It is clear from research evidence that DLA is not just a care cost benefit, but a disability cost benefit. Is it not therefore the case that, in the future, if people on DLA who became disabled before pension age go on to the new regime and receive support from a different package—I do not want to say "have it taken away from them"—that will presumably give them potentially less cash after the transition to spend on the other costs associated with their disability? I assume that that would be a consequence of the Government's proposal. Is there not a danger, therefore, that although those individuals' care needs might be fully met in the future, the compensation that society has given over generations for the additional costs of disability would thereby be undermined, because potentially all or a large part of that cash would be put into a bucket for care costs and their ability to meet other, extra disability costs might thereby be constrained? We need to understand the transition from under to over the pension age, compared with the position now. That is the first question that I hope the Minister responding will address.

The second question is about the current role of such benefits in passporting people on to other things. If a person receives attendance allowance, someone will be looking after them 35 hours a week and, in principle, will be passported on to carer's allowance. Could the Minister who responds to the debate say something about how such passporting might work in a world where new recipients receive a care package, but do not necessarily receive the benefits that passport them on to other benefits? One imagines that there are ways around that, but there would be consequences.

We all agree on the importance of cash benefits for personal control, personalisation and dignity. We would all want the cash to make our own choices and not to have the state decide what pattern of services we want. One of my concerns about the Government's proposal is that the new system will inevitably rely more heavily on means-testing than the current one. That is implicit in the Green Paper, which on page 102 describes attendance allowance thus:

"Attendance Allowance is not means-tested, so people get it regardless of how well-off they are."

Of course, that is simply a statement of fact, but why does the Green Paper say that and, by implication, "And this might be thought to be a bad thing. This is not money well spent"? At that point we part company with the Government, because our argument is that attendance allowance and DLA are designed to meet the additional costs of disability and people have those additional costs whether they are rich or poor.

We are talking about a universal benefit for people with disabilities. They will all face a set of additional costs on average, so we as a society compensate them all. Reading between the lines of the Green Paper and suggesting that, although there are additional costs, people who are well off can meet them themselves would be a worrying undermining of that principle. In our view, therefore, a continuing role for a disability benefit that is specifically related to the additional costs of care, but separate from the process for assessment and meeting care needs, is an important part of the system.

I admit that I was rather puzzled by what the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire said about a single assessment system; his comment struck me as rather odd. At the moment, we have a system in which attendance allowance goes to millions of people who do not get social care services provided by their local authority. In a single assessment system, however, there are only two possible outcomes. Either the outcome is as broad as attendance allowance, in which case we would bring all the people who get social care who do not currently receive the allowance into the system, which would presumably be hugely expensive; or it is as narrow as social care, in which case people would be knocked out of attendance allowance. If neither of those two things is done, the system is not a single system.

I suppose we could have a compromise, whereby a few fewer people receive attendance allowance and a few more people receive social care, but that is not what the hon. Gentleman seemed to be saying. I am therefore slightly confused. We have come not to expect alternative proposals from the Conservative Opposition, but this time there is one on the table, only it seems not to make any sense. If we are talking about a single process of assessment that is different from what we have now, either it is universal and based on need, like attendance allowance, or it is means-tested, like social care, but it is rather hard to see how those can be one, single system.

There is an important question about what I call the non-overlap group—the people who are disabled enough to receive attendance allowance, but who do not get local authority social care. Again, my concern is that either that set of people loses out if attendance allowance goes, or the Government do not save any money, because those people use their attendance allowance to pay for care, and if the allowance was not there, they would rely on local authority provision. The only saving would be achieved be through means-testing, which is a worry. We all know why means-testing happens—we cannot be generous to everyone, so we pick some people—but there is a balance to be struck between universalism and means-testing.

One of my worries about the present Government is that the balance between universal and means-tested benefits in, for example, the pensions system has gone very much in the direction of means-testing. We have on the Front Bench today a former Pensions Minister, who will know that, when there was spare cash, it went into the means-tested areas. That was an understandable choice, but the Minister says that social care needs to look more like the NHS, and one of the hallmarks of the NHS is that we as a society say that people who are sick are entitled to help whether they are rich or poor. In my view, the Government's model seems to be veering in the direction of means-testing, because if we roll attendance allowance into the local authority social care budgets, we will by definition be doing more means-testing. We all get letters from our constituents saying, "I've worked hard and saved hard, but what was the point, because I'm no better off?" If we make social care more means-tested, we will rightly get more of those letters, because needing social care is akin to needing health care; it is the same sort of thing. Our worry about the direction of Government policy is the greater emphasis on means-testing.

That brings us to take-up. We know that take-up, even of the universal disability benefits, is not brilliant. There are plenty of people out there who should be getting attendance allowance or disability living allowance but who are not doing so. If we were to impose a means-testing regime on all that to create a single system, the likelihood of people missing out on the whole lot would increase. In Work and Pensions questions yesterday, a question was asked about the length of the DLA form. The Minister quite properly said that it was a complicated business and that we have to ask a lot of questions if we want to capture everything. If we tried to combine that with a means-tested system of local authority care, I imagine that the barriers would be even greater and we would therefore risk excluding vulnerable people. Having a mixture of the universal system that includes attendance allowance and, ideally, a less means-tested local authority system would create a better balance than what the Government are proposing.

My hon. Friend the Member for Colchester was right to table his early-day motion a few weeks ago. The motion before the House today accurately sets out our position, which is that attendance allowance and DLA for the over-65s have an important part to play in the system. We recognise that the Government have promised equivalent cash support for current recipients, but we believe that those benefits have a long-term future as well. That is where we part company with the Government.

Bob Russell: Does my hon. Friend agree that, despite the differences of opinion between Government and Opposition Front Benchers, the fact is that 105 hon. Members from all eight political parties represented in the House, plus independents, have signed the early-day motion? There is no reason why the 39 Labour Members who signed it should not sign up to the motion before the House today, especially as they outnumber the 21 Conservatives and 32 Liberal Democrats. There is no reason why the House should not be united on the motion.

Steve Webb: I share my hon. Friend's hope, but I am slightly torn. We are always glad when Members from other parties sign our early-day motions, and the last thing we want is to discourage them from doing so in the future. I take my hon. Friend's point that there is nothing in the motion with which they should have a problem. I was not planning to make a partisan point, but this reminds me that, as of yesterday, when I realised what motion had been tabled for today, I checked to see how many Conservative Members had signed the early-day motion. At that stage, the number was 16. Given the primary importance of the subject, I was rather startled to find that the early-day motion had been signed by only 16 of them—including the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire and the right hon. Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May), who presumably knew that this debate was coming. That was rather a surprise. I agree with my hon. Friend, however, that there is nothing in the motion that Labour Members should have any difficulty with.

The key points are that we, corporately—to put it generously—should cease as of now to cause alarm to 2.4 million disabled people, and that the message goes out that their benefits and their rights are protected and will remain intact. By all means, let us have a mature debate about the future, but in our judgment, attendance allowance and DLA will continue to have a specific role to play in the system, by meeting the additional costs that those of us who are fortunate enough not to be disabled do not have. Those costs are incurred regardless of means and those benefits should therefore have a long-term role in the system. Any attempt to make the system more means-tested discourages those who have worked hard and saved hard, and penalises those who have become disabled through no fault of their own. That is the wrong direction to go in.

[Steve Webb]

I hope that this debate will be helpful in placing on the record the reasons why current recipients need not be alarmed, while also allowing us to encourage the Government to think again about the threats to those benefits whose purpose is to meet additional costs that are not met elsewhere in the system and should always be met in any future system.

5 pm

Mrs. Anne McGuire (Stirling) (Lab): I hope not to take up my full allocation of time. I have one or two points to raise, not least because I used to be the Minister with responsibility for disabled people and had to deal with some of the early policy issues and discussions about this development.

Perhaps we should be more optimistic about why we are all here today. The justification for the reform of social care is, as the Secretary of State indicated, that we are all living longer and, thanks to medical science, can be kept in our homes longer. That is the good news to start with. The bad news is that although the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley), who opened for the Conservative Opposition, said that there was a need for consensus, he then went on to scaremonger about the so-called attempt by a Labour Government to take away disability benefits from nearly 3 million people in Britain. Frankly, that is a disgraceful way to come at the subject, because the reform of social care is an important matter for all of us.

As the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb) suggested, we should have a mature debate. [Interruption.] In some ways—I point this out to the Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, my hon. Friend the Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Jonathan Shaw), who is the current Minister with responsibility for disabled people—our approach to pension reform should provide a model. That was about consensus and moving forward on the basis of certain principles. Frankly, however—[Interruption.] I think some Opposition Members should take a degree in chuntering, because they are getting very good at it.

I will not take lessons from an Opposition who, in October this year, said that their solution to social care reform was a one-off payment of £8,000, which would give people no guarantee that they would not have to pay a top-up if their social care costs were more than approximately £26,000. There were no guarantees either to people with a pre-existing health condition that their social care costs would be covered. I declare a vested interest: I wonder whether insulin-dependent diabetics who may have complicated health needs will get the benefits that they require if they pay that £8,000. The Conservative proposal was taken apart by every expert in the field because it was drawn up on the back of an envelope to please a Conservative party conference. I am delighted that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health clarified that there was absolutely no contradiction between the reform of social care and independence, choice and control for disabled and elderly people.

John Mason: I am listening to what the right hon. Lady is saying, but does she accept that the words "equivalent level of support" were, with hindsight, a little unfortunate?

Mrs. McGuire: I think that the Secretary of State has answered that question—today and previously—and we are now in the territory of working out how many semantic angels can dance on the head of a pin. The Secretary of State and the Government have been very clear throughout that there will be no cash changes for individuals.

To colleagues who are having difficulty dealing with the reform of social care or in engaging with a Green Paper consultation, let me explain that there is no independence for an elderly person living on attendance allowance in a local authority that does not see social care as one of its funding priorities. That is not about independence, it does not provide choice and it certainly does not give control. As for my friends in voluntary organisations such as Carers UK and the many others that have been mentioned, I have the utmost respect for them, but I think they know in their heart of hearts that we must have a genuine discussion about how to deal with the demographic time-bomb and the social care time-bomb that we all face. I understand exactly why they are advancing some of the arguments that we have heard today, but they need to become part of the ongoing discussion about how we can reform the system. Even the best of the voluntary organisations need to respond to the conundrum of how we should deal with a social care system in which two people are working for every one person over the age of 65.

Mr. Burns rose—

Mr. Stephen O'Brien (Eddisbury) (Con) rose—

Mrs. McGuire: I give way to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Burns: Which one?

Mrs. McGuire: The handsome one at the front.

Mr. O'Brien: I am most grateful to the right hon. Lady. She began by rightly championing the idea of consensus, suggesting that it would be helpful and that the pension process might prove to be a precedent in that regard. Does she accept, however, that although we in the official Opposition have always indicated that we would be receptive, we have never received an invitation even to discuss the issue, let alone an invitation to a round table with Ministers?

Mrs. McGuire: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman should reflect on whether the Opposition have made any effort to contribute to the consultation over the past few weeks. [Interruption.] Is the hon. Gentleman saying that they made a formal response to the formal response to the consultation document? I am not sure whether the answer is yes or no.

Mr. Burns: Will the right hon. Lady give way?

Mrs. McGuire: Very briefly. I did say that I would not take up all my allotted time.

Mr. Burns: Will the right hon. Lady briefly answer a very specific question? Why, in her view, did 41 of her colleagues sign the early-day motion which became the motion before the House today?

Mrs. McGuire: I think that colleagues sign early-day motions for all sorts of reasons and I do not wish to second-guess the motives of any of my colleagues. The purpose of signing early-day motions is to put on the agenda matters about which Members feel strongly. I do not intend to fall into any trap set by the hon. Gentleman.

As I have said, I believe that genuine discussions must take place with the organisations that represent the needs and ambitions of disabled people. Let me say this to the Government, and I say it with the utmost respect to my colleagues. I welcomed the Secretary of State's comments about cash support, but the Government know that disability benefits, including attendance allowance, are valued and that any proposed changes should be seen in the context of improving the lives of disabled and older people in the future—I recognise that we are talking about the future.

Unusually, I agree with the hon. Member for Glasgow, East (John Mason). Obviously, any discussions must take account of the impact in other parts of the United Kingdom. We must recognise that devolved Administrations will be involved if changes are made to what is currently a United Kingdom-wide benefit. The discussions must be meaningful and robust, and I hope that some of them have already begun.

This is probably the next great social agenda development, and I do not think any of us can run away from it. We cannot change the demography, certainly in the short term. The social care Green Paper sets out the questions, highlights some of the options, and gives people an opportunity to engage in the debate. What we cannot do is run away from that debate. We cannot simply pretend that it is not happening, or we shall have abrogated our responsibility to future generations whose social care needs will have to be met.

5.9 pm

Mr. Stephen Dorrell (Charnwood) (Con): I congratulate the right hon. Member for Stirling (Mrs. McGuire) on saying that she would sit down well within her allotted time, and then sticking to her promise. I shall try to emulate her in that regard.

The right hon. Lady began by saying that the occasion for the debate was good news—the news that more elderly people are living longer—and that we should all celebrate that good news. I entirely agree with her, but the other aspect of the background to the debate is less happy. Although it has been recognised from 1997 onwards, and indeed was recognised by the previous Government—in which, as Secretary of State for Health, I was responsible for these issues—the fact that people are living longer, and have higher expectations for their care in old age, creates a real policy challenge when it comes to paying for the care that, when we are younger, we all want for elderly people and that we want for ourselves as we grow older. The current Government came to office, and the then Prime Minister promised action on this subject, in autumn 1997, yet all we have had are repeated commissions that have, in truth, failed to address the issue.

The most accurate assessment of the issue was provided by the Wanless report, which said that merely to stand still—merely to deliver the same quality of care to elderly people as now—would require the proportion of gross domestic product committed to this area of care to rise from 1.1 per cent. to 1.5 per cent. over the next 15 years, and that that would represent an increase in the cash cost of providing that care of £14 billion. That is how much it would cost merely to stand still. A parallel report by the Commission for Social Care Inspection pointed out that to stand still is not to deliver on our aspirations. The background to our debate is, therefore the fact that for 12 years we have failed to address the question of how we as a society will fund our aspirations for elderly care.

Twelve years on, the Government produced a Green Paper this summer, which is the immediate background to the debate, because it tabled the suggestion that attendance allowance and disability living allowance should be put into the pot to square the circle of paying for this area of care. It also tabled the suggestion that "a National Care Service"—capital N, C and S—should be developed, but it set out almost no details of what such a service should look like, beyond saying that disablement benefits should be part of the funding solution for paying for reshaped care for elderly people.

Since that Green Paper was published, two fundamental conflicts have developed at the heart of policy in this area. They have now started to bubble to the surface, and I want to address those two conflicts this afternoon. My hon. Friend the Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley) has already discussed the first of them: should we develop a policy that is based on a preference for the payment of cash benefits, or one that allows greater flexibility for commissioners of service to provide a package of care that is, in their opinion, tailored to meet the needs of elderly people, but that does not necessarily reflect the wishes of the elderly people themselves?

John Mason: Does the right hon. Gentleman agree that that option could turn out to be more expensive as well? Often, a friend or family member will visit to care for a few hours and they will incur only the cost of the taxi fare, but if such visits were replaced by the local authority providing paid care for a few hours, that would be much more expensive.

Mr. Dorrell: The hon. Gentleman is absolutely right, and what he says is relevant to the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for South Cambridgeshire about the way in which a local authority-commissioned service relates to carers. A local authority-commissioned service runs the risk of being less accurate in meeting what elderly people want and demand of such services, and therefore of being not merely more expensive, but less good value for money. There are therefore many reasons for choosing to have a policy that prefers, accentuates and develops direct payments, rather than officially commissioned services. That is why we passed the direct payments legislation before 1997, and it is why we have supported the development of that concept since. I believe that any move to put disablement benefits into the pot to pay for the national care service would be a big step in the wrong direction.

The Ministers say, "Don't worry about it. Local authorities will still have the same encouragement to pay direct cash payments." Who do they think they are kidding? They are clearly not kidding the next generation of elderly people. I accept entirely that there will be no cash losers in the current generation of benefit recipients, but we are concerned here about the development of policy for the future. I simply do not believe that if we take a system that provides an entitlement to a cash benefit and give that cash to a local authority commissioning body, we will have entrenched or developed the policy of preferring cash payments to commissioned services. It flies in the face of common sense, and particularly so when we all know that we are going into a decade in which there will be severe resource pressure.

[Mr. Dorrell]

Of course, it is true that, against that background—even if the Department of Health does not prefer such an approach—the Treasury is encouraging this policy direction to create more flexibility to free up resources that, in its mind, are now being devoted to a demand-led programme so that it can put those resources at the disposal of a priority-led programme that will be subject to a cash limit in the way that the disablement benefit programme is not. All those reasons should, I believe, commit us to opposing a development of policy that takes an existing demand-led cash payments programme and puts it into a local authority cash-limited priority-led programme. That simply will not deliver the core policy objective that has been consistently developed since before 1997 and, to give them credit, by this Government since 1997 to build up a preference for cash payments over commissioned services. That is one fundamental conflict that I believe to be at the heart of the development of the policy for a national care service.

The other conflict that is equally at the heart of this policy has not yet been raised this afternoon. It is the unresolved conflict caused by the question of whether we are seeking to develop greater local flexibility, local choice and local management of these services or a single national blueprint, rolled out across the country. The Department of Health talks about putting the disablement benefits at the disposal of the national care service in order to fund and develop its vision of a national care service with national assessment, a national entitlement programme and the development, therefore, of a policy that moves social care for the elderly from being a local authority service to a national service on the model of the national health service. The Secretary of State made it entirely explicit that that was the agenda of the Department of Health.

At the same time, in this Chamber, only a few weeks ago, we were debating with the Department for Communities and Local Government the development of the Total Place programme, which embraces the idea that disablement allowances should be put into that programme in order to take funds that are currently determined by a national programme with a national entitlement prescription and to put them at the discretion of local authorities so that they can create a more flexible local model of service delivery that reflects more accurately the local circumstances of individual local authorities.

Which approach are the Government supporting? Are we putting attendance allowances and disablement allowances into the local pot in order to develop a national care service? There is something tautological about taking a national programme and putting it into local authorities in order to develop a national care service. That is a bit like listening to a Frenchman explaining the game of cricket. Are we developing the programme in order to develop a national care service or are we taking these benefits and putting them at the discretion of the local authority in order to develop local flexibility and Total Place? Again, this comes back to a point that I made earlier. Is this about putting those moneys into a cash-limited programme to create greater discretion, as would be the Treasury's agenda, or is it about the national payment of cash benefits according to a national entitlement programme, which would be my preference?

My central point is that, against the background of the Government having failed for 12 years to address the resource challenges in the care of the elderly, they published a Green Paper this summer that said that the solution was the development of a national care service—three words with no policy behind them. That was a good headline, but behind it is an unresolved muddle of unresolved conflicts. All that is unresolved after 12 years of failing to rise to the challenge that was clearly there 12 years ago. Hon. Members need not take my word for that: in 1997, Tony Blair said that it would be a disgrace if this matter were not addressed. Those were his words, not mine.

5.21 pm

Roger Berry (Kingswood) (Lab): It is a pleasure to follow the right hon. Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell), who has raised two fundamental issues. I hope that the Government and others, in their response to the consultation exercise, will consider those issues carefully.

I start from the position of being one of those who signed the early-day motion—and not just yesterday—but I shall be supporting the Government amendment this evening.

Mr. Burns: Surprise, surprise!

Roger Berry: The hon. Gentleman may say that, but I have voted against the Government on rare occasions when I felt that there was no alternative and I have not precluded entirely the possibility of my ever doing that again, but I hope that I do not have to. We have had a consultation exercise and the Government's amendment makes it clear that they are considering the responses to that consultation. It is quite wrong for members of the Opposition to say that the Government have decided to stop disability benefits. That is untrue and misleading, and it scares vulnerable people. That is another reason why I shall not vote for the Opposition's motion. We have heard some of the responses to the consultation, and most of us can guess what many of the responses from various organisations have been. Those responses should be treated seriously, and I am sure that they will be, but no decisions have yet been made.

Alistair Burt: The hon. Gentleman has been around this course several times. He knows this subject exceptionally well and he has a strong reputation in the House on this issue, so is he puzzled that, in dealing with some of the earlier responses to the consultation, the Minister and others have left hanging much of what has raised concerns outside? It appears that attempts are being made to deal with part of that today. If they had been as clear as he suggests, there would not have been the scares that currently involve certain organisations. Could Ministers have not done rather better?

Roger Berry: I can answer that in one sentence. People are anxious because others have generated scares outside. Let me speak for myself. I agree with the Government that disability benefits should be seen in the context of a national care service. I, as much as anyone, want a national care service that is similar to the national health service. That is long overdue. As the Government say in their amendment, the national care service is about having a "national, universal, entitlement-based system for care and support".

The only part of the system that is currently national, universal and entitlement-based is the benefit system—attendance allowance, disability living allowance and other related benefits. My point of departure is this: if our purpose is to create a national care service, I find it strange that the part of the package that we should start considering is the one part of the service that is national, universal and entitlement-based. It would be much more logical, in summary, for attendance allowance, DLA and related national entitlements to be the basis on which we build a national care service.

I welcome the publication of the Green Paper. It addresses a number of the shortcomings of the social care system that deny disabled and older people the right to decent care and support. That is why virtually every disability organisation—Age UK, Age Concern, Help the Aged and many others—has also welcomed it.

It is interesting that, within a few days, the same organisations expressed specific concerns about the future of disability benefits, so I think that we should regard their submissions as pretty sophisticated: they passionately want a national care system, but they have concerns about removing the national entitlements that currently exist through the benefits system.

We all know why things need to be done. As Members of Parliament, we all know that needs are being met insufficiently. Our constituents frequently have unmet needs, and perhaps the same is true for members of our families. At present, local authorities are addressing only the most serious needs, and there are charges. For instance, a constituent wrote to me this week claiming that her charging regime was unfair and unreasonable, and I think that she is correct. In addition, the 6 million carers in our country do not get the kind of support that they should get, and all that is despite the fact that the Government are putting more money than ever into the social care system. I do not think that the Government can be criticised for not providing extra resources. They have done that, but the system itself is not functioning as it should.

As the right hon. Member for Charnwood said, provision varies from local authority to local authority. People who get an assessment for care and support in one local authority but who have the temerity to want to work, or visit relatives, in the next-door local authority have to go through the process all over again. When will that cease? Entitlements are not portable. When are we going to get portable entitlements? A national care system, if it is national, will at least address that problem.

Finally, disabled people are twice as likely to live in poverty as non-disabled people. In such circumstances, therefore, we should be very cautious indeed about considering changes to benefits in a downward direction. Let us not forget that people who receive attendance allowance and DLA are, sadly, some of the poorest in our society.

As I have said, I support the vision of a national care system and national entitlements. I welcome the emphasis in the Green Paper on preventive interventions and on promoting choice and control. As other hon. Members have said, it is the national entitlements that give choice and control at the moment, because people can choose how to spend that money.

I think that resources could be saved if we moved to a national care system, and away from multiple assessments of non-portable entitlements between local authorities. The existing bureaucracy could be reduced in size, and some resources could be saved that should be spent on front-line care and support. Nevertheless, we all know that that is not going to be enough to provide the resources that the social care system needs at present. It will certainly not be enough, given the well-known demographic changes, to ensure the resources that the social care system of the future will need, but I repeat that I do not think that it makes sense to fund the social care system by undermining that part of the benefits system that works most successfully at present.

As the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb) has pointed out, many people who receive attendance allowance do not receive any social care support at all. Why should we consider any change to that entitlement, given the possible consequences for those people?

It must also be stated that, as we all know, many people's experiences of local authority social services are not good. I am a former local councillor and I am passionate about local government, but we all know that there are local authorities, for faults that either are not their own—perhaps insufficient resources—or are their own that do not provide the quality service that is needed. When disabled people say to me, "For goodness sake, we must retain AA and DLA", it is often because they cannot bear the possibility that the money would somehow end up under the control of local authorities with their current management of the social care system.

That is not a criticism of individuals who work for local authorities. Many struggle in very difficult circumstances indeed. Many local authorities are quite small, so there is often a real question about how they can provide a comprehensive social care service. I am not criticising individuals—I am simply relaying what we all know: many of our constituents who use local authority social care services are less than enthusiastic about their quality and are, therefore, all the more keen to hang on to national entitlements via the benefits system.

Attendance allowance and DLA are paid directly to individuals regardless of their personal circumstances, such as where they live, which makes the allowances an obviously desirable entitlement. As we have all said, recipients can spend the money as they wish. Those allowances have all the advantages of the individual budget—they are about empowerment, choice and control. The allowances have the important characteristics that we are saying the national care system should have in the future, so we should tamper with them only after we have come up with a very good reason for so doing. At the moment, it does not make much sense to move the part of the system that arguably works most successfully, given what disabled and older people expect from it, and that is why disability organisations, Age Concern and Help the Aged have expressed concerns.

[Roger Berry]

Disability Alliance and the disability consortium—representing between 25 and 30 organisations—oppose the use of existing benefits to fund social care. Disability Alliance said:

"DLA and AA were intended to help with the higher costs of living disabled people and their families experience, and to help tackle the link between disability and poverty. We believe placing either or both of these funds in the pool for Local Authority distribution could cut support and restrict choice and control for many disabled people."

We should listen to what Disability Allowance has to say.

Age Concern and Help the Aged said:

"If the idea to stop AA is taken forward, it will mean that many older people will be worse off than they are now."

We should take that seriously—[Interruption.] Despite the provocation from those on the Opposition Front Bench, we should still take that comment extremely seriously indeed.

Finally, we all recognise that the Institute for Social and Economic Research is an organisation that has no political agenda; it produces reports and analyses by experts in the field. Its response was:

"Since the need for 'care'...is the main criterion governing eligibility for the benefits, it is sometimes assumed that the money is intended to pay for care. On the other hand, the past governments that introduced these benefits made it clear they were intended to contribute to the general extra cost of living faced over the long haul by disabled people and their families—extra heating, special diets, the incidental costs of hospital visits and so on—not necessarily on caring services."

Others have made that point this afternoon. The ISER continued:

"Standard of living indicators suggest that the current benefits do little more than compensate disabled people and their families for the extra costs associated with disability. A reduction in their cash incomes is likely to lead to an increase in deprivation."

The significant additional resources needed for the national care system should come from general taxation. I do not believe that one group of disabled people should be required to pay disproportionately for care and support for another group of disabled people. It is a responsibility that all citizens should share. My concerns, therefore, are that we might end up damaging the most successful part of the current system, which is the national entitlements via the benefit system, and that the proposal may not be fair.

The truth is that we will not know the detail that might be in the White Paper until we see the White Paper. Indeed, a number of questions have been raised, not least by the right hon. Member for Charnwood, to which I suspect we will not get clear answers this afternoon, and I hope that that is for a good reason. I hope that it is because the Government are considering carefully the submissions that were made to the Green Paper as part of the consultation exercise.

Yes, I signed early-day motion 1, and I did so for the simple reason that I agree with it. However, I am afraid that I shall not support the Opposition motion before us, and I shall not do so for two reasons. Sixteen Opposition Members signed the motion, and a number of them did so yesterday. I have great respect for the views of many Opposition Members, and I make no personal comments, but it is not good enough for a political party to use the early-day motion as a bandwagon on which to jump and bash others when three handfuls of its Members actually put their names to the relevant motion. When they also go around making statements, as they have explicitly done, saying that the Government are taking away disability benefits, despite no such decisions having been made, I think that that is outrageous. That was not in the statement of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, who was here earlier this afternoon, and I have it in front of me.

So, I shall not support an Opposition motion that has been presented in that way. The Government's amendment explicitly states that no decisions have been made, and I welcome that. It states also that they will take into account the consultation exercise and the submissions that have been made. The Government are not setting out to frighten people, and for that reason I shall support their amendment. That is no guarantee, however, that they can always rely—on every conceivable occasion—on such unqualified support.

5.37 pm

Alistair Burt (North-East Bedfordshire) (Con): These are always good debates in which to take part, and it is a pleasure to follow the hon. Member for Kingswood (Roger Berry), who knows and cares about this subject very deeply. I agreed with many of his later remarks, but I shall avoid the difficulties of the politics for a while. It is always, however, a pleasure to listen to him, as it is to listen to the Front Benchers and to my right hon. Friend the Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell).

I make two comments based on my time as Minister for Disabled People. Many distinguished colleagues, such as the Under-Secretary of State for Health, the hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Ann Keen), who is sitting on the Government Front Bench now, have followed me into that position. I remember someone asking me to do more as a Minister to ensure that people with disabilities could access polling stations. That happened early on in my time as Minister, and before the meeting I thought, "What's this about? Everybody has the right to vote, you can vote by post, it doesn't really matter if you can't physically go down to the polling station. You've still got the same right to vote. What's the point?" By the end of the meeting, I had got the point: there is a very early conversion for Ministers and Members who are involved with people with disabilities. They realise that, for those with disabilities, one of the most important things is to be able to do the things that everybody else does—without thinking about them, without it being a big deal—and to have the same access to things which everybody else takes for granted.

My second observation is to offer a memory of Nicholas Scott. I know that we are in the heat of battle and that the Secretary of State for Health gets well stuck into such encounters, but if he looks back at some of his previous press releases he may come to see that crass politicking—the phrase that he used—is reflected in them. No doubt it will feature in future press releases, too. Nevertheless, he gave an impression that Opposition Members either had an artificial interest in disability or did not care very much. Well, those who knew Nicholas Scott and worked with him in the House know how unfair that impression is. I remember talking to Nick about the independent living fund, the disability living allowance and other such issues. He said to me: "One of the great things about disability issues is that by and large there is a benevolent ratchet. It does not always proceed at the pace those in the disability lobby would like, but it moves inevitably to a position of greater individual choice and the opportunity to exercise more individual power. That is really important for people with disabilities. There is a process whereby we have moved from a position of giving things to people to their then being able to access them entirely of their own accord." I begin my remarks about the motion on that basis.

I do not dispute with Ministers the difficulty of dealing with this matter, nor the issue of quantum. It will be extremely expensive and difficult to manage this for the future—there is no argument about that. It is of course partly about how much money goes in, but it is also about how that money is applied and who has control over it. Serious questions have been asked about precisely what a national care service might mean, how it might be handled locally, and what power there will be for the individual. Those issues are at the heart of our discussions here and the confusion outside that has led so many individuals, including those from disability organisations, to raise the concerns that they have. No matter what politicians may have added in trying to develop the policy in one way or another, those fears are genuine and worrying. I will turn in a moment to some of the things we have heard today as supposed clarifications of the policy.

Let me quote from a letter from one of my constituents. It was produced at the time when the policy had been announced in the Green Paper and people were not sure where it was going, and it reflects a concern that we now know is met because existing benefit holders will not be affected. Nevertheless, it might just as well have been written today by somebody anticipating what the future may hold. I suspect that most of us have similar letters. My constituent wrote:

"At the moment my husband of 82 who is blind and has other health needs, receives attendance allowance at the highest rate. Taking away this allowance would affect greatly his quality of life. He is a very independent gentleman, one who would find it very difficult to allow people he is not familiar with to provide personal care. Because of the allowance he is able to arrange his own help and feel in control of what needs he wants met and not assessed by what social services consider to be his needs. I feel for an older person who remembers pre war conditions. He is unlikely to access services through a local authority, he feels this is going back to the 'State Control, and Work House mentality'. Going without these provisions would greatly affect his quality of life, and mine as I can pay for someone to sit with him for a break with caring."

On one of the websites that discuss these matters, a gentleman called Mick Hall says:

"My own Dad who has now sadly died fell into this category. His reasoning was two fold: before he became ill and frail he had taken responsibility for his life since he was a young boy. He also feared if he let people in through the door he might be taken off without his consent and placed in what he called in a disparaging manner 'a home.'"

When I spoke today to Yvonne Clark, the excellent chief executive of Carers in Bedfordshire, she reiterated that that fear about loss of control was of major concern to people. We have dealt with that a little bit today, or I think we have, in terms of what the policy is, but I am still not quite sure about that. It is important to know how we have got to where we are, and the Minister who winds up will have to clear up the confusion that appeared to exist before half-past 3 and about where we are now.

The Secretary of State almost used the words, "Read my lips—no cash losers." However, that is not what he was saying on 20 November; the quote is included in the excellent pack prepared by the Library. On the same day, Martin Green, chief executive of the English Community Care Association, said this about the Green Paper:

"There seems to be no coherent back story about how it is going to be funded, what the criteria are, how it interfaces with other aspects of the health and social care system, whether the money allocated will be enough, and if it isn't, what is going to be the price paid by other parts of the care budget".

On the same day, the Secretary of State was quoted in The Independent:

"Andy Burnham, the Health Secretary, accused the Tories of 'disgraceful scaremongering'"— that is his view, and he is good at saying so—

"in suggesting benefits could simply disappear. However, he admitted that the Attendance Allowance could be reformed to pay for broader changes in the future. He added that anyone who lost out would be compensated with an 'equivalent level of support'."

If the phrase "Read my lips—no cash losers" was on his mind then and always had been, and if it was never in any doubt, why did he not make it clear to The Independent that there would not be anyone who would be compensated with an "equivalent level of support", because no one would actually lose out? I am not certain that The Independent was contacted to say, "You've got this wrong".

Mr. Dorrell: Even if what the Secretary of State says today is now the Government's position, it deals only with today's benefit recipients. All the letters that my hon. Friend read out are a cogent argument about a policy that affects the next generation independently of today's benefit recipients.

Alistair Burt: My right hon. Friend makes the obvious point, although until today I would maintain that there was still a reasonable element of confusion about exactly who would be affected. I suspect that there probably still is. If what the Secretary of State has announced today was so blindingly obvious, why was it not made clear when the policy was being discussed, just two or three weeks ago? Why have so many people been disturbed about it? It is not simply a question of politicians making something out of it; it could have been squashed at a very early stage, but it was not, and it was not squashed because the Secretary of State had not developed the policy far enough. I submit that what we have extracted from him today was not in his brief this morning.

The Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, the hon. Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Jonathan Shaw), had a similar opportunity to explain what the policy was in his interview with Disability Now. The magazine asked whether older people would be affected adversely if attendance allowance were abolished under a reformed social care system. The Under-Secretary rightly said:

"The amount would be put into a social budget of the local authority and people would receive care services in the way that they might use their Attendance Allowance to pay for that now."

[Alistair Burt]

Again, when the concern was raised there was no suggestion whether that would apply now or in the future. It was left hanging. I suggest that there are real concerns about that matter, so my right hon. and hon. Friends are quite right to have tabled a motion that is widely supported and endorsed by agencies outside.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: Does my hon. Friend feel that had the policy of "no cash losers" been in place this morning, the Government's amendment would have been phrased differently and not included the words

"an equivalent level of support"?

Alistair Burt: I must admit that if I had been the Secretary of State this morning, I would have ensured that "no cash losers" was written in pretty clear terms, so that we would not have had these exchanges about what an equivalent amount of support means. The door was left wide open, and I suspect that it has been closed at a very late stage during the course of the day. However, we may get further information about that later.

There is concern about why the change is being made. We know about the difficulties in the amounts of money involved, but then we come to a point raised in the letter from my constituent and by my right hon. Friend the Member for Charnwood. It is how services are provided that matters. One reader of Disability Now wrote:

"The Government seems upset that it doesn't know or control how we're using the money, so it wants to give it to councils so everyone can see who gets what and for what."

That concern about the personal element being taken away is widespread, and the fear is that if the Government do not control it, they do not like it.

Neil Bateman, a welfare rights specialist, has written about the discrepancy in the numbers of those who receive social care and those who receive allowances. That can be interpreted in different ways, but he asked:

"Then what about the numbers? In England, 1.26 million people receive social care services, but 3.82 million receive AA/DLA. Are the proponents of transferring"

those allowances

"really suggesting that over two and half million people would lose these benefits? Would care services be expanded threefold to provide services instead? Fat chance."

He is picking up on that dilemma. It looks as though there is a gap somewhere, and even from what the Secretary has said today, we are not sure how it is going to be closed.

I shall conclude with one last point. The Minister and the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb), who speaks for the Liberal Democrats, asked whether we know where the benefit money is currently applied, which is very important. I maintain that the Department for Work and Pensions does not know, but it ought to before making changes. I say that because of an excellent DWP working paper—working paper 58 of this year—in which a researcher is given this task:

"A research plan is proposed at the end which looks towards a large-scale survey starting in about two years' time...which will provide some answers to the questions at issue".

The planned research programme will look at how disability benefits are spent and used, which is precisely the information people need before introducing a Green Paper, and certainly before a White Paper. The proposal is for three major studies, which is exactly what colleagues have been discussing today. It states:

"Understanding Society is a general purpose panel survey covering 40,000 households...The survey is likely to offer a crude scale of impairment, adequate income and deprivation data, and a wide range of social participation indicators, without focusing on issues of special relevance to disabled people."

That will be supplemented by a

"longitudinal disability survey...a highly specialised disability survey based on screening of an initial sample of 50,000 individuals."

The document goes on to state:

"The Policy Studies Institute has been commissioned by DWP to develop a methodology for measuring take-up of DLA and AA."

It is intended that two of those surveys will start next year, but for the third, which looks at take-up of DLA and AA,

"There is no current timetable".

If the Department acknowledges that it needs and wants information on how those allowances are spent, why do we not have it before working out a new way to subsume them into a benefit? I maintain that this is perhaps not the right time to do that. It is certainly not the right time to worry those who are going to come on to the benefit about its future. That may not be the right way to use it.

I return to how I started, and the letter from my constituent and what Nick Scott said. Giving individual people with disabilities the power to choose gives them the sense that they can do exactly what everyone else can do, without having to make major changes and without being supplicants and dependent on someone else. If a national care service in any way replaces that sense of individual power with the sense that something is being given to people with disabilities, however well intentioned that is, we will be missing something. We will be losing what Nick and the hon. Member for Kingswood have always fought for and what we care about. The Minister could begin to clarify the matter this evening, but I suspect that he will have to go some distance to convince those who are rightly concerned about a possible change for the worse in the way this ratchet has been working for so long.

5.53 pm

Laura Moffatt (Crawley) (Lab): It is a real pleasure to follow the hon. Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Alistair Burt), who made a reasoned argument. Of course, I accept none of it, but it was done beautifully.

Care of the elderly was my first love when I completed my nurse training and it has continued for many years, because I believe that a society is judged by the way it treats elderly people and by how we prepare for our lives as we grow older and more dependent. That is what this debate is all about, and I very much welcome it. I am relying not on briefing notes from the Library or from my party, nor am I reading out news releases prepared by the Conservative party for its candidates; rather, I relying on the great good sense of my constituents.

In the later part of the summer, I held a consultation with more than 40 individuals, including people from the caring professions, carers and those who are cared for. It was to their comments on disability that I listened. We came together to discuss the White Paper. It was clear in our conversation that those people were not going crazy about benefits or getting upset or anxious.

We were having a conversation because the proposals were undergoing consultation. It was a reasonable, adult, mature conversation between a representative of the Government and those who would be most greatly affected by the proposals, and I very much welcomed it. Following our morning's deliberations, we were able to prepare a submission in response to the Green Paper. I hope that our comments will be taken seriously. I am glad that a solution has not already been offered, apart from the assurances, which were given early on—weeks and weeks ago—about the safeguarding of those benefits.

I know that scaremongering is the reason for today's debate, but I am absolutely delighted about it because it has given me the opportunity, as a Member of Parliament, to engage many more people than I thought I would at the beginning of the consultation. I wrote to many people. I have no interest in what happens to me—this is about the future of older people. Whatever happens at the next general election is of no importance compared with what the future may hold for older people. That is why it is important to have this debate without making silly, snidey remarks to each other.

I was interested to hear the right hon. Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell), because the 60th anniversary of the NHS was a great opportunity to revisit the arguments that were had when the then Labour Government were determined to introduce it. In his very reasonable way, he tried to explain why many of the proposals are unaffordable—that was the gist of his contribution. I only hope that we do not listen to that argument. I believe we have a responsibility to step up to the plate and to tackle what I believe is one of the biggest omissions in care today—bringing together health and social care, and ensuring that we adequately help people as they become infirm and those with disabilities.

I welcome the debate, and I am now able to correspond with many more people. They made some quite interesting suggestions—they are not out of briefing notes or anything else. I have been assured that the benefits are certainly no longer under consideration, but people ask me why the Opposition, who have produced a news release for the next general election, say they are.

I take issue with that. We are talking about a matter of great concern, and our constituents rightly tell us to explain to the Government why we do not believe in wrapping up those benefits and why a national care service, which is a fantastic innovation, is a good idea, but the campaigning has gone on long beyond when those reassurances were made. That brings into question how that whole campaign has been conducted. That brings that campaign into disrepute, and I hope that none of my hon. Friends will support the Opposition motion tonight.

Two constituents of mine, who suffer from severe disabilities themselves, run two excellent groups in Crawley. First is Mrs. Carslake, who runs the Jackdaw club; last weekend the whole club went to Butlins at Bognor, where they had an excellent time—using their DLA to get out and about. The people in that club understand that it is this Government who are committed to their care in the future. The second is Mrs. Kay Turner, whom I visited at home following some concerns that she raised. She runs the GEMMS club, which looks after people with neurological conditions. The members have discussed the Green Paper and the national care service proposal.

Mrs. Turner made an excellent point to me. She said, "I'm not badly off. I was well before I became ill, and the level of care that I have been able to secure through the DLA has ensured that we have a decent life together. We enjoy each other's company and we do not feel as though we are impoverished." We need to protect such people too. Through the empowerment that the DLA has given that couple, she has managed to keep well in herself and to remain active and engaged with many other people.

This is an issue of trust. I have listened carefully to the contributions from Opposition Members and the undeniable stoking up of anxiety to ensure—

John Barrett (Edinburgh, West) (LD): The hon. Lady is making an interesting and well considered argument. Does she agree that the fear generated by the draft press release from the Conservative party makes life even tougher for constituents whose lives are already often difficult?

Laura Moffatt: I am grateful for that intervention, and I agree that the press release will make life tougher for people who will be anxious and concerned by it. Those who blindly follow the party lead and stick their name into a press release and put it out without thought or consideration need to think very carefully. I am very much aware that I have the most marginal seat in the country and I am proud of my 37 majority—and I have the tattoo to prove it. If our opponents issue press releases just to stoke up some concern, that is an issue of trust, and those people should reflect on what they are doing.

It seems to me that this campaign began with a deeply held desire to engage with constituents on the future of social care, but it has been turned into a bandwagon campaign, and that may have something to do with the fact that the Opposition proposal—hastily put together at the party conference—for a one-off payment for those willing to go into residential care, has bombed. There is no question about that. None of my constituents is talking about that proposal—the only game in town is about how we can provide care at home for family members. It is not about people who are well at present signing up to go into a nursing home in the future. There is a connection between those two events that has caused the Conservatives to jump on this bandwagon.

I hope that when we have the Second Reading of the Bill that will be the first step towards the national care service, our constituents will understand that they can trust the proposals and their benefits will not be affected. We need to have a proper debate, as many hon. Members have said today. We cannot go on avoiding the issue of providing care for elderly people with dignity and decency. I hope that after this robust debate today we will be able to make progress and look in detail at how we ensure that everybody can be confident that they will be able to live in a decent, happy and secure home in the future.

6.6 pm

Chloe Smith (Norwich, North) (Con): The reason for today's debate is the Government's failure to be entirely clear about how they will fund their three proposed options for a national care service in their Green Paper. My hon. Friend the Member for Putney (Justine Greening) pointed out that all of us—at least on this side of the

[Chloe Smith]

House—have been victims of smear campaigns in elections that we have fought, whether in relation to TV licences, pensions or Sure Start, and now this issue. Our campaign is not a smear campaign and I agree with those hon. Members who have said that the subject is far more serious than that. We should treat it with the respect that it deserves.

If the Government think that they can achieve something in their last six months, let us take them at their word. Let us have that debate on behalf of our vulnerable constituents. Let us proceed with caution, but also with clarity. We need a debate that contains costs and decisions—I hate to break that news to Labour Members. I hope that when he sums up the Minister will answer the question posed by my right hon. Friend the Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) about cash benefits. She asked whether, if there are to be no cash losers, the benefits will be available to be spent as people want to spend them.

Jonathan Shaw indicated assent.

Chloe Smith: That is good to know. Earlier, the Secretary of State seemed to be having a Bill Clinton moment, in which we were not sure what the meaning of "is" was, or a Lewis Carroll moment in which the words were to mean what he said they were to mean. Perhaps instead it is one of those irregular verbs from a comedy programme that we all know and love, in which the Minister proposes a policy, we scrutinise it and the people outside think that the Government are in chaos. I would not want anybody to think that.

People receive attendance allowance or DLA because they need it. Many of us have pointed out that those benefits are based on need, not means, and that is an important point. Age Concern, which does great work in Norwich and Norfolk as a whole, as it does across the country, supports those benefits because they help older people to meet the daily living costs of disability. There is no question in anybody's mind that these benefits are undeserved or that they should be tossed around as discretionary options. In fact, they are essential to anybody's idea of social justice.

People in my constituency use those benefits for vital daily activities, such as assistance with washing, dressing or eating. They use them to carry on life in an enjoyable and meaningful way, and we all agree about that—the Minister nods again. A younger constituent came to my surgery on Saturday: he is totally blind, and he uses DLA to get around the city. He is another example of those who use it for enabling activities.

I recently met with carers and I hosted a web chat on Friday for a forum called Chill 4 Us. I spoke online with carers who, day in and day out, give up their time to care for others. Their passion on this issue was clear and powerful. None of them wants to lose DLA and AA because they need and appreciate them greatly as cash benefits. Sadly, however, I got the impression that the only chance they have to say that is through such virtual forums—we were there tapping away. That is one of the difficulties in this debate. It can be very constricting for people who need us to take the subject seriously and treat it with respect and maturity. Quite simply, living with the kind of care needs for which DLA and AA cater is hard and can be expensive. They are needs-based benefits. It is one small piece of help that society can give, so it should hardly be controversial to say, "Let's not abolish something that the elderly, disabled or ill need and value."

I want to highlight the vulnerability that comes with such need. Fooling around with such benefits carries a weighty risk. A younger constituent aged, say, 35 might be able to plan for the future if changes are made to the system now. Many today have mentioned the needs of the future cohort; from what Ministers have said, it seems that today's cohort might be fine. However, the many people who receive DLA or AA after 65 might be less able to accommodate change. In many cases, they have made financial choices for their retirement that leave them and their families little room for manoeuvre. In other cases, people are already living on precarious means—we have heard plenty of figures today—and the abolition, if enacted, could represent a loss of up to £60 a week. That would be serious in many cases.

Some recipients of DLA and AA are physically ill or disabled, and their lives could become severely restricted without that assistance. People suffering from dementia or other mental illnesses, too, are particularly vulnerable to change. Making any changes that affect those social groups is difficult and complex. Getting the change right is paramount, and of course we are all taking that seriously today. However, debating the changes without causing immense anxiety is another thing entirely. The uncertainty generated by the Government's proposals in July's Green Paper has caused enormous concern and distress for people who are already vulnerable. Many Members have recounted what they have heard in their constituencies.

Forgive me for saying this, but it is incumbent on the Government to exercise caution and clarity in their approach. We also need flexibility and personal and local control at the end of whatever proposal emerges. I am sure that no one has an argument with a system that aims to be fair, simple and affordable. That is wonderful. However, we have serious concerns about a system that removes or reduces older people's ability to choose what to do. Choice and control must shine through any reforms that we make to the care system.

By choice and control, we mean the support that people need to choose how they overcome their concerns in their own way. Abolishing AA and DLA is a serious risk to such individual control. I would like a Minister to explain the paradox clearly. If the wording that has rather tortuously been made available still leaves open the option of abolishing AA and DLA, we need to know why the Government think that that maintains choice and control for individuals. That question is still on the table.

I would also like Ministers to explain, even after today's twists and turns, a policy that seeks to reallocate a cash benefit that grant money to people who need it and allows them spend it how they want, and to add it instead to a nationalised system that could simply eat it up through the weight of bureaucracy.

Alistair Burt: Quite right.

Chloe Smith: Quite right, as my hon. Friend says.

Let us turn to the ground on which the Government might like the debate to take place. If there are to be no cash losers, why are we talking about abolishing two benefits—or not abolishing them; I may have to grant the Minister that, although I do not think that he is guaranteeing not to abolish them—and replacing them with the same? If there will be no cash losers, and some cash winners or cash neutrals, at the end of the process, why are we having much of this debate at all? That key question, too, is still on the table.

The Green Paper appears to contain a further argument that the aim is to reduce complexity for older people by merging funding streams. The paper states:

"Having two different funding streams means that older people have to apply separately", which can be off-putting. The Green Paper states that there is a case for integrating those streams

"to improve the effectiveness of state funding."

I would like the Minister to explain what kind of state funding can be more effective than meeting the rawest needs of people in a way that gives them power over their own solutions.

I would also like the Minister to acknowledge that, by his own argument for reducing complexity, there is so much more to do to help not only that group of people, but the millions in the UK who despair of ever getting what they deserve from the state. I am talking about the country we live in, where almost daily in the past 12 years, we have had application forms, means tests, quangos, queues and hoops added to every conceivable aspect of the public sector. It is no wonder that we are talking again about a group of people who are vulnerable to change and worried about more burdens being added as they simply try to get on with what they want to do.

To make a constructive point, it is essential to provide good information to people in any new care system. I shall mention one local example. Norwich has several day care centres provided by the local authority. I am sad that the Secretary of State is not here to hear this point, because judging by something he said earlier, I think he knows about it. He will also know that Norfolk county council is consulting on its options and he may know that I, as a local MP, will be standing up for my constituents on those options, rather than playing party politics.

The local authority is facing ever less funding in future, in a period of a staggering national deficit, and a move to personalised budgets. Under the pressure of at least two burdens from national Government, therefore, the council is seeking to focus its limited means on those who need its help the most. In particular, we are talking about dementia needs and so-called re-ablement requirements. Most people have no problem with that. The rub has come as the council has reviewed against its projected future requirements the usage of three day care centres that it runs. The elderly members of at least one of those facilities—the Silver Rooms—in my constituency are extremely anxious about their future. They are frail and some have physical and mental disabilities.

I raise that example not only because, if local facilities are to close, losing AA would in many cases be a double blow for those people, but because their plight illustrates particularly well why a national care service would do well to excel in the provision of good information. If the personalisation of care budgets moves from being a twinkle in a planner's eye to a fully workable, local scheme, my constituents will need to know where they can spend their money. That remains true in a world with or without AA and DLA, and with or without any of the options provided in a national care service. My constituents will want the comfort of knowing that, with their personal budget in hand, their day centre, or whatever they choose to spend their future benefits on, will still be open for business. If a national care service can provide such information and support, that is wonderful. However, if it cannot and only succeeds in removing cash benefits that might be seen as an effective forerunner to personal budgets and gobbling them up in a monster of a scheme that provides no improvement, we really are in trouble.

I emphasise the gravity of getting this right. It is clear that reform of social care is greatly needed. My right hon. Friend the Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell) referred to the Wanless report. Others will be familiar with the statistics on exactly what we will be facing in 10, 20 or 40 years, when perhaps even I will be retiring. Perhaps more shocking, in a survey conducted by the Department of Health in July, I understand that more than half of those asked thought that the total cost of a residential care home for an elderly person would be £10,000 or less and that more than a quarter assumed that it would be free, so in addition to the demographic bomb going off, we are also battling a problem of public information. People need that information. Any proposals in the Green Paper will not be implemented until 2014, which should give us time to pin down the Secretary of State to some clear language. The Government must act now to alert people to that bomb.

Given that so many people rightly fear for the future of social care and are vulnerable to changes in the system, I want answers to some questions in addition to those put so ably by my hon. Friend: Why would the Government seek to remove an obvious area of stability, in the shape of AA and DLA, for vulnerable people? Why would we seek to abolish the only area of clarity for many people in the care system at present? Why would we do away with a cash benefit that goes where it is most needed? We need a clear definition of "no cash losers". Why would we seek to reduce people's independence and open the door to an unwieldy and ever larger bureaucracy? Finally, before they talk about the serpentine amendments that we have seen today—or afterwards, or indeed during that discussion—will the Government give the proposals in their Green Paper the gravity and maturity of decision that they deserve? Will they be able to emerge from all that and talk about social justice on the other side?

6.20 pm

John Mason (Glasgow, East) (SNP): I want to concentrate on the proposal to abolish attendance allowance, apparently now only for new claimants, and disability living allowance for the over-65s. As we know, that would affect 2.4 million vulnerable pensioners, including 1.6 million who currently claim attendance allowance and 800,000 over-65s who are on disability living allowance. However, whatever happens to the current claimants, presumably we are talking about higher numbers in future, so those are the minimum numbers at least.

We have received various reassurances from Ministers in recent weeks and months. They have suggested that people will receive similar services, rather than money. Previously, we were told that "people will be guaranteed an equivalent level of support".—[Official Report, 19 November 2009; Vol. 501, c. 241.]

[John Mason]

One of the problems in this debate is the lack of clarity about the phrase "equivalent level of support", because frankly it can mean absolutely anything to absolutely anyone. The hon. Member for Crawley (Laura Moffatt) said that reassurances had been given, but the first reassurances that I heard were given yesterday, at Department for Work and Pensions questions. I am not sure when she thought she had heard reassurances before that.

Quite a lot of concerns have been expressed, not least today, about some of the statements that have been made and the phrases that have been used. The Secretary of State said that the present system was "not sustainable" and that the cost could rise by 50 per cent. A number of hon. Members, including the right hon. Member for Stirling (Mrs. McGuire), have talked about a demographic time bomb, which the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Chloe Smith) also mentioned. I feel that those statements are slightly over the top, because the reality is that we, as a Parliament, and the Government need to set priorities. The question is: what priorities are they to be? If we are saying that the present pot of money that looks after the elderly and vulnerable will continue to be the same pot, despite an increasing number in those groups, I would very much question whether that is the right priority.

Yesterday we received clarification that those already receiving the benefits in question would get

"the same level of cash support." [Official Report, 7 December 2009; Vol. 502, c. 6.]

The Secretary of State said today that he had "said it all along" and that there would be no cash losers. However, to reiterate what other Members have said, we did not really hear that, and it might have been helpful if he had said it a bit earlier. Although that statement seems to be reassuring, it still leaves new folk looking ahead and wondering what will happen if they do not receive attendance allowance in future. That seems to go in the opposite direction from the Welfare Reform Act 2009, in which I was involved in the Public Bill Committee. Great play was made of the right to control and all parties agreed on that.

I would like to make a number of points. The first is that attendance allowance and DLA do a lot of good. I should like to quote again—I have quoted from this before—from a paper that I received from SAMH—the Scottish Association for Mental Health. What SAMH says is probably typical of what a lot of similar groups would say. SAMH refers to the 194,000 people of working age in Scotland and the 145,000 over-65s who receive attendance allowance and to the 110,000 older people who receive DLA. The advantages that SAMH quotes are similar to those that we have heard about already this evening:

"For example, people with mental health problems can experience much smaller social networks and can feel isolated and alone. Anxiety may mean that a person feels unable to leave their home by themselves. People can choose to use their DLA to use a taxi to access social activities and cover the costs of an informal carer to provide the additional support and assistance needed. Without this additional support the person could experience greater anxiety and social isolation, increasing the potential of a period of hospitalisation or more intensive and costly community support."

SAMH also says:

"Disability benefits and free personal care enable older people in Scotland to remain independent in the community, providing older people with a personal budget to help with their care and support needs. This could include covering the costs of a friend or family member coming to the home in the morning to help the person get out of bed, prepare meals or do shopping and cleaning. Any changes to disability benefits could affect the provision of this care and support and result in an older person needing more costly forms of social care in the home, or lead to a person moving into residential care if they were not able to manage their household."

It has been said before, but it is worth re-emphasising, that much of the present system involves unpaid carers, of whom we hear a lot, and that the danger of just transferring even the same money to local authority or to any other control is that we will get less of a service.

I enjoyed being involved in the Public Bill Committee on the Welfare Reform Act 2009, in which other Members who are present were also involved. It is worth quoting again from the then Bill and from a clause in the part dealing with the right to control. It said:

"The purpose of this Part is to enable disabled people aged 18 or over to exercise greater choice" not the present choice, but greater choice—

"in relation to, and greater control over, the way in which relevant services (as defined by section 31) are provided to or for them"

The Government seemed to be saying—and I agree with them—that they wanted to move in the direction of individuals having greater control over the services. However, what we are seeing now is a move towards less control. Nobody has explained to me—perhaps the Minister could explain this evening—exactly how those two things are meant to relate to each other.

Previously I asked—and would like to ask again—what would happen to the money in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Will it be handed over as a lump sum? Will attendance allowance be based on need or will it be based on the Barnett formula? Will it be open to the devolved Governments to continue with attendance allowance in Scotland and Wales, even when it is eventually phased out in England? I did not quite hear the Secretary of State's earlier answer, but if I understood him correctly, he said that he would brief the devolved Governments. I hope that he would go a little further than just briefing them and enter into a consultation with them on how the proposals might work out.

We have received the assurance that only new claimants will be affected, but that leaves a number of questions about the future. Who will be paying for the protection? Will the money go through the local authority or will it be transitionally protected under the social security system? Will it affect local authority budgets, and what happens if local authorities cannot or will not pay? Is the money inflation proof, or will it not be increased each year in line with inflation and thus gradually reduced in real terms? If that is good enough for existing recipients, why should other disabled elderly people not receive at least the same? We will end up with a two-tier system, and potentially for quite a long time.

What happens to people on the middle or high rate of DLA if they reach 65 after the new system is in place? Will they be protected or will they lose the benefit when they reach 65? The current protection appears to affect those on benefit at the time of change, not afterwards, but if so many people are to be protected, what is the point? Should we not continue with something much closer to the present system? What would the impact be on carer's allowance? It is not particularly generous at the moment, at £53.10, but if it is abolished, what will happen to someone who looks after a person who receives attendance allowance or DLA at the higher or middle rate? Similarly, will there be an impact on pension credit?

Locally, the Labour campaign against me often refers to how often I might vote with the Conservatives, but sometimes it forgets to say that, very occasionally, the Conservatives are right and the Labour party is wrong. I must admit that, in this particular debate, I remain suspicious of the Conservatives' motives. I am suspicious of what they might cut instead, if they are going to protect these benefits. However, it is hard to say that Labour has not moved further to the right of the Conservatives on this issue.

The Government have rightly given undertakings about DLA for the under-65s, and, yesterday, new reassurances that those receiving cash will continue to do so. I suggest, however, that it was cynical to get people this worried in the first place, and then apparently to give ground. In the longer term, how can it be right to change the system to give future claimants less control over their benefits?

6.31 pm

Mr. Mark Harper (Forest of Dean) (Con): I was enjoying the speech made by the hon. Member for Glasgow, East (John Mason), until that last bit. He can rest assured that he can vote with us; he does not have to convince himself that we are right, but he can be absolutely certain that the Government are wrong. It was also a delight almost to follow my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Chloe Smith), who demonstrated in her thoughtful speech her clear understanding of and care for her constituents.

My hon. Friend the Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley) set out our case comprehensively and—despite what the Secretary of State said—in a measured, thoughtful way. He exposed the weakness of the Government's case. My right hon. Friend the Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell), a former Health Secretary, made a thoughtful and typically well-informed speech that raised a number of important questions.

This debate has exposed a Government who are in disarray and running scared on this issue. The Secretary of State—wherever he happens to be—has today effectively holed his own Green Paper below the water line. We did not think that it held the answers anyway, so, from our point of view, that is welcome, but he has effectively destroyed it. He changed the language today. Up until this morning, when the Government's amendment to the motion repeated the words

"would continue to receive an equivalent level of support",

Ministers had stuck doggedly to that language—not that anyone knew what it meant. Many interpreted it to mean that benefits such as attendance allowance and disability living allowance for those over the age of 65 would be taken away and put into a social care system, leading to less control and independence.

Despite what the Secretary of State said, those concerns were not got up by the Opposition; 105 MPs of all parties have signed early-day motion 1, including 39 Labour Members. I think that I heard the hon. Member for Kingswood (Roger Berry) correctly when he said that, despite having signed that early-day motion, he was going to vote against exactly the same wording on today's Order Paper, purely because today's motion had been tabled by us. He has a good reputation on these issues, and I think that he let himself down in making that argument.

Roger Berry: That was not the reason that I gave. I was angry at the way in which the Opposition have scared a number of elderly and disabled people by making the untrue statement that the Government had already made their decision. They have not, and to say that they have is not worthy of support from anyone.

Mr. Harper: The hon. Gentleman's intervention is inaccurate. He knows that, outside the House, every single organisation representing disabled people has opposed taking away these national disability benefits. He said that himself. These concerns were not got up by the Opposition. My hon. Friend the Member for South Cambridgeshire quoted the Disability Alliance's survey, which had asked its members whether attendance allowance and other benefits should be taken away, and found that 93 per cent. said no. RADAR, a pan-disability organisation, said:

"RADAR is adamant no one is getting their mitts on vital extra-cost benefits. These benefits are to help meet a wide range of extra costs, not just care, but extra heating, laundry and so on. Take them away and people would lose choice, control and independence and more people would fall into poverty."

There is an almost infinite list of quotes such as that, but I will read out just one more. Leonard Cheshire Disability says that its policy on this issue is that "we have always opposed any move to take DLA care component and AA into broader social care funding and will continue to do so."

Those concerns are shared not only by Members on both sides of the House but by all those organisations, so to pretend that they have somehow been got up by the Opposition as part of a scaremongering campaign—

Roger Berry: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Harper: No, I will not give way again. You got it wrong the first time.

What did we hear today from the Secretary of State? As my hon. Friend the Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Alistair Burt) said, he effectively said "Read my lips—no cash losers". Some might think that that was all well and good, but there is a problem for the Government. What the Secretary of State—who still has not turned up for the winding-up speeches—said today is not compatible with the amendment that his party tabled to our motion this morning. It is actually closer to our motion than to the amendment. It is also contradicted on a number of occasions by his own Green Paper.

There are three options on page 95 of the Green Paper, which the Government say are their favoured options. They are the partnership model, the insurance model and the comprehensive model. They all use disability benefits to extend care to those who do not get it now. The Secretary of State's saying today that there would effectively be no cash losers rules out all the Government's preferred options in the Green Paper.

On page 61, the Green Paper talks about extending the system so that everyone gets some help. It says that "we want to consider the different ways in which this could be funded, including through integrating funding from the social care and benefits systems."

[Mr. Harper]

That is incompatible with giving everyone who currently gets those benefits the same amount of cash as they are getting now, so that there would be no cash losers.

On page 98, the Green Paper states:

"We want to use the money that is in the system to make sure that everyone who qualifies for care and support will get some help with paying for their care."

However, if care is to be extended to those who do not currently get it, the money will have to come from within the system, which means that it will have to come from those disability benefits. If the Secretary of State is now ruling out touching those benefits, he is ruling out this proposal in the Green Paper. Given that some people are not getting care at the moment, the costs will have to go up. If there are to be no cash losers, that will simply not add up.

On page 103, the Green Paper refers to the King's Fund report, and says that "if the social care system were able to mostly meet the care needs of people who may currently only be supported through the disability benefits system, there would be less need for some of these benefits, and there might be a case for integrating some disability benefits such as Attendance Allowance into the care and support system."

That is exactly what the Government were proposing, but it is not what the Secretary of State said this afternoon.

On page 104, the Green Paper says:

"We can use the taxpayers' money that is already in the system to provide everyone with some care."

As my hon. Friend the Member for South Cambridgeshire pointed out, page 109 of the Green Paper makes it clear that there will be more people getting social care funding under the national care service than at present. According to the Green Paper, the only place that the money can come from is those disability benefits, as the Government have ruled out funding the increased spending from taxation, which I know is the favoured system of hon. Member for Kingswood.

So the Secretary of State cannot have it both ways. If there are to be no cash losers, this Green Paper is not worth the paper it is printed on. Page 114—Members, especially Labour Members, will be pleased to know that this is the last quote—states:

"The state would put in existing funding from taxes which are used for social care and any disability benefits that were integrated, and would use this to support the costs of everyone's care."

That is not about ensuring that there are no cash losers, or that people could have the money and spend how they wanted to, on supporting their independence and choice; it is about using the money to support the cost of everyone's care. That is clear. None of the preferred options can be reconciled with what the Secretary of State said this afternoon.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May), the shadow Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, asked an important question. If it is true that there are to be no cash losers, and that people will be able to keep the money, will they be able to spend it as they choose—as they can now—on supporting their independence and choice and enabling them to live the life that they want to live? The Secretary of State, who still is not here, could not—or would not—answer that question. So will the Minister tell us whether people will be able to spend that money as freely as they can now?

The Secretary of State made a point of quoting my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Cameron), and he was quite right. We support what the Government want to do on extending personalisation. Indeed, the Welfare Reform Bill allows social care funding to be integrated into the right to control only because we pressed for that in this House, although we were opposed by the Government—[Interruption.] The Secretary of State has finally joined us. Conservatives in the other place, together with Liberal Democrats and Cross-Bench peers, put together a majority which meant that the Government were forced to table their own amendments, with cross-party support, to do the opposite of what they were going to do when the Bill was in Committee in this House. If anyone looks at the record, they can see that that is exactly right; it is very clear.

The question for the Minister to answer is why until today the Government were sticking to the line that people would be given "an equivalent level of support", which is what it says in the Government amendment, and only now that the Secretary of State effectively said, "Read my lips—no cash losers." As I have comprehensively demonstrated, what the Secretary of State said this afternoon cannot be reconciled with what is in his social care Green Paper; he has effectively holed it below the water line. The Minister needs to answer those questions. He may not wish to answer the Opposition, but he needs to answer his own colleagues, particularly those who signed early-day motion 1. He also needs to answer respected Members of all parties and all those organisations outside the House that are very concerned about the Government's plans. Will he set out just what Government policy now is—what it was this morning, what it was at 4.06 pm when the Secretary of State appeared to change it from the Dispatch Box, which I would like the Minister to confirm, and what it is now? I commend the motion to the House; we look forward with interest to hearing the Minister's defence.

6.41 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Jonathan Shaw): This has been an important debate about what many Members have described as a policy that affects every member of our community. It is one of the most difficult issues we need to grasp, not least because, as we all know, we are living longer. In the next 25 years, the number of 85-year-olds will double, the number of people reaching 100 years will quadruple and the ratio of people in work to people in retirement, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Stirling (Mrs. McGuire) said, will become 2:1 rather than 4:1 as it is at present. We thus need a debate about how we shape a new national care service that will meet the demands within our communities and meet the higher expectations people quite rightly have in 2009.

People are rightly no longer willing to be just passive recipients of what they are told is good for them. They want to be involved, they want to be consulted and they want to help shape the future. That is why the Government have set out in the Green Paper the available options so that we can have the big care debate. We have had some 40 formal big care debates and I know that hon. Members have had them in their communities, and we thank them for the contributions they have sent to the Department. I have certainly spoken to a great many people as I have travelled around the country.

We have said clearly that no one currently in receipt of attendance allowance or disability living allowance at the time of reform would be a cash loser. It is also important that alongside these reforms, as referred to by a number of hon. Members, we plan to provide greater power for people to control the public funds that we make available to them from the various funding streams. Within the "right to control" legislation in the Welfare Reform Act 2007, we made provision to cover access to work, the disabled facilities grant, the independent living fund, supported employment and, of course, as the hon. Member for Forest of Dean (Mr. Harper) mentioned, adult social care.

I acknowledge that the hon. Gentleman put forward amendments in the debate on the Welfare Reform Bill and that I opposed them. We then had a mature and wider debate in the House of Lords—[Interruption.] If I am to accept the point the hon. Gentleman made in good faith, I hope that we can think about how we should frame this discussion. We are all talking about having a mature debate, so I accept that I opposed that amendment and I accept that in the debate in the other place, the amendment was put forward by my noble Friend Lord McKenzie of Luton and by Baroness Campbell of Surbiton, who commands respect throughout Parliament. She said that the changes we made to accept adult social care were done through co-production and she welcomed the way in which all parties had worked together. That is how we need to approach this issue rather than in the disappointing way in which the hon. Member for Forest of Dean chose to present it on this occasion. He normally does a lot better than that.

Bob Russell: In that spirit of reconciliation and unity of purpose, will the Minister explain why he hopes that the 39 signatories to early-day motion 1 will vote against exactly the same motion in a few minutes' time?

Jonathan Shaw: I am sure that my colleagues will listen closely to my arguments. The hon. Gentleman mentions the early-day motion, and it is interesting to note that Conservative Members laid great store by it. They have followed the hon. Member for Colchester (Bob Russell) in that respect, yet despite that great store, only a paltry 16 of them could bring themselves to sign it until recently, as my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Roger Berry) quite rightly pointed out.

To return to the point I was making about the benefit streams and adult social care, what distinguishes them is that some are national and some are local; some are national means-tested and some local means-tested. It is our ambition to bring all of those within the ambit of allowing people to choose to spend how they want. A number of hon. Members characterised social care from the local authority as a very constrained way of allowing such flexibility, but I would say that they should find out what people are doing with direct payments from social care.

Let me give hon. Members an example. I recently attended a Mind event where a lady said that she had received direct payments as part of her individual budget. She had a mental health condition and she was using that resource to pay for dance classes, which were not organised by the local authority. By using that money, she found a new way of socialising, she learned to dance and it provided her a springboard on which to find her way back into work. She certainly will be able to continue to have such classes in the future, and I say that clearly—

Mr. Harper rose—

Jonathan Shaw: I will answer the hon. Gentleman's point, if he will allow me. This is an important issue about the transitional arrangements, which several hon. Members raised. Existing claimants of AA and DLA will continue to have the flexibility to spend the resource as they wish. The other important point is that we are providing flexibility in terms of a number of different budget headings for the same reasons that a number of hon. Members put forward to explain why AA and DLA are a good thing. That is happening. Saying that the provision of those resources is "constrained" and characterising it as such is wrong.

May I also say that one of the—

Mr. Dorrell rose—

Jonathan Shaw: No, I will not give way to the right hon. Gentleman for the moment, because I want to address some important points that were put to me.

Mr. Dorrell rose—

Jonathan Shaw: If he will sit down, I will proceed with my answer. I will come on to deal with other points—[Interruption.] I will give way to the shadow spokesman first and then to the right hon. Member for Charnwood (Mr. Dorrell).

Mr. Harper: I am still not sure that the Minister has answered the question put earlier by my right hon. Friend. He knows that with individual budgets, people cannot spend the money entirely how they want because they have to agree that the spending will meet their care needs. At the moment, DLA and AA can be spent on anything they want, with a completely free choice, so will the Minister confirm that all the money people receive under the new system can be spent exactly how they choose to spend it?

Jonathan Shaw: During the transitional arrangements, people in receipt of AA and DLA will, when it comes from the local authority, have that cash sum as well as their flexibility protected—along the lines that hon. Ladies and Gentlemen are inquiring about. I hope that I have now satisfied them on that point.

Mr. Dorrell: A moment ago, the Minister appeared to argue that a cash-limited local authority social services budget was no more constrained than an entitlement-led White Paper budget. Is that really his position?

Jonathan Shaw: I did not say that at all. I was referring to the flexibility with which people could spend the resources available to them.

Let me respond to some of the points that have been made. The hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb) made a thoughtful speech exposing the cynicism with which the Conservative party has been scaremongering around the country with press releases. He also asked important questions about arrangements for the work force. We shall need to address ourselves to some of those details in the White Paper, especially the relationship between disability living allowance and attendance allowance and other benefits. Other Members also mentioned the work force. We have seen progress since the Care Standards Act 2000. At the time of its introduction, 80 per cent. of the 1 million or so work force had no qualifications. We have increased the number of people with qualifications by 20 per cent.

[Jonathan Shaw]

The hon. Member for Northavon referred to carer's allowance in particular. We have been working with carers as well. Many want to work, but find the benefits system confusing. That is why organisations such as the Princess Royal Trust for Carers and Carers UK have welcomed the work of our care partnership managers in Jobcentre Plus. About £20 million has been invested to ensure that they combine all the support mechanisms, ensuring that there is good information for carers so that they can join the labour market.

Mr. Harper: Will the Minister give way on that point?

Jonathan Shaw: I will give way briefly, but that will be it.

Mr. Harper: I am grateful to the Minister. Can he confirm that those whose full social care needs are met by local authorities will also continue to receive their attendance allowance and disability living allowance? Will those allowances be fully protected?

Jonathan Shaw: Yes, they will.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Stirling rightly referred to the scaremongering of Conservative Members. She spoke of the need to secure for a consensus of the kind that we secured for pension reform, and I hope that that happens. We saw the beginnings of it in the debate. The right hon. Member for Charnwood spoke of the need for reform, but did not refer to the need to pay for it.

Along with a number of other Members, I set out the issues relating to a changing demography. We need to find the necessary resources. We have included in the Green Paper options that would provide far more support for care than is provided at present. The current system involves ever more constraint, and if we continue as we are, the constraint and means-testing will continue to increase. Our proposals provide some solutions that can be debated throughout the country.

Opposition Members asked about devolution. Of course it is right for us to have discussions with the Scottish and Welsh Assembly Governments. Any settlement under the new system will have to take account of social care and health, which are devolved matters.

I perceived a lack of support for local authorities. I think that they do a very good job, but it was only my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood who talked of the good work that they do. We often characterise all local authorities by highlighting poor performance. That is why we need a national care service. Disabled people's organisations that support such a service speak of the difference in service from one town to another. They have drawn attention to the need for portability, which does not currently exist, and the struggle that they have to undertake to obtain services. They do not want to have to jump through such hoops again. Our proposals give them the opportunity that they want.

The hon. Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Alistair Burt), a former Minister for disabled people, mentioned Nick Scott. I have heard kind words said about Nick Scott during my travels around the country. The hon. Gentleman will know, however, that next year will mark the 40th anniversary of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970—the first legislation introduced to provide rights and services for disabled people not just in this country but anywhere in the world—and that that is thanks to the first Minister for disabled people, Lord Morris.

The hon. Gentleman was right to observe that as time has gone on, we have given people more choice and control so that they can be the architects of the support that they receive. Adult social care is an important component of people's independence, which is why we need it to be more available rather than perpetuating the present constraint.

My hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Laura Moffatt), who brought her professional knowledge to the debate, had held consultations in her constituency. As I have found in my travels around the country, it is interesting to sit down and engage in a calm and clear debate, helping people to understand the demographic issues that the country faces and the need to find solutions.

The hon. Member for Norwich, North (Chloe Smith) made a measured contribution to the debate. She talked of the need for flexibility, and I agreed with what she said. She talked of meeting someone in her constituency who was blind. She will know that the Government have accepted an amendment from my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, North-West (John Robertson) which will increase disability living allowance for totally blind people from 2011.

The hon. Member for Glasgow, East (John Mason) said that he did not trust the Tories. In 1979, the Tories made no reference to the fact that they would cut pensions when they got into power. I think that buyers will need to be extremely wary. We have heard very little from those on the Tory Front Bench, or indeed from the Tories in general, about what they expect from a future social care system. We have heard nothing about domiciliary care. We have heard some half-baked ideas about residential care, which fell apart from one day to the next and did not stand up to even the slightest scrutiny. The hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley) smiles, but I think that even he acknowledges that.

What did the Tories give pensioners? They gave them 18 months in which to wait for an operation, whereas our party gave them a maximum of 18 weeks. They produced pensioner poverty, whereas our party produced pension credit. We provided bus passes, but all that we have seen from the Tory party is cynicism and scaremongering. They have focused—as they prefer to—on the 3,000 richest estates for which they want to provide tax cuts. I urge my right hon. and hon. Friends to vote for the amendment.

Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby) (Con) claimed to move the closure (Standing Order No. 36).

Question put forthwith, That the Question be now put.

Question agreed to.

Question put accordingly (Standing Order No. 31(2)), That the original words stand part of the Question.

The House proceeded to a Division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Michael Lord): I ask the Serjeant at Arms to investigate the delay in the No Lobby.

The House having divided: Ayes 233, Noes 297.

Division No. 15] [6.59 pm

AYES

Afriyie, Adam
Ainsworth, Mr. Peter
Alexander, Danny
Amess, Mr. David
Ancram, rh Mr. Michael
Arbuthnot, rh Mr. James
Atkinson, Mr. Peter
Bacon, Mr. Richard
Baker, Norman
Baldry, Tony
Baron, Mr. John
Barrett, John
Beith, rh Sir Alan
Bellingham, Mr. Henry
Benyon, Mr. Richard
Blunt, Mr. Crispin
Bone, Mr. Peter
Brady, Mr. Graham
Brake, Tom
Brazier, Mr. Julian
Breed, Mr. Colin
Brokenshire, James
Brooke, Annette
Browne, Mr. Jeremy
Browning, Angela
Burns, Mr. Simon
Burrowes, Mr. David
Burstow, Mr. Paul
Burt, Alistair
Butterfill, Sir John
Cable, Dr. Vincent
Campbell, Mr. Gregory
Campbell, rh Sir Menzies
Carswell, Mr. Douglas
Chope, Mr. Christopher
Clark, Greg
Clarke, rh Mr. Kenneth
Clegg, rh Mr. Nick
Clifton-Brown, Mr. Geoffrey
Cormack, Sir Patrick
Cox, Mr. Geoffrey
Crabb, Mr. Stephen
Curry, rh Mr. David
Davies, David T.C. (Monmouth)
Davies, Philip
Davis, rh David
Djanogly, Mr. Jonathan
Dodds, Mr. Nigel
Donaldson, rh Mr. Jeffrey M.
Dorrell, rh Mr. Stephen
Duncan, Alan
Dunne, Mr. Philip
Ellwood, Mr. Tobias
Evans, Mr. Nigel
Evennett, Mr. David
Fabricant, Michael
Fallon, Mr. Michael
Farron, Tim
Featherstone, Lynne
Field, Mr. Mark
Foster, Mr. Don
Fox, Dr. Liam
Francois, Mr. Mark
Fraser, Christopher
Gale, Mr. Roger
Garnier, Mr. Edward
Gauke, Mr. David
George, Andrew
Gibb, Mr. Nick
Gidley, Sandra
Gillan, Mrs. Cheryl
Goldsworthy, Julia
Goodman, Mr. Paul
Goodwill, Mr. Robert
Gove, Michael
Gray, Mr. James
Grayling, Chris
Green, Damian
Greening, Justine
Grieve, Mr. Dominic
Gummer, rh Mr. John
Hague, rh Mr. William
Hammond, Mr. Philip
Hammond, Stephen
Hancock, Mr. Mike
Hands, Mr. Greg
Harper, Mr. Mark
Harris, Dr. Evan
Harvey, Nick
Hayes, Mr. John
Heald, Mr. Oliver
Heath, Mr. David
Heathcoat-Amory, rh Mr. David
Hemming, John
Hendry, Charles
Herbert, Nick
Hoban, Mr. Mark
Hogg, rh Mr. Douglas
Hollobone, Mr. Philip
Holloway, Mr. Adam
Horam, Mr. John
Horwood, Martin
Hosie, Stewart
Howard, rh Mr. Michael
Howarth, David
Howarth, Mr. Gerald
Howell, John
Hughes, Simon
Huhne, Chris
Hunt, Mr. Jeremy
Hunter, Mark
Hurd, Mr. Nick
Jack, rh Mr. Michael
Jackson, Mr. Stewart
Jenkin, Mr. Bernard
Jones, Mr. David
Kawczynski, Daniel
Key, Robert
Kirkbride, Miss Julie
Knight, rh Mr. Greg
Kramer, Susan
Laing, Mrs. Eleanor
Lait, Mrs. Jacqui
Lamb, Norman
Lancaster, Mr. Mark
Lansley, Mr. Andrew
Laws, Mr. David
Leech, Mr. John
Leigh, Mr. Edward
Letwin, rh Mr. Oliver
Lewis, Dr. Julian
Liddell-Grainger, Mr. Ian
Lidington, Mr. David
Llwyd, Mr. Elfyn
Loughton, Tim
Luff, Peter
Mackay, rh Mr. Andrew
Maclean, rh David
MacNeil, Mr. Angus
Main, Anne
Malins, Mr. Humfrey
Maples, Mr. John
Mason, John
Maude, rh Mr. Francis
May, rh Mrs. Theresa
McCrea, Dr. William
McIntosh, Miss Anne
McLoughlin, rh Mr. Patrick
Mercer, Patrick
Miller, Mrs. Maria
Milton, Anne
Mitchell, Mr. Andrew
Moss, Mr. Malcolm
Mulholland, Greg
Mundell, David
Murrison, Dr. Andrew
Neill, Robert
Newmark, Mr. Brooks
O'Brien, Mr. Stephen
Öpik, Lembit
Osborne, Mr. George
Ottaway, Richard
Paterson, Mr. Owen
Pelling, Mr. Andrew
Penning, Mike
Penrose, John
Pickles, Mr. Eric
Prisk, Mr. Mark
Pritchard, Mark
Pugh, Dr. John
Redwood, rh Mr. John
Rennie, Willie
Rifkind, rh Sir Malcolm
Robathan, Mr. Andrew
Robertson, Angus
Robertson, Hugh
Robertson, Mr. Laurence
Rogerson, Dan
Rosindell, Andrew
Rowen, Paul
Ruffley, Mr. David
Russell, Bob
Sanders, Mr. Adrian
Scott, Mr. Lee
Selous, Andrew
Shapps, Grant
Simmonds, Mark
Simpson, Mr. Keith
Smith, Chloe
Spelman, Mrs. Caroline
Spicer, Sir Michael
Spink, Bob
Spring, Mr. Richard
Steen, Mr. Anthony
Streeter, Mr. Gary
Stunell, Andrew
Swayne, Mr. Desmond
Swinson, Jo
Swire, Mr. Hugo
Syms, Mr. Robert
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Taylor, David
Taylor, Mr. Ian
Taylor, Dr. Richard
Thurso, John
Timpson, Mr. Edward
Turner, Mr. Andrew
Tyrie, Mr. Andrew
Vaizey, Mr. Edward
Vara, Mr. Shailesh
Viggers, Sir Peter
Villiers, Mrs. Theresa
Walker, Mr. Charles
Wallace, Mr. Ben
Waterson, Mr. Nigel
Watkinson, Angela
Webb, Steve
Whittingdale, Mr. John
Widdecombe, rh Miss Ann
Wiggin, Bill
Willetts, Mr. David
Williams, Mark
Williams, Mr. Roger
Williams, Stephen
Willis, Mr. Phil
Willott, Jenny
Wilson, Mr. Rob
Winterton, Ann
Winterton, Sir Nicholas
Wishart, Pete
Yeo, Mr. Tim
Young, rh Sir George
Younger-Ross, Richard

Tellers for the Ayes:
James Duddridge and Jeremy Wright

NOES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Ainger, Nick
Allen, Mr. Graham
Anderson, Mr. David
Anderson, Janet
Atkins, Charlotte
Austin, Mr. Ian
Austin, John
Bailey, Mr. Adrian
Bain, Mr. William
Baird, Vera
Balls, rh Ed
Barlow, Ms Celia
Barron, rh Mr. Kevin
Battle, rh John
Beckett, rh Margaret
Begg, Miss Anne
Bell, Sir Stuart
Benn, rh Hilary
Benton, Mr. Joe
Berry, Roger
Betts, Mr. Clive
Blackman, Liz
Blackman-Woods, Dr. Roberta
Blears, rh Hazel
Blizzard, Mr. Bob
Blunkett, rh Mr. David
Borrow, Mr. David S.
Bradshaw, rh Mr. Ben
Brennan, Kevin
Brown, Lyn
Brown, rh Mr. Nicholas

Brown, Mr. Russell
Browne, rh Des
Bryant, Chris
Buck, Ms Karen
Burden, Richard
Burgon, Colin
Burnham, rh Andy
Butler, Ms Dawn
Byers, rh Mr. Stephen
Byrne, rh Mr. Liam
Caborn, rh Mr. Richard
Cairns, David
Campbell, Mr. Alan
Campbell, Mr. Ronnie
Caton, Mr. Martin
Cawsey, Mr. Ian
Challen, Colin
Chapman, Ben
Chaytor, Mr. David
Clapham, Mr. Michael
Clark, Paul
Clarke, rh Mr. Charles
Clarke, rh Mr. Tom
Clelland, Mr. David
Coaker, Mr. Vernon
Coffey, Ann
Connarty, Michael
Cook, Frank
Cooper, Rosie
Cooper, rh Yvette
Crausby, Mr. David
Creagh, Mary
Cruddas, Jon
Cryer, ~~Mrs~~ Ann
Cummings, John
Cunningham, Mr. Jim
Cunningham, Tony
Darling, rh Mr. Alistair
David, Mr. Wayne
Davidson, Mr. Ian
Davies, Mr. Dai
Dean, Mrs. Janet
Denham, rh Mr. John
Dhanda, Mr. Parmjit
Dismore, Mr. Andrew
Dobbin, Jim
Dobson, rh Frank
Donohoe, Mr. Brian H.
Doran, Mr. Frank
Drew, Mr. David
Eagle, Angela
Eagle, Maria
Efford, Clive
Ellman, Mrs. Louise
Engel, Natascha
Ennis, Jeff
Farrelly, Paul
Field, rh Mr. Frank
Fisher, Mark
Fitzpatrick, Jim
Flint, rh Caroline
Follett, Barbara
Foster, Mr. Michael (Worcester)
Foster, Michael Jabez (Hastings and Rye)
Francis, Dr. Hywel
Gapes, Mike
Gardiner, Barry
George, rh Mr. Bruce
Gerrard, Mr. Neil
Gilroy, Linda
Godsiff, Mr. Roger
Goggins, rh Paul
Goodman, Helen
Griffith, Nia
Griffiths, Nigel
Grogan, Mr. John
Gwynne, Andrew
Hain, rh Mr. Peter
Hall, Mr. Mike
Hall, Patrick
Hamilton, Mr. David
Hamilton, Mr. Fabian
Hanson, rh Mr. David
Harman, rh Ms Harriet
Harris, Mr. Tom
Havard, Mr. Dai
Healey, rh John
Hendrick, Mr. Mark
Hepburn, Mr. Stephen
Heppell, Mr. John
Hesford, Stephen
Heyes, David
Hill, rh Keith
Hillier, Meg
Hodge, rh Margaret
Hodgson, Mrs. Sharon
Hoon, rh Mr. Geoffrey
Hope, Phil
Hopkins, Kelvin
Howarth, rh Mr. George
Howells, rh Dr. Kim
Hoyle, Mr. Lindsay
Humble, Mrs. Joan
Iddon, Dr. Brian
Illsley, Mr. Eric
Ingram, rh Mr. Adam
Irranca-Davies, Huw
Jackson, Glenda
Jenkins, Mr. Brian
Johnson, rh Alan
Johnson, Ms Diana R.
Jones, Helen
Jones, Mr. Kevan
Jones, Lynne
Jones, Mr. Martyn
Joyce, Mr. Eric
Kaufman, rh Sir Gerald
Keeble, Ms Sally
Keeley, Barbara
Keen, Alan
Keen, Ann
Kelly, rh Ruth
Khan, rh Mr. Sadiq
Kidney, Mr. David
Killoyle, Mr. Peter
Knight, rh Jim
Kumar, Dr. Ashok
Ladyman, Dr. Stephen
Lammy, rh Mr. David
Laxton, Mr. Bob
Lazarowicz, Mark
Lepper, David
Levitt, Tom
Lewis, Mr. Ivan
Linton, Martin
Lloyd, Tony
Love, Mr. Andrew
Lucas, Ian
MacShane, rh Mr. Denis
Mactaggart, Fiona
Mahmood, Mr. Khalid
Malik, Mr. Shahid
Mallaber, Judy
Mann, John
Marris, Rob
Marsden, Mr. Gordon
Martlew, Mr. Eric
McAvoy, rh Mr. Thomas
McCabe, Steve
McCarthy, Kerry
McCarthy-Fry, Sarah
McCartney, rh Mr. Ian
McDonagh, Siobhain
McDonnell, John
McFadden, rh Mr. Pat
McFall, rh John
McGovern, Mr. Jim
McGuire, rh Mrs. Anne
McIsaac, Shona
McKechin, Ann
McKenna, Rosemary
McNulty, rh Mr. Tony
Meacher, rh Mr. Michael
Meale, Mr. Alan
Merron, Gillian
Michael, rh Alun
Milburn, rh Mr. Alan
Miller, Andrew
Mitchell, Mr. Austin
Moffat, Anne
Moffatt, Laura
Mole, Chris
Moon, Mrs. Madeleine
Morden, Jessica
Morley, rh Mr. Elliot
Mountford, Kali
Mudie, Mr. George
Mullin, Mr. Chris
Murphy, Mr. Denis
Murphy, rh Mr. Jim
Murphy, rh Mr. Paul
Naysmith, Dr. Doug
Norris, Dan
O'Brien, rh Mr. Mike
O'Hara, Mr. Edward
Olner, Mr. Bill
Osborne, Sandra
Palmer, Dr. Nick
Pearson, Ian
Plaskitt, Mr. James
Pope, Mr. Greg
Pound, Stephen
Prentice, Bridget
Prentice, Mr. Gordon
Prescott, rh Mr. John
Primarolo, rh Dawn
Prosser, Gwyn
Purchase, Mr. Ken
Raynsford, rh Mr. Nick
Reed, Mr. Andy
Reed, Mr. Jamie
Reid, rh John
Robinson, Mr. Geoffrey
Rooney, Mr. Terry
Roy, Mr. Frank
Roy, Lindsay
Ruane, Chris
Ruddock, Joan
Russell, Christine
Salter, Martin
Sarwar, Mr. Mohammad
Seabeck, Alison
Sharma, Mr. Virendra
Shaw, Jonathan
Sheerman, Mr. Barry
Sheridan, Jim
Simon, Mr. Siôn
Simpson, Alan
Singh, Mr. Marsha
Skinner, Mr. Dennis
Slaughter, Mr. Andy
Smith, rh Mr. Andrew
Smith, Ms Angela C. (Sheffield, Hillsborough)
Smith, rh Angela E. (Basildon)
Smith, Geraldine
Smith, rh Jacqui
Snelgrove, Anne
Soulsby, Sir Peter
Southworth, Helen
Speller, rh Mr. John
Starkey, Dr. Phyllis
Stewart, Ian
Stoate, Dr. Howard
Strang, rh Dr. Gavin
Straw, rh Mr. Jack
Stringer, Graham
Stuart, Ms Gisela
Sutcliffe, Mr. Gerry
Tami, Mark
Taylor, Ms Dari
Taylor, David
Thornberry, Emily
Timms, rh Mr. Stephen
Todd, Mr. Mark
Touhig, rh Mr. Don
Trickett, Jon
Turner, Mr. Neil
Twigg, Derek
Ussher, Kitty
Vis, Dr. Rudi
Waltho, Lynda
Ward, Claire
Watson, Mr. Tom
Wicks, rh Malcolm
Williams, rh Mr. Alan
Wills, rh Mr. Michael
Wilson, Phil
Winnick, Mr. David
Winterton, rh Ms Rosie
Wood, Mike
Wooltas, Mr. Phil
Wright, Mr. Anthony
Wright, Mr. Iain
Wright, Dr. Tony
Wyatt, Derek

Tellers for the Noes:
David Wright and
Mr. Dave Watts

Question accordingly negatived.

Question put forthwith (Standing Order No. 31(2)), That the proposed words be there added.

Question agreed to.

The Deputy Speaker declared the main Question, as amended, to be agreed to (Standing Order No. 31(2)).

Resolved,

That this House welcomes the Government's proposals to create the National Care Service, the first national, universal, entitlement-based system for care and support in England; notes that the proposals will deliver real benefits to people including wider provision of prevention services, a single needs assessment across England and information, guidance and advice for all; recognises that in 20 years' time, 1.5 million more people will have care and support needs, whilst the number of people aged over 85 will have doubled; further notes that around 400,000 people will benefit from enactment of the Personal Care at Home Bill, which contains no proposed changes to disability benefits; acknowledges that the Government is considering responses to the Big Care Debate consultation before any decisions are made between a range of options for the National Care Service; understands that changes to disability living allowance for under-65s as part of the introduction of a National Care Service have been ruled out; and welcomes the reassurance that, if disability benefits for older people were to be reformed as part of the National Care Service, those receiving the affected benefits at the time of reform would continue to receive an equivalent level of support.

Local Government Finances

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Michael Lord): I have to tell the House that Mr. Speaker has selected the amendment in the name of the Prime Minister.

7.17 pm

Robert Neill (Bromley and Chislehurst) (Con): I beg to move,

That this House notes with concern that this year's local government finance settlement will increase average Band D council tax to over £120 a month each year despite inflation being negative; cautions that this rise will mean that council tax has more than doubled since 1997 with a third of the increase in the basic state pension being negated by council tax rises; expresses concern at the effect of the Government's social care plans on council budgets; urges the Government to help fund councils in delivering a council tax freeze in England, as is already in operation in Scotland; and asserts that this year's settlement will increase the domestic tax burden at a time when households are already having to restrain their spending as a result of the prolonged recession.

This is an interesting opportunity for the House, it seems to me. For once, this year we were denied something of an annual ritual. Normally—on occasion, this does not happen, but it is normal practice—the local government finance settlement is announced to a waiting world by the Minister in an oral statement in the House, so that hon. Members can ask the Minister about it. It is usually quite a lively exchange. This year, for reasons that have not yet been made apparent although I hope that they will be, the Minister chose to announce the local government finance settlement in a written statement. I am at a loss to understand why.

It might be because of great shyness on the part of the Ministers, or because, as a consequence of the recent reshuffle, they have not quite worked out who is responsible. The Minister for Regional Economic Development and Co-ordination might have been engaged in the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills on that day; or perhaps—I hope not to be uncharitable—the Government did not want the local government finance settlement to be dissected and debated in this Chamber. Always anxious to be helpful, we have used our Opposition day debate to ensure that it can be. I think it is a shame that the Government have forced us to do that, because one would have thought that something of such significance would have been debated in Government time.

This is not a technical or inconsequential matter. The local government funding settlement affects every family and every community in the country. The sums involved amount to, at a modest estimate, about £47 billion in 2010-11. The fact that the allocation was slipped out, rather than announced as it has been in previous years, can only mean, it seems to us, that the Government have something to hide.

What the Government have to hide is apparent from a reading of the settlement document. I do not pretend that it is necessarily the most exciting document that right hon. and hon. Members will have read, but it is important. I was taken by the introductory note that is helpfully supplied with it, which sums up many of the problems from which local government finance suffers. Immediately under a statement that the document is the explanatory note for the local government finance settlement, it says:

"This guide replaces the 'Plain English Guide to the Local Government Finance Settlement'".

[Robert Neill]

It might be simply for economy of printing that a word has disappeared, but it is, unfortunately, indicative of the layer upon layer of complexity that has accrued to the local government finance settlement in recent years. I am sure that that was genuinely inadvertent, but it is not a happy start.

When one gets through to the logarithms that take up the better part of several pages, one can understand why the Government might not want too much dissection of Government funding, but when one has ploughed through that, certain things become apparent. Despite the wording of the amendments, which I shall address in due course, there is no getting away from the fact that the Government do not want a debate on Labour's record over the past 12 years on council tax, which is a key issue in relation to this local government finance settlement. If implemented, the settlement will mean that council tax bills have more than doubled on Labour's watch—the percentage figure is 106 per cent. If anyone wants the exact figures, the average band D payment has gone up from £688 when Labour came to office to £1,414; it has more than doubled. The Government do not really want to have a debate about that.

Mr. John Redwood (Wokingham) (Con): Is it not also the case that, under this Government, there has been a huge switch in the grant, from the south to the north and from the rural to the urban? Might they wish to conceal that as well?

Robert Neill: My right hon. Friend is absolutely right and I shall return to that point later. That switch has been commented on by a number of independent commentators who are respected academics. One has only to look at the tabulations that are set out in the report to see quite clearly that, for reasons that are not yet apparent but that I hope will be apparent after Ministers have attempted to justify the position, there has been exactly such a shift.

Mr. Lee Scott (Ilford, North) (Con) rose—

Julia Goldsworthy (Falmouth and Camborne) (LD) rose—

Robert Neill: I shall give way to my hon. Friend, who caught my eye first, and then to the hon. Lady.

Mr. Scott: Does my hon. Friend agree that another problem is that Ministers continually make announcements about moneys that have to be spent by local authorities out of the grants that are given, but that the Government never properly fund them?

Robert Neill: The debate on additional unfunded burdens is a long-running one, particularly under this Government. It is something that I recall from when I was involved in local government as a councillor, and it has got worse, not better. I shall give an example relating to this year's settlement that has been flagged up to me by the Local Government Association.

Several hon. Members rose—

Robert Neill: I said that I would give way to the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Julia Goldsworthy) next.

Julia Goldsworthy: The hon. Gentleman has just been talking about the fact that council tax has doubled since 1997. Does he think that that is entirely down to central Government policy, or is it down to the structural failing of the council tax system?

Robert Neill: That is an interesting point, but I doubt whether most people would agree with the hon. Lady. I note that the former Prime Minister, Mr. Blair, whom Labour Members might remember, stated in 1997 that the council tax system worked well. Unfortunately, it has been broken—perhaps beyond repair—by the policies of the current Government. On the other hand, if the hon. Lady is going to say that the alternative is a local income tax, then, if she will forgive my saying so, she has certainly got the wrong solution to the problem.

Mr. John Gummer (Suffolk, Coastal) (Con): Does my hon. Friend agree that constituencies such as mine—indeed, the whole of Suffolk, Norfolk and Devon—will now, in addition to the fact that they have all lost money in recent years, be faced with the cost of local government reorganisation that they did not ask for, do not want and know will be very expensive?

Robert Neill: I completely agree with my right hon. Friend, and I shall mention that in relation to another topic that I was going to deal with, and make it relevant to the debate.

Chris Ruane (Vale of Clwyd) (Lab) rose—

Richard Burden (Birmingham, Northfield) (Lab) rose—

Robert Neill: If the hon. Gentlemen will give me a few moments, I shall finish this point.

The reorganisation is another example, albeit of a different kind, of an unfunded burden. It is a burden that was not sought and that will have an impact on local government finances. No provision has been made for it here, it is not desired, and it is quite extraordinary that it should be pushed through in the dying days of this Government. All I can say to my right hon. Friend is that we will try to protect the residents of those three counties. If there is a change of Government, the Conservatives will take all steps to reverse that decision, even if the present Government have had the temerity to pass it into law and even if such a change requires legislation. Anyone who has spent money on it will find that that is a guaranteed way of losing their money. I hope that the Government will not pursue that entirely ideologically driven and pointless agenda.

Chris Ruane: The right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) said that there has been a shift of finance from rural to urban areas. Is the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Robert Neill) aware that when his right hon. Friend was the Secretary of State for Wales, he sent £120 million of the block grant from Cardiff to London?

Robert Neill: I have always attempted to be a useful student of history, but there are limits to how far back one can go. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman should reflect on this point: if, as has been demonstrated, there has been a shift away from the south-east of England, London and the midlands towards the north, and if his Government are right in saying that that shift is needs-driven, why have needs increased so much in those areas on this Government's watch?

Several hon. Members rose—

Robert Neill: I shall give way again in due course, but I should like to make a little more progress first. I know that it is fairly normal for there to be a lot of interventions at the beginning of a debate, but if hon. Members will bear with me, I shall try to fit them in in an orderly fashion.

Richard Younger-Ross (Teignbridge) (LD): Will the hon. Gentleman give way regarding Suffolk, Coastal?

Robert Neill: I shall give way purely on Suffolk, Coastal and the reorganisation. [HON. MEMBERS: "Oh!"] I want to move on, and I think that Mr. Deputy Speaker would not want us to prolong the discussion of local government reorganisation too much.

Richard Younger-Ross: The point that the right hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) made about wasted money is entirely right. The impact of the reorganisation will be a severe burden on Devon's taxpayers. That reorganisation has been driven partly by a second reorganisation by the boundary committee for England, which is driven by internal Labour party politics rather than anything to do with the electorate. [Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst ought to take his own advice and get back on track.

Robert Neill: I have heard what my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Cox) has said, and no doubt the House has. I shall move on to the next part of my speech.

I was just observing that there has been a shift not only of funding within England, but of burdens, particularly on to council tax payers. A marked trait under this Government has been a shift of the financial burden away from the Treasury on to the council tax payer. That has been demonstrated conclusively by the amount of local government revenue that has to be raised by council tax, as opposed to the amount that is provided by central Government. That is not just about numbers or bill amounts; it is about the real impact that that has on people and their lives. I have already observed that council tax has doubled on the Labour Government's watch. This settlement means that band D bills will go up this year by a further £23, at a time when inflation is negative. The average bill at that level will come in at £120 a month.

It is sometimes forgotten that the poorest are usually the hardest hit by such changes. For example, the increase in council tax will eat up one third of the increase in the basic state pension. There is lots of evidence from many sources to demonstrate that the level of council tax is one of the key areas of concern for many families, because it has grown exponentially over the years.

Mr. Andrew Love (Edmonton) (Lab/Co-op): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Richard Burden (Birmingham, Northfield) (Lab): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

David Taylor (North-West Leicestershire) (Lab/Co-op): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Robert Neill: I will give way first to the hon. Member for Edmonton (Mr. Love).

Mr. Love: Will the hon. Gentleman explain how it can be that all Labour councils in London are committed to freezing their council tax next year and protecting their public services? How are they able to achieve that?

Robert Neill: Perhaps they have taken a lesson from the excellent Conservative Mayor, who has managed to do the same without the aid of grants skewed in his favour. I give way to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Richard Burden).

Richard Burden: I want to take the hon. Gentleman back one more time to the question from the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) about the alleged shift from rural areas to urban ones. When I talk to Conservatives in Birmingham who are doing something wrong, their normal answer is, "Well, we just don't get enough money." That is an urban area, so is he suggesting that its funding should be cut?

Robert Neill: In due course, I shall deal with the question—[Interruption.] It is very interesting that Labour Members have become so used to the politics of the one-liner that they cannot follow an argument that requires more than two paragraphs to develop. In due course, I shall set out precisely how a sensible rebalancing of the local government financing system can be achieved. I am sorry that their crib sheet is not comprehensive enough to deal with the matter.

John Austin (Erith and Thamesmead) (Lab): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

David Taylor: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Robert Neill: With respect, I want to make a bit more progress before I give way again.

I think that the Government's track record is a pretty good reason why they did not want a debate on this topic. Their amendment is full of all manner of telephone-number figures, but it bears no resemblance to the reality of the experience of local authorities or their residents. For example, I referred earlier to the amount of expenditure that has to be met from council tax. It has gone up by something like 3 per cent., from 22 per cent. to 25 per cent., on this Government's watch. In money terms, that means that council tax payers are having to raise an extra £14.3 billion. That is a measure of how the burden has shifted away from the Treasury and on to council tax payers, and it makes the figure in the Government's amendment, which boasts about giving an extra £8.6 billion over the period, look pretty sick. It is nowhere enough to compensate for the burden that has been shifted away from the Treasury by the Macavity approach of this Government.

I give way to the hon. Member for Erith and Thamesmead (Mr. Austin).

John Austin: The hon. Gentleman referred to the Mayor of London. Is he aware that the Mayor has placed the biggest financial increase in fares on the poorest people in London? Does the hon. Gentleman recognise that Bromley, the council for the area that he represents, was the one that took the Greater London Council to court over the "Fares Fair" campaign to challenge the idea of a fair fare policy for London?

[John Austin]

Robert Neill: I well remember what Bromley did. It was absolutely right to do so, and I make no apology for that because that previous regime did not have a proper approach to fares—[Interruption.] The hon. Gentleman is showing us his freedom pass, and we have made it abundantly clear that that will continue to be protected. It is funded by Conservative-controlled London councils, I might add, so I will not take any lectures from anyone in the party whose previous Minister with responsibility for local government complained that local authorities were not charging enough and were not charging up to the maximum potential. I do not think that the hon. Gentleman is on very safe ground to make any more interventions of that kind, if I might respectfully say so.

David Taylor: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Robert Neill: I will give way to the hon. Gentleman, who has been trying to get in for some time.

David Taylor: The hon. Gentleman is being most generous. He is pinning an awful lot on the band D council tax level, but that is not a good measure of the impact of council tax in the UK. In my constituency of North-West Leicestershire 75 per cent. of properties are below band D, whereas 60 per cent. of the properties in Bromley, which he partly represents, are band D or above. That must alter the argument that he is making.

On inflation, council tax may have doubled since 1997, but it increased at a greater annual rate in the period when the Conservatives were in government before 1997.

Robert Neill: At least the hon. Gentleman makes a considered intervention, unlike some others, and I have a great deal of respect for his knowledge of local government, but I must beg to differ with him. First, the band D measure is universally accepted as the intellectually and academically approved average. One only has to look at the work of Tony Travers, the well-known independent commentator, who has said that on a number of occasions. Secondly, the use of the band follows common sense, as the other bands are set as percentages in relation to band D, so band D gives the average. It is well established by all respectable public bodies—apart from those who may want to make a point of their own—that that is the best means of comparing like with like. I am sorry to have to disagree with the hon. Gentleman, but I am afraid that he is wrong on this one.

Mr. Andrew Pelling (Croydon, Central) (Ind): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Robert Neill: I shall make a little more progress, if I may, but I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman in a moment.

We have seen the burden that has been placed on the council tax payer. We have seen a transfer of burdens to council tax payers within local authorities, but we have also seen a shift of regulatory burdens and costs on to local authorities. The doctrine of the "unfully funded obligation" is the reality, if not the wording, of Government policy. Many local authorities will have experienced that in relation to concessionary fares, for example, for which the burden was not picked up in full. Free swimming is another example: superficially attractive on the surface but, on further examination, not fully funded.

The problem is particularly evident in this year's local government funding settlement, which refers specifically to the availability of free personal care for adults. Free personal care is another concept worthy of debate, but the funding figures are as follows. The estimation is that it will cost £670 million in a full year: £420 million is covered by the area base grant, as set out in the funding settlement, which assumes that the remaining £250 million will be found from local government efficiencies.

What it does not say, however, is that the Government have already increased to 4 per cent. the target for the efficiencies required of local authorities. The Local Government Association has pointed that out to Ministers, so I hope that the Minister responding to the debate will say clearly whether that £250 million is part of the 4 per cent. in efficiency savings being demanded. If it is in addition to those savings, how is that to be achieved?

The document before us is silent on that. If the £250 million is in addition to the 4 per cent. savings, how do the Government reconcile that with their policy on new burdens, which suggests that there should be funding for those new burdens? We need absolute clarity on that. Despite requests since the LGA issued its statement, that clarity has not yet been received.

So, we have seen transfers of burdens across a raft of areas, but that is not the end of the problem with the settlement. I referred half in jest to the nature of the document, and the complication of it. I am glad to say that it is generally accepted that the one person in the country who understands it is in the Chamber, but he is in the Box and cannot talk to us about it. However, it really is that complex and difficult to follow and that creates the real difficulty that there is a growing lack of trust in the local government world and among ordinary residents about the reliability of the criteria on which distribution takes place. One has only to look at some of the figures in the document for individual authorities to see differences that on the face of it are not readily recognisable, or attributable to an evidence base.

Mark Hunter (Cheadle) (LD): Will the hon. Gentleman give way on that point?

Robert Neill: I will give way on that point.

Mark Hunter: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman, who has been very generous with his time.

The hon. Gentleman is talking about trust in the Government's figures. Does he agree that part of the problem is that the Government are not delivering to local authorities what their own funding formula indicates that they should? He is quite right to say that anger is building up around the country, and a large part of that is because authorities such as my own in Stockport are being consistently short changed, and are consistently not receiving what the Government's own formula says that they are entitled to. Is it any wonder that there is a complete lack of confidence in the system?

Robert Neill: The hon. Gentleman makes an entirely fair point. I have only to look at the circumstances of my outer-London borough, which has many pockets of deprivation but is on the floor again for the seventh or eighth year running. When we see that fully two thirds of all London boroughs—of any kind—have ended up on the floor, we wonder about the reliability of the calculations that gave rise to that situation.

Although the floor system worked in the past, it has stretched many local authorities to such an extent that the gearing, particularly in shire districts, places very high burdens on them. The floor for a shire district is set at 0.5 per cent. Such districts are far more dependent than most local authorities on investment income, which has now fallen to about 0.5 per cent. so as their floor funding is limited to the same figure, the gearing effect means that their council tax rise is much more significant than in any other part of the country. Shire areas are significantly disadvantaged by the operation of the formula system.

Julia Goldsworthy: The hon. Gentleman has been talking about floors and ceilings. He will be aware that many councils near the ceiling are a long way from their targets and are already experiencing massive pressures on the provision of services. Does he have proposals to get rid of floors and ceilings, or to replace them with something entirely different? Some information would be helpful.

Robert Neill: Actually we do. I shall come to our proposals if the hon. Lady will bear with me. I was about to turn to missed opportunities and the things that a sensible settlement could and should be doing to deal with those issues.

Having set out the inadequacies of the system and put them in a broader context, I want to make a final point before I move to the next stage of the argument—what should be in the settlement but is not. The problem is that there are deficiencies not only in the settlement but in the methodology for formula distribution, as has been mentioned. The inadequacy of the population data—a point raised frequently by Members on both sides of the House—has perverse impacts, but the system is also wrapped up in the policy of micro-management and bureaucratic control that has become characteristic of the Government. All recent attempts to suggest otherwise are belied by the facts.

Table 2, attached to the settlement document, sets out no fewer than 39 separate ring-fenced grants. The number of national indicator sets in the comprehensive area assessment regime was originally badged up as a mere 196, but the Government were forced to accept that when the sets are split—which they are obliged to do—between heads and blocks, the number is about 290. Is there any serious attempt to deal with that? No, sadly there is not.

I hoped that the settlement would take a leaf from the good work of the Local Government Association—an all-party body. Its document, "Delivering more for less", demonstrates practical and worked-through means of saving £4.5 billion. Efficiencies could be achieved without damaging front-line activity, and the document sets out specific examples. It goes further. The LGA has come up with 13 local authorities that are prepared to act as pilots. Do I see recognition of that in the Government's settlement? No. Do I see any movement to reflect the fact that, for example, in Leicestershire and Leicester, in a Total Place arrangement involving the city and the county—exactly the collaborative model that should be encouraged—more than 3,000 performance data sets, reports or evaluations have to be processed? Is there any reflection of the fact that the average number of documents that has to be passed through by most local area agreements runs into thousands?

Mr. James Plaskitt (Warwick and Leamington) (Lab): The hon. Gentleman talks about efficiencies without damage to front-line services. May I refer him to Conservative-controlled Warwickshire county council, which is currently advocating the closure of seven fire stations and the sacking of 100 firefighters? Does he see that as an example of Conservative efficiency without damaging front-line services?

Robert Neill: Warwickshire county council is consulting on those measures as options following the serving of an improvement notice from the Government. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman does not mean that it is impossible ever to find efficiency savings. If he believed that, he could not support his Government's document, "Smarter Government", which was published only a few days ago. The test is always to try to find sensible efficiency savings, and I point out to him that the Government have a very good example in front of them. The National Audit Office—generally recognised as an independent and reliable body—cited £2 billion in 2006 prices as the cost of administering the inspection and control regime imposed by central Government. PricewaterhouseCoopers, which is a little more conservative, put the upward reporting costs for councils—not even the administration of the regime, just upward reporting—at £1.8 million per authority. That is precisely one of the things that can and should be stripped out. Not only is it a waste of money, but it also skews the behaviour of local authorities, as we have all seen. They are sometimes almost forced to play tick the box to meet the formula requirements, reporting upwards to the Government rather than downwards to their electors, who ought to be driving priorities.

Mr. Geoffrey Cox (Torridge and West Devon) (Con): Does my hon. Friend agree that not only is the reporting burden immense and over-cumbersome, but so too is the inspection regime? I am informed that Devonshire county council has to devote almost permanent employee time solely to the inspection regime under which it labours.

Robert Neill: My hon. and learned Friend is absolutely right. I saw that system in its early days when I was still in local government. I still talk to colleagues in local government. Inspection has become an industry in itself, and the complexity of the regime and the burden it imposes, in terms of direct costs, officer time and the shifting of priorities, is wholly disproportionate to the level of risk involved. It breaches the fundamental rule that any inspection regime should be simple, sensible and rational.

There is nothing in the settlement to deal with issues that could sensibly have been dealt with, which is a major disappointment. The Government seek to get around things by quoting figures, but as I demonstrated, the impact of their figures is not borne out or supported by experience on the ground.

John Howell (Henley) (Con): Before my hon. Friend moves away from the "more for less" report, does he agree that one of the great difficulties faced at present by upper-tier authorities in particular is that they have already calculated how they can make efficiency savings and have made the hard decisions, so the imposition of further efficiency savings—for example, for social care costs—are a particularly unwelcome burden because they come out of cycle?

Robert Neill: My hon. Friend is completely right. That is why it is a serious dereliction on the part of the Government not to have given the explanations that the LGA has been asking for. Given that the announcement came out on 26 November, it would not have been too difficult to produce the figures. Not to do so is a serious breach of the Government's own rule on new burdens and I fear that it indicates where their heart lies—to shift the burden on to local authorities for the sake of convenience.

I shall now consider what could and should be done in the local settlement. We are all agreed about one thing—that the three-year settlement regime is sensible and one that we hope continues for the future—but it is the only thing the Government got right. The rest does not stack up.

Lack of clarity undermines the credibility of the document. It does not deal with proper reform of the local government system, which is what is actually needed. Proper reform should take a number of steps. The first, most important step that the Government should take at a time when the country is in recession is to assist council tax payers—the hard-pressed families who are already suffering. A sensible local government settlement would have put in place mechanisms to support local authorities in freezing council tax, so that council tax payers did not suffer the burden that they are suffering as the country comes out of recession. The Government are not doing that. Another one, I hope, will be in a position before long to do so.

Secondly, longer-term reform of the methodology is necessary. In this day and age, it is quite inexcusable to use population data that are so out of date, and there should be a swift move to the use of updated data. Several local authorities have made a compelling case for having been significantly disadvantaged by the situation.

Thirdly, it is necessary to bring back a measure of independence to the evidence base for the distribution criteria, and that is why my party has always proposed an independent body. I hope that others will support us. We suggested the Audit Commission, but the body could be the National Audit Office. In any case, the body should be independent and tasked with evaluating on an evidential basis—[Interruption.] The Secretary of State laughs, but it works perfectly well in Australia. It seems to work very effectively. [Interruption.] I shall come back to him and his quangos in a moment if he wants to go down that route. That system works in Australia, and it provides an evidence base. The body would be tasked with reporting to Parliament, so that this House could properly debate the distribution criteria. There would be a debate about the criteria, and it would be separate from the political decision that Ministers make about the size of the pot that will be distributed. That long-term institutional change would, if properly dealt with, restore some credibility to an unbalanced system.

I have referred to Australia being able to perform that task and this Government not being able to. I should have made the point that the council tax freeze is perfectly practical and deliverable, because it happens in Scotland. If it is good enough for Scotland, it should be good enough for England; if it is deliverable in Scotland, it should be deliverable in England. What is lacking is not the methodology, but simply the political will to do that.

There should also be significant long-term reform to encourage local authorities to grow their tax base, because that has been completely lacking. That is why the Opposition have proposed that local authorities be able to keep the proceeds of growth by keeping the council tax that new development in their area generates. It is why we have proposed that they also be able to keep the growth in national non-domestic rates—business rates—that is generated by new commercial development. That would give them a stake once more in growing their tax base. Not only have the Government failed to take up any of those ideas, they strangled at birth the local authority business growth incentives—LABGI—scheme, which although small was at least a step in the right direction. They killed off any attempt to provide an incentive. In fact, the real argument, as all the evidence makes out, is that we should go much further and allow local authorities to keep all proceeds.

The Government have failed to give local authorities the freedom to raise funding by going to the market for, for example, bond finance. The Government have failed to give them the opportunity to set their own targets, and instead imposed them from above.

Ms Karen Buck (Regent's Park and Kensington, North) (Lab): Does the hon. Gentleman accept that broadening the revenue base has several risks? My local authority, Westminster, has been heavily dependent on parking income; indeed, it has the largest parking income of any authority in the country. As soon as difficulties hit the authority and parking income started to fall, we found a £20 million hole, and that has led to a large number of redundancies and cuts in services. Does he understand that such reliance on other sources of money is fraught with risk?

Robert Neill: I am sorry, but I do not think that the hon. Lady understands the concept, because broadening the base by enabling local authorities to retain the additional national business rate would spread the risk, rather than increase their reliance on it. If we were to broaden the tax base, we would be less dependent on any individual income stream. That is the reverse of her proposition.

Mrs. Joan Humble (Blackpool, North and Fleetwood) (Lab): The hon. Gentleman started to talk about allowing local authorities to borrow. Does he agree with the prudential borrowing rules that the Government introduced? They enabled local authorities to purchase capital assets from which they are receiving income streams through rent and other uses.

Robert Neill: I want to be helpful to the hon. Lady, and, like LABGI, that scheme was a small step in the right direction, but, unlike LABGI, it has not been killed at birth. However, the scheme to which she refers is too limited. Why do we not go down the route that most other advanced democracies have taken and introduce a proper arrangement that enables local authorities to go for bonds? If I were to follow through the logic of her argument, I should hope that she might support us.

At the end of the day, the local government finance document is less than satisfactory. It is less than satisfactory in its presentation—

Richard Younger-Ross: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Robert Neill: I am sorry, but I have done my best. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will get the chance to speak in the debate in due course.

The document is unsatisfactory. It reflects an unsatisfactory settlement; it reflects, therefore, a Government who lack the will to tackle the serious issues of local government finance; and, above all, it reflects a Government who do not recognise the burden that that unsatisfactory arrangement places upon ordinary families and ordinary council tax payers. I do not know which is the greater indictment: the inability to recognise the harm that is being done, or the lack of will to do something about it. If we put it together, we find, as I would have said in my previous life, that the Government are bang to rights on all counts.

7.56 pm

The Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Mr. John Denham): I beg to move an amendment, to leave out from "House" to the end of the Question and add:

'congratulates the Government on introducing the first ever three year settlement for local government which will have provided an additional £8.6 billion for local government over three years, and continues to build upon the 39 per cent. real terms increase in funding provided to local government over the first 10 years of this Government; welcomes the four per cent. increase proposed for next year which, given the current level of inflation, would be the 13th straight year of above inflation increases; recognises the immense help this will give to local authorities throughout the country in dealing with difficult economic circumstances resulting from the global downturn; anticipates the lowest council tax increase for 16 years; rejects the calls from Her Majesty's Opposition to cut the Department for Communities and Local Government's budget by over £1 billion, which would lead either to cuts in local services or an increase in council tax bills of one per cent. to pay for the missing millions; and further welcomes the Government's Green Paper, Shaping the Future of Care Together, which sets out its vision to reform the adult care and support system in England."

That was a very long speech. There is not a lot else to be said about it, but it was a very long speech. As my hon. Friends will have noticed, I am no Denis Healey and the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Robert Neill) is no Geoffrey Howe, but I have a sense of how Denis Healey felt when he thought he had been savaged by a dead sheep.

I am grateful for the chance to reply to this debate. I have my notes that I prepared earlier, and they say:

"Sorry to see the Hon Member for Meriden not here to lead the debate."

I have now to say that the hon. Member for Meriden (Mrs. Spelman) is here but is not leading the debate, and that is a surprise because the hon. Lady has, after all, been complaining that Parliament has not debated these issues.

Mrs. Caroline Spelman (Meriden) (Con): I am sure that the right hon. Gentleman is aware of the convention, through the usual channels, that each party is notified about who will speak in the debate. We understood that the Minister for Regional Economic Development and Co-ordination would do so for the Government. That is what our Whips Office was notified of, and therefore, in keeping with the convention, I asked my hon. Friend the Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Robert Neill), in whom I have the utmost confidence, to lead the debate.

Mr. Denham: I assure the hon. Lady that it was always my intention to lead for the Government, because she complained that Parliament has not been debating these issues. She twice applied for urgent questions, and, although it is not for me to comment, in my humble opinion I think Mr. Speaker was right to decline. Now she has had the chance to lead the debate and she has not done so.

I shall turn to the background to the debate, on which the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst spent 10 minutes at the beginning of his speech. Following the low level of participation in last year's debate, the Under-Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government, my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage (Barbara Follett), wrote on 12 November to the hon. Member for Meriden, who speaks for the Opposition, and to the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Julia Goldsworthy), who speaks for the Liberal Democrats, saying that we intended to lay a written ministerial statement. The hon. Member for Meriden did not reply, but had she answered the letter and said, "I think there should be a statement," we would have made an oral statement. However, she did not.

The hon. Lady is not that good at correspondence. My right hon. Friend the Member for Salford (Hazel Blears), my predecessor as Secretary of State, wrote to her on 21 January, asking her to explain the proposals by the Leader of the Opposition to cut the Department's budget, when he said that he would restrict the budget to a 1 per cent. increase in real terms. Strangely, the hon. Lady did not reply to that letter, either.

Mrs. Spelman: I thank the right hon. Gentleman for giving way. I must set the record straight, as I really do object to the House's being misled. The Leader of the House said during business questions that there had been "discussions" between those on the Front Benches about not having a written ministerial statement. I said in response that I had not seen a letter from the Department regarding having only a written ministerial statement. The hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Julia Goldsworthy) had not seen a letter either. However, a letter does not constitute "discussions".

Mr. Denham: It is clearly the case that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary wrote to the hon. Member for Meriden on 12 November—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I say to those on both Front Benches that I think we have now dealt at sufficient length with how we have arrived at where we are this evening; perhaps we could get on with the topic before the House.

Mr. Denham: I am delighted to do so, Mr. Deputy Speaker, noting that we still do not know how the hon. Member for Meriden thinks that cuts should be applied to my Department's budget this year.

The reason the settlement was not controversial last year—nor indeed, in practice, this year—is that it was a good settlement. For the first time in this spending review period, the Government set out to give local authorities the certainty of a three-year settlement. Indeed, having spent most of his speech talking about changes that should have been made to the coming year, the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst ended up saying that a three-year settlement was a good idea. One cannot have a three-year settlement and then change it in the second or third year. The three-year settlement involves an £8.6 billion increase over three years—an average annual increase of 4 per cent. This Labour Government have delivered on that commitment year after year so that local government has had increased funding, reduced targets, less ring-fencing, and more influence over more resources, including for 16-to-19 education, English for speakers of other languages, and informal adult learning.

Moreover, this has not been happening just over the past few years. Over the first 10 years of this Labour Government, local government funding has increased by 39 per cent. in real terms.

Mr. Redwood rose—

Mr. Denham: I will give way to the right hon. Gentleman, who will no doubt explain why in the last four years of the previous Conservative Government real-terms funding was cut by 7 per cent.

Mr. Redwood: Will the Secretary of State tell us why the Government will not use up-to-date population figures, which would be much fairer for areas with fast growth?

Mr. Denham: Indeed I will. I notice, however, that the right hon. Gentleman did not explain why there is a such a sharp contrast between the 7 per cent. real-terms cut last time the Conservatives had their fingers on power over local government and the 39 per cent. increase in real-terms funding under this Labour Government. That difference is important.

Julia Goldsworthy: Will the Secretary of State give way?

Mr. Denham: Let me first deal with the right hon. Gentleman's point about population, as I was going to come to that aspect.

At the end of his speech, the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst welcomed a three-year settlement. Part and parcel of having a three-year settlement was not to chop and change underlying data in the course of the three years. But of course the Government have recognised the importance of population issues, particularly at times of rapid population change. That is why, just a few days ago, at the request of Ministers, the Office for National Statistics produced a consultation document suggesting how population changes could be taken into account in future. I am surprised that the hon. Gentleman apparently had no knowledge of that taking place, as it is very important. It stems directly from the fact that Ministers recognised the issue and set in train the right processes, but, quite properly, stuck to the three-year settlement as local government wanted us to do. Although some councils would gain from a change and others would lose, they wanted a three-year settlement. We have produced the evidence—or rather, the ONS has, because that is its job—and that means that in future the council tax system can be more flexible and responsive.

We believe that this settlement means that in the coming year band D council tax increases will be the lowest for 16 years. The increase at band D was 3 per cent. this year, and I see no reason why it should not be lower in the coming year. In fact, measured by average household bills, last year's council tax increase was already the lowest ever.

Let me address some of the points made in the debate so far. The Opposition have focused on the claimed cost of band D council tax. We ourselves use band D in announcements, as I just did, but perhaps the Opposition should have recognised more publicly that most people—two thirds, in fact—pay not at band D but at bands A, B and C; only 9 per cent. of properties are in the top three bands. However, even if we do focus on band D rates, we find that Conservative councils increased council tax for this year by more than Labour councils. The average increase for band D under the Conservatives was 3.3 per cent., whereas Labour councils kept rises to 2.8 per cent. on average. I would say that to grab a headline, the Opposition have at the very least deliberately overstated their case and not presented the arguments in the way that would be true for the great majority of people.

Let us look into this further. The official Opposition recently published data that they claimed showed the council tax burden doubling, but which were the councils pushing up council tax take? Why, out of the top 50, according to the information revealed by the official Opposition, 30 were Conservative-controlled and only five were controlled by the Labour party. On average, council tax in Labour areas is lower than in Conservative areas, and we can all see why. That is why Labour Hackney has frozen council tax for four years while improving and protecting front-line services, and it is why all eight London Labour councils have promised a council tax freeze for the coming year.

Under Labour, with active support from the Government, local government has become more efficient. Today I confirmed that local councils are on track to have made more than £3 billion in savings by March 2010—savings that they have been able to put back into front-line services. It is because local government has demonstrated its ability to save and reinvest that I am confident that local government can meet its share of providing free adult social care for those in greatest need. We should not forget that in a full year, local government will receive more than £400 million in new resources—the largest transfer of resources from the NHS to local government since the NHS was formed in 1948. I think local government knows that this is an opportunity and a challenge—the challenge of showing that local government can deliver consistently good services across the country.

Robert Neill: Will the Secretary of State now answer the specific point that I raised with him in this context: is the £250 million in efficiency savings that is assumed to come from local government part of the 4 per cent. target demanded, or in addition to it?

Mr. Denham: We believe that in the coming year local government can make the additional savings that are needed, which total less than £250 million. Obviously for future years there has not yet been a comprehensive spending review, so we do not know the overall settlement for those years. However, I believe that local government can meet that target. I also believe that local government welcomes the commitment that has been made in the current proposals to the development of adult social care in its areas.

Richard Burden: If local government is to save and reinvest in the way that my right hon. Friend says, is it not important that at a local authority level there is absolute transparency and straightness with local populations about what is going on? Does he share my concern about Birmingham city council, where apparently thousands of pounds are being taken from local budgets, including in my own constituency—£55,000 in 2007-08, £69,000 in 2008-09 and £241,000 in 2009-10? That is apparently in order to make efficiency savings that will be reinvested, but it is the devil's own job to find out exactly where they are being reinvested other than to finance rather dubious city council reorganisation. Does he agree that authorities such as Birmingham need to be a lot more transparent with the people they are meant to serve?

Mr. Denham: I certainly agree with my hon. Friend that local authorities need to be absolutely transparent in their budgeting and in the way that they use resources. As he will know, a few weeks ago we had occasion to raise some concerns with Birmingham city council about the use of working neighbourhoods fund money. That came to light because a local strategic partnership had published minutes showing concerns that the money was not being used. In that particular case, we had no desire to punish the people of Birmingham for their council's actions, so when we recently announced additional working neighbourhoods fund money we included Birmingham in that. It is important that this money is used effectively on behalf of the people of that city. Similarly, if local authorities are making changes to their budgeting arrangements, they should be open and people should know exactly what is happening.

Barry Gardiner (Brent, North) (Lab): On that point about transparency, what does my right hon. Friend think about a council that made a commitment before the last local elections that there would be absolutely no increase in council tax over the coming period—one of the parties in the coalition said that it would reduce it—and yet has increased it year on year for the past three years? That is Brent council. Does he not think it a disgrace that the hon. Member for Brent, East (Sarah Teather) is not in the Chamber to defend her party?

Mr. Denham: I certainly understand my hon. Friend's concern about promises made and broken, which nobody likes to see.

I wish to say a little about the Opposition's figures. I believe the House will agree that every word from the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst suggested or implied that councils should have had more funding from this Government. He certainly made many references to councils that he felt were not getting enough, and he made no proposals that councils should have their funding reduced, so the only conclusion I can draw is that he thinks councils should have had more money. However, as we pointed out earlier this year, the Opposition's official policy is that my Department should have had its funding cut by £1 billion this year.

Mrs. Spelman indicated dissent.

Mr. Denham: The hon. Lady shakes her head, but if she cares to dig out the letter from my predecessor—I can send her another copy—I will be pleased to receive her reply explaining what the Leader of the Opposition meant when he said that growth in my Department's budget would be limited to 1 per cent. We have never received a reply. The implication of the Leader of the Opposition's policy is that my Department's funding would have been cut, not next year, not the year after but this year, by £1 billion. Compared with the current funding, including our housing pledge, Conservative policy would mean a £1.8 billion cut in its funding. We have never had an explanation of where those cuts would come or of by how much council tax would have to go up.

Mark Hunter: On the subject of budgets being cut and promises broken, can the Secretary of State explain why, despite the Government's claim to have made a fair settlement for local government this year, many local authorities, including Stockport, which covers my constituency, are receiving less in central Government grant than the amounts indicated in the Government's own funding formula? How can that be fair, and why are people such as my constituents still being short-changed by this Government?

Mr. Denham: The hon. Gentleman knows enough about the system to recognise that under a funding formula, at any one time some authorities are above the strict position in the formula and others below it. Because convergence is difficult and cannot be achieved overnight, there is always a process of floors and transitional arrangements. In any system that is ever devised, some people will be able to say, "This year in my authority we are away from the funding floor," but that does not mean we should not set up the system to make progress in the right direction every year. If one looks at the variations in the formula grant for different local authorities this year, last year and the year before, one can see progress in the right direction.

Mark Hunter: Will the Secretary of State give way?

Mr. Denham: No, I must make some progress, or I will speak for as long as the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst, and then I will be embarrassed having made comments about the length of his remarks.

The Opposition have said that they would pay councils to have a council tax freeze, but that adds another £1.3 billion a year to promises that they cannot possibly afford to carry through. No one can really believe that there is any credibility in what they are saying. The truth is that Conservative councillors and MPs up and down the country are saying that they want more money for their area, while they are all campaigning for a Conservative Government who promise to give them less. It is time that the Opposition were open and straightforward about their plans, which are pretty bad.

John Austin: On that point, I have here a publication from the Bexley Conservatives. In claiming the credits of their council, it points to two new academies built, four schools rebuilt and nine new children's centres, all achieved by the wonderful Bexley Conservative council. How does the Secretary of State contrast that with their spending plans if we were to have the misfortune of a Conservative Government?

Mr. Denham: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. Material of that sort, financed from Belize or wherever else, is dropping through letterboxes all over the country. There is a serious point at issue, because the 39 per cent. increase in real funding for local government achieved under the Labour party has made a huge difference to the quality of local services and the development of services such as Sure Start and Building Schools for the Future. That is jeopardised by the promises of the Conservatives.

Not only have the Opposition made clear that they would cut council spending now, but they would scrap house building, because they could not match our housing pledge just when that money is helping the country through the recession. They would impose top-down cuts on front-line services, as their shadow Chief Secretary has said in two interviews, and they would abolish regional development agencies and regional economic support, a policy opposed by the CBI. Fears on that front were not lessened when the hon. Member for Meriden personally intervened last summer to try to halt economic recovery by instructing Tory councils not to co-operate with making land available for growth, housing and jobs. They would do away with all entitlements to decent public services and make the postcode lottery the defining principle of a Tory Government.

In Southampton, Conservatives say that they will privatise, not for the good of the public but for ideological reasons. In Hammersmith, they say that tenants should lose security of tenure so that they can be evicted when the council no longer thinks they need a home and says they are hard to get rid of. In Barnet, we are promised a Ryanair council—presumably one that offers only the most basic standard of service, full of extra costs and hidden charges, and which everyone has to pay twice, once in council tax and once in charges just to get a decent service. The truth is that the future of local services is bleak under the Conservatives. They say that Conservative councils show what a Conservative Government would be like, and I agree. It is a fair warning.

Rosie Cooper (West Lancashire) (Lab): The proof of the pudding is in the eating. What would the Secretary of State say to a council that is a net gainer from concessionary travel and pockets the difference, depriving pensioners, refuses to give free swimming to under-16s and closes cash offices? Its deputy leader, when asked whether it had consulted, said, "Why consult when the answer would be no?" That is how much it cares. It has cut sports development officers, all the while having £22 million or £23 million in the bank—

Madam Deputy Speaker (Sylvia Heal): Order. I think the Secretary of State has got the message from the hon. Lady.

Mr. Denham: I get the gist, but I must tell my hon. Friend that there was a streak of honesty from the Conservative leader of the council who said that it was not worth consulting if nothing was to be agreed. That is refreshing compared with what we have heard this evening, but I agree with her.

On concessionary fares, which I was going to come to later, this Government have introduced free bus travel for pensioners, which is a great breakthrough. There are two truths behind that. First, all the evidence is that the funding nationally is the right amount for the concessionary fare scheme. Secondly, it is also the case—this was acknowledged by the Department for Transport just a few weeks ago—that we needed to make some changes to the distribution of funding, because as the system came in, we could see that some areas were gainers and some were losers. That was the right thing to do. I do not believe that there would be free bus travel for pensioners under the Conservatives. Even if adjustments in the formula have been proposed for the future, that reallocation was the right thing to do.

As for a local authority that takes the benefit of that and does not plough it back in—that is a real shame. The hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst said that free swimming was not fully funded, but there was a deal for local authorities. Labour councils thought, "That is a good deal for our people, so we'll have free swimming," and Conservatives councils turned round and said, "We're not going to do it." There is a difference between the parties. The offer was the same to both: the Conservatives said no in place after place, and the Labour councils said yes. That is the difference.

Mr. Cox: What would the Secretary of State say to the 92-year-old lady who knocked on the door of No. 10 Downing street yesterday in tears because her wardens had been removed from her sheltered housing, and the hundreds who walked from Trafalgar square to Downing street who are also finding, in all councils around the country, a relentless cut in the social services for the disabled and the elderly, presided over by this Government, because of an unfair funding system?

Mr. Denham: I would never make light of the position of a 92-year-old woman who was worried about her personal circumstances, but my understanding is that that demonstration was from Conservative-controlled Barnet council.

Mr. Cox: Wrong! They came from all round the country.

Mr. Denham: Perhaps it was not, but those I saw were from Barnet. It is right that local authorities make the best use of support. Some have chosen to remove warden support and others have found other ways of providing appropriate support for local people. I would expect any local authority to make the right decisions to provide the appropriate levels of support for the elderly people whose care they have assumed.

Bob Spink (Castle Point) (Ind): Does the Secretary of State think that local authorities would do better to spend some of their funds on the services that have just been mentioned, rather than on unjustified and excessive salaries for many of their senior officers, who do not even treat the public with civility?

Mr. Denham: I am sure the hon. Gentleman will have been very pleased by the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister yesterday, which echoed and added to what I said at my party's conference. The people at the top of local government often have a lifetime of public service behind them—they are not bad people—but things have got out of hand, and we need to deal with that.

Mrs. Humble: The Secretary of State mentioned a moment ago the key role of RDAs and the threat that they are under from the Conservatives. What would be the effect on Blackpool if the Northwest Regional Development Agency were scrapped? The RDA has identified the needs of Blackpool and the need for regeneration, and it has invested in the town.

Mr. Denham: The reality is that if RDA funding and RDAs were removed, the remaining funding—funding that was not simply cut to fund inheritance tax for wealthy families—would just be distributed on a formula basis. I pay tribute to my hon. Friend who has worked so hard for her constituency. Blackpool is coping with huge economic and social changes, and changes in the tourist market, which needs concentrated, focused effort, on behalf not just of the town, but of the whole region. The problem is that there would be no mechanism for providing that without RDAs. The money would either have to come from central Government, or it would be completely dissipated. That would be a disaster, which is why so many people, including house builders, and those in the CBI and chambers of commerce, are so alarmed by the Conservatives' irresponsible proposals.

On grant distribution, we are told that money is being taken from the south and the midlands to go somewhere else. The fact is that the two largest gainers from grant distribution were the east midlands and the south-west, hard though that is to fit with the idea that money is being taken away from the midlands or rural areas. Two of the largest increases in the formula grant of any authorities in the country were in Dorset, at 7.1 per cent., and Somerset, at 5.5 per cent. That is hardly evidence that resources are being shifted from the south or from rural areas.

The truth is that the Government work as hard as we can to produce an objective basis for formula grant. It is widely discussed and widely debatable, and I do not see why the debate should not continue, but the argument that the system has been in some way manipulated just does not stand up to the fact of where the increases in the allocations that we are discussing are going in the coming year.

I have criticised the Conservatives, but I do not rest my case on that criticism or on our record of investment and support for local government. The truth is that we place local government at the heart of meeting the challenges that face this country. The hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst talked of Total Place as though it was something that would come as a surprise to Government, rather than being an initiative that was launched in the Budget last year by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor for the Exchequer. The 13 pilot projects to which the hon. Gentleman referred were set up with local authorities and other public services by the Government, and they report to a ministerial Committee that I chair.

I am pleased that there are 70 or more places doing the same thing as Total Place, because it shows that we are going in the right direction and that the public services can be further improved and made more efficient if we can look at all the public service spending in one area. Yesterday's "Smarter Government" paper set out a series of new flexibilities for local government to support that role—easier pooling of budgets, fewer targets, better organised inspections, a reduction of £100 million in the compliance costs for local authorities, single capital budgets and reducing the number of funding streams. These are developments for the future—

Robert Neill: It won't be your Government who do it!

Mr. Denham: The hon. Gentleman may come unstuck with his cockiness about that. On this issue and on many others, the values and policies of my party are much closer to what the people of this country want. Before he gets carried away with himself, I remind him that the election is yet to be held and we are determined that what we think are the right policies for this country will win out—and my right hon. and hon. Friends agree.

Yesterday's paper promised a transformation in the amount of data about local services, costs and quality available on the web in a form that enables the public to scrutinise, to compare and to propose better ways of running services. Money will be tight, so we back a rebirth of municipal enterprise and the expansion of trading to generate new streams of income. All this is backed up by our commitment to give councils the powers that they need to scrutinise effectively public service spending in their area.

I am pleased that we have had this debate, because it has enabled us to set out clearly that we have had another good settlement for local government. It is a settlement that will lead to the lowest council tax increases for 16 years at least, and to the protection and improvement of public services. The debate has shown the Conservatives as having no policies and no views on how to protect public services for local people, whereas the Government believe in local government, work with it and support it.

8.28 pm

Julia Goldsworthy (Falmouth and Camborne) (LD): It is useful to have this debate in the absence of the Government providing us with time to discuss this year's local government settlement. Although I was not expecting it to be so bad-tempered on the part of the Secretary of State, I did know that the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Robert Neill) is always good value on this subject.

I am not sure that the Secretary of State's remarks can be squared with the fact that we were not to debate this subject. He has just said that local government is at the heart of government, but his Department did not deem a debate necessary. In the debate on the settlement last year, some important points were raised. We talked about the expected average council tax increases and the delivery of efficiency savings. We still have questions outstanding about resources invested in Icelandic banks, as councils still do not know when they will get those back. We also debated the impact on councils of falling incomes from charges. All those issues are still relevant today, as are the issues that hon. Members have raised about the impact of the current formula on their local authority. I cannot see any reason why a debate this year would not have been as valid as the one a year ago. If the Government really do have local government at the heart of everything that they believe in, why did we not have this debate in Government time and why was local government not mentioned at all in the Queen's Speech?

Barry Gardiner: The hon. Lady mentions charges. Can she explain why her Liberal Democrat colleagues on Brent council raised charges for elderly care by 300 per cent. at the same time as they broke their promise not to increase the council tax? Those are the issues about charges that concern my constituents in Brent.

Julia Goldsworthy: And they are exactly the kind of issues raised in last year's debate about the funding formula, so I look forward to the hon. Gentleman's contribution on how he thinks the current funding arrangements are impacting on Brent. Hon. Members would be grateful to hear about that.

Barry Gardiner rose—

Julia Goldsworthy: I want to make some progress. The hon. Gentleman will have an opportunity to make a speech.

The Secretary of State said that we do not need to have a debate every year because we have had a three-year funding settlement. There is a consensus that long-term funding settlements are a good thing because they allow for better planning. However, the fact that we have a spending review every three years does not mean that we do not have a Budget every year. I cannot understand the logic.

To be fair, the Conservatives' motion contains several valid observations about matters such as the increasing unaffordability of council tax and the extent of the above-inflation rises that we have seen every year for the past 10 years. The comparison with the increases in the state pension is also valid, although it was the Conservatives who removed the link with earnings, which has made the problem 10 times worse. There are also valid observations about some of the spending pressures on councils, and the motion refers to one of them—the recent announcement on social care.

Other policies, however, such as concessionary bus fares, have already impacted on local councils. Regardless of what the Secretary of State says, as one who represents an area that gets a large number of visitors every year, I know that the costs for local government are not equivalent to the amount of money received. The cost pressures within Cornwall are different as well. If he says that the policy is fully funded, he should take another look at the evidence, because, as far as I can see, that policy represents a massive additional cost for several councils, which they struggle to meet.

The same can be said of the cost of meeting swimming targets, which are a difficult burden to manage, particularly in areas that are popular tourist destinations. Many of those areas are rural areas and a long way from their targets. The Secretary of State said that some of the biggest increases are in the south-west, but I would imagine that that is because those areas are the furthest from their targets and have the greatest distance to travel to reach them. That means that they are scraping along the bottom trying to reach the per-head funding that the Government say they should receive.

Mrs. Humble: I, too, represent a popular tourist destination. Is the hon. Lady aware that the Government negotiated the original formula for distributing the money for the pensioners pass with the Local Government Association? All the councils deemed it to be fair. Particular pressures have been identified in areas such as hers and mine, so the Government have produced a consultation document on redirecting money from councils making a profit to those making a loss. Does she welcome that?

Julia Goldsworthy: I will welcome it if I hear from my council that all its additional costs will be covered, but previous experience makes its cynicism understandable.

It is not clear to me from the Conservative motion and the comments of the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst what the causes of the problems are. Are they simply a consequence of Government policy, or are they fundamental problems inherent in the structure of the local government finance system created under the Conservative Administration?

Mr. Redwood: Is it the hon. Lady's party's intention to introduce the 1 per cent. levy on higher priced homes every year? Who would be responsible for the valuation of the properties and who would pay that bill?

Julia Goldsworthy: As my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable) has made clear, we are talking about a national tax of 1 per cent. of the value of properties over £2 million, which will be put in place until measures can be fully implemented to replace the system of council tax with a local income tax.

Mr. Redwood: Every year?

Julia Goldsworthy: Yes, it would be an annual tax. We are quite clear that the current taxation system is unfair, but rather than simply making observations about the fact that it is unfair, we have sat down and tried to come up with a package of policies to make the whole tax system fairer, not just locally but nationally.

Essentially, what we see in the Conservative motion is some interesting observations, albeit ones that are self-evident. However, I am not sure that we have had any analysis of what the problems are or what the alternative is. We have heard a lot about Total Place and the "Deliverying more for less" document and the savings that they can deliver. As the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst said, "More for Less" is a document produced with cross-party agreement, but some of the conclusions that can be drawn from it are interesting. The implications of the report are that ring-fencing needs to be reduced to help delivery and that all local public service delivery agents need to sit round the table and to have the money at that table. However, the implication of that is un-ring-fencing things that are not just part of local government finance, and I have heard nothing, either from the Conservatives or from the Government, about whether they are prepared to go that far.

The hon. Gentleman also spoke about growing the tax base. Putting that proposal in the context of my constituency, as far as I can see it means that councils will receive more money for building more expensive houses in the areas affected. However, given the current gap between income and house prices in Cornwall, all I can see is that instead of central Government targets driving probably inappropriate development in some communities, financial pressures on councils will drive forward such development. Instead of responding to housing need, we will have centrally driven targets replaced by developers' greed. I am slightly concerned about that.

Robert Neill: I wonder whether the hon. Lady missed the observation made by my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Grant Shapps), who speaks for our party on such matters, which was that, precisely to deal with the issue of affordability, our scheme would fund affordable homes at 125 per cent. of council tax to give an incentive for such homes.

Julia Goldsworthy: If the hon. Gentleman does the sums, he will find that the more lucrative properties will still be the very large ones, not the smaller affordable homes—even the incentivised ones.

Dan Rogerson (North Cornwall) (LD): In anticipating what my hon. Friend might say in response to what the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Robert Neill) said about how the money raised by the incentivised scheme would go towards developing affordable housing, I thought that he had already argued that it would go to the council to be used to provide services generally, so that money will be spent twice.

Julia Goldsworthy: I am not entirely clear what the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst was saying, which further underlines the point that I am trying to make. I am not exactly clear what the Conservatives are proposing. I asked him what his plans were for floors and ceilings, given how unfair he felt the current formula was, but I am not entirely sure that I got an answer on what he would do. The implication of his comments was that councils are getting a raw deal because they are not being funded better by central Government, so presumably he is suggesting that we need better funding from central Government. That means centralising more of what local government spends, whereas I would have imagined that a genuinely localist party would be coming forward with proposals for more to be raised and spent locally.

Mark Hunter: Does my hon. Friend agree that, despite the Government introducing needs-based formula funding, too many authorities—I have mentioned Stockport already, but it is only one of many—continue to lose out in an unreasonable and unfair way? Does she further agree that the Government are now quite deliberately planning to overpay some councils and underfund others? Does she agree that that is nothing less than a monumental fiddle by the Treasury? After 12 years in government, it is about time Labour stopped cooking the books and instead put them in order.

Julia Goldsworthy: Where I agree with my hon. Friend, and with the Conservatives, is on the need for a fundamental rethink about how the funding formula works, although that in itself will not be sufficient. If I refer to the motion to try to determine what the Conservative policy on council tax is, the only relevant thing that I can see is the part where it

"urges the Government to help fund councils in delivering a council tax freeze in England, as is already in operation in Scotland".

That is not a policy. It looks like a tactic for a year, but it would not be sustainable year on year.

I love how the Conservatives pray in aid the council tax freeze in Scotland. I am glad to hear that they support that policy, but I wonder whether they would follow the Scottish National party minority Administration's proposals to follow that up with a local income tax. Do the Conservatives agree with half that argument or with all of it?

James Brokenshire (Hornchurch) (Con): I have been listening carefully to what the hon. Lady has been saying about local income tax, which her party supports. I understand that her party wishes to increase the threshold for the payment of income tax generally. Does that also apply to local income tax, and how does she propose to plug the shortfall arising from that?

Julia Goldsworthy: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for showing such an interest in Liberal Democrat policy. Perhaps he is doing that because of the absence of any policy in his own party on this issue.

When I look at how the Conservatives propose to pay for that council tax freeze, I find that it would be paid for by reducing advertising and consultancy, which would involve about £700 million in year 2. I have already said that I have doubts about whether that measure would be genuinely localist, because it would increase the proportion of central Government spend in local government. The hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst did not say how many Conservative-controlled councils were planning to take him up on his offer. I wonder, too, whether there would be any perverse incentives for councils that wanted to benefit from additional resources. Might they have to make up the additional income that they needed to deliver services by increasing charges?

Barry Gardiner: I have been listening to what the hon. Lady has said, but I have also been listening for what she has not said. The hon. Member for Hornchurch (James Brokenshire) asked her a pertinent question about her party's policy on a local income tax. He asked whether certain people would be taken out of it. I am fairly sure that she has not yet been able to give him an answer, and I think that the House would be interested to know what her party's policy is on that.

Julia Goldsworthy: I must ask the hon. Gentleman to be patient, because I will come to that point all in good time. I have been on my feet for only 10 minutes, which is about a third of the time taken by the Secretary of State and only about a fifth of the time taken by the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst. I will respond to that question when I turn to the alternatives that we think should be put forward, but at the moment I am dealing with the Conservatives' motion, and their policy—or tactic, depending on which way we want to look at it. As I have said, it seems unlikely that it would provide a permanent solution, so I do not understand how it could form a programme for government.

I am also unsure about whether the Conservatives' approach to revaluation has been made clear. Given that we have not had a revaluation for 20 years, and that the Government and the Opposition think that the council tax system is the right way to fund local government, it is logical that that system should be based on a realistic valuation of people's properties, and that we therefore need to revalue. Unfortunately, neither party can have it both ways. They need to make it clear that a revaluation would be a consequence of staying with the existing system of taxation.

[Julia Goldsworthy]

In the absence of any clear statement of Conservative policy on local government finance, either in the motion or in the remarks of the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst, I have been forced to turn to other areas for evidence. Barnet council has already been mentioned, and I shall come to that later, but I have decided to start my investigation in the other place.

The most recent contribution to the debate seems to have come from Lord Hanningfield, who is also the leader of Essex county council. In an interview in The Observer—which was reported in the Western Morning News on 15 September—he talked about a policy of localising welfare benefits. He said:

"The cost of living is far higher in Essex, say, than it is in Cornwall, so people do not need the same level of benefit".

Are we therefore going to see another tactic from the Conservatives? Are they going to use policy proposals such as these to make further cuts in services and penalise poor areas through the benefit system? They completely misunderstand that a low cost of living is not the same thing as a low-income area. I was disappointed that the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst chose not to clarify that particular point.

I had a further look at some of the policies being pushed forward by Conservative-controlled councils. Perhaps the most eye-catching direction of travel seems to be from "easy Barnet", although I am not sure whether it is best to draw the parallel with easyJet or Ryanair. At first sight, the service looks fairly cheap, but the more one delves into it, the more one finds that services that should be core to what is being purchased are suddenly defined as extras. I understand that if people want to use the toilet on Ryanair flights, they will have to pay to do so. In Barnet, it appears that some services are heading the same way. I understand that even refuse collection may no longer be viewed as a core service. What it boils down to is that people will have to pay more for a worse service, with additional charges being made through the back door. I am not entirely sure that council tax payers will welcome a council tax freeze if the money is being taken away from their other hand.

If there is a key theme running through all these Conservative ideas—I would not say that they have any policies—it is the need to cut spending. That should not be seen as an end in itself, even though we are clearly in a difficult financial situation and there is a need for spending restraint. The Conservative approach has the effect of encouraging top-slicing—shaving off all budgets across the board, which means that it is more likely to impact on front-line jobs. For most councils, the largest element of spending is wages. It is easier to cut staff numbers than to cut entire programmes, but what the Conservative Front-Bench team should be doing is clearly to identify the programmes of spending that it considers to be high and low priority.

The leader in today's edition of The Times best summed all this up in pointing out that all the evidence points to the fact that the Conservatives want

"power rather more than" they know

"what to do with it"

and that

"we still await a clear, unambiguous and compelling case for a Conservative government."

That point could not be better summed up than by the lack of any policy content whatever in today's Opposition day motion.

It is disappointing that there is a similar poverty of ambition in the Government's approach, as once again it seems that talking the talk is more important than walking the walk. If we go back a few years, the Lyons report was commissioned by the Government to look at the problem of structural difficulties in our local government taxation system. What happened there was that some very limited recommendations were made, but they were then hoofed as far as possible into the long grass. We have also seen an incremental approach towards local government finance, which makes things more complicated and even less transparent than they already are.

I am drawn to reflect on the debates we had on the business rate supplement scheme. Although technically a better debate at a local level is possible, it takes place around the margins, which makes it even more difficult for businesses to understand what their business rates and any supplements are paying for, and there is little democratic engagement in what the increases will provide.

The Government's latest offering is "Putting the Frontline First: smarter government". Having read it, I have to say that one would never have guessed that it was written by a former management consultant—the Chief Secretary to the Treasury. The language provides some warm words, but there are also some words that send a chill down my spine. For example, some bullet points talk about letting local areas set priorities and giving them more control over resources, but if we look at the detail, we discover that letting local areas set priorities apparently means "streamlining the national-local performance framework".

That is obviously going to have a wonderful impact on allowing local people to determine priorities. Similarly, when it comes to local area control of resources, we suddenly find that this means:

"Enable local areas to guide the use of resources".

I am concerned that some key powers are being reserved. It all sounds very intangible and it seems that national targets are going to be aligned with local ones rather than granting genuine control to the local level.

The fundamental point that this report and the Government's approach miss is that we have an opportunity to re-engage people. The Government will be able to take advantage of that opportunity only if they offer—or at least talk about offering—options such as entering people who vote in a raffle for which the prize is an iPod. They think that that is what is necessary to engage people in voting.

Mr. Cox: On the question of localism, could the hon. Lady help us by clarifying one point? Who would levy the income tax proposed by the Liberal Democrats? Would it be levied by local district councils or—as was required by Liberal Democrat policy in the past—by regional assemblies?

Julia Goldsworthy: As the hon. Gentleman would know if he were paying any attention at all, it would be levied by local government.

The key point about the time of fiscal constraint that we are entering is that it provides an opportunity. All too often, politicians assume the lowest of intentions among members of the public. They assume that no one wants to participate, and that that is due not to a lack of opportunity but to their refusal to engage. My experience has shown that people are more than willing to give up large amounts of their time to become involved in something that they think is important to their communities if it can be demonstrated that their involvement will have an impact on the outcome.

The aim of the Total Place pilots and the work achieved by the Sustainable Communities Act 2007—I was disappointed to note that neither the Secretary of State nor the Minister was able to attend the meeting that was held about that earlier this evening—is not just to provide more transparency, to make more information available online, and to allow councils to scrutinise more public spending in local areas. It is not just about a process; it is about engaging people

What the "Smarter Government" report does not make clear, and what the Government have failed to understand, is that if tough decisions are to be made about what should be the priorities at local level, those decisions should be made, engaged with and accountable for at local level. The Total Place pilots provide a real opportunity not just to ensure that bureaucrats from a number of different areas of public service sit around a table with their cheque books, but to allow people to engage in a debate. We have not heard enough from Government about that, but it is critical, which is why I was so disappointed that there was nothing about it in the Queen's Speech.

The Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009 represents another missed opportunity. Once again we were told that legislation would be all about engaging people in participation, but it ended up being about the architectural structures to which I believe the former Secretary of State has referred.

Dan Rogerson: And about how to respond to a petition.

Julia Goldsworthy: Indeed. It is entirely about turning people off politics, rather than showing them how their contribution can make a difference to the outcome.

All this makes clear to me that there are fundamental problems with the current system of local government finance, and that simply ignoring them will not make them go away. It is inherent in the current structure of local government finance that, on average, council tax will rise above the rate of inflation. It is also inherent in the system that we have a regressive council tax, because by definition it will hit hardest those on low and fixed incomes. People will feel the impact more because they are paying from net income rather than at source.

The position is made worse by the broadly 75:25 split between central Government's contribution to local services and the amount that is raised through council tax. That gearing makes it difficult for councils to prioritise services that they consider important, and also makes it difficult for people to understand exactly what the money is being spent on. On top of all that, we have a council tax benefit system under which an incredibly high proportion of people who are entitled to benefit are still failing to claim.

All those things add up not to a need for a freeze or a pilot, but to a need for more fundamental change. I simply cannot understand why neither of the main parties is willing to face up to that. We need a change that goes beyond local government taxation. We need a whole package of reform. Yes, there is a need to replace council tax with a progressive form of taxation based on ability to pay, but that is a means to an end, not an end in itself. It is part of a process of ensuring that more is raised locally and less is raised nationally.

There are fair steps that can be taken to achieve that end. For instance, business rates could be localised, which would immediately ensure that councils raised more of what they spent at local level. We need a link with the national taxation system, which is why we have proposed a levy of 1 per cent. on each property with a value of over £2 million. We think that the priority should be making the whole tax system fairer, and that the best way to do that is to raise the income tax threshold to £10,000, which would make every person, on average, at least £700 better off. That would be a first step towards making the taxation system fairer, and it would be introduced alongside a whole series of other reforms designed to ensure that more money was raised and spent locally.

Justine Greening (Putney) (Con): The hon. Lady mentioned the Liberal Democrat proposals for a local income tax. Can she briefly explain how it would work in respect of equalisation? More affluent areas where more people are working would obviously raise more local income tax to be able to invest in their services, but how would this work for more deprived areas with more people on benefits and lower value houses? Does the hon. Lady propose to have a central cap of some kind, or to have councils paying money into a central pot that is then redistributed?

Julia Goldsworthy: I am pleased to learn that the hon. Lady is taking such a great interest in Liberal Democrat policy. Perhaps her party is studying it because it has yet to come up with any proposal of its own. Our position is clear: we are currently saying that the 25:75 split between local and central Government is the wrong way around. We have at no point said that 100 per cent. of all local government spending should be raised locally. Of course there will be a need for some kind of equalisation measure.

Justine Greening: What kind?

Julia Goldsworthy: In the same way that we have an equalisation measure now. Of course, one of the biggest problems with the council tax system is that we have a benefit system whose take-up is very low. A local income tax removes the need for that at a stroke.

The hon. Lady refers to more deprived areas. One of the things that Total Place has exposed is that the more deprived an area is, the more likely it is that there will be lots of different agencies intervening to try to assist people. That results in a duplication of the administration that goes into supporting these areas and people. We need not only to look at local government spend and to tackle the problems of deprived areas, but to open up the whole area of spending that goes into supporting these groups of people.

Mr. Redwood: Is the hon. Lady's party proposing a regional income tax levied by the regional assembly, as well as a local income tax?

Julia Goldsworthy: No. I do not understand why the right hon. Gentleman does not understand that. We have never said that.

To conclude, we have a Government who fail to acknowledge that there is a problem at all. As far as they are concerned, there is no problem that cannot be sorted out by some kind of incrementalism that moves so slowly that I could almost watch my fingernails grow as the Government progress. The Conservatives may be able to identify the problem, but they do not propose any solution. Basically, the Conservative proposal is to put a different coloured label on the same tin, which has the net effect of changing a red label to a blue label. Whatever colour that label is, the product is the same, and, as far as I can see, it is certainly not a localist one, or one that will get anybody excited or engaged.

Several hon. Members rose—

Madam Deputy Speaker: So far in this debate, we have had contributions from those on the Front Bench. May I remind colleagues that the winding-up speeches will commence at 9.40 pm and that five Back Benchers hope to catch my eye? I want to try to accommodate everybody. I am afraid that I shall have to leave Members to do the maths for themselves.

8.58 pm

Mrs. Joan Humble (Blackpool, North and Fleetwood) (Lab): I shall try to be brief—although my heart always sinks when I hear a politician say that, because we always end up saying far more, and taking far longer, than we intended.

I rise to welcome the debate and the amount of money that Blackpool has had from this Government. We have had above-inflation increases year after year after year. I also want to talk about the additional sums of money the town has received, because of course local government gets support from central Government through other Departments, and that also needs to be taken into account in this calculation.

Let me first say a little about the changes that have taken place. I served for 12 years as a member of Lancashire county council, and I can remember the days when we had annual allocations, and, as a local authority, we could not plan. We lurched from one year to the next, not knowing what the budget would be. There was therefore no forward planning. At the end of some years we were desperately trying to spend money, whereas in other years we had totally run out. I have to say that, more often than not, we did not have the money. The hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Robert Neill) talked about social care. For seven of these years, I chaired the social services committee of Lancashire county council, and we never had enough money to deliver services.

Through the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, the last Conservative Government transferred responsibility for supporting people in residential care from the social security system to the social services departments of local authorities. They introduced us as gatekeepers but, at the same time, they cut back on the money. I have been in local government when, year after year we had cuts, and year after year we could not plan. Under this Labour Government, we have had year after year of above-inflation increases but, above all, we have also been given the ability to plan. We must never underestimate that and I welcome the fact that the Opposition parties acknowledge it.

Another thing that the Government have done is introduce new planning regimes—new opportunities to look regionally at the needs of an area and also to look at a micro-level in local authorities. Sadly, in years past central Government gave funding according to travel-to-work areas, and Blackpool was then in the travel-to-work area that included Wyre and parts of Fylde, two adjoining district councils that are affluent. Blackpool got precious little direct investment because it did not qualify. Now, as a local authority, Blackpool can access specific funding for the wards in the town centre where special need is identified, but it can also access funding from a regional perspective because the Northwest Regional Development Agency looks at all the areas of the north-west and targets special support on those areas. We have benefited from that re-examination of how best to target taxpayers' money in those areas of special need.

We also get money from other sources. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Regional Economic Development and Co-ordination will remember that when she was a Transport Minister, we had long debates about the Blackpool tramline. We have the money to upgrade the tramline and for new sea defences in both Blackpool and Cleveleys, where the money has come not only for sea defence but for beautiful new promenades that are improving the visitor attraction as well as the lives of our residents. We have had money spent on the schools and hospitals, but we have also recently had an allocation of £415,000 from the working neighbourhoods fund, which is helping the people of Blackpool who are unemployed and helping the local authority to get more people into work. We have had money from the Department for Culture, Media and Sport for the Sea Change programme, so Blackpool has had £4 million to help to do up our wonderful new promenade. Cleveleys has had the same, as has Fleetwood, in the top end of my constituency. Lots of money has been going into local government and we have had investment in our play areas.

I want to echo a point that was made in an intervention. My local Conservative councillors are not backwards in coming forwards to claim credit for that spending and to be photographed in new playgrounds, new schools and our Sure Start children's centres. All this money comes from central Government and we here need to ensure that people understand that. It is that investment that has so improved the lives of my constituents. It goes into local government and is spent on their behalf and it comes from a variety of different Departments. I am hugely proud of the changes that have taken place. In my constituency and in that of my neighbour, my hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Mr. Marsden), who is here in the Chamber, we have seen those improvements.

Finally, let me make a brief point about prudential borrowing. When I was a councillor, not only was that not available but we could not pool budgets. We could not work with other local authorities, with health authorities or with anybody. Now, local authorities have a chance—especially through prudential borrowing—to come up with exciting initiatives.

Blackpool council wants to buy back, to buy and to bring into local control Blackpool tower, the Winter gardens, which last night hosted the royal variety performance—and an excellent show it was—the golden mile and Tussauds. It can do that only if it gets support from central Government, if it is allowed to carry out prudential borrowing to raise money and if it gets European funding. Local government works best if it works in partnership with central Government and if central Government acknowledges areas of need and delivers. That is what this Government have been doing with local authorities of different persuasions. Long may this Government continue in power so that we do not go back to days such as those when I was in local government, when we never had the money to deliver the services that people need.

9.5 pm

Mr. John Redwood (Wokingham) (Con): I rise to defend myself against the strange charge from the Labour Benches that some years ago, when I was the Secretary of State for Wales, I sent back £120 million from the Treasury. I do not understand why, a few days after Labour issued the "Smarter Government" document, it should so strongly object to a Minister having practised smarter government some years ago. If only Labour had practised it in the past 12 years, we would not be facing the financial Armageddon that we currently face. That £120 million was not money that local government authorities needed, because they had had a full settlement. It was savings from changes regarding inefficiency, over-management and too much bureaucracy in the Wales Office.

Those savings were made by putting a freeze on staff and by stripping out back-office and overhead operations that we did not need. Of course, that money should have gone back to the Treasury because it was not money that we held. Even that Government were borrowing a bit, although we did not need to borrow as much. Surely Labour Members should welcome the fact that there was a pioneer of their smarter government. If only we had had their smarter government for the past 12 years, and if only we had had more for less, our economy would now be stronger and we would be in a better position. Instead, we have had 12 years of waste, incompetence, intervention, overriding local decision making, too much bureaucracy and inspection, and too many circulars. We have had ordeal by circular and ordeal by command and billions down the drain, and we have not been given better services.

Julia Goldsworthy: Would the right hon. Gentleman describe his actions, when he was the Secretary of State for Wales, as the "Smarter Government" document would, by saying that he was aligning the "different sector-specific performance management frameworks across key local agencies"?

Mr. Redwood: No; I always try to speak in English. I think that that was another criticism of me at the time, but it is a good tip for politicians: they should not speak in jargon. In this place, they should always speak in English, which I believe is the preferred language of the Hansard reporters.

We meet today to debate, at last, an important settlement at a time of financial crisis. It seems that we are never allowed time to debate really big sums of money. We have had no debate on the £280 billion of guarantees of bad and toxic debts that have recently been announced, £170 billion of which was lent overseas in relation to things that make no difference to the jobs and prosperity of our country. The Government were trying to get away with a £47 billion expenditure block here with absolutely no debate, so I am grateful that my right hon. and hon. Friends on the Front Bench think that this issue is worth debating. The Government's excuse, apart from lost letters, was that we do not need to debate the settlement every year because it is a three-year settlement. Of course we need to review the budget every year and consider the detail of the settlement every year, because it is fixed every year. It is a cop-out for the Government to say that we do not need to scrutinise such spending.

Barry Gardiner: I agree that this issue is worth debating. Given that the Conservatives have secured the debate, does the right hon. Gentleman consider it strange that there are as many Members on the Labour Benches as on the combined Opposition Benches?

Mr. Redwood: No, I do not find that strange, as there are many more Labour MPs because of the unfortunate decisions of the electorate at the last election, but we hope that they might think again in the light of what has happened in the past few years.

I have very little time left. The important question to ask is why, given that the Government have put a lot more money into local government, everyone is so unhappy. Councils are unhappy because they do not feel they have the money they need for all the requirements and inspections placed on them. The electors clearly are not happy because, as we have heard from Conservative Front Benchers, despite all that money going in, council tax has more than doubled during the Labour years.

I am not one who thinks that more money in total ought to be voted for this block of expenditure. I think that local government has to do more for less, just as central Government have to, but there is a simple solution that the Government ought to adopt. They ought to get out of the way. They should stop making all those demands on local government for information and inspection, and they should understand that we want local government delivered by local councillors and a limited number of offices. We do not want local councils to have to employ a very large number of very expensive people to fill in the forms, answer the inspections, deal with central Government or interpret all the information. We do not need 39 different special grants for local government: we want to get back to having a single block grant, over which councils have discretion. We do not wish to have this mighty inspection system, with its stars and black marks, that preoccupies so many very senior officers at enormous expense. We could probably halve the number of senior officers in a well run local authority if we stripped out all the demands from central and regional government.

We do not want regional government at all. We should trust local government, give it more power and take the powers away from the regions, which are unelected, unaccountable and much disliked in most parts of England. The Government have spent 12 years trying to get people to love their regions, but they do not and will not. The regions in England are artificial, and we do not want them. They are the layer of government that we wish to strip away.

[Mr. Redwood]

That would save us billions and start to solve the conundrum of why, although the Government have tipped so much money in, we are getting so little out, why so many voters do not think that the services are good enough, and why the councillors do not think that there is enough money to make the services better.

Richard Younger-Ross: The right hon. Gentleman says that we should strip out any form of regional government, but is he saying that all regional planning should therefore be done by central Government?

Mr. Redwood: No, I am saying that most planning should be done by the local community, with their representatives. The big items should be national items. If the aim was to drive a motorway across the country—and I do not think people want that at the moment—it should be a decision for national Government, defended and sorted out in the normal democratic way. If the wish was to build a new housing estate, that should be determined by the local council.

I think that my Front-Bench team are working on some very good ideas in this regard. A lot of councils do not want development in their area, sometimes for good reasons. If they were allowed to keep some of the benefits of a new development, and if there were a pot of money to provide compensation for people in the local area who would otherwise be adversely affected by the development, we might have the answer to the problem of achieving localism in action. There would still be development in the country, but it would be development that local communities and neighbours approved of or supported. People would not feel that developments were being rained down on them from the centre.

David Taylor: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Redwood: I would love to, but the time constraints on us all mean that I have to sit down very shortly.

I want to mention briefly the extraordinary position that the Liberal Democrats have got themselves into yet again in this very short debate. We learn that they want to place a 1 per cent. tax on houses, although there seemed to be a row between their Front-Bench spokesmen about the value of the houses involved.

Richard Younger-Ross: No, no.

Mr. Redwood: The more vehement the denials, the bigger we know the row to be. I am sure that the problem relates to certain constituencies and the discovery, perhaps by the spokesman who came up with the lower value, that an awful lot of the houses would be in his constituency. We have learned tonight that the Liberal Democrats have no idea what they are going to do about the fact that, under the scheme, a few places in the country would have lots of money, but quite a lot of others would have no money at all. They do not know how they would redistribute it, but they said that the money would be raised in the ratio 75 local to 25 national, so most of the places without any expensive houses clearly would not get any money.

Then we heard that the Liberal Democrats want to introduce a local income tax. However, they have no idea what its threshold is, and we do not know whether there would be a higher rate and a lower rate. We do not know how progressive it would be. We have no idea how much money would be taken off the City of London and Westminster, where incomes tend to be quite high, and how much of it would be sent around the country.

The proposal is absolutely clueless but of course completely irrelevant, because parties that think they might win the election know that the public will never fall for a local income tax. National income tax is already quite high enough and there is no scope for doing what the Liberal Democrats propose.

When I was given the job of putting the council tax in place—which I did not want—I made only two claims for it. One was that it would be a little less unpopular than the community charge, and the other was that it would last a bit longer than the community charge. I am delighted to say that both things came true. I never thought it was very good. All taxes are unpopular and they all have their defects, but the fact that council tax is still around after 12 years of Labour Government shows th[illegible]h main parties have come to the conclusion that [illegible] least bad option.

It is now up to us and local government to live within the amount the tax provides, which can be done only by smarter government, although that will need a change of Government. I like the phrase "smarter government". We need to do more for less and the sooner we have a Government who can help councils do that by stripping away the on-costs and bureaucracy, the better it will be.

9.14 pm

Mr. Andy Slaughter (Ealing, Acton and Shepherd's Bush) (Lab): I have come to regard it as a painful duty to speak in debates such as this and to bring a report from the front line of Conservative local government in Hammersmith and Fulham—the Leader of the Opposition's favourite council. We now hear from the Conservative party chairman that Conservative councils demonstrate how the Conservatives will run the country. After seeing how the financial settlement was treated in Hammersmith and Fulham, I feel that we need a post-watershed warning about violent and disturbing images. Three principles govern what happens in that authority: increasing charges, cutting services and disposing of assets.

In the last three years, charges for meals on wheels have been increased by 60 per cent. There is now a £15 million surplus in the parking account. Adult education fees, particularly for people of pension age, have shot up, because the council falsely claims that it is age discrimination to give concessions to the over-60s, despite the fact that many other London councils do so. The council even charged for recycling, and then claimed that the service was unpopular and cut it altogether.

Most significant, having given a clear, one-line promise in their manifesto not to introduce charges for home care, within six months of election the Conservatives introduced charges of £12.40 an hour for home helps. They have substantially cut the home care and resident warden services. I am sorry that the hon. and learned Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Cox), who was complaining about resident warden services, is no longer in the Chamber, because such decisions are for local government. The Opposition cannot say that local government should have the power to make local decisions and then blame central Government for decisions taken locally. The proudest boast of the leader of my Conservative council is that he has cut 1,000 jobs in three years—1,000 jobs in the middle of a recession—not bureaucrats, but home helps, wardens and other people who provide front-line public services.

The voluntary sector has been cut massively, particularly advice services and services for black and minority ethnic groups. The schools budget has been cut to the bare minimum, while schools have been loaded with additional central costs. So far, so typical.

The next phase of development is asset sales, including youth clubs, community buildings and 13 hostels for the homeless—65 self-contained units of accommodation sold off at public auction, which means that the price received by the council is about 20 per cent. below market value. Sixty-five families who were living in council hostels at a cost to the taxpayer of between £100 and £200 a week will now be in private rented accommodation at a cost of between £500 and £600 a week, but that does not matter to a Conservative council because the income tax payer rather than the council tax payer will pick up the increased bill.

Schools have been told specifically to sell their sites to private education institutions. One has to ask where it is all leading. I shall hold that thought for a moment while I fill in one or two other parts of the canvas in the little time I have for my speech.

I echo the words of my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Thamesmead (John Austin) in relation to the chutzpah of Conservative councils in claiming credit for central Government initiatives. If Members drive around Hammersmith Broadway, they will see banners hanging from the lamp posts that North Korea would have been ashamed to put up, with claims about the £200 million the council has invested in secondary schools, the £200 million it has invested in decent homes or the 13 Sure Start centres it has opened. The council has taken over a local primary care trust and now even claims credit for investment in the NHS as well.

Mr. Redwood: Would the hon. Gentleman like to praise that council for cutting its council tax by 3 per cent. every year for four years and delivering better services? Is that not smarter government?

Mr. Slaughter: I am so pleased that the right hon. Gentleman has made that point. If he had been listening, he would have heard that about £63 million has been raised through increased charges for services and cuts in services. The service user and the taxpayer get a bad deal out of the average 50p a week saving, every year, on council tax. I shall put the question back to the right hon. Gentleman. If he is such a fan of the Conservative council and its leader, who is head of the Tory party's innovation unit, he will agree, I am sure, with the comment that the leader made at a public seminar 10 days ago, when he said:

"My mates are all in the Shadow Cabinet, waiting to get those"— ministerial—

"boxes, being terribly excited. I went to university with them—they haven't run a piss up in a brewery."

Actually, the right hon. Gentleman may agree with the comment about—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Can I just remind the hon. Member that moderation in language would be much more acceptable in the Chamber?

Mr. Slaughter: Absolutely, Madam Deputy Speaker. I should have said, "an occasion when a lot of alcohol is drunk in a brewery." However, my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) had that argument with a Deputy Speaker, and I believe that excretory terms are permissible, provided that they are in context, as I think the council leader intended that comment to be. It is one that I am sure we all echo.

I do not think that the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) made a good point, but one would not know that if one lived in Hammersmith. I wonder what he thinks of this: more than £1 million of taxpayers' money is spent simply on propaganda, and that ranges from poster vans driving around the borough, advertising how good the council is, to advertising on stations, in phone boxes and on lamp post banners, and a fortnightly newspaper that costs about £750,000 to run.

Mr. Redwood: I seem to remember that one of the cuts, as the hon. Gentleman calls them, that the council has made is to include advertising in that newspaper so that it has a nil cost to the taxpayer—unlike its predecessor publication, which was very expensive for the Labour council.

Mr. Slaughter: Sadly, the right hon. Gentleman is partially informed again. There is advertising, and that is principally from the public sector—from the council and other public institutions. However, in addition to that cost, which covers printing, there are on-costs and the cost of staffing, premises and so forth. The total cost before advertising is about £750,000; the net cost is still about £350,000. Again, I put the question to him. Is that particularly good value?

Is it particularly good value that both chief executives of the local authorities in my constituency are paid more than the Prime Minister? Is it particularly good value that, while boasting of a pay freeze for senior officers this year, those chief executives gave themselves up to a 9 per cent. increase last year? Is it particularly good value that the leader of one council attempted to give himself a 14 per cent. pay rise for doing the job that he was already doing? We in Hammersmith do not yet, however, have what Kensington and Chelsea has, which is the first £100,000 a year councillor, topping up his salary with money from London councils and, with great irony, the Audit Commission, too.

In the moment or so that I have left, I shall return to the question that I posed earlier. Where does a local authority go when it has raised charges for vulnerable people, in particular, cut services for people in straitened circumstances and sold off the assets—the schools and the community centres that people use? The answer, particularly in an area of deprivation such as Shepherd's Bush, is quite simple: the local authority gets rid of the people themselves. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State suggested earlier, that is exactly what is intended when 3,500 social homes are due for demolition in the borough and there is no guarantee that the residents will receive like-for-like or replacement homes.

[Mr. Slaughter]

The tenants of the first of those estates earmarked for demolition, West Kensington and Gibbs Green, had been told that they live in "not decent neighbourhoods". However, I am very proud to say that yesterday evening they served on the council leader a notice to quit, requiring him under the Labour Government's legislation to transfer ownership of their estate to them. They are going nowhere; they are staying in the place that has been their home for many years; and they hope for the return of a Labour council, which will restore to them some of the services that have been cut.

In the meantime, the council's plans range at one extreme, from the simple slash-and-burn cuts in services that we see from many other Tory councils, to the other extreme, which we have not seen in west London for 20 years, since the days of Shirley Porter, of gerrymandering and of social engineering. They are examples of exactly what the Conservative party says when it states, "This demonstrates how we will run the country." I welcome any hon. Member from any party to come to Hammersmith and see exactly how that would be done.

9.24 pm

James Brokenshire (Hornchurch) (Con): It is a pleasure to be able to take part in tonight's debate on local government funding. Several hon. Members have made clear the pressures that are placed on many local authorities in delivering value for their areas and ensuring that council tax increases are kept to the absolute minimum. That is why I support the policies that have been put forward by Conservative Members to try to ensure that there is a council tax freeze in relation to our own councils.

I want to deal with some general matters as regards funding for local authorities and, in particular, to localise the issue in relation to my own local authority—the London borough of Havering. There has been some debate about population data and methodology. I want to highlight the issue of the elderly populations contained within many local authority areas and the impact that that has on projections. That applies particularly to my area, which has the largest number of older residents of any London borough. In the years between now and 2023, we expect there to be an increase of some 9,300 in the number of people aged over 65, with a particularly marked rise in the number of those aged over 85. We need to think about what that will mean in terms of the pressures on social care and the ability of council budgets to cope with those demands.

Havering, as a nice leafy green borough, is seen as having lots of owner-occupied homes and historically low levels of unemployment, diversity and deprivation, although pockets of deprivation do exist. That apparent prosperity masks the increasing pressures of dealing with a settled and ageing population. Several residents live in mortgage-free homes—the asset-rich, cash-poor population—but their apparent comfort masks an increasing need for social care support. With an ageing population and dwindling resources, the pressures on services will grow, and there does not appear to be within the local government finance formula a proper recognition and acknowledgement of that issue and how it will increase in importance over time as the demand for social services and support services for the elderly continues to increase.

Talking about the pressures on local councils is not simply about the methodology arguments on how the funding is allocated, but about how the Government have changed their mind on certain key issues and the impact that that is having on local councils in dealing with it. We have had the discussion about how this is all about three-year funding settlements, which implies that councils should be given greater certainty and an ability to plan their budgets and to know what they can do for the benefit of their local residents. Yet two recent examples have thrown a very big spanner in the works for London councils, in particular, in being able to ensure that they can plan their budgets effectively.

The first example concerns the Government's change of approach on the decent homes standard. It was said that if an arm's length management organisation achieved two-star status, funding would flow through to it and the benefits would accrue to local residents, who would get the new windows, bathrooms and kitchens that many of them had been patiently waiting for. However, in Havering, when our ALMO, Homes in Havering, attained two-star status, that funding did not come with it because the Government had changed the rules and requirements and decided to reallocate the money under their Building Britain's Future programme. Our ALMO had been waiting patiently to deliver the important changes whereby local residents could see the significant improvements that they had been promised, but it got a slap in the face instead of the funding that it had been expecting. That means that Havering council, in seeking to meet those aspirations and demands, is having to try to identify funding in order to deliver sooner the benefits that were expected to accrue. It is having to deal with the problems imposed on it by being promised that money and then finding out that it had been reallocated even though the planning and budgeting had been done on the basis that it would be available.

Councillor Michael Armstrong of Havering council recently said

"we will fight tooth and nail to reverse the Government's U-turn and secure the funding we were promised. Homes in Havering has achieved the standard that the Government set and ministers must now honour their side of the deal."

I hope that the Minister will provide some assurance about what is happening to the decent homes money, because my residents in Havering were promised something that has now been taken away from them.

The second example is the change in funding for the freedom pass. London was set to receive about £58 million in 2010-11 and councils had planned on that basis, but we now discover that they have not got that money, and the Department for Transport consultation proposes that about £30 million should be clawed back.

Angela Watkinson (Upminster) (Con): My hon. Friend from my neighbouring constituency will know that the increase in cash for Havering council this year is about £750,000, but £500,000 of that will be used up on the extra costs of safeguarding children, and the council now has to find another £1 million to pay for the change in special grant for the freedom pass, which all our elderly residents value so highly.

James Brokenshire: I agree entirely. I regard the freedom pass as extremely important for the over-60s, and the Government tinker with it at their peril. My hon. Friend is right that Havering is having to find an extra £1 million, and we may hear from the hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Pelling) that Croydon has a black hole in its budget. I know that Bexley will have to find another £1 million as a consequence of the very late change that has taken place. It is all very well telling councils to find efficiency savings and plan on a certain basis, but if they suddenly have to find an extra £1 million from their coffers at the last moment, it places them in an extraordinarily difficult situation.

It is telling that we have been told tonight that there is a consultation taking place and the Government are consulting us on whether they should press ahead with the changes. I listened carefully to what the Secretary of State said, and it struck me that he had a closed mind, that no consultation is taking place and that the Government have decided that that funding will not now be put in place. They want councils to take the lead and the responsibility for their residents, but the Government have responsibilities as well. Saying to councils at the last moment, "We promised you the money, it's not there, you've got to deal with that now", hardly makes it easy for councils to ensure that they deliver the value for money and council tax freezes that we want. The Government are reneging on the deal at the last minute and placing those councils in that extremely difficult situation.

9.32 pm

Mr. Andrew Pelling (Croydon, Central) (Ind): We had a fairly acerbic start to the debate, with discussions about exchanges of correspondence or otherwise, which I felt was beneath the dignity of such a good Cabinet Minister as the Secretary of State. I would prefer to emphasise the importance of Front Benchers regarding themselves as accountable to the whole House, not to each other.

I start with some thanks, first to Her Majesty's Opposition for securing the debate so that we have the opportunity to represent our constituents' concerns, as the hon. Member for Hornchurch (James Brokenshire) said. I also thank the Government for the significant support that they have given Croydon in capital spending, promises of extra spending on schools, local enterprise growth initiative money and funding for extra social housing. I particularly wish to mention Councillor Dudley Mead of Croydon council, who takes a positive view of the importance of providing extra social housing, working in conjunction with the Greater London authority and the Government. I thank the Government also for the letter that I recently received about the money to support town centres that has come to Croydon, although the £50,000 provided may well be too little, bearing in mind that just in George street 17 properties are out to let.

The hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Robert Neill) was challenged on the relative bandings of the properties in his constituency and how highly they are rated. The key question would have been how much residents in south London pay in council tax. In many ways, the existence of London government inevitably means that a great deal of money is transferred away from south London to other priorities in both central and east London. There is very great deal of concern within the Croydon business community that the supplementary rate that was previously passed will mean that money will be taken away from businesses at a difficult time to support major schemes elsewhere in the capital.

I apologise for wanting to put Croydon first in this debate, but I should like to draw some issues to the attention of those on both Front Benches in looking forward to what will happen in next year's review of local government expenditure, which will perhaps cover a three-year period. The London borough of Croydon has long suffered from how the area cost adjustment is calculated within London. Croydon is regarded as an east London authority, whereas neighbouring areas such as Sutton are regarded as being in west London, where costs are presumed to be higher. That is not entirely logical. When Croydon works on a strategic partnership basis on contracts with, say, Lambeth, it will pay the same rate for work done on its highways, but it will nevertheless be rewarded, in terms of grant, at a lower rate than Lambeth.

Croydon is facing particular challenges because of the number of individuals who, because of their migration status, have no recourse to public funds. The local authority quite rightly estimates that that costs £2.5 million a year, and that a further £2.5 million will fall upon council tax payers as a result of the closure of the walk-in asylum centre in Liverpool and the transfer of some of those applicants to Croydon. I warn the Government that that is very unpopular with the residents of Croydon. When the Home Secretary came to his home town to speak to the local Labour party, he was interviewed by the Croydon Advertiser and said that no money would be provided in compensation. That had a very deleterious effect on support for the Labour party in Croydon.

The hon. Member for Hornchurch mentioned the important matter of the freedom pass. The cost in his borough will be £1 million, but in Croydon the cost will be £1.5 million. I am sure we are all determined to ensure that such financial issues do not stop us defending the provision of the freedom pass within London.

It is not as though Croydon has been slow in trying to be efficient. Sixty million pounds of efficiency savings have been found in recent years. The local council outperforms the 4 per cent. target for efficiency savings that the Government expect and seeks savings of 5 per cent., partly by working through strategic partnerships. However, with further legislation such as the Personal Care at Home Bill before the House, the reality is that the council will struggle to find such efficiency savings. It may well be difficult for Croydon to deal with the prospect of the introduction of a cap at 3 per cent. Unlike London Labour authorities, Croydon has been unable to match those zero per cent. approaches towards setting budgets. Indeed, it has been disappointing that it has had to set increases at 4 per cent. a year.

There are ways in which Croydon can make savings. It is more difficult to make the case for Croydon when a very significant loan of £145 million has been secured to build a new town hall. That cannot be a priority when the town has other important and pressing needs. I would have thought it better for Croydon to consider becoming a tenant in a development at east Croydon, on the Croydon Gateway site. That approach would have a multiplier effect in terms of getting that development going and giving others the confidence to invest in Croydon's property market. It also needs to be borne in mind that councillors receive £6 million in allowances over the four-year period that they are in office. Some transfer of that money to improve policing, for example, would be more effective.

[Mr. Andrew Pelling]

Finally, please remember that Croydon is facing dynamic population change, partly because we are the headquarters for the migration service in this country. Please also remember that many of the jobs that Croydon people enjoyed were in the City, and not necessarily at the high rates of pay talked about in the media. Croydon is dependent on public sector jobs—29 per cent. of our jobs are in the public sector. The prospect of jobs being transferred outside the south-east could prove a particular challenge for Croydon and increase the need for effective local government financial support in the future.

9.40 pm

Justine Greening (Putney) (Con): This has been an interesting and important debate. The announcement of the local government finance settlement is an opportunity for Ministers to outline their plans for the future of local government funding. How much council tax people have to pay and, critically, how much money their council will get to enable it to provide local facilities and services are of huge relevance to many people's everyday lives. The debate has never been more important, given the current economic situation, but in spite of that the only reason we have had this debate today is that the Opposition have made time for it. We have used an Opposition day to force the Government to debate a fundamentally important topic for local communities across the country. Parliament is moving—we hope—towards more accountability and transparency. Ministers' attempts to stifle debate on the local government finance settlement fly in the face of that progress.

Today's debate showed starkly the choice that the British electorate face. They can have either councils that are accountable to them or councils that are accountable to Ministers in Whitehall, who think that local communities need to be spoon-fed with central Government diktat and priorities. We have heard that repeatedly in some interesting contributions to today's debate. I do not have time to mention all of them, but the hon. Member for Blackpool, North and Fleetwood (Mrs. Humble) talked about how her council is making the most of the powers that it has. I note that it is a Conservative council, but I am sure that she is working with it to help it to make the most of its opportunities.

David Taylor: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Justine Greening: I have little time, so I will not give way. I apologise to the hon. Gentleman.

We also heard from my right hon. Friend the Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood), who talked about how his drive for efficiencies when he was in office has, in many respects, set the tone for what can be achieved. He expressed real concern about the waste and incompetence that we have seen in recent years.

We never fail on these occasions to hear from the hon. Member for Ealing, Acton and Shepherd's Bush (Mr. Slaughter). I nearly renamed him the hon. Member for Shepherd's Bush, because Ealing and Acton never seem to get a look in. Residents in that area have an MP who does not talk about their council much. He did talk about residents getting a bad deal from Hammersmith and Fulham council, but it must have been 10 times worse when his party was running the council.

We also heard an important contribution from my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (James Brokenshire) who sensitively and carefully pointed out the pressures on care budgets for the elderly, many arising from demographic changes that will be hard to deal with, however hard we try. He was right to raise his concerns about the cuts to the freedom pass, which enables many elderly people across London to remain independent in their day-to-day lives, which is critical.

In the speech we just heard, the hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Pelling) rightly made the case for his constituents. That is an example of why having an oral statement rather than a written one is so important to Members' ability to do their job and represent their communities.

The bottom line is that, however Ministers dress it up, council tax has doubled under this Government and is set to rise further—way above the current rate of inflation. As we have heard, next year, residents in many parts of the country can expect rises of 3 per cent.—well above inflation—which will push up many people's council tax to £1,500 a year. In a recession on the scale of the present one, that is unaffordable for many people.

Why are councils under so much pressure? It is partly because they have extra burdens. A raft of initiatives has been pushed down on them by Ministers. So many initiatives have been inflicted on them that the proportion of individual, area and specific grants that are ring-fenced has risen from about 4 per cent. of the grant in 1997 to 15 per cent. now. Councils are less and less able to deliver flexible services for their residents. In fact, the Local Government Association worked out that if councils had more flexibility, they could save £900 million a year. That is surely worth having to reinvest in better local services. The bottom line is that we need our councils to set their priorities locally and deliver them locally, but they cannot do that under the current Government.

Mr. Nicholas Soames (Mid-Sussex) (Con): What incentive does my hon. Friend believe there is for extremely efficient councils—for instance, West Sussex county council—that run their affairs extremely well, given that they get the lowest possible grant settlement?

Justine Greening: My hon. Friend makes an excellent point. We did not get much chance to discuss today the fact that debate on local government financing in this Chamber often focuses on how to divide up the pie, when it should be more about how we can help and encourage local councils to increase the amount of investment available to them locally. That is precisely why we have talked not only about our council tax freeze policy, under which we will work in partnership with local councils to help them to keep council tax down, but about how we will help councils willing to develop their communities through a council tax matching policy, which will help to alleviate residents' concerns about pressures on infrastructure when they develop housing in their areas, for example.

We will also encourage councils to develop local economies, jobs, businesses and extra facilities in their communities through business improvement grants. That means that we will incentivise councils' growing their business rates by allowing them to keep any increases above the inflationary rise set in Whitehall.

Mr. Slaughter: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Justine Greening: I am not going to take any interventions from the hon. Gentleman.

David Taylor: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Can your advise the House on whether "Erskine May" has anything to say about Opposition spokespeople who refuse to take anything other than friendly interventions from their own side?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Michael Lord): That is certainly not a point of order for the Chair and is simply wasting time at this point in the evening.

Justine Greening: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

I was about to say that the other big cost pressure that many councils have had to put up with has been the huge cost and waste involved in inspections. The Lyons inquiry-estimated that about £2 billion is spent on the monitoring process. We have to reduce that. That money should be going into improving local services and cutting council tax bills for residents. Instead, it is spent on exactly the wrong things: it is spent on councils reporting upwards and being accountable to Ministers, when the focus should be on being accountable to their own electorate.

The worst thing is that such burdens, ring-fencing and top-down scrutiny from Ministers in Whitehall who do not know the communities that they are dealing with are only set to grow. We have had a similar Opposition day debate before, and now we are talking about further financial pressures on local councils resulting from some of the Government's plans for taking care of the elderly. The situation is not tenable, which is why we want to set out a different vision for local government finance.

As I have said, we want to introduce incentives and to ensure that the formula is developed sensitively and that the Audit Commission can look at it to ensure that it is transparent and fair. We need to move on to a new chapter in local government finance where councils get the powers, flexibility and resources necessary to deliver what local communities, not just Ministers, want; where there are real incentives; and where councils and the communities that they represent can truly share the benefits. It is a clear choice, and the sooner the public get to make it at a general election, the better.

9.49 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government (Barbara Follett): I wish that I could say that this had been an interesting and wide-ranging examination—[HON. MEMBERS: "It says here."] No, it does not say that here. I wish that I could say that this had been an interesting and wide-ranging examination of the local government finance settlement, but it has not. With one or two honourable exceptions, on both sides of the House, this has been just the sort of blustering, grandstanding, smug, "We know better than you and just wait until our side gets in" kind of exchange that puts most normal people off politics and, frankly, puts me off listening to you all.

When I wrote to the hon. Members for Meriden (Mrs. Spelman) and for Falmouth and Camborne (Julia Goldsworthy)—I did write to them, on 12 November—I pointed out that there was going to be an oral statement. The last time there were very few Members in the Chamber, and we regretted that there were so few. We would have liked to debate it, and you do get a chance to debate it in January, when you debate the financial settlement, so you have not lost the chance—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am reluctant to interrupt the Minister, but she must use the correct parliamentary language.

Barbara Follett: Forgive me, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I should have known better.

Hon. Members: Yes, you should.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There are rules for manners all round in the House. Hon. Members should now listen to what the Minister has to say.

Barbara Follett: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

We in the Chamber should have known better, because we have wasted an opportunity this time. In his opening remarks, the Opposition spokesperson, the hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Robert Neill), conceded that the three-year settlement was a good thing. On that, if very little else, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State agreed with him. He pointed out that this year, the last year of that three-year settlement, councils will get a 4 per cent. increase in funding, bringing the investment in local government to £76.3 billion in 2010-11.

The Liberal Democrat spokesperson, the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne, at least managed to get off the subject of who did or did not initiate this debate and why. For the record, let me point out again that the House will have a chance to debate the settlement for 2010-11 when it approves the finance report in January. I will certainly try to find out what happened to the letters. I have a copy here and will give everyone one later. I was sorry that the hon. Lady did not develop her party's ideas a little more clearly. She spent most of her time telling the other parties what they were doing wrong and hinting at what she might do right if the Liberal Democrats got into power.

My hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, North and Fleetwood (Mrs. Humble) was quite a change: she was positive and proud. I really understood her pleasure in seeing her constituency develop in the way that it has. Like her, I have seen changes in my constituency, Stevenage. I am glad that she has found the prudential borrowing regime so helpful.

Despite remarks from the Opposition, my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton and Shepherd's Bush (Mr. Slaughter) has been a doughty campaigner for his constituency, including against the injustices that have come in under the Conservative council.

The hon. Member for Hornchurch (James Brokenshire) made some thoughtful comments about the high proportion of elderly residents in Havering and the growing number of older people, with whom Governments of all types will most certainly have to deal in future, and deal with seriously. I hope that he will welcome the Government's engagement with the issue of future funding for adult social care, and also that he will get involved when his local authority makes representations to the consultation on the distribution of concessionary fares that is now being held by the Department for Transport.

[Barbara Follett]

The hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Pelling) made some telling points about highways maintenance in Croydon. This is a problem across the country, and he will no doubt welcome the fact that we are keeping the formula under review, including the area cost adjustment, to which he referred, in relation to highways costs. Of course, Croydon and other London boroughs are welcome to put their evidence into the review being held by the Department for Transport, and I hope that they will do so.

I realise that I might have been impatient and immoderate at the beginning of my speech, but, as someone who cares deeply about this place and its reputation, I do not think that any of us did it any good today with the kind of debate that we indulged in. Local government finance is a highly technical and complex area that would benefit from a much more in-depth debate than the one we had here today. I regret that we have wasted our time in this way.

Mr. Redwood: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It seems to me that we should fill the time allocated for the debate. That statement from the Minister was a disgrace. If she is so critical of all the rest of us, she could at least have done the House the courtesy of giving us some information and offering a defence of a badly thought-through settlement that has been inadequately debated. Instead, she comes to the House, insults those of us who did participate in the debate, and gives us absolutely nothing in the way of argument, fact or consideration in the light of the many powerful points that have been made today. I hope that she will reflect on that and apologise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am now going put the question.

Question put (Standing Order No. 31 (2)), That the original words stand part of the Question.

The House divided: Ayes 156, Noes 330.

Division No. 16] [9.57 pm

AYES

Alleyne, Adam
Ainsworth, Mr. Peter
Amess, Mr. David
Ancram, rh Mr. Michael
Arbuthnot, rh Mr. James
Atkinson, Mr. Peter
Bacon, Mr. Richard
Baldry, Tony
Baron, Mr. John
Bellingham, Mr. Henry
Benyon, Mr. Richard
Blunt, Mr. Crispin
Bone, Mr. Peter
Brazier, Mr. Julian
Brokenshire, James
Browning, Angela
Burns, Mr. Simon
Burrowes, Mr. David
Burt, Alistair
Butterfill, Sir John
Campbell, Mr. Gregory
Carswell, Mr. Douglas
Clark, Greg
Clarke, rh Mr. Kenneth
Clifton-Brown, Mr. Geoffrey
Cormack, Sir Patrick
Cox, Mr. Geoffrey
Crabb, Mr. Stephen
Curry, rh Mr. David
Davies, David T.C. (Monmouth)
Davies, Philip
Davis, rh David
Djanogly, Mr. Jonathan
Dodds, Mr. Nigel
Donaldson, rh Mr. Jeffrey M.
Dorrell, rh Mr. Stephen
Dunne, Mr. Philip
Ellwood, Mr. Tobias
Evans, Mr. Nigel
Evennett, Mr. David
Fabricant, Michael
Field, Mr. Mark
Francois, Mr. Mark
Fraser, Christopher
Gale, Mr. Roger
Gauke, Mr. David
Gibb, Mr. Nick
Gillan, Mrs. Cheryl
Goodman, Mr. Paul
Goodwill, Mr. Robert
Gove, Michael
Gray, Mr. James
Green, Damian
Greening, Justine
Grieve, Mr. Dominic
Gummer, rh Mr. John
Hammond, Mr. Philip
Hammond, Stephen
Hands, Mr. Greg
Harper, Mr. Mark
Hayes, Mr. John
Heald, Mr. Oliver
Hendry, Charles
Herbert, Nick
Hoban, Mr. Mark
Hollobone, Mr. Philip
Holloway, Mr. Adam
Horam, Mr. John
Howarth, Mr. Gerald
Howell, John
Hunt, Mr. Jeremy
Hurd, Mr. Nick
Jack, rh Mr. Michael
Jackson, Mr. Stewart
Jenkin, Mr. Bernard
Jones, Mr. David
Kawczynski, Daniel
Key, Robert
Kirkbride, Miss Julie
Knight, rh Mr. Greg
Kramer, Susan
Laing, Mrs. Eleanor
Lait, Mrs. Jacqui
Lancaster, Mr. Mark
Lansley, Mr. Andrew
Leigh, Mr. Edward
Letwin, rh Mr. Oliver
Liddell-Grainger, Mr. Ian
Loughton, Tim
Luff, Peter
Mackay, rh Mr. Andrew
Maclean, rh David
Main, Anne
Malins, Mr. Humfrey
Maude, rh Mr. Francis
May, rh Mrs. Theresa
McCrea, Dr. William
McIntosh, Miss Anne
McLoughlin, rh Mr. Patrick
Miller, Mrs. Maria
Milton, Anne
Mitchell, Mr. Andrew
Moss, Mr. Malcolm
Mundell, David
Murrison, Dr. Andrew
Neill, Robert
O'Brien, Mr. Stephen
Ottaway, Richard
Paterson, Mr. Owen
Pelling, Mr. Andrew
Penning, Mike
Penrose, John
Pickles, Mr. Eric
Prisk, Mr. Mark
Pritchard, Mark
Redwood, rh Mr. John
Rifkind, rh Sir Malcolm
Robathan, Mr. Andrew
Robertson, Mr. Laurence
Robinson, Mrs. Iris
Rosindell, Andrew
Scott, Mr. Lee
Selous, Andrew
Shapps, Grant
Simmonds, Mark
Simpson, Mr. Keith
Smith, Chloe
Soames, Mr. Nicholas
Spelman, Mrs. Caroline
Spicer, Sir Michael
Steen, Mr. Anthony
Streeter, Mr. Gary
Stuart, Mr. Graham
Swayne, Mr. Desmond
Swire, Mr. Hugo
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Taylor, Mr. Ian
Timpson, Mr. Edward
Tredinnick, David
Turner, Mr. Andrew
Tyrie, Mr. Andrew
Vaizey, Mr. Edward
Vara, Mr. Shailesh
Viggers, Sir Peter
Villiers, Mrs. Theresa
Walker, Mr. Charles
Wallace, Mr. Ben
Waterson, Mr. Nigel
Watkinson, Angela
Wiggin, Bill
Willetts, Mr. David
Wilson, Mr. Rob
Winterton, Ann
Winterton, Sir Nicholas
Yeo, Mr. Tim
Young, rh Sir George

Tellers for the Ayes:
Jeremy Wright and James Duddridge

NOES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Ainger, Nick
Allen, Mr. Graham
Anderson, Mr. David
Anderson, Janet
Atkins, Charlotte
Austin, Mr. Ian
Austin, John
Bailey, Mr. Adrian
Bain, Mr. William
Baird, Vera
Balls, rh Ed
Barlow, Ms Celia
Barnett, John
Barron, rh Mr. Kevin
Battle, rh John
Beckett, rh Margaret
Begg, Miss Anne
Beith, rh Sir Alan
Bell, Sir Stuart
Benn, rh Hilary
Benton, Mr. Joe

Berry, Roger
Betts, Mr. Clive
Blackman, Liz
Blackman-Woods, Dr. Roberta
Blears, rh Hazel
Blizzard, Mr. Bob
Blunkett, rh Mr. David
Borrow, Mr. David S.
Bradshaw, rh Mr. Ben
Brake, Tom
Bread, Mr. Colin
Brennan, Kevin
Brooke, Annette
Brown, Lyn
Brown, rh Mr. Nicholas
Brown, Mr. Russell
Browne, rh Des
Browne, Mr. Jeremy
Bryant, Chris
Buck, Ms Karen
Burden, Richard
Burgon, Colin
Burnham, rh Andy
Burt, Lorely
Butler, Ms Dawn
Byers, rh Mr. Stephen
Cabom, rh Mr. Richard
Cairns, David
Campbell, Mr. Alan
Campbell, Mr. Ronnie
Caton, Mr. Martin
Cawsey, Mr. Ian
Challen, Colin
Chapman, Ben
Chaytor, Mr. David
Clapham, Mr. Michael
Clark, Ms Katy
Clark, Paul
Clarke, rh Mr. Charles
Clarke, rh Mr. Tom
Clelland, Mr. David
Cooker, Mr. Vernon
Connarty, Michael
Cook, Frank
Cooper, Rosie
Cooper, rh Yvette
Cousins, Jim
Crausby, Mr. David
Cryer, Mrs. Ann
Cummings, John
Cunningham, Mr. Jim
Cunningham, Tony
Davey, Mr. Edward
David, Mr. Wayne
Davidson, Mr. Ian
Davies, Mr. Dai
Davies, Mr. Quentin
Dean, Mrs. Janet
Denham, rh Mr. John
Dhanda, Mr. Parmjit
Dismore, Mr. Andrew
Dobbin, Jim
Dobson, rh Frank
Donohoe, Mr. Brian H.
Doran, Mr. Frank
Drew, Mr. David
Eagle, Angela
Eagle, Maria
Efford, Clive
Ellman, Mrs. Louise
Engel, Natascha
Ennis, Jeff
Farrelly, Paul
Farron, Tim
Fisher, Mark
Fitzpatrick, Jim
Flint, rh Caroline
Follett, Barbara
Foster, Mr. Michael (Worcester)
Francis, Dr. Hywel
Gapes, Mike
Gardiner, Barry
George, Andrew
George, rh Mr. Bruce
Gerrard, Mr. Neil
Gidley, Sandra
Gilroy, Linda
Godsiff, Mr. Roger
Goggins, rh Paul
Goldsworthy, Julia
Goodman, Helen
Griffith, Nia
Griffiths, Nigel
Grogan, Mr. John
Gwynne, Andrew
Hain, rh Mr. Peter
Hall, Mr. Mike
Hall, Patrick
Hamilton, Mr. Fabian
Hancock, Mr. Mike
Hanson, rh Mr. David
Harman, rh Ms Harriet
Harris, Dr. Evan
Harris, Mr. Tom
Havard, Mr. Dai
Healey, rh John
Heath, Mr. David
Hemming, John
Hendrick, Mr. Mark
Hepburn, Mr. Stephen
Heppell, Mr. John
Hesford, Stephen
Hewitt, rh Ms Patricia
Heyes, David
Hill, rh Keith
Hillier, Meg
Hodge, rh Margaret
Hodgson, Mrs. Sharon
Hoey, Kate
Hope, Phil
Hopkins, Kelvin
Horwood, Martin
Howarth, David
Howarth, rh Mr. George
Howells, rh Dr. Kim
Hoyle, Mr. Lindsay
Hughes, Simon
Hulme, Chris
Humble, Mrs. Joan
Hunter, Mark
Hutton, rh Mr. John
Iddon, Dr. Brian
Illsley, Mr. Eric
Irranca-Davies, Huw
Jenkins, Mr. Brian
Johnson, rh Alan
Johnson, Ms Diana R.
Jones, Helen
Jones, Mr. Kevan
Jones, Lynne
Jones, Mr. Martyn
Joyce, Mr. Eric
Kaufman, rh Sir Gerald
Keeble, Ms Sally
Keeley, Barbara
Keen, Alan
Keen, Ann
Kelly, rh Ruth
Khan, rh Mr. Sadiq
Kidney, Mr. David
Kilfoyle, Mr. Peter
Knight, rh Jim
Kumar, Dr. Ashok
Ladyman, Dr. Stephen
Lamb, Norman
Lammy, rh Mr. David
Laws, Mr. David
Laxton, Mr. Bob
Lazarowicz, Mark
Leech, Mr. John
Lepper, David
Levitt, Tom
Lewis, Mr. Ivan
Linton, Martin
Lloyd, Tony
Llwyd, Mr. Elfyn
Love, Mr. Andrew
Lucas, Ian
MacShane, rh Mr. Denis
Malik, Mr. Shahid
Mallaber, Judy
Mann, John
Marris, Rob
Marsden, Mr. Gordon
Martlew, Mr. Eric
McAvoy, rh Mr. Thomas
McCabe, Steve
McCafferty, Chris
McCarthy, Kerry
McCarthy-Fry, Sarah
McCartney, rh Mr. Ian
McFadden, rh Mr. Pat
McGuire, rh Mrs. Anne
McIsaac, Shona
McKechin, Ann
McKenna, Rosemary
McNulty, rh Mr. Tony
Meacher, rh Mr. Michael
Meale, Mr. Alan
Merron, Gillian
Michael, rh Alun
Milburn, rh Mr. Alan
Miller, Andrew
Mitchell, Mr. Austin
Moffatt, Laura
Mole, Chris
Moon, Mrs. Madeleine
Moore, Mr. Michael
Morden, Jessica
Morley, rh Mr. Elliot
Mountford, Kali
Mudie, Mr. George
Mulholland, Greg
Mullin, Mr. Chris
Murphy, Mr. Denis
Murphy, rh Mr. Jim
Murphy, rh Mr. Paul
Naysmith, Dr. Doug
Norris, Dan
O'Brien, rh Mr. Mike
O'Hara, Mr. Edward
Olner, Mr. Bill
Öpik, Lembit
Osborne, Sandra
Palmer, Dr. Nick
Pearson, Ian
Plaskitt, Mr. James
Pound, Stephen
Prentice, Bridget
Prentice, Mr. Gordon
Prescott, rh Mr. John
Primarolo, rh Dawn
Prosser, Gwyn
Pugh, Dr. John
Purchase, Mr. Ken
Raynsford, rh Mr. Nick
Reed, Mr. Andy
Reed, Mr. Jamie
Reid, rh John
Rennie, Willie
Riordan, Mrs. Linda
Robinson, Mr. Geoffrey
Rogerson, Dan
Rooney, Mr. Terry
Roy, Lindsay
Ruane, Chris
Ruddock, Joan
Russell, Bob
Russell, Christine
Salter, Martin
Sanders, Mr. Adrian
Sarwar, Mr. Mohammad
Seabeck, Alison
Sharma, Mr. Virendra
Shaw, Jonathan
Sheerman, Mr. Barry
Sheridan, Jim
Simon, Mr. Siôn
Simpson, Alan
Skinner, Mr. Dennis
Slaughter, Mr. Andy
Smith, rh Mr. Andrew
Smith, Ms Angela C. (Sheffield, Hillsborough)
Smith, Geraldine
Smith, rh Jacqui
Snelgrove, Anne
Soulsby, Sir Peter
Southworth, Helen
Spellar, rh Mr. John
Spink, Bob
Starkey, Dr. Phyllis
Stewart, Ian
Stoate, Dr. Howard
Strang, rh Dr. Gavin
Straw, rh Mr. Jack
Stringer, Graham
Stuart, Ms Gisela
Stunell, Andrew
Sutcliffe, Mr. Gerry
Tami, Mark
Taylor, Ms Dari
Taylor, David
Taylor, Dr. Richard
Teather, Sarah
Thurso, John
Timms, rh Mr. Stephen
Todd, Mr. Mark
Touhig, rh Mr. Don
Trickett, Jon
Truswell, Mr. Paul
Turner, Mr. Neil
Twigg, Derek
Ussher, Kitty
Vaz, rh Keith
Vis, Dr. Rudi
Waltho, Lynda

Ward, Claire
Watson, Mr. Tom
Watts, Mr. Dave
Webb, Steve
Wicks, rh Malcolm
Williams, rh Mr. Alan
Williams, Mark
Williams, Mr. Roger
Williams, Stephen
Willis, Mr. Phil
Wills, rh Mr. Michael
Wilson, Phil
Winnick, Mr. David
Winterton, rh Ms Rosie
Wood, Mike
Woolas, Mr. Phil
Wright, Mr. Anthony
Wright, David
Wright, Mr. Iain
Wright, Dr. Tony
Wyatt, Derek
Younger-Ross, Richard

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Frank Roy and Mary Creagh

Question accordingly negatived.

Question put forthwith (Standing Order No. 31(2)).
That the proposed words be there added.

The House divided: Ayes 290, Noes 193.

Division No. 17] [10.13 pm

AYES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Ainger, Nick
Alexander, rh Mr. Douglas
Allen, Mr. Graham
Anderson, Mr. David
Anderson, Janet
Atkins, Charlotte
Austin, Mr. Ian
Austin, John
Bailey, Mr. Adrian
Bain, Mr. William
Baird, Vera
Balls, rh Ed
Barlow, Ms Celia
Barron, rh Mr. Kevin
Battle, rh John
Beckett, rh Margaret
Begg, Miss Anne
Bell, Sir Stuart
Benn, rh Hilary
Benton, Mr. Joe
Berry, Roger
Betts, Mr. Clive
Blackman, Liz
Blackman-Woods, Dr. Roberta
Blears, rh Hazel
Blizzard, Mr. Bob
Borrow, Mr. David S.
Bradshaw, rh Mr. Ben
Brennan, Kevin
Brown, Lyn
Brown, rh Mr. Nicholas
Brown, Mr. Russell
Browne, rh Des
Bryant, Chris
Buck, Ms Karen
Burden, Richard
Burgon, Colin
Burnham, rh Andy
Butler, Ms Dawn
Byers, rh Mr. Stephen
Caborn, rh Mr. Richard
Cairns, David
Campbell, Mr. Alan
Campbell, Mr. Ronnie
Caton, Mr. Martin
Cawsey, Mr. Ian
Challen, Colin
Chapman, Ben
Chaytor, Mr. David
Clapham, Mr. Michael
Clark, Ms Katy
Clark, Paul
Clarke, rh Mr. Charles
Clarke, rh Mr. Tom
Clelland, Mr. David
Coaker, Mr. Vernon
Connarty, Michael
Cooper, Rosie
Cooper, rh Yvette
Cousins, Jim
Crausby, Mr. David
Cryer, Mrs. Ann
Cummings, John
Cunningham, Mr. Jim
Cunningham, Tony
David, Mr. Wayne
Davidson, Mr. Ian
Davies, Mr. Quentin
Dean, Mrs. Janet
Denham, rh Mr. John
Dhanda, Mr. Parmjit
Dismore, Mr. Andrew
Dobbin, Jim
Dobson, rh Frank
Donohoe, Mr. Brian H.
Doran, Mr. Frank
Drew, Mr. David
Eagle, Angela
Eagle, Maria
Efford, Clive
Elman, Mrs. Louise
Engel, Natascha
Ennis, Jeff
Farrelly, Paul
Fisher, Mark
Fitzpatrick, Jim
Flint, rh Caroline
Follett, Barbara
Foster, Mr. Michael (Worcester)
Francis, Dr. Hywel
Gapes, Mike
Gardiner, Barry
George, rh Mr. Bruce
Gerrard, Mr. Neil
Gilroy, Linda
Godsiff, Mr. Roger
Goggins, rh Paul
Goodman, Helen
Griffith, Nia
Griffiths, Nigel
Grogan, Mr. John
Gwynne, Andrew
Hain, rh Mr. Peter
Hall, Mr. Mike
Hall, Patrick
Hamilton, Mr. David
Hamilton, Mr. Fabian
Hanson, rh Mr. David
Harman, rh Ms Harriet
Harris, Mr. Tom
Havard, Mr. Dai
Healey, rh John
Hendrick, Mr. Mark
Hepburn, Mr. Stephen
Heppell, Mr. John
Hesford, Stephen
Hewitt, rh Ms Patricia
Heyes, David
Hill, rh Keith
Hillier, Meg
Hodge, rh Margaret
Hodgson, Mrs. Sharon
Hoey, Kate
Hope, Phil
Hopkins, Kelvin
Howarth, rh Mr. George
Howells, rh Dr. Kim
Hoyle, Mr. Lindsay
Humble, Mrs. Joan
Hutton, rh Mr. John
Iddon, Dr. Brian
Illsley, Mr. Eric
Irranca-Davies, Huw
Jenkins, Mr. Brian
Johnson, rh Alan
Johnson, Ms Diana R.
Jones, Helen
Jones, Mr. Kevan
Jones, Lynne
Jones, Mr. Martyn
Joyce, Mr. Eric
Kaufman, rh Sir Gerald
Keeble, Ms Sally
Keeley, Barbara
Keen, Alan
Keen, Ann
Kelly, rh Ruth
Khan, rh Mr. Sadiq
Kidney, Mr. David
Kilfoyle, Mr. Peter
Knight, rh Jim
Ladyman, Dr. Stephen
Lammy, rh Mr. David
Laxton, Mr. Bob
Lazarowicz, Mark
Lepper, David
Levitt, Tom
Lewis, Mr. Ivan
Linton, Martin
Lloyd, Tony
Love, Mr. Andrew
Lucas, Ian
MacShane, rh Mr. Denis
Mactaggart, Fiona
Malik, Mr. Shahid
Mallaber, Judy
Mann, John
Marris, Rob
Marsden, Mr. Gordon
Martlew, Mr. Eric
McAvoy, rh Mr. Thomas
McCabe, Steve
McCafferty, Chris
McCarthy, Kerry
McCarthy-Fry, Sarah
McFadden, rh Mr. Pat
McFall, rh John
McGovern, Mr. Jim
McGuire, rh Mrs. Anne
McIsaac, Shona
McKechin, Ann
McKenna, Rosemary
McNulty, rh Mr. Tony
Meacher, rh Mr. Michael
Meale, Mr. Alan
Merron, Gillian
Michael, rh Alun
Milburn, rh Mr. Alan
Miller, Andrew
Mitchell, Mr. Austin
Moffat, Anne
Moffatt, Laura
Mole, Chris
Moon, Mrs. Madeleine
Morden, Jessica
Morley, rh Mr. Elliot
Mountford, Kali
Mudie, Mr. George
Mullin, Mr. Chris
Murphy, Mr. Denis
Murphy, rh Mr. Jim
Murphy, rh Mr. Paul
Naysmith, Dr. Doug
Norris, Dan
O'Brien, rh Mr. Mike
O'Hara, Mr. Edward
Oliver, Mr. Bill
Osborne, Sandra
Palmer, Dr. Nick
Pearson, Ian
Pelling, Mr. Andrew
Plaskitt, Mr. James
Pound, Stephen
Prentice, Bridget
Prentice, Mr. Gordon
Prescott, rh Mr. John
Primarolo, rh Dawn
Prosser, Gwyn
Purchase, Mr. Ken
Raynsford, rh Mr. Nick
Reed, Mr. Andy
Reed, Mr. Jamie
Reid, rh John
Riordan, Mrs. Linda
Robinson, Mr. Geoffrey
Rooney, Mr. Terry
Roy, Lindsay
Ruane, Chris
Ruddock, Joan
Russell, Christine
Salter, Martin
Sarwar, Mr. Mohammad
Seabeck, Alison
Sharma, Mr. Virendra
Shaw, Jonathan
Sheerman, Mr. Barry
Sheridan, Jim
Simon, Mr. Siôn
Simpson, Alan
Skinner, Mr. Dennis

Slaughter, Mr. Andy
Smith, rh Mr. Andrew
Smith, Ms Angela C. (Sheffield, Hillsborough)
Smith, Geraldine
Smith, rh Jacqui
Snelgrove, Anne
Soulsby, Sir Peter
Southworth, Helen
Spellar, rh Mr. John
Spink, Bob
Starkey, Dr. Phyllis
Stewart, Ian
Stoate, Dr. Howard
Strang, rh Dr. Gavin
Straw, rh Mr. Jack
Stringer, Graham
Stuart, Ms Gisela
Sutcliffe, Mr. Gerry
Tami, Mark
Taylor, Ms Dari
Taylor, David
Taylor, Dr. Richard
Timms, rh Mr. Stephen
Todd, Mr. Mark
Touhig, rh Mr. Don
Trickett, Jon
Truswell, Mr. Paul
Turner, Mr. Neil
Twigg, Derek
Ussher, Kitty
Vaz, rh Keith
Vis, Dr. Rudi
Waltho, Lynda
Ward, Claire
Watson, Mr. Tom
Watts, Mr. Dave
Wicks, rh Malcolm
Williams, rh Mr. Alan
Wills, rh Mr. Michael
Wilson, Phil
Winnick, Mr. David
Winterton, rh Ms Rosie
Wood, Mike
Woolas, Mr. Phil
Wright, Mr. Anthony
Wright, David
Wright, Mr. Iain
Wright, Dr. Tony
Wyatt, Derek

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Frank Roy and Mary Creagh

NOES

Afriyie, Adam
Ainsworth, Mr. Peter
Amess, Mr. David
Ancram, rh Mr. Michael
Arbuthnot, rh Mr. James
Atkinson, Mr. Peter
Bacon, Mr. Richard
Baldry, Tony
Baron, Mr. John
Barrett, John
Beith, rh Sir Alan
Bellingham, Mr. Henry
Benyon, Mr. Richard
Blunt, Mr. Crispin
Bone, Mr. Peter
Brake, Tom
Brazier, Mr. Julian
Breed, Mr. Colin
Brokenshire, James
Brooke, Annette
Browning, Angela
Burns, Mr. Simon
Burrowes, Mr. David
Burt, Alistair
Burt, Lorely
Butterfill, Sir John
Campbell, Mr. Gregory
Carswell, Mr. Douglas
Clark, Greg
Clarke, rh Mr. Kenneth
Clifton-Brown, Mr. Geoffrey
Cormack, Sir Patrick
Cox, Mr. Geoffrey
Crabb, Mr. Stephen
Curry, rh Mr. David
Davey, Mr. Edward
Davies, Mr. Dai
Davies, David T.C. (Monmouth)
Davies, Philip
Davis, rh David
Djanogly, Mr. Jonathan
Dodds, Mr. Nigel
Donaldson, rh Mr. Jeffrey M.
Dorrell, rh Mr. Stephen
Dunne, Mr. Philip
Ellwood, Mr. Tobias
Evans, Mr. Nigel
Evennett, Mr. David
Fabricant, Michael
Fallon, Mr. Michael
Farron, Tim
Field, Mr. Mark
Francois, Mr. Mark
Fraser, Christopher
Gale, Mr. Roger
Gauke, Mr. David
George, Andrew
Gibb, Mr. Nick
Gidley, Sandra
Gillan, Mrs. Cheryl
Goldsworthy, Julia
Goodman, Mr. Paul
Goodwill, Mr. Robert
Gove, Michael
Gray, Mr. James
Green, Damian
Greening, Justine
Grieve, Mr. Dominic
Gummer, rh Mr. John
Hammond, Mr. Philip
Hammond, Stephen
Hancock, Mr. Mike
Hands, Mr. Greg
Harper, Mr. Mark
Harris, Dr. Evan
Hayes, Mr. John
Heald, Mr. Oliver
Heath, Mr. David
Hemming, John
Hendry, Charles
Herbert, Nick
Hoban, Mr. Mark
Hollobone, Mr. Philip
Holloway, Mr. Adam
Horam, Mr. John
Horwood, Martin
Howarth, David
Howarth, Mr. Gerald
Howell, John
Hughes, Simon
Huhne, Chris
Hunt, Mr. Jeremy
Hunter, Mark
Hurd, Mr. Nick
Jack, rh Mr. Michael
Jackson, Mr. Stewart
Jenkin, Mr. Bernard
Jones, Mr. David
Key, Robert
Kirkbride, Miss Julie
Knight, rh Mr. Greg
Laing, Mrs. Eleanor
Lait, Mrs. Jacqui
Lamb, Norman
Lancaster, Mr. Mark
Lansley, Mr. Andrew
Leech, Mr. John
Leigh, Mr. Edward
Letwin, rh Mr. Oliver
Liddell-Grainger, Mr. Ian
Loughton, Tim
Luff, Peter
Mackay, rh Mr. Andrew
Maclean, rh David
Main, Anne
Malins, Mr. Humfrey
Maude, rh Mr. Francis
May, rh Mrs. Theresa
McCrea, Dr. William
McIntosh, Miss Anne
McLoughlin, rh Mr. Patrick
Miller, Mrs. Maria
Milton, Anne
Mitchell, Mr. Andrew
Moore, Mr. Michael
Moss, Mr. Malcolm
Mulholland, Greg
Mundell, David
Murrison, Dr. Andrew
Neill, Robert
O'Brien, Mr. Stephen
Öpik, Lembit
Ottaway, Richard
Paterson, Mr. Owen
Penning, Mike
Penrose, John
Pickles, Mr. Eric
Prisk, Mr. Mark
Pritchard, Mark
Pugh, Dr. John
Redwood, rh Mr. John
Rennie, Willie
Rifkind, rh Sir Malcolm
Robathan, Mr. Andrew
Robertson, Mr. Laurence
Robinson, Mrs. Iris
Rogerson, Dan
Rosindell, Andrew
Russell, Bob
Sanders, Mr. Adrian
Scott, Mr. Lee
Selous, Andrew
Shapps, Grant
Simmonds, Mark
Simpson, Mr. Keith
Smith, Chloe
Soames, Mr. Nicholas
Spelman, Mrs. Caroline
Spicer, Sir Michael
Steen, Mr. Anthony
Streeter, Mr. Gary
Stuart, Mr. Graham
Stunell, Andrew
Swayne, Mr. Desmond
Swire, Mr. Hugo
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Taylor, Mr. Ian
Teather, Sarah
Thurso, John
Timpson, Mr. Edward
Turner, Mr. Andrew
Tyrie, Mr. Andrew
Vaizey, Mr. Edward
Vara, Mr. Shailesh
Viggers, Sir Peter
Villiers, Mrs. Theresa
Walker, Mr. Charles
Wallace, Mr. Ben
Waterson, Mr. Nigel
Watkinson, Angela
Webb, Steve
Wiggin, Bill
Willetts, Mr. David
Williams, Mark
Williams, Mr. Roger
Williams, Stephen
Willis, Mr. Phil
Wilson, Mr. Rob
Winterton, Ann
Winterton, Sir Nicholas
Yeo, Mr. Tim
Young, rh Sir George
Younger-Ross, Richard

Tellers for the Noes:
James Duddridge and Jeremy Wright

Question accordingly agreed to.

The Deputy Speaker declared the main Question, as amended, to be agreed to (Standing Order No. 31(2)).

Resolved,

That this House congratulates the Government on introducing the first ever three year settlement for local government which will have provided an additional £8.6 billion for local government over three years, and continues to build upon the 39 per cent. real terms increase in funding provided to local government over the first 10 years of this Government; welcomes the four per cent. increase proposed for next year which, given the current level of inflation, would be the 13th straight year of above inflation increases; recognises the immense help this will give to local authorities throughout the country in dealing with difficult economic circumstances resulting from the global downturn; anticipates the lowest council tax increase for 16 years; rejects the calls from Her Majesty's Opposition to cut the Department for Communities and Local Government's budget by over £1 billion, which would lead either to cuts in local services or an increase in council tax bills of one per cent. to pay for the missing millions; and further welcomes the Government's Green Paper, Shaping the Future of Care Together, which sets out its vision to reform the adult care and support system in England.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker]

Business without Debate

DELEGATED LEGISLATION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall take motions 2 and 3 together.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith (Standing Order No. 118(6)),

Corporation Tax

That the draft Real Estate Investment Trusts (Prescribed Arrangements) Regulations 2009, which were laid before this House on 5 November, in the previous Session of Parliament, be approved.

Social Security

That the draft Social Security (Contributions Credits for Parents and Carers) Regulations 2009, which were laid before this House on 12 October, in the previous Session of Parliament, be approved.—(Mr. Mudie.)

Question agreed to.

EUROPEAN UNION DOCUMENTS

Motion made, and Question put forthwith (Standing Order No. 119(1)),

Fisheries Catch Quotas for 2010

That this House takes note of European Union Document No. 14738/09 and Addendum 1, draft Council Regulation fixing for 2010 the fishing opportunities for certain fish stocks and groups of fish stocks, applicable in Community waters and, for Community vessels, in waters where catch limitations are required; supports the Government's approach, which is in line with the principles enshrined in the Common Fisheries Policy, to seek adoption of measures which provide for the sustainable exploitation of fishery resources, based on sound scientific advice and on the precautionary approach; and further accepts the Government's overarching objective of seeking a balanced and fair settlement across all the negotiations which promotes the long-term sustainable exploitation of fish stocks in European waters, the economic viability of the UK fishing industry and the protection of vulnerable species.—(Mr. Mudie.)

Question agreed to.

REGIONAL SELECT COMMITTEES (LONDON)

Motion made,

That Ms Karen Buck, Jeremy Corbyn, Clive Efford, Siobhain McDonagh, Mr Andy Slaughter and Mr Andrew Pelling be members of the London Regional Select Committee.—(Mr. Mudie.)

Hon. Members: Object.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE

Motion made,

That—

(1) Standing Order No. 14 (Arrangement of public business) shall have effect for this Session with the following modifications, namely:

In paragraph (4) the word 'eight' shall be substituted for the word 'thirteen' in line 42 and in paragraph (5) the word 'fifth' shall be substituted for the word 'eighth' in line 44;

(2) Standing Order No. 90 (Second reading committees) shall have effect for this Session with the following modification, namely:

In paragraph (2) the word 'fifth' shall be substituted for the word 'eighth' in line 21; and

(3) Private Members' Bills shall have precedence over Government business on 29 January; 5 and 26 February; 5 and 12 March; 23 and 30 April; and 7 May.—(Mr. Mudie.)

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We now come to petitions—

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I advise the House that time is crucial and I would like to explain how we plan to do this.

There are a large number of petitions to be presented and I hope that it will be of assistance to the House if I set out how we shall proceed.

Once the first petition relating to the Badman report has been read to the House, with its prayer, subsequent petitions on the same topic should not be read out in full. Members should give a brief description of the number and location of the petitioners, and state that the petition is "in the same terms".

When a Member has presented a petition, she or he should proceed directly to the petitions bag at the back of the Chair. I will call the next Member immediately their predecessor has finished speaking.

In addition to petitions relating to the Badman report, I understand that there are two Members who wish to present petitions relating to Equitable Life. I trust that these will also be presented expeditiously.

At the expiry of half an hour no further petitions may be presented orally, but they may be placed in the petition bag and will be recorded as formally presented.

I call Mr. Graham Stuart.

PETITIONS

Badman Report (Beverley and Holderness)

10.27 pm

Mr. Graham Stuart (Beverley and Holderness) (Con): This is an historic night. More than 70 right hon. and hon. Members will present petitions from more than 120 different constituencies opposing the compulsory registration and monitoring of home-educated children. The previous record for petitions presented in one day is 44 in March 2006.

If enacted, the Government's proposals will, for the first time in our history, tear away from parents and give to the state the responsibility for a child's education. I should like to thank the thousands of people who have signed the petitions, the co-ordinators and organisers, and those outside in candle-lit vigil earlier this evening.

I am grateful to the Speaker for allowing us half an hour to present the petitions. As has already been said, although I shall read out the full text, he has asked that others do not do so.

I wish to present a petition on behalf of those in the Beverley and Holderness constituency opposed to proposals to register and monitor home-educated children.

The petition states:

The Petition of persons resident in the Beverley and Holderness parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.

[P000490]

I also wish to present petitions in the same terms on behalf of the my hon. Friends the Members for North-East Hertfordshire (Mr. Heald) and for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples), the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Oaten), my hon. Friends the Members for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) and for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire), my right hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Andrew Miller), the right hon. Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Clarke), the hon. Members for Newport, West (Paul Flynn), for Colne Valley (Kali Mountford), for Finchley and Golders Green (Dr. Vis), for Hereford (Mr. Keetch), for Dudley, North (Mr. Austin), and for Leeds, North-West (Greg Mulholland), my hon. Friends the Members for Salisbury (Robert Key) and for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Soames), the hon. Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Dr. Turner), my hon. Friends the Members for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Paice) and for The Wrekin (Mark Pritchard), the hon. and learned Member for Redcar (Vera Baird), the right hon. Member for Basildon (Angela E. Smith), my hon. Friend the Member for Mole Valley (Sir Paul Beresford), my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Cox), the hon. Member for Conwy (Mrs. Williams), my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Grant Shapps), the hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Wright), my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mrs. Lait), the hon. Members for Dudley, South (Ian Pearson), for Wrexham (Ian Lucas), for Montgomeryshire (Lembit Öpik), for Battersea (Martin Linton), for Poplar and Canning Town (Jim Fitzpatrick), and for City of Durham (Dr. Blackman-Woods), the right hon. Member for Stretford and Urmston (Beverley Hughes), the hon. Members for Crawley (Laura Moffatt) and for Reading, West (Martin Salter), the right hon. Member for Torfaen (Mr. Murphy) and the hon. Members for Eccles (Ian Stewart), for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Joan Walley) and for Ealing, Acton and Shepherd's Bush (Mr. Slaughter).

Badman Report (North East Hertfordshire)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the parliamentary constituency of North East Hertfordshire and others,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000621]

Badman Report (Stratford-on-Avon)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Stratford-on-Avon parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000594]

Badman Report (Winchester)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Winchester parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory

[Mr. Graham Stuart]

annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000489]

Badman Report (Daventry)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Daventry parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000588]

Badman Report (Spelthorne)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Spelthorne parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000488]

Badman Report (Skipton and Ripon)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Skipton and Ripon parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000590]

Badman Report (Ellesmere Port and Neston)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Ellesmere Port and Neston parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000598]

Badman Report (Norwich South)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Norwich South parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000494]

Badman Report (Newport West)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Newport West parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000555]

Badman Report (Colne Valley)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Colne Valley parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000591]

Badman Report (Finchley and Golders Green)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Finchley and Golders Green parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000620]

Badman Report (Hereford)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Hereford parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that

[Mr. Graham Stuart]

the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000491]

Badman Report (Dudley North)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Dudley North parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000595]

Badman Report (Leeds North West)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Leeds North West parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000546]

Badman Report (Salisbury)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Salisbury parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000609]

Badman Report (Mid Sussex)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Mid Sussex parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000584]

Badman Report (Brighton Kemptown)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Brighton Kemptown parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000556]

Badman Report (South East Cambridgeshire)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the South East Cambridgeshire parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000557]

Badman Report (The Wrekin)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in The Wrekin parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000596]

Badman Report (Redcar)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Redcar parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000593]

Badman Report (Basildon)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Basildon parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that

[Mr. Graham Stuart]

the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000592]

Badman Report (Mole Valley)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Mole Valley parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000600]

Badman Report (Torridge and West Devon)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Torridge and West Devon parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000574]

Badman Report (Conwy)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Conwy parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000589]

Badman Report (Welwyn Hatfield)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Welwyn Hatfield constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000607]

Badman Report (Hartlepool)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Hartlepool constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000611]

Badman Report (Beckenham)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Beckenham constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000610]

Badman Report (Dudley South)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Dudley South constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000605]

Badman Report (Wrexham)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Wrexham constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000606]

Badman Report (Montgomeryshire)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Montgomeryshire constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that

[Mr Graham Stuart]

the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000572]

Badman Report (Battersea)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Battersea constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000578]

Badman Report (Poplar and Canning Town)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Poplar and Canning Town constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000577]

Badman Report (City of Durham)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the City of Durham constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000573]

Badman Report (Stretford and Urmston)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Stretford and Urmston constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000585]

Badman Report (Crawley)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Crawley constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000582]

Badman Report (Reading West)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Reading West constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000608]

Badman Report (Torfaen)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Torfaen constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000604]

Badman Report (Eccles)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Eccles constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000597]

Badman Report (Stoke-on-Trent)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Stoke-on-Trent constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000575]

Badman Report (Ealing, Acton and Shepherd's Bush)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Ealing, Acton and Shepherd's Bush constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000602]

Mr. Graham Stuart also presented petitions in the same terms on behalf of his hon. Friends the member for Rayleigh (Mr. Francois) [P000570]; for Northampton, South (Mr. Binley) [P000619]; for South Staffordshire (Sir Patrick Cormack) [P000601]; for St. Albans (Anne Main) [P000496]; and the hon. Member for Burton (Mrs. Dean) [P000603].

Equitable Life (Ware)

10.30 pm

Mr. Mark Prisk (Hertford and Stortford) (Con): I wish to present two petitions. The first is on behalf of constituents living in Ware regarding the Government's response to the parliamentary ombudsman's reports on Equitable Life.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of residents of the constituency of Hertford and Stortford in England regarding the Government's response to the Parliamentary Ombudsman's reports on Equitable Life.

Declares that the Petitioners either are or they represent or support members, former members or personal representatives of deceased members of the Equitable Life Assurance Society who have suffered maladministration leading to injustice, as found by the Parliamentary Ombudsman in her report upon Equitable Life, ordered by the House of Commons to be printed on 16 July 2008 and bearing reference number HC 815; and further declares that the Petitioners or those whom they represent or support have suffered regulatory failure on the part of the public bodies responsible from the year 1992 onwards, but have not received compensation for the resulting losses and outrage.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Government to uphold the constitutional standing of the Parliamentary Ombudsman by complying with the findings and recommendations of her Report upon Equitable Life.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000459]

Badman Report (Hertford and Stortford)

Mr. Prisk: My second petition is on behalf of my constituents across Hertford and Stortford concerning the recommendations of the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Hertford and Stortford parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000451]

Badman Report (Hexham)

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham) (Con): I present a petition on behalf of 29 constituents in the Hexham constituency on home education.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Hexham parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000460]

Badman Report (Hemel Hempstead)

10.31 pm

Mike Penning (Hemel Hempstead) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of my constituents.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Hemel Hempstead parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000439]

Badman Report (Ashford)

Damian Green (Ashford) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of my constituents.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Ashford parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000464]

Badman Report (Brighton Pavilion)

David Lepper (Brighton, Pavilion) (Lab/Co-op): I am proud to present a petition on behalf of 49 constituents in Brighton, Pavilion.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Brighton Pavilion parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000462]

Badman Report (Eddisbury)

10.32 pm

Mr. Stephen O'Brien (Eddisbury) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of Eddisbury constituents. Five are numbered on the petition.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Eddisbury parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000471]

Badman Report (Guildford)

Anne Milton (Guildford) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of approximately 70 residents of Guildford who are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Guildford parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000469]

Badman Report (Preseli Pembrokeshire)

Mr. Stephen Crabb (Preseli Pembrokeshire) (Con): I, too, should like to present a petition on behalf of 37 of my constituents on the subject of the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of residents in the Preseli Pembrokeshire parliamentary constituency and others,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000468]

Badman Report (Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross)

John Thurso (Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross) (LD): I should like to present a petition on behalf of the residents of Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross on the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated

at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000461]

Badman Report (Orpington)

Mr. John Horam (Orpington) (Con): My petition is on behalf of residents of Orpington and Bromley.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Orpington parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000473]

Badman Report (South West Bedfordshire)

Andrew Selous (South-West Bedfordshire) (Con): I present a petition on behalf of 16 of my constituents in respect of the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the South West Bedfordshire parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000477]

Badman Report (Wimbledon)

10.33 pm

Stephen Hammond (Wimbledon) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of the residents of Wimbledon.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Wimbledon parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000475]

Badman Report (East Surrey)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth (East Surrey) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of some 90 my constituents.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the East Surrey parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000478]

Equitable Life (Carshalton and Wallington)

Tom Brake (Carshalton and Wallington) (LD): I should like to present two petitions on behalf of residents of Carshalton and Wallington. The first is on Equitable Life.

Following is the full text of the petition.

[The Petition of residents of the constituency of Carshalton and Wallington in the Surrey region of England regarding the Government's response to the Parliamentary Ombudsman's reports on Equitable Life.

Declares that the Petitioners either are or they represent or support members, former members or personal representatives of deceased members of the Equitable Life Assurance Society who have suffered maladministration leading to injustice, as found by the Parliamentary Ombudsman in her report upon Equitable Life, ordered by the House of Commons to be printed on 16 July 2008 and bearing reference number HC 815; and further declares that the Petitioners or those whom they represent or support have suffered regulatory failure on the part of the public bodies responsible from the year 1992 onwards, but have not received compensation for the resulting losses and outrage.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Government to uphold the constitutional standing of the Parliamentary Ombudsman by complying with the findings and recommendations of her Report upon Equitable Life.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.

[P000482]

Badman Report (Carshalton and Wallington)

Tom Brake: My second petition is on behalf of home educators in Carshalton and Wallington, on their concerns about the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Carshalton and Wallington parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000481]

Badman Report (Huntingdon)

Mr. Jonathan Djanogly (Huntingdon) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of eight constituents of the Huntingdon constituency regarding the recommendations made in the report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Huntingdon parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000463]

Badman Report (Wellingborough)

Mr. Peter Bone (Wellingborough) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of the constituents of Wellingborough.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Wellingborough parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000484]

Badman Report (Woking)

Mr. Humfrey Malins (Woking) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of 75 residents of the Woking constituency.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Woking parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000487]

Badman Report (Macclesfield)

10.34 pm

Sir Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of the Macclesfield constituency, strongly opposed to the ill-judged recommendations of the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Macclesfield parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000495]

Badman Report (Chipping Barnet)

Mrs. Theresa Villiers (Chipping Barnet) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of home educators in the Chipping Barnet constituency, expressing their concerns about the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Chipping Barnet parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000485]

Badman Report (Manchester, Withington)

Mr. John Leech (Manchester, Withington) (LD): I would like to present a petition on behalf of 29 of my constituents.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Manchester, Withington parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

[Mr. John Leech]

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000492]

Badman Report (Cotswold)

Mr. Geoffrey Clifton-Brown (Cotswold) (Con): I would like to present a petition on behalf of 45 of my constituents, protesting at the proposals in the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Cotswold parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000497]

Badman Report (North East Milton Keynes)

10.35 pm

Mr. Mark Lancaster (North-East Milton Keynes) (Con): I would like to present two petitions. The first is on behalf of 25 of my own constituents. The second petition is on behalf of six constituents of Mr. Speaker.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the North East Milton Keynes parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000501]

Badman Report (Buckingham)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Buckingham parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000500]

Badman Report (Bromsgrove)

Miss Julie Kirkbride (Bromsgrove) (Con): I would like to present a petition on behalf of 35 home educators in the Bromsgrove constituency, opposed to the proposals in the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Bromsgrove parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory

annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000503]

Badman Report (High Peak)

Tom Levitt (High Peak) (Lab): I have been asked to present a petition of 22 names on behalf of the constituents from High Peak.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the High Peak parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000506]

Badman Report (Walthamstow)

Mr. Neil Gerrard (Walthamstow) (Lab): I would like to present a petition on behalf of 70 constituents of Walthamstow on the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Walthamstow parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000505]

Badman Report (Fareham)

Mr. Mark Hoban (Fareham) (Con): I would like to present a petition on behalf of 23 of my constituents.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Fareham parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000474]

Badman Report (South West Hertfordshire)

Mr. David Gauke (South-West Hertfordshire) (Con): I would like to present a petition on behalf of 53 of my constituents on the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the South West Hertfordshire parliamentary constituency,

[Mr. David Gauke]

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000508]

Badman Report (Congleton)

10.36 pm

Ann Winterton (Congleton) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of 29 residents of Congleton, opposing the proposals in the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Congleton parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000507]

Badman Report (North East Hampshire)

Mr. James Arbuthnot (North-East Hampshire) (Con): This is a petition on behalf of 39 residents of North-East Hampshire.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the North East Hampshire parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000509]

Badman Report (Chesham and Amersham)

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham) (Con): I would like to present a petition from Chesham and Amersham on behalf of approximately 100 constituents objecting to the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Chesham and Amersham parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000504]

Badman Report (North Wiltshire)

Mr. James Gray (North Wiltshire) (Con): I beg to present a petition on behalf of the people of North Wiltshire, a modest but important 15 of them, who are equally against the proposals in the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the North Wiltshire parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000512]

Badman Report (Hazel Grove)

Andrew Stunell (Hazel Grove) (LD): I am pleased to submit a petition on behalf of seven of my constituents in the same terms.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Hazel Grove parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000510]

Badman Report (Vauxhall)

10.37 pm

Kate Hoey (Vauxhall) (Lab): I am very happy to present a petition on behalf of 39 of my constituents expressing their views on the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Vauxhall parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000528]

Badman Report (Enfield Southgate)

Mr. David Burrowes (Enfield, Southgate) (Con): I am very pleased to present a petition on behalf of 30 residents in Enfield, Southgate against the recommendations of the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Enfield Southgate parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000525]

Badman Report (Croydon Central)

Mr. Andrew Pelling (Croydon, Central) (Ind): In presenting a petition on behalf of 32 residents of Croydon, Central, I would like to congratulate the hon. Member for Beverley and Holderness (Mr. Stuart) on co-ordinating this mass presentation of petitions.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Croydon Central parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000519]

Badman Report (Regent's Park and Kensington North)

Ms Karen Buck (Regent's Park and Kensington, North) (Lab): I would like to present a petition of 17 home educators in Regent's Park and Kensington, North.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Regents Park and Kensington North parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000527]

Badman Report (Wokingham)

Mr. John Redwood (Wokingham) (Con): I would like to present a petition against the Badman report on behalf of 41 names, presented to me by the constituents of Wokingham.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Wokingham parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000521]

Badman Report (Berwick-upon-Tweed)

Sir Alan Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed) (LD): I am very happy to present a petition on behalf of 42 residents of the Berwick-upon-Tweed constituency, expressing their concerns about the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Berwick-upon-Tweed parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated

at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000522]

Badman Report (Bristol North-West)

10.38 pm

Dr. Doug Naysmith (Bristol, North-West) (Lab/Co-op): As others have this evening, I would like to present a petition of 53 persons resident in the Bristol, North-West parliamentary constituency who are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Bristol North West parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000523]

Badman Report (Stroud)

Mr. David Drew (Stroud) (Lab/Co-op): I am delighted to present a petition on behalf of 147 of my constituents in the same vein as those of other Members.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Stroud parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000524]

Badman Report (North East Bedfordshire)

Alistair Burt (North-East Bedfordshire) (Con): I am delighted to present a petition on behalf of a dozen good and true people of the glorious constituency of North-East Bedfordshire.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the North East Bedfordshire parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000541]

Badman Report (Crewe and Nantwich)

Mr. Edward Timpson (Crewe and Nantwich) (Con): I wish to present a petition on behalf of 33 of my constituents.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Crewe and Nantwich parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

[Mr. Edward Timpson]

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P0003540]

Badman Report (Tewkesbury)

10.39 pm

Mr. Laurence Robertson (Tewkesbury) (Con): I would like to present a petition on behalf of 25 of my Tewkesbury constituents, who are concerned about recommendations in the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Tewkesbury parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P0003542]

Badman Report (Torbay)

Mr. Adrian Sanders (Torbay) (LD): I wish to present a petition on behalf of 22 constituents and others from Torbay and south Devon.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Torbay parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P0003543]

Badman Report (Henley on Thames)

John Howell (Henley) (Con): I would like to present a petition for 21 residents of Henley.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Henley on Thames parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P0003480]

Badman Report (Cities of London and Westminster)

Mr. Mark Field (Cities of London and Westminster) (Con): I should like to present this petition on behalf of 55 people from the Cities of London and Westminster constituency.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Cities of London and Westminster parliamentary constituency and others,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000544]

Badman Report (Broxbourne)

Mr. Charles Walker (Broxbourne) (Con): I should like to present my petition on behalf of 29 people from the constituency of Broxbourne expressing their concerns about the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Broxbourne parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000545]

Badman Report (Witney)

10.40 pm

Tony Baldry (Banbury) (Con): I should like—

[Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Michael Lord): Order. If the hon. Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne) is not going to present a petition, perhaps he could either leave the Chamber or contain himself.

Tony Baldry: I should like to present a petition on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Cameron). I associate myself with the terms of the petition.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Witney parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000547]

Badman Report (North Shropshire)

Mr. Owen Paterson (North Shropshire) (Con): I would like to present a petition from a large number of constituents across North Shropshire, led by Mr. and Mrs. Hardy from Market Drayton, who are deeply concerned about the iniquitous recommendations of the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the North Shropshire parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

[Mr. Owen Paterson]

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000538]

Badman Report (Newbury)

Mr. Richard Benyon (Newbury) (Con): I should like to present a petition in the same terms on behalf of 18 constituents of the Newbury constituency.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Newbury parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are 'concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000472]

Badman Report (Wantage)

Mr. Edward Vaizey (Wantage) (Con): It is my honour and privilege to present a petition on behalf of 36 constituents of mine—that is just the tip of the iceberg—objecting to the Badman report in the terms already put forward.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Wantage parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000516]

Badman Report (Kettering)

10.40 pm

Mr. Philip Hollobone (Kettering) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of 22 residents of the Kettering constituency objecting in the same terms to the recommendations in the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Kettering parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000533]

Badman Report (Staffordshire Moorlands)

Charlotte Atkins (Staffordshire, Moorlands) (Lab): I am delighted to present a petition of 121 names from the constituency of Staffordshire, Moorlands protesting about the recommendations of the Badman report. I am delighted to have met several of the children involved when they presented the petition to me.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Staffordshire Moorlands parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that

the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England, but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000534]

Badman Report (Wycombe)

10.41 pm

Mr. Paul Goodman (Wycombe) (Con): I rise to present a petition in the same terms on behalf of five of my constituents.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Wycombe parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000533]

Badman Report (East Devon)

Mr. Hugo Swire (East Devon) (Con): It is my honour to present a petition on behalf of 69 constituents of voicing their concerns about the contents of the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the East Devon parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000531]

Badman Report (Barnsley Central)

Mr. Eric Illsley (Barnsley, Central) (Lab): I should like to present a petition in the same terms on behalf of five of my constituents from Barnsley, Central.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Barnsley Central parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000550]

Badman Report (Richmond Park)

Susan Kramer (Richmond Park) (LD): I rise to present a petition in the same terms on behalf of eight of the constituents of Richmond Park.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[Susan Kramer]

[The Petition of persons resident in the Richmond Park parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000549]

Badman Report (Selly Oak)

10.42 pm

Lynne Jones (Birmingham, Selly Oak) (Lab): I am presenting a petition on behalf of 37 households in the constituency of Birmingham, Selly Oak who are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman report.

Following is the full text of thepetition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Selly Oak parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000548]

Badman Report (Brent East)

Sarah Teather (Brent, East) (LD): I should like to present two petitions on behalf of 40 residents of Brent, East and Brent, South about the Badman report in the same terms as the previous petitioners.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Brent East parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000553]

Badman Report (Brent South)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Brent South parliamentary constituency and others,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000552]

Badman Report (Tunbridge Wells)

Greg Clark (Tunbridge Wells) (Con): I would like to present a petition on behalf of 26 residents of the Tunbridge Wells constituency.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Tunbridge Wells parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000551]

Badman Report (South Norfolk)

Mr. Richard Bacon (South Norfolk) (Con): I should like to present in the same terms a petition on behalf of 87 constituents who are concerned about the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the South Norfolk parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000554]

Badman Report (Wealden)

Charles Hendry (Wealden) (Con): I am delighted to present a petition in the same terms on behalf of 68 of my constituents who are similarly concerned about the recommendations of the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Wealden parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000499]

Badman Report (Leominster)

Bill Wiggin (Leominster) (Con): I should like to present a petition in the same terms on behalf of the home educators of the Leominster constituency.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Leominster parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000569]

Badman Report (South Cambridgeshire)

10.43 pm

Mr. Andrew Lansley (South Cambridgeshire) (Con): I wish to present a petition on the Badman report from eight constituents in the same terms.

I would also like to present a petition relating to Equitable Life from four constituents, also in like terms to other Members.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the South Cambridgeshire parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000564]

Equitable Life (South Cambridgeshire)

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Government to uphold the constitutional standing of the Parliamentary Ombudsman by complying in full with the findings and recommendations of her Report upon Equitable Life.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000563]

Badman Report (Southend West)

Mr. David Amess (Southend, West) (Con): I wish to present a petition on behalf of a number of concerned residents in Southend, West in the same terms as everyone else.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Southend West parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000571]

Badman Report (Havant)

Mr. David Willetts (Havant) (Con): I should like to present a petition on behalf of 15 home educators in Havant who are very concerned about the Government's proposals in the Badman report on home education.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Havant parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000565]

Badman Report (Epping Forest)

Mrs. Eleanor Laing (Epping Forest) (Con): I present a petition on behalf of 62 of the people who live in the Epping Forest constituency who are furious about the implications of the Badman report.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Epping Forest Parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory

annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000562]

Badman Report (Windsor)

10.44 pm

Adam Afriyie (Windsor) (Con): I enthusiastically present a petition from 56 residents of the Windsor constituency concerning the Badman review.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Windsor parliamentary constituency and others,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000539]

Badman Report (Arundel)

Nick Herbert (Arundel and South Downs) (Con): I would like to present a petition on behalf of the home educators of Arundel and South Downs, who are as furious about this as those of my hon. Friends and many hon. Members in all parts of the House. I believe that the Government should take notice of the strength of feeling on this issue and the numbers of hon. Members who have presented petitions this evening.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in Arundel,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000599]

Flooding (West Cumbria)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—(Mr. Mudie.)

10.44 pm

Mr. Jamie Reed (Copeland) (Lab): I begin by paying my own tribute to PC Bill Barker, who lost his life in the recent floods that affected west Cumbria. Few of us, if any, can know what the Barker family are going through right now. It is a difficult subject to talk about, but following PC Barker's ultimate sacrifice and the incredibly moving farewell given to him by his family, Cumbria constabulary and the people of Egremont recently, he still occupies the thoughts of our whole community. He gave his life in saving the lives of others, and he did instinctively something that many of us either would not or could not do. His sacrifice provides a definition of heroism for all of us.

After all the tributes, given by people from the Prime Minister to the heir to the throne, it is the tributes of PC Barker's wife, children and colleagues that dominate all others in our memory. He was a devoted father and husband and extraordinary friend, a supremely committed police officer and a man who elicited a rare combination of love and respect from those who knew him. He gave all that he had for the people he served and he will for ever be remembered by our community, and I should like to give him a simple thank you.

The Minister will know that the towns of Workington, Keswick and Cockermouth and the areas around them were most seriously affected by the recent flooding. In Workington and Cockermouth, we have seen devastation that is uncommon in west Cumbria, with streets swept away, homes ruined, businesses badly affected and lives placed on hold. As Alan Irving of the Whitehaven News observed, the whole community of west Cumbria came together in the wake of the floods. Rivalries were abandoned and the principles of community were reaffirmed across the whole of our county, with people in Whitehaven, Egremont and elsewhere showing incredible solidarity with their flooded neighbours.

On the Friday night after the floods hit, I stood in the Cockermouth sheep and wool centre helping as best I could, as deputy Regional Minister. I was moved to see my constituents fetching what food, clothing, toiletries and blankets they could to help the people of Cockermouth and Workington who were stationed there. They saw that as their job and duty, and it is typical of the people of west Cumbria that they should have done so.

There are many thank yous and stories from the days when the floods hit, and we will tell them for a long time, but I should like to give a special mention to my hon. Friend the Member for Workington (Tony Cunningham). As a Government Whip, he cannot take part in these debates, but his constituents know what he did on the Thursday night as the rain kept coming in, the work that he threw himself into on the Friday morning when the devastation became apparent, and up to this very day. I am proud to have him as a neighbour and to work alongside him on so many issues, and I am grateful that many of my friends and family who live in his constituency have him as their MP. We were in constant contact as the disaster unfolded, and I know what he did in the midst of that chaos. No one could have done more, from ensuring that some of his constituents had the rubbish skips that they needed to going himself to buy nappies for the child of a young mother who was in desperate need and did not know where else to turn.

The rapid attendance and full attention of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs was incredibly important. Their solidarity with us in our time of crisis was unprompted and genuine, and I am grateful for the unprecedented suspension of the Bellwin scheme and the Government's commitment to meeting 100 per cent. of the costs. The Government have confirmed that the rate of payment under the scheme, which provides financial support to local authorities in the event of an emergency, will be set at 100 per cent. in Cumbria rather than the standard 85 per cent. The Prime Minister has also made it clear that the costs of building the temporary bridge in Workington, the Barker crossing, will be met in full by the Department for Transport. I am told that the Department will also contribute other short-term resources to help the county implement the highways recovery plan, to ensure that all affected parts of the county are back in working order as soon as possible.

It must be said that Cumbria police, Cumbria county council, Cumbria fire and rescue service, the local NHS, the Environment Agency, animal welfare charities, BT, utility companies, our magnificent armed forces and many others acted in superb concert as the floods hit. Radio Cumbria became an irreplaceable service, almost immediately demonstrating the value and strength of public service broadcasting, which no other organisation could provide. Border Television was also very impressive.

As I went around the flooded areas, it became clear to me after a number of conversations, particularly in Keswick, just how vital the mountain rescue teams had been. They undoubtedly made the difference between life and death for many, and those incredible volunteers deserve our support and public money. In areas such as Cumbria, they are a vital emergency service. I have made the case before, as have my hon. Friends the Members for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) and for Workington, and the hon. Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Tim Farron)—he is a passionate advocate for the mountain rescue teams in our county and it is a pleasure to see him here—for removing the taxes on mountain rescue teams in England. That case is irrefutable, and I urge the Government to do that in addition to reimbursing the cost of the damage and destroyed equipment that was caused by the floods.

Away from the heavily hit areas, many other towns and villages in west Cumbria were affected by the flooding. In some quarters, they have been referred to as the forgotten flooded—places such as Parton, Cleator, Holmrook, Bootle, Egremont, Lorton and elsewhere. Those areas thankfully did not witness the same devastation as Workington and Cockermouth, but they continue to endure real suffering that is equally deserving of Government resources and support, which must be forthcoming. I have seen the effects of the flooding on those communities for myself. None must be left behind. Ultimately, the costs of recovery are not yet fully known, and it is going to take more and not less public money to put things right.

At this point, I pay a special tribute to a Copeland borough councillor, David Banks. When the banks of the River Ehen burst and houses were being flooded, he went to the aid of some elderly people in his patch. He actually rebuilt—or tried to rebuild—a river bank with stones with his bare hands as the rain kept coming. That is the kind of people we are in west Cumbria, and the kind of public servants we need.

As the people of Parton taught me four years ago, it takes only a little bit of water to cause a flood and to have a huge impact on the life of a family. A foot of water can ruin a home and destroy treasured and irreplaceable possessions such as invaluable photographs and mementos of children and loved ones. Floods take away so much that can never be replaced.

Flooding is one of the most difficult issues facing the nation. It is likely to happen more, not less—we saw flooding in Carlisle in 2005—and we need to be able to meet the practical and policy challenges it poses, and I shall come soon to what those solutions may be very soon. After the media circus has moved on, as it now has, and when the drama has passed, we are left dealing with the reconstruction, and I seek assurance tonight that the solidarity and support of the Government will remain with the people of west Cumbria and the communities I have spoken about for as long as we need it. To put it bluntly, first, we must win the peace as well as the war.

Secondly, we need to look hard at the insurance industry in this country and the practices it deploys in such events. Tonight is not a night to point the finger of blame, but it is an opportunity to seek to further our understanding of what happens in the event of flooding. In particular, I hope the Government will help local businesses to derive at least some benefit from natural disasters such as those we have witnessed recently in west Cumbria.

Tim Farron (Westmorland and Lonsdale) (LD): I endorse everything the hon. Gentleman says, including his support for the emergency services and his call for infrastructure support for the county. Will he comment briefly on the need for Government support for the tourism industry across Cumbria? Quite understandably, the message was put out that Cumbria was closed for business and off limits. Many parts of the tourism industry have seen a drop in their income in the past two or three weeks of up to 70 per cent., but were not flooded. Does he agree that some Government money needs to go into promoting the tourism industry across Cumbria, so that it too can recover quickly?

Mr. Reed: I certainly agree with the hon. Gentleman. I must say that one reason why we brought him very quickly into the Regional Minister's council was that he is such a passionate and effective advocate for the people he represents in this place. He made his point as effectively in the council as he makes it tonight, and I agree with him. I understand the Secretary of State from the relevant Department will be visiting Cumbria on Thursday. Like the hon. Gentleman, I will be putting that case to the Secretary of State, and I thank him for making it tonight.

We must look at the insurance industry and the practices involved, and ensure that local businesses can benefit from natural disasters such as those we have seen and experienced. That means we must pressurise insurance companies to prioritise local businesses and trades when insurance-funded reconstruction work is necessary. A move such as this would not only mean that businesses could start work quickly—delay is often a critical factor—but would help to boost local economies that have been badly harmed by the flooding. We need to look at changing the current system. Experience in Carlisle has shown us—I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Carlisle for sharing his experience with us—that there was a real appetite for local, accountable, contactable building companies, rather than ones that appear out of nowhere overnight and then disappear without a trace. Some specialist work will need to be undertaken by specialist companies, but most of it can be undertaken by local providers. In areas of flood recovery, the local economy is often badly hit, and this is one way in which the economy can be helped to recover quickly. If insurers will not change their arrangements, the Government should look at changing those arrangements for them.

Thirdly, we need to examine our local coastal and river flood defences and improve them where necessary, as quickly as possible. West Cumbria clearly requires new flood defence measures similar to those in place in Carlisle, which worked so well as the rains hit. We need to make sure that the necessary measures are in place in waterways, roads and rivers such as the Ehen, the Irt and the Greta so that the chances of the structural chaos caused by such rainfall ever happening again are reduced significantly. Sadly, they can never be eliminated completely.

Fourthly, our road network requires serious attention, particularly the A66 and the A595. The A595 south of Calderbridge should never have been de-trunked. My community has never accepted this decision and the assumptions upon which this decision was made are now redundant given the worsening weather conditions and the fact that west Cumbria is set to once again become an international centre of excellence for the nuclear industry. Fifthly, our farmers need real help, not just now, but in the future, and I cannot stress that enough. Sixthly, we must assess what has happened to our water drainage systems since privatisation. We must determine accountability and responsibility and we must allocate resources where necessary to ensure that the network in place is sufficient to cope with events such as this, insofar as that is possible.

None of these things will happen overnight, but I know that they are necessary, I trust that the Government share our understanding of these needs and I trust that we can now begin the reconstruction effort apace. As a proud west Cumbrian, I know that we will come through this stronger and better equipped for the future. I stress that Cumbria is well and truly open for business—our hotels, hostelries and tourist attractions—and there is no finer place to be in the winter, summer, spring or autumn than Cumbria and west Cumbria in particular. I urge people to come and spend their Christmas holidays there.

10.57 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Huw Irranca-Davies): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Copeland (Mr. Reed) on securing this timely debate on an important subject. I thank him for the role that he played as deputy Regional Minister for the North West. I am also grateful to other hon. Members representing the area for their work in supporting the families, businesses and communities that were and still are affected so deeply. I endorse the remarks that he made about our hon. Friend the Member for Workington (Tony Cunningham) and other MPs and their tireless work during that time, and I join him in the tribute that he paid to PC Bill Barker. I extend my sympathy—and, I am sure, that of the whole House—to PC Barker's family and friends.

[Huw Irranca-Davies]

It is worth recalling the sheer scale of the traumatic weather incident that befell the people of Cumbria in those few days. The Met Office tells us that, in Cumbria, 372.4 mm of rain fell at Seathwaite and 361.4 mm of rain fell at Honister between 8 am on Wednesday 18 November and 4 am on Friday 20 November. Provisionally, the 24-hour total at Seathwaite of 314.4 mm is a UK record for a single location in any given 24-hour period.

Thanks to the expertise of the Met Office, we could see that severe weather was coming that week. On Monday 16 November, the Met Office issued an advisory notice of severe weather in western Britain for Thursday 19 November. That was upgraded on Tuesday 17 November to an early warning of severe weather for parts of north-west England and south-west Scotland. That too was upgraded on Wednesday 18 November to an early warning of extreme weather in Cumbria and south-west Scotland.

In addition to good forecasting, we had for the first time during a major flooding incident the expertise and experience of the new flood forecasting centre, which was established by the Government in April. The centre provides a unique service, with Met Office forecasters and Environment Agency hydrologists working side-by-side and giving emergency responders a longer lead-time to prepare for and respond to flooding. Their work was quite staggering. I was there in advance of the extreme weather that hit and saw the collaborative work done and the value that it added to accurate and timely forecasting, enabling the centre to send out advance flood warnings and to respond on the ground well in advance. It played a significant role.

The centre also played an important role in providing emergency responders with early guidance on the rainfall forecast, as well as expert advice on the flood risk impacts. Indeed, 36 hours before the flooding occurred, the flood forecasting centre indicated a high risk of significant property flooding and extreme danger to life in Cumbria via its flood guidance statement and through rolling telephone conferences.

Of course, we recognise that, despite good preparation by government, the many agencies involved and the responders on the ground, such severe weather brings tragedy. As we have said, we all mourn the loss of PC Bill Barker, whom the Prime Minister rightly described as a very heroic and brave man. It is fitting that the new footbridge in Workington has PC Barker's name forever attached to it.

I know that we have done so before in the House, but it would be wrong not to say again how indebted we are to the many individuals and organisations—too many to go through again—that showed such heroism, bravery, care and consideration for those whose lives, homes and businesses were threatened by the floods. All who were involved in the emergency response deserve the highest praise. I note the comments of my hon. Friend the Member for Copeland rightly highlighting the role of the mountain rescue teams. I am sure that his words will have been heard and noted by other Ministers.

Attention is now rightly focused on helping the affected communities to return to normal as quickly as possible. That work involves many organisations, locally, regionally and nationally. One of the great benefits of the response in those difficult times was the joined-up work across government, agencies and volunteers on the ground. Cumbria county council has put in place local recovery arrangements and has been using the recovery plan developed following the Carlisle floods in 2005. A recovery co-ordinating group has been set up and is meeting regularly. It involves the county council, the three district councils most directly affected—Allerdale, Copeland and South Lakeland—the Health Protection Agency, the Environment Agency, the Government office, the police and the chairs of the sub-groups covering business and economic recovery, health and welfare, environment and infrastructure. We have learned from what has gone before and tried to make our preparations for rescue and recovery far better.

My hon. Friend is rightly keen to ensure that Cumbria benefits from the significant investment that the Government have made, and are making, in managing flood risks. As he will know, spending across government has doubled over the past 10 years, and we are investing a record £2.15 billion over the current three-year spending period. In fact, one of the signal successes in traditional river defences was the result of investing more than £30 million in the Carlisle defences. Those defences held. I pay tribute to the contractors commissioned by the Environment Agency to fill in the remaining 20 per cent. at short notice and in desperate circumstances. Those temporary infills held and saved many homes and possibly lives.

Mr. Eric Martlew (Carlisle) (Lab): One of the homes that they saved that night was mine. I and my neighbours were out until 2 o'clock in the morning working with the contractors, who worked for 24 hours non-stop. To be honest, we had very little help from the district council, but with the contractors' help we managed to save not only the houses, but the biscuit factory that employs 1,200 people.

Huw Irranca-Davies: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. Heroic efforts were made by all concerned to avoid the worst. The impact could have been far worse than what we saw, bad as that was.

Cockermouth, Keswick and Ulverston have all benefited from investment and more is planned. In Keswick, for example, the Environment Agency has done a study to justify improvement works and has allocated funding to design works in 2010-11 for construction at an estimated cost of £5 million. For Ulverston, funding has been allocated in 2010-11 to develop a scheme for Dragley beck, which is programmed for construction in 2011-12 at a cost of £2 million. That project would raise the existing one-in-20-year standard of flood protection to one in 70 years. For Cockermouth, indicative funding is in place to begin studying a potential scheme in 2012-13.

We have already seen what good investment can achieve in places such as Carlisle, where some 3,000 properties were saved from flooding, as my hon. Friend the Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) said. In Appleby, a flood action group was set up in 2005. The residents of The Sands, which has no formal flood defences, have taken advantage of the DEFRA property-level flood resilience grant scheme to install flood-resilient and resistance measures on their individual properties, the cost of which averages out at about £2,000 a property. Forty-six properties were protected from flooding by those simple, easy and cost-effective measures.

We need to tackle the problem at all levels. My hon. Friend the Member for Copeland has rightly made it clear that we do not focus just on the larger communities in west Cumbria. There is a long list of projects in Cumbria for which the Environment Agency has identified an indicative allocation of expenditure. In his constituency, they include projects at Nor beck in Cleator moor, Skirting beck, Low Mill and the River Ehen in Egremont. The provision of community flood defences in those locations is subject to the necessary project appraisal, as always, to find solutions that are technically, economically and socially acceptable.

Mr. Jamie Reed: During my time in this place I have found that one of the most important things about flooding is to listen to those who are repeatedly affected by it. Can my hon. Friend give me an assurance that the relevant Departments and the Environment Agency will listen to the representations that I make on behalf of the various flood action groups, such as Keswick flood action group and Parton flood action group? People who have experienced flooding know where it strikes and what its effects are. That is important.

Huw Irranca-Davies: My hon. Friend makes a valid point. One of the lessons that we have learnt from previous flooding incidents is about the need to listen to people on the ground who have been affected. I can give that commitment to him as a constituency MP and in his role as the deputy Minister for the North West, and to other Members who are affected. We are keen to keep talking, as the weeks and months roll by, about what the experience has been and what we can learn. Even though the response on this occasion was far better than what we saw before, as I have highlighted and as is generally accepted, I have no doubt that there are lessons to be learned. We need to get better every time.

Let me talk about the fairly sizeable package of support that is now being made available in various areas. The Department for Transport will fund the bridge and road repairs, in line with its emergency funding scheme. The £1 million community recovery fund announced by the Prime Minister and supplied and managed by the Department for Communities and Local Government will be for local authorities to use as they see fit in assisting those local residents and businesses affected. The North West Development Agency opened its £1 million flood recovery grant scheme on Wednesday 25 November. The NDWA is also investing in a further £100,000 to push the message that Cumbria is ready to welcome visitors after the floods.

The Communities and Local Government Secretary has announced that the Bellwin scheme for local authorities for emergency clear-up costs and temporary accommodation will be set at 100 per cent. above threshold, rather than 85 per cent. Department for Work and Pensions' social fund community care grants are available for people on qualifying benefits to meet the cost of replacing essential household items, and crisis loans are also available. I pay tribute to the local community fund that has been organised by volunteer groups on the ground. It is absolutely astonishing how they have been able to mobilise that charitable support in such a short time, and they deserve support.

My hon. Friend referred to the use of local building contractors, which is a salient point. They can be used to carry out the drying and repair of buildings affected by the flooding. I am glad to say that this matter has been taken up by the county council and others, including Ministers, and by the Association of British Insurers, whose representatives I have met in the past few days. We are staying engaged with the ABI, and—to give credit where it is due—it is fair to say that it has been quick to respond to events by issuing advice to people who have suffered flood damage. The association has urged people to contact their insurers as soon as possible and confirmed that the first priority for insurers must be to ensure that every claim is dealt with as quickly as possible and do everything that they can to help customers to recover.

In selecting builders, insurance companies will, of course, want to know that they have the capability and expertise to provide what is needed to do the job right. They have panels of specialist builders to enable them to react quickly to any event—as they conspicuously did after previous flood events. I assure my hon. Friend that some on those panels will be undoubtedly drawn from local contractors, or will use subcontracted labour within the area. At this stage in the recovery process, insurers are using specialist drying-out and stripping-out contractors, and I understand that some of them are local.

My hon. Friend and other MPs representing the area have mentioned the importance of having some choice in these matters. In the longer term, and when rebuilding starts, it will be open to those affected to choose their own builders, and insurance companies will manage them through the process. Should they do that, some of the risk will ultimately fall on the policyholder, because quality and price cannot be guaranteed in the same way. It is therefore very important that people get the right builders in, but having that choice is important.

The Government have been working hard and consistently to provide better, more sustainable management of flood risk for people, homes and businesses. We have been responding vigorously to Sir Michael Pitt's recommendations arising from the 2007 floods, not least through the Flood and Water Management Bill that will shortly come before the House. In relation to streamlining and accountability, the Bill will give the authorities that manage flood risk better powers to do so, putting local authorities in charge of dealing with local flood risk and the Environment Agency in clear charge of overseeing flooding and coastal erosion nationally. That clarity is important, and it flows from Sir Michael Pitt's recommendations. However, it will not remove the need for local authorities and the Environment Agency to work closely together on the ground. The events in Cumbria signally demonstrate how effective such joined-up working can be in protecting livelihoods and property.

The rainfall and the resulting flooding in Cumbria last month were an extreme event, but none of us can be in any doubt that we will face similar challenges in the future. The latest UK climate projections that the Government published in June this year suggest that winter rainfall totals are likely to increase by 20 to 30 per cent. for much of England and Wales. While we cannot say that this event was caused by climate change, we can say with certainty that such events are consistent with the predictions for climate change and are going to occur more frequently, so we must learn the lessons.

[Huw Irranca-Davies]

We must also continue to build on the community-based and multi-agency approach to planning for, responding to and recovering from flooding events. The people of west Cumbria, and the many organisations that helped them, have done a great deal to show us just what can be achieved by pulling together.

11.14 pm

House adjourned without Question put (Standing Order No. 9(7)).

House of Commons

Wednesday 9 December 2009

The House met at half-past Eleven o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

Oral Answers to Questions

CABINET OFFICE

The Minister for the Cabinet Office was asked—

Third Sector Recession Action Plan

1. Anne Milton (Guildford) (Con): What recent assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the third sector recession action plan. [304978]

The Minister of State, Cabinet Office (Angela E. Smith): The Government recognise the extraordinary role the sector plays in helping vulnerable people through the recession. That is why we have given unprecedented help and support to the sector, both through existing programmes and through the £42.5 million "Real help now" programme, the community action plans and the £16.7 million hardship fund. That money is getting out there right now: the programmes have already provided £32 million-worth of assistance to a total of 1,546 organisations. Evaluations of all our major recession programmes are already under way, and reports will be produced from the middle of next year.

Anne Milton: I wonder whether the Minister is aware that charities helping those with mental health problems, such as Oakleaf Enterprise and the YMCA in my Guildford constituency, are facing a massive downturn in income. Instead of the "laser-targeted" package of help the Government's press release described in February, we have the usual lumbering, bureaucratic, red-tape nightmare so commonly seen from this Government.

Angela E. Smith: I am sur[illegible] the hon. Lady's comments, and if she wants t[illegible]mples, I will be happy to look at them, because we have tried very hard to minimise the amount of red tape. Indeed, on the hardship fund in particular, we have been praised for the swiftness of our assessment of applications. Obviously, we want to ensure that charities and organisations who need help can get it quickly, and it is impressive that £32 million has already gone out to help them.

Mr. Andy Reed (Loughborough) (Lab/Co-op): For a number of charities that I work with, there is a bit of a mixed picture. Some of the larger ones have seen their giving going up, but those that I call secondary charities—those that rely on the bigger charities to give them money—are often struggling the most. For example, I met representatives of SPEAK on Monday, and they are struggling to get money from others charities. What assistance can these programmes provide to help those charities that fund other charities, so that we can make sure that the money flows through the system and that secondary charities are not disenfranchised from these programmes?

Angela E. Smith: We have sought to put in place a range of programmes to help charities and voluntary organisations in a variety of ways. In terms of those organisations to which my hon. Friend refers, may I direct him to the grassroots grants programme, as the often quite small donations given under that programme to bodies delivering services at the grass-roots level can be extremely valuable? Those grants range from £500 to £5,000 and are issued through the Community Development Foundation. I will also ensure that my hon. Friend has information on all the grants and packages of help that are available to help charities of different sizes.

Jenny Willott (Cardiff, Central) (LD): The hardship fund, for charities with a turnover above £200,000, is a key part of the action plan, but the recent decision of the Office of the Third Sector to divert into it £750,000 from the campaigning research programme, which is aimed at smaller charities, has caused outcry across the sector. Does the Minister share my concern that the lack of consultation, or even warning, ahead of that decision has not only damaged the charities directly affected, but has shaken the confidence of the sector as a whole in the Government's commitment to the compact and their support for smaller organisations?

Angela E. Smith: Yes, I certainly understand the concerns about the transfer of the money. It is nothing to do with the size of the organisations; rather, it is to do with the purpose of the fund. It was a difficult decision to make, particularly because it is not compact-compliant, which I regret and apologise for. We should consider the purpose of the fund, however. When I was travelling around the country talking to different organisations, what came up time and again was that organisations delivering services on the ground at grass-roots level were being hit by the recession and needed help. We could have spent this £750,000 either on campaigning research or on helping those organisations. While it was a difficult choice, the basic decision was sound. However, I apologise to those who have been affected, and for this isolated breach of the compact.

Tom Levitt (High Peak) (Lab): I congratulate my hon. Friend on the effectiveness with which the hardship fund has been got out to organisations throughout the country, but does she think that the smallest organisations are sufficiently aware of, and therefore taking advantage of, the available help?

Angela E. Smith: I do in some ways, as many organisations have had the help and have been able to make use of it. I think that more can be done, however, and I appeal to all Members to make organisations in their constituencies aware of the grants, support and loans that are available. We want that money to get out to third sector organisations because they are often the glue in communities, providing support on the ground to the people who most need it. We must do as much as we can to get that money out to them and to help and support them. May I direct my hon. Friend to the Government-funded National Council for Voluntary Organisations website, "Funding central", which has all the information on grants and support? That is helpful to all organisations.

Mr. Francis Maude (Horsham) (Con): When the voluntary and charitable sector is facing horrendous pressure as a result of the Government's recession, how helpful is it for Lord Mandelson to be railroading through the removal of the sector's long-standing exemption on public performance rights? Does the Minister accept that adding at least £20 million in extra cost to voluntary and charitable organisations just now is the last thing that they need, or have the Government just stopped listening?

Angela E. Smith: It is not a case of the Government not listening, and I should also correct the right hon. Gentleman because it is not the Government's recession; as he may be aware, this has been an international recession, affecting countries across the world. I share concerns about the impact that charges from PPL and PRS could have on charitable and voluntary organisations; indeed, I met them to express those concerns on behalf of the sector. They are now working together to consider a plan to minimise that impact, and I urge all third sector organisations to contact PPL and PRS to ensure that it is minimised. The exemption was long-standing, and I believe that Britain is one of the last countries in Europe to lose it. I share the concern about the impact of this, and we must work with the entire third sector—the charities and the voluntary organisations—to do what we can to minimise it.

Mr. Maude: Part of the Government's much-vaunted recession action plan was an £8 million volunteer brokerage scheme, which was intended to create 40,000 volunteering opportunities. Has not that much-criticised scheme turned out to be a flop, with only 2,500 opportunities actually being created? Given that leaders in the sector have criticised the scheme as has the Minister yet got the message that this sort of headline-catching initiative with rigid top-down targets is the problem, not the solution?

"a numbers game...not suited to the work of many organisations",

Angela E. Smith: It is probably too early to make such an assessment as to success or failure. An increasing number of people are going into placements; this process was slow to start and we are seeing some improvement now. It is important to have targets, because they create an ambition to ensure that we get as many people into placements as possible. For example, in August, 930 people on jobseeker's allowance took up placements on this scheme—that is important and it is success.

Social Inclusion

2. Hugh Bayley (City of York) (Lab): What recent assessment she has made of the effectiveness of her Department's actions to promote social inclusion in Yorkshire. [304979]

The Minister of State, Cabinet Office (Angela E. Smith): The social exclusion task force co-ordinates and monitors progress on tackling social exclusion across England. I am aware that in Yorkshire and the Humber a wide range of measures are in place to support more vulnerable adults into homes and jobs. I am also very pleased that Barnsley, Bradford and Rotherham are all sites for the "Inspiring Communities" programme, which will help to raise the aspirations of young people in deprived areas. May I also tell my hon. Friend that when I visited the York Council for Voluntary Service, I was very impressed by its commitment to promoting social inclusion?

Hugh Bayley: I am grateful to my right hon. Friend for visiting the CVS. Since York Credit Union opened three years ago, it has done an excellent job in helping people to get out of debt, but we still face a serious problem with door-to-door loan sharks. I am holding a credit agreement offered to one of my constituents, where the annual percentage rate of interest was 2,639,385.9 per cent. I am not making that figure up; it is written here in black and white. Will she speak to her colleagues in the Treasury and press for legislation to put to an end this kind of usury?

Hon. Members: Hear, Hear.

Angela E. Smith: As we can hear, the whole House is horrified by such an extortionate interest rate. We all share concerns about this, because it is often those on the lowest incomes who end up paying the highest prices because of the high cost of borrowing. I can tell my hon. Friend that the Office of Fair Trading is examining the issue and it issued an interim report yesterday. A final report will be available in the spring and the Government will consider its recommendations. As he has done, may I commend the work of credit unions, which provide a way of helping those who are financially excluded?

Sir Patrick Cormack (South Staffordshire) (Con): Although I endorse what the hon. Member for City of York (Hugh Bayley) has just said, may I ask the Minister to acquire a copy of "The Complete Plain Words" by Sir Ernest Gowers, so that she can start talking in English and get rid of terms such as "social inclusion", "social exclusion" and "third sector", and all this gobbledegook, which separates the very people we are trying to help from this place?

Angela E. Smith: That is the first time I have ever been accused of talking gobbledegook; I think that people understand terms such as "socially included" and "socially excluded", and find them helpful. I have some sympathy with what the hon. Gentleman says about the term "third sector" and if he could come up with a better one, that would be helpful. In some ways, I regard the "third sector"—the wider charities, voluntary organisations and social enterprise—as pretty much the first sector.

People with Disabilities

3. Mr. Tom Clarke (Coatbridge, Chryston and Bellshill) (Lab): What recent assessment she has made of levels of access to voluntary activities for people with disabilities; and if she will make a statement. [304980]

The Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office (Ms Dawn Butler): The latest volunteering figures from the Government's citizenship survey show that in England 32 per cent. of disabled people volunteered at least once in 2008-09. In order to ensure that more disabled people are able to access volunteering programmes, the Office of the Third Sector is piloting a £2 million volunteering fund in England, which will pay for adjustments and support for disabled volunteers. The fund opened for applications on 16 November.

Mr. Tom Clarke: On the subject of diversity, may I be the first to congratulate my hon. Friend on being the first black woman ever to have spoken from the Dispatch Box? May I encourage her and her colleagues to work with excellent organisations such as Mencap and People First to ensure that people with learning disabilities are given the opportunity to play a full part in voluntary activity, which is both in their interests and the greater interest of society?

Ms Butler: I thank my right hon. Friend for his warm words and kind remarks. It is indeed a pleasure to be standing here at the Dispatch Box. I, too, would like to congratulate my right hon. Friend on receiving a disability champion award yesterday. The Cabinet Office is looking at ensuring that disabled people—those with learning difficulties—are totally included in the packages that we are providing, such as the £17.5 million Improving Reach programme. There have been successful bids for people with learning difficulties, such as those from Mind associations. These groups receive the award funding through Office of the Third Sector programmes, including v, grassroots grants, Futurebuilders and targeted support funds.

Sir Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield) (Con): May I obviously endorse the remarks of the right hon. Member for Coatbridge, Chryston and Bellshill (Mr. Clarke) about the new Minister and wish her well, albeit that it will perhaps be for a relatively short time? Will the Minister accept that for disabled people—whether they are mentally or physically disabled—to be able to participate in voluntary activities is critical to their quality of life. Is she concerned that at the present time, with the recession that we are experiencing, this group of people is suffering—they are unable to indulge in all the worthwhile activities that would make their lives profitable and well?

Ms Butler: I again thank the hon. Gentleman for his remarks. The Office of the Third Sector is building a platform to ensure that people with disabilities participate fully and are considered to be the same as able-bodied people. The scheme that has been put in place, although it is a pilot, will be reviewed in 2011. If it is successful, it will be rolled out nationally.

Mr. Gregory Campbell (East Londonderry) (DUP): Does the Minister agree that an important aspect of such work would be efforts to promote among younger people the concept of people with disabilities being more able to get involved in a range of voluntary activities, thereby helping the wider community, particularly across the demographics?

Ms Butler: The hon. Gentleman raises a valid point. Indeed, through programmes such as v and YouthNet, the Office of the Third Sector is ensuring that young people are not only working with and for, but are engaged with, people with disabilities—both those with learning disabilities and those with other disabilities—to ensure that they can play a full and active part in society.

Social Exclusion

4. Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North) (Lab): What recent discussions she has had with the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families on the establishment of a national assessment centre for early intervention policies to reduce social exclusion; and if she will make a statement. [304981]

The Minister of State, Cabinet Office (Angela E. Smith): First, I want to pay tribute to my hon. Friend for his work on, and commitment to, this issue. I am aware that a number of places, including Nottingham, have developed early intervention policies to tackle social problems. It is important that the impact of individual policies is assessed. Officials from the Cabinet Office and the DCSF have discussed the best way of addressing this, including the role of a centre for excellence in outcomes.

Mr. Allen: There are now lots of green shoots of early intervention in the UK—not just in Nottingham but in Manchester, Glasgow, London and south Wales. I hope that my right hon. Friend will ensure that all those ideas are pulled together so that lots of local authorities that wish to embark on an early intervention programme have a strong, central evidence base from which to draw, rather than replicating individual projects. I hope that she will put her weight behind a national policy assessment centre.

Angela E. Smith: Yes. I know that my hon. Friend has raised this issue with the Prime Minister, too. There is no doubt that as more authorities get involved with early intervention it is very important that they can share best practice and understand what works best to get value for money. Departments will be discussing how best to achieve this, including the role that can be played by such a centre of excellence in outcomes.

Information Commissioner

5. Mr. Gordon Prentice (Pendle) (Lab): What steps she is taking to ensure that material held by her Department which is requested by the Information Commissioner is provided promptly to the Commissioner. [304982]

The Minister of State, Cabinet Office (Angela E. Smith): The Cabinet Office aims to respond to requests from the Information Commissioner for material required for an investigation in a timely fashion.

Mr. Prentice: I am not really happy with that answer. I want to know who is responsible for the grotesque delays in responding to my freedom of information request regarding Lord Ashcroft. Is it the Cabinet Office that is dragging its feet, or is it the Information Commissioner who is being dilatory and totally useless?

Angela E. Smith: I might not be able to answer that question in the way that my hon. Friend has invited me to, but I can tell him that the Information Commissioner has not issued an information notice regarding any request that he has made to the Cabinet Office.

Justine Greening (Putney) (Con): What follow-up does the Minister do with other Departments? I have just waited a year and a half to get an answer to an information request from the Department for Transport, and even now it has not been answered fully. Does she think that is too long to wait, or is that the sort of time line that I should expect?

Angela E. Smith: Freedom of information matters are dealt with by the Ministry of Justice, so I will draw the hon. Lady's concerns to the attention of ministerial colleagues at MOJ and ask them to take note of what she says.

Local Organisations (Funding)

6. Phil Wilson (Sedgefield) (Lab): How many local organisations have received grassroots grants from her Department in the last 12 months. [30493]

The Minister of State, Cabinet Office (Angela E. Smith): The £130 million grassroots grants programme provides much-needed support to small voluntary groups that are doing vital work in our communities across England. In the first 14 months, there have been more than 13,000 grant awards to small charities and voluntary organisations totalling more than £33 million. I am delighted that in County Durham alone grassroots grants has invested more than £487,000 in small grants to local voluntary groups. [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. As usual, there are far too many private conversations taking place on both sides of the Chamber. That is frankly discourteous and it conveys a very bad impression to those who are listening to our proceedings.

Phil Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some £51,000-worth of grassroots grants have gone to community groups in my constituency such as the Ferryhill 2000 committee, Fishburn kurling club and Thornley Homing club. Does my right hon. Friend agree that that shows the Government's commitment to local people and communities, and makes an important contribution to the front line?

Angela E. Smith: Yes, I do. There are often small community groups in communities doing first-class, important work. A small amount of money can make a huge difference to their impact on the local community, and that is why the Government have invested so much money in the grassroots grants programme, which gives grants ranging from £250 to £5,000 to small local groups. As some of us who speak to those groups know, that makes a real difference in those communities.

Mr. Nick Hurd (Ruislip-Northwood) (Con): In April, the Department launched a programme of grants for small campaigning charities. In October, it sent out grant letters offering the funding. In November, the Minister withdrew the money that had been promised without any consultation. Of course, that has generated real anger in the sector, because with that one decision, the Department that is meant to champion the sector has made a mockery of the compact and has sent out a signal that it is okay for public grant makers to treat charities in that shabby way. I welcome her apology today, but is she really aware of the damage that she has done, and what will she do to repair it?

Angela E. Smith: I suspect that the hon. Gentleman wrote his question before he heard the hon. Member for Cardiff, Central (Jenny Willott) raise this issue. I regret any damage that has been done, because it is important that people understand my commitment to the compact and to voluntary organisations. I refer him to my earlier comments. At this time of recession, and given the comments that have been made to me by organisations up and down the country, the priority had to be given to organisations that deliver services to communities on the front line. Having said that, I deeply regret the concerns that people have raised, and I assure him that my commitment to the compact is strong.

Clive Efford (Eltham) (Lab): Often, when funding organisations are looking to provide grants to voluntary community organisations, they pay too much attention to the involvement of statutory bodies when they look at those organisations' financial viability. May I urge my right hon. Friend, when she is handing out grassroots grants, to ensure that the money is going to genuine grass-roots organisations in local communities?

Angela E. Smith: The grassroots grants programme is administered in constituencies on behalf of Government by the Community Development Foundation. I think that I can give my hon. Friend the reassurance he seeks on this matter, but I will send him a list of the organisations in his constituency that have received such grants so that he can make an assessment himself and talk to me further if he wishes to do so.

Government Statistics

7. Mr. Henry Bellingham (North-West Norfolk) (Con): When she next expects to meet the national statistician to discuss policy on publication of statistics by Government Departments. [30494]

The Minister of State, Cabinet Office (Angela E. Smith): I meet the national statistician regularly once every three months, but I have no plans to discuss with her the policy on the publication of statistics by Government Departments. Departments are expected to follow the code of practice for official statistics that is maintained by the independent UK Statistics Authority.

Mr. Bellingham: I thank the Minister for that reply. The ONS has just published the results of the recent census rehearsal, with responses coming in at just 35 per cent., compared with 54 per cent. in 2001. Is not that a major warning sign that the new census is far too long, too intrusive and too much hassle to fill in? Surely the excessive cost of £450 million is totally unacceptable, given the country's parlous finances.

Angela E. Smith: I refute the hon. Gentleman's comments on a number of grounds. First, the census pilots are voluntary, and more resources have been invested to ensure that we get accurate and clear responses from people up and down the country in the 2011 census, because we want the best information possible. Secondly, I also think that the cost of the census, which works out to 87p per person per year, is a reasonable amount to pay for the benefit that the census brings to the country.

David Taylor (North-West Leicestershire) (Lab/Co-op): Is it not the case that there needs to be public acceptability of the level of detail in the 2011 census? Has my hon. Friend had discussions with Jil Matheson about the level of disaggregated data that will be published, the timetable that will be associated with that, and whether full census form information will be published rather earlier than the present limit of 100 years?

Angela E. Smith: I have obviously had discussions with the ONS about ensuring public confidence in the census, although I have not had particular discussions about how long information will remain confidential. I think that 100 years is appropriate, but if my hon. Friend wants to write to me about the matter, I will look at it again.

2011 Census

8. Mr. Stephen Crabb (Preseli Pembrokeshire) (Con): What her most recent estimate is of the cost of the 2011 census. [304987]

The Minister of State, Cabinet Office (Angela E. Smith): The cost of the 2011 census in England and Wales is estimated at £482 million, as stated in the White Paper on the census published in December 2008. As I just mentioned, that equates to 87p per person per year.

Mr. Crabb: Is not the Government's failure over the last 10 years to monitor correctly the number of people coming into the country one reason why we are facing such an expensive census in 2011?

Angela E. Smith: I think that the hon. Gentleman struggled to find a point to make on this matter. What he suggests is not the case at all: in fact, a comparison of the cost of the census in this country with the cost of those conducted in other countries around the world shows that our census is much more reasonable. It costs about a third of the census in the US, and is significantly less than that conducted in New Zealand, Canada, Australia, Ireland and Scotland. The cost cannot be called excessive, so his point is completely unfounded.

Paul Rowen (Rochdale) (LD): Given the costs of the census, does the Minister think that including questions on a person's immigration status is a useful use of public funds, when that information can be collected more accurately by other means?

Angela E. Smith: On the issue of costs, the benefits to the Treasury from the information that it gets from the census amounts to the equivalent of around £700 million. That far exceeds the costs of the census, but the point that the hon. Gentleman makes is also not valid because the ONS chooses the questions independently. It looks at why the questions are needed, and the answers to them are used to ensure that the billions of pounds of public funds are disbursed on the basis of accurate information.

Floods

9. Miss Anne McIntosh (Vale of York) (Con): What assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the operation of the provisions of the Civil Contingencies Act 2004 in relation to the recent floods in Cumbria. [304989]

The Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office (Ms Dawn Butler): I know that the hon. Lady recently visited the affected area to see for herself the impact of the flooding and to meet emergency responders. All sides of the House have paid tribute to PC Bill Barker, who lost his life.

Despite the unprecedented nature of the rainfall that occurred, the prompt and effective response to the flooding in Cumbria was exemplary, due to meticulous and effective preparation by local and national responders working through the framework set out in the Civil Contingencies Act 2004. As part of the ongoing Civil Contingencies Act enhancement programme, we will ensure that any lessons that can be learned from events such as this are used to enhance our guidance even further, but tribute must be paid to those respondents who worked together during this time.

Miss McIntosh: Will the Minister join me in congratulating those wardens on the ground in Cumbria who were there knocking on doors and evacuating people, thanks to the warning? Obviously, we regret the loss of PC Barker. The Civil Contingencies Act 2004 seems to be working, but we need more wardens of the type that we saw in Cumbria.

Ms Butler: The hon. Lady makes the valid point that we must congratulate those people and wardens on the ground, and I completely endorse her sentiments. The Civil Contingencies Act 2004 has been working, and it provides a framework that has now been well established. We will continue to look at any lessons that can be learned from that and ensure that it is enhanced further.

Mr. Lindsay Hoyle (Chorley) (Lab): Would the Minister like to congratulate the emergency services and the armed forces on the provision of the temporary bridge, which has made a real difference to the people of Workington?

Ms Butler: The emergency services and the armed forces worked exceptionally well and speedily in ensuring that the new bridge was built in time and to the benefit of all concerned, so I completely endorse my hon. Friend's sentiments.

PRIME MINISTER

The Prime Minister was asked—

Engagements

Q1. [304963] Robert Neill (Bromley and Chislehurst) (Con): If he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 9 December.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Gordon Brown): Before I list my engagements, it is with deep sorrow that we remember, from 1st Battalion the Royal Anglian Regiment, Lance Corporal Adam Drane, who died in Afghanistan on Monday. My thoughts and, I know, those of the whole House will be with his family and friends. Every life lost during this year and during previous years is a personal tragedy, and we mourn every single loss. We mourn heroes whose acts of bravery recognise that a more stable Afghanistan means a safer Britain, and the scale of their sacrifice does not diminish but strengthens our resolve.

This morning, I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall have further such meetings later today.

Robert Neill: I am sure that the whole House would endorse the Prime Minister's tribute to the lance corporal, and endorse his sentiments as well.

Last week the Prime Minister told the House that Spain was in the G20 and that it had been in recession for longer than this country—neither of which, upon checking, turns out to be correct. Do we conclude from that that the pain in Spain is mainly in his brain?

The Prime Minister: I am very glad that we are starting this week's Question Time exactly as we ended last week's Question Time—[Interruption]—by talking about the economy. [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. We want to hear the Prime Minister's reply, and certainly people listening elsewhere wish to hear it. We will have no further interruptions.

The Prime Minister: There are some people who get into the White House on false pretences, get their photograph taken and do not have a formal invitation, but the Prime Minister of Spain was invited to the G20 by the President of America, to be part of the G20. I have to tell the hon. Gentleman that I invited the Prime Minister of Spain, Mr. Zapatero, to the G20 meeting that took place in London. Mr. Zapatero was at the G20 meeting that took place in Pittsburgh. In other words, Spain was part of the G20. [Interruption.] I know that the Opposition are going to talk down Britain, but it is bit much them talking down Spain.

Ms Angela C. Smith (Sheffield, Hillsborough) (Lab): The fatal attack last week on four-year-old John-Paul Massey from Merseyside again raises concerns about the effectiveness of legislation relating to dangerous dogs. Will my right hon. Friend agree to meet, with me, a small delegation of those who are concerned about the issue to discuss what can be done?

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. This was a terrible death, and I am very sorry to learn about what happened to the little boy in Liverpool, John-Paul Massey. She knows that the police are continuing to investigate the circumstances of the death. They have also referred their handling of an original report from February 2009 to the Independent Police Complaints Commission. It would obviously be inappropriate to comment further on that instance, but the issue of the status of dangerous dogs was raised at the antisocial behaviour working party a few days ago. We are working with the Home Office to ensure that those who are on the front line make full use of the powers available to them to tackle the problem of dogs affecting communities. The Government have provided additional advice to the police, and funding to the Association of Chief Police Officers to help to train officers in dangerous dog legislation. This was an event that should not recur, and we will do everything in our power to make sure that it does not happen.

Mr. David Cameron (Witney) (Con): May I join the Prime Minister in paying tribute to Lance Corporal Adam Drane, who was killed in Afghanistan on Monday? The 100th military casualty this year is a very sad milestone. We should honour his memory; we should help his family.

As the Prime Minister and I have both seen, when one speaks to our troops in Afghanistan, it is not sympathy and pity that they are after, but support, not just for what they are doing, but for the mission in which they are engaged. In my view, they are every bit the equal of those men who stormed the beaches of Normandy or who fought their way across Africa in the second world war, and we should be proud of what they are doing.

The new counter-insurgency strategy and the extra troops announced by America last week show that we have the last best chance to get this issue right. Does the Prime Minister agree that we simply cannot waste any time in getting every element of the strategy in place, including troops, helicopters, equipment, development aid, civilian co-ordination and, of course, the pressure on President Karzai to cut corruption?

The Prime Minister: I am very pleased that the right hon. Gentleman was able to go to Afghanistan, and I also know that many Members have visited our troops in Afghanistan. I pay tribute to them for visiting our troops, but I pay greater tribute to our troops for the great work that they do.

The right hon. Gentleman is absolutely right that we must move quickly. Our additional troops will be going to Afghanistan in the next few days. We have called a conference for 28 January in London, to bring together all the powers that are involved in Afghanistan—the 43-nation coalition. That will discuss—and, I hope, agree on—civil co-ordination. President Karzai has agreed to come, and he will have to report on the reforms that he promised to make in his Administration as he started his second period of duty. At the same time, we are making available all the equipment that is necessary—helicopters and vehicles—to our armed forces.

I can just add one thing—that 80 per cent. of the deaths have been the result of explosive devices. We have now brought in far more surveillance equipment; we have brought in extra engineers; we have brought in extra drones to survey the area; we have brought in more intelligence officers; and we are backing up our troops with the best equipment possible. We will do everything we can to avoid the loss of life as a result of this guerrilla warfare.

Mr. Cameron: US forces are now pouring into Helmand province, and that is welcome. But is not one of the current problems that British forces are still spread too thinly in the very tough parts of Helmand for which we are responsible? Following the increase in US forces in Helmand, is there not a danger that there will be a contrast between the UK forces, who are still spread too thinly, and US forces, who will not be? Does the Prime Minister accept that this needs to change, and change very urgently?

The Prime Minister: If the right hon. Gentleman had heard what I said last week, he would know that I said that we were going to thicken the presence of our forces in a number of key areas. Of course operational decisions are a matter for commanders on the ground, but I think it is recognised that two things have got to happen: one is that we thicken our presence; the second thing, however, which I emphasise as part of our long-term strategy, is the fact that we are also there to train the Afghan forces so that they can take over. So 5,000 Afghan troops will come to be trained in Helmand itself; 10,000 in total will be trained in Helmand over the course of the next year, and we will then want to pass security control, district by district, to the Afghan people. We not only have a reason for being there—the threat of terrorism on the streets of our country—we also have a plan to give the Afghans control over their country, so that at some point our troops can come home.

Mr. Cameron: The Prime Minister is right: of course it is for military commanders to make the precise dispositions. But everyone agrees that one of the keys to successful counter-insurgency is a dense population of troops to protect the civilian population, and the figures tell a vital story. Soon, 20,000 US forces will be responsible for some 30 per cent. of the population, and fewer than 10,000 British troops will be responsible for some 70 per cent. So let me just ask him again: how quickly does he think that this vital issue can be sorted out, so that we have effective counter-insurgency throughout southern Afghanistan?

The Prime Minister: I am grateful that the right hon. Gentleman raises these questions, because I can point out to the Opposition that we are part of a coalition. These decisions are made as part of a coalition: they are made in Helmand with the Americans and the other forces who are there. Yes, we have decided to thicken in certain areas, but yes, the Americans have laid the priority for the next few months and years on training the Afghan forces, and that is what we are also going to do.

I would say to the right hon. Gentleman that we have an Afghan army of about 90,000, it will increase over the next year to about 135,000, and the number will have to go higher than that for Afghanistan to be able to sustain its own security control. The police force is at about 90,000 at the moment. It will have to be improved by police trainers, and we will need more police on the ground as well. That is the way forward for Afghanistan. I would say to the right hon. Gentleman again that decisions about the location of troops are a matter for commanders on the ground, but we work in close partnership with the Americans, and our decisions are taken with the rest of the alliance.

Mr. Cameron: I am grateful to the Prime Minister for that answer, and for discussing this issue. [Hon. Members: "Oh!"] No, honestly, this is an important point, and I do believe it has to be sorted out. Crucially, there are political elements to this decision, and what I am saying to him is that he will have our support if he makes those decisions.

Let me turn to a completely different subject. Tomorrow the House of Commons will be publishing the details of Members' second home allowances for the financial year 2008-09. That is a vital part of the process of rebuilding trust in this place, which everyone wants to happen. As of yesterday, the plans were to issue details of expenses, but without publishing the total expenses claimed by each MP. Does the Prime Minister agree that that would not be transparent and would infuriate the public who put us here, so will he take all the necessary steps to make sure that the current totals are published in full?

The Prime Minister: This is a matter for the Members Estimate Committee to make a judgment on. The shadow Leader of the House is a member of the Members Estimate Committee, as is the Leader of the House. We want the maximum transparency possible. I believe there is nothing that we have to hide, and we have got to get all the information out. Anything that maximises transparency is what I support, but I would have thought that the details of how we do it are best left to the Members Estimate Committee, and it is for the shadow Leader of the House to put his views there. I think, if I am right, that we were trying to reach a consensus about how we would move forward on these issues. I think we should all say that the sooner we can deal with all the issues the better, but the best way of dealing with them is by the process that we ourselves agreed.

Mr. Cameron: With respect, the question whether you publish the totals is not a matter of detail; it seems to me pretty profound. You have got to publish the totals so that the public can see that we are being open, transparent and straightforward about this issue that has done so much damage to this House.

After the Queen's Speech—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Government Back Benchers need to simmer down.

Mr. Cameron: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

After the Queen's Speech, I offered the Prime Minister our support if he brought forward the legislation to implement the Kelly report in full. The Leader of the House has said that she is prepared to talk about this. Can he confirm that the necessary legislation will be brought forward—and, indeed, that it will be published before Christmas? Does he agree with me that we need to end this damaging year for Parliament by showing once and for all that we "get it"?

The Prime Minister: On the very issue the right hon. Gentleman raises—perhaps he should know this—I understand that a meeting is taking place this afternoon to deal with exactly the issues that we are talking about. I would prefer that we agreed that there be the maximum transparency, and that we will do everything we can to make that happen. We have set up the Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority to do this. Let it get on with the job of doing it, and let us reach a consensus in this House that the maximum transparency is what we are going to achieve.

Mr. Cameron: Of course, but the point is that Kelly made a series of recommendations, and the Prime Minister said that the whole point of prolonging this Parliament was to put them into place. Many of these recommendations require legislation, so the legislation needs to be brought forward.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer is about to stand up and deliver his pre-Budget report. He should be announcing measures to bring the deficit under control. Does the Prime Minister agree with me that we should show some leadership, and begin with this place? Will he therefore support our plans for a 5 per cent. cut in ministerial pay followed by a five-year freeze, and a 10 per cent. cut in the size of the House of Commons?

The Prime Minister: Our deficit reduction plan involves major changes in how government operates, including how Ministers and civil servants operate. I hope that the right hon. Gentleman will agree with the measures that we are bringing forward. I would say to him that the reason why we have a deficit is that we have spent to take ourselves through the recession. If we had taken his advice, more people would have been unemployed, more small businesses would have gone under, more mortgage owners would have lost their homes, and we would be facing a higher deficit and higher debt as a result. Mr. Speaker, when I listen to him now, it seems to me that he has lost the art of communication, but not, alas, the gift of speech.

Mr. Speaker: I call Mr. Kevin Barron. [Interruption.] Order. I am sure Government Back Benchers want to hear their colleague.

Mr. Kevin Barron (Rother Valley) (Lab): Does the Prime Minister agree that people who purport to stand to be Members of this House, and give interviews to national newspapers saying that if they are elected they will not claim expenses, and that their wealth makes them incorruptible, only for us to find that that wealth is held in tax havens abroad, are unfit to be Members of this House?

The Prime Minister: Some time the Conservative party will have to face up to the fact that it is the first party in history to have devised a tax policy just for itself.

Mr. Nick Clegg (Sheffield, Hallam) (LD): I should like to add my own expressions of sympathy and condolence to the family and friends of Lance Corporal Adam Drane of 1st Battalion the Royal Anglian Regiment, who tragically lost his life serving in Afghanistan on Monday. We will remember him, as we remember all those who have made the ultimate sacrifice serving in the mission in Afghanistan.

Yesterday, the Prime Minister said that fairness was in his DNA, and today we are told that fairness will be the centrepiece of the pre-Budget report. So why is it that 4 million children are still living in poverty, one in five young people are out of work and millions of poor pensioners will struggle this winter simply to keep warm? He dares to talk about fairness, but does he not realise how offensive that is to the millions of people who feel that they have been let down by Labour?

The Prime Minister: The last time we talked about it a few months ago, the right hon. Gentleman did not know the level of the state pension. I hope that he knows the level of child benefit and child tax credit, because child benefit, taken with tax credit, has trebled for the poorest families in this country since 1997. We have taken more children out of poverty than any previous Government since 1945, and we are taking more action today: if the right hon. Gentleman listens to the Chancellor, he will hear what he is going to do. Our record in taking children out of poverty, when poverty had trebled under the Conservatives, is one that we will build on in the years to come.

Mr. Clegg: Again, I do not get an answer, I get a list. [Interruption.] Labour Members can shout as much as they like, but it does not change the facts. Here is a list: child poverty is going up again — [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Mr. Clegg must be heard. It is very early in the day and Members are already overexcited. They need to simmer down.

Mr. Clegg: Here is a list that they do not like to hear. Child poverty is going up again. Inequality is going up. Last winter more people died of the cold than did a decade ago, and a child born today in the poorest part of this country will die a full 14 years before a child born somewhere else. That has not changed in 10 years. Will the Prime Minister now be honest? He has failed on fairness.

The Prime Minister: We have taken action over the 10 years. I know that the right hon. Gentleman does not like me reading lists of what we have done, but the problem is that he cannot read any lists of what he has done. What we have done is taken hundreds of thousands of children out of poverty, protected children and families against the costs of energy bills, given thousands of children Sure Start opportunities that they never would have had and doubled the child tax credit for nought to one-year-olds to help avoid infant poverty. The right hon. Gentleman wants to abolish the child trust fund, and we are giving young children the chance for the first time to have a trust fund of their own. We are the party that will give every child in this country a trust fund. For the Conservatives and the Liberals, trust funds are just for the few.

Early Intervention

Q2. [304964] Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North) (Lab): What recent discussions he has had with hon. Members on an all-party approach to policy on early intervention.

The Prime Minister: I congratulate my hon. Friend on his pioneering work on this issue. Following my meeting with him and parliamentary colleagues, I visited some of the early intervention projects in Nottingham, including in his constituency. I welcome everyone working together on early intervention. There are 50,000 families who need our help, and breaking intergenerational cycles of deprivation requires us all to work consistently on early intervention over the years.

Mr. Allen: Do the Prime Minister and the other party leaders here today accept that giving our babies, children and young people the social and emotional bedrock that they need through early intervention not only gives them a great start in life but, at a time of financial restraint, will save the taxpayer billions and billions of pounds by reducing the bill for low educational attainment, crime, drink and drug abuse, and lifetimes that are currently wasted on benefits?

The Prime Minister: I visited Nottingham, as I said, and saw the success of an early intervention programme that had taken a family that was in absolute chaos, and every single member of that family was benefiting from the professional work that had been done to help them. I have seen early intervention in action. We are putting in a programme in all parts of the country. It is complemented by Sure Start, where young people can get the chance, before nursery school age, to get help with learning, and help for their mothers with health and education. If we are going to have early intervention, we must also have Sure Start. I hope all parties in the House will want to maintain the Sure Start programme. There are 3,000 centres—an average of six in each constituency—and it is something that we want to build upon, not destroy.

Andrew Selous (South-West Bedfordshire) (Con): Does the Prime Minister accept that early intervention work is especially important in addressing the root causes of poverty?

The Prime Minister: Absolutely: dealing with the root causes of poverty involves helping people to find jobs. That is why we have the new deal—but unfortunately, it is opposed by the Conservative party. Tackling the root causes of poverty means helping people to deal with health problems. That is why we spend money on the health service, instead of calling it a 60-year-old mistake. That is what we are about—helping to deal with the root causes of the problem, by investing in people.

Engagements

Q3. [304965] Lindsay Roy (Glenrothes) (Lab): If he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 9 December.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave some moments ago.

Lindsay Roy: Child tax credits are a vital support for many parents, especially those on incomes of around £16,000. Will the Prime Minister reassure my constituents that he will not cut help for those many hard-working families to pay for tax cuts for the wealthiest few?

The Prime Minister: Child tax credits have lifted 500,000 children out of poverty, and they are now helping people through this recession: 400,000 families, some of whose breadwinners are on short-time work or work part time, have been able to claim tax credits worth, on average, £37 a week. That is our way of helping people out of recession. I would regret it very much if any party chose to cut tax credits by £400 million. I understand that that would affect every family with an income above £16,000—which means that it is a policy that will hurt the many, at a time when that same party wants to benefit the few.

Mr. John Hayes (South Holland and The Deepings) (Con): The Prime Minister should know that skills are vital for economic recovery and our competitiveness, so he will have been as disappointed as I was with Lord Mandelson's concession in the recently published skills strategy that the Government will miss their 2011 targets for level 3 technical skills. In that spirit of confession, will the Prime Minister now concede that fewer people are beginning level 3 apprenticeships than 10 years ago?

The Prime Minister: We are actually doing far more to increase the number of apprenticeships. There are more apprenticeships this year than last year—and let us remember that there were 70,000 apprenticeships in 1997, whereas there are a quarter of a million now. If the hon. Gentleman wants to help people to get to level 3, why does the Conservative party oppose the summer school leavers guarantee, which helps young people to get those qualifications in their teens? Why does the Conservative party oppose the money that is necessary to give every young person, not just some young people, a chance?

Q4. [304966] Derek Twigg (Halton) (Lab): I have had many letters in recent weeks about the Copenhagen climate change conference. On the subject of low-carbon energy sources, can I ask my right hon. Friend what steps he is taking to convince people further of the importance of nuclear energy and wind farms in that overall policy?

The Prime Minister: We meet in a week when a big set of decisions has to be made at Copenhagen. I know that there is all-party support for our desire to get the best possible agreement at Copenhagen that could lead to substantial reductions in carbon. We—as Europe, and as Britain—have said that we will lead the way in making substantial reductions in carbon. I have to tell my hon. Friend that that will happen only if we have a balanced energy policy, and only if we are able to tackle the issue of renewables. Yes, we need nuclear power as part of our energy policy—I am sorry that the Opposition say that for them it is only a last resort—but we also need wind power as part of the renewables that we are going to create in the future. We need not just offshore wind power but onshore wind power, and I am sorry that applications are being turned down by Conservative authorities, when we want to get wind power and wind turbines in our country. I am afraid the Conservative policy on energy is all talk and no action—all wind and no turbine. [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before hon. Members get too excited, I want to fit a lot more Back Benchers in.

Q12. [304974] Alistair Burt (North-East Bedfordshire) (Con): Last Sunday, the people of Northall in my constituency were unable to obtain a drinks licence for their annual lunch at the village hall because the Government-imposed limit of 15 for the year had been reached. Inquiries of Bedfordshire police suggested that neither the lunch nor the hall regularly featured in their investigations of binge drinking and loutish behaviour. Will the Prime Minister review the bureaucratic and unnecessary regulation that prompts these decisions and ensure a return to local discretion, which is how these decisions should be made, or will he make way for a Government who will?

The Prime Minister: I am happy to take this issue up. I want people to have that opportunity. This should be a matter for far greater local discretion, and we will do our best to achieve that.

Q5. [304967] Keith Vaz (Leicester, East) (Lab): Last weekend a much-loved Leicestershire teacher, Mark Parker, died aged only 56 following a hypoglycaemic attack because of his diabetes. We currently spend £1 million an hour on treating diabetes-related illnesses, but there are still an estimated 7 million Britons with a pre-diabetes condition, probably including Members of Parliament. I was diagnosed only three years ago. What steps will the Government take to ensure that every person in this country has access to a diabetes test? That would save money, and in the long run save lives.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend is right about the importance of dealing with diabetes. The test for identifying those at risk of developing type 2 diabetes is included in the NHS health check that will be offered to those aged 40 to 74. It will also assess people's risk of heart disease, stroke and kidney disease, and help individuals to manage that risk. We believe that we will be able to identify at least 20,000 cases of diabetes and kidney disease earlier, and that will be important for the health of our country and for preventing the further costs that result when people suffer from those diseases. Investment in that programme now will save money later, and it is the right way forward for the national health service to give people personal guarantees that they will have those health checks free of charge.

Q6. [304968] Mr. John Leech (Manchester, Withington) (LD): Given that the Prime Minister has said that front-line NHS services should not be affected by cuts, will he join me in condemning the decision by NHS Manchester to close the Burnage walk-in centre, against the wishes of local people?

The Prime Minister: I understand that the closure has been postponed to allow the primary care trust to inform the people about the alternative services that are available. We have invested an additional £250 million in 100 new GP practices in poorly serviced areas and in 152 new health centres. This is a matter for decision by the local NHS, together with patients and others. I understand that the hon. Gentleman said at the last election that a hospital in his area would close: that hospital is still in being.

Jeff Ennis (Barnsley, East and Mexborough) (Lab): Will the Prime Minister join me in congratulating American bedspring manufacturers Leggett & Platt on investing some $22 million in establishing their European headquarters in Grimethorpe in my constituency? That is mainly thanks to the efforts of Yorkshire Forward and the Barnsley development agency. Does he also agree with me that places such as Barnsley and Doncaster specifically, and Yorkshire and Humber in general, are still great places for foreign companies to invest?

The Prime Minister: This is exactly the policy that the Chancellor is pursuing, and that his pre-Budget report is about. It is about recovery from recession by investing in the future, and it is about getting growth in the economy so that we get new jobs in new areas. I applaud the work that my hon. Friend the Member for Barnsley, East and Mexborough (Jeff Ennis) does. This is the party of jobs, whereas the Opposition would leave millions unemployed.

Q7. [304969] Sir Alan Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed) (LD): What is the Prime Minister prepared to do about the fact that some of the most vulnerable people who have the greatest difficulty in heating their homes pay the highest tariffs for their fuel, either because they have pre-payment meters or because they live in areas with no gas supply and do not have access to dual-fuel tariffs?

The Prime Minister: I am grateful that the right hon. Gentleman has raised that point, because the Energy Bill is an attempt to deal with some of the problems that arise and to ensure that the social tariff is far fairer for people with difficulties. However, I also have to remind him that into the homes of thousands—indeed, millions—of pensioners in the past few days has come the winter fuel allowance, which is paid to everyone over 60, and is higher for the over-80s. It is one contribution that we can make to help with the heating bills of the poorest in our society, but it is a contribution made to every pensioner and everyone over 60 in our country. I hope that there is now a consensus that that is the right thing to do.

Q15. [304977] John Mann (Bassetlaw) (Lab): When I was out with the police on a Friday night in my area, only 14 police officers were on duty in the division, out of a total complement of 2,380. Will the Prime Minister intervene directly and swiftly to sort out the organisational malaise that characterises Nottinghamshire police?

The Prime Minister: The Home Secretary tells me that Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary is looking into Nottinghamshire police at the moment, but I have to say that the whole purpose of neighbourhood policing, which we have developed over the past two years, is to get more police on the streets. For that, we need to invest in policing and emphasise the concept that the police serve the neighbourhood. That is exactly what we are doing.

Q8. [304970] Mr. Adam Holloway (Gravesham) (Con): Does the Prime Minister agree with Ben Bernanke that the Prime Minister's decision to strip the Bank of England of its supervising role led to a "destructive run" and a

"major problem for the British economy"?

The Prime Minister: No. I think that anybody who looks at the global recession knows that it started with the problems of the banking system in America, which spread right across the world. Our tripartite system is the right way to deal with these problems, because it brings together the Bank of England, the Financial Services Authority and the Treasury. I noticed that only yesterday the Leader of the Opposition changed the shadow Chancellor's policy on the future of the banking system, and that he also talked yesterday about introducing "flatter taxes". Flatter taxes mean less tax paid by the very wealthy. Before the Conservatives come to give us lectures on economic policy, they should go back to the drawing board.

Q9. [304971] Emily Thornberry (Islington, South and Finsbury) (Lab): Will my right hon. Friend give the public a guarantee that he will never lift the ban on hunting with dogs?

The Prime Minister: I am surprised that a political party wants to fight the next election on withdrawing the ban on fox hunting. In fact, that is that party's only job creation policy—to create a quango to run fox hunting. I believe that it is making a terrible mistake, and it will pay for it at the next election.

Pre-Budget Report

12.32 pm

The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Alistair Darling): Today's pre-Budget report takes place at a critical time for our economy and for our country. Governments across the world have taken co-ordinated steps to deal with the biggest financial crisis for over half a century. In the UK, our action has reduced the impact of this downturn on families and businesses, but there is still much uncertainty, so the task today is to ensure the recovery and promote long-term growth.

To promote growth, we need to invest in the dynamic sectors of the future—in digital, bio and low-carbon technology—and I will announce measures that will support those industries. To promote growth, we also need to invest in the skills of young people to prevent a lost generation of youth unemployment. I will announce measures to guarantee work opportunities for the young. To promote growth we also need to maintain support until the recovery is secured and to halve the deficit over four years, in an orderly way that does not threaten investment vital to our future. The choice is between going for growth and putting the recovery at risk—to reduce the deficit while protecting front-line services, or cuts that put those services in danger. The choice is between two competing visions. This pre-Budget report is about building a fairer society and securing opportunity for all.

When I delivered the pre-Budget report just over 12 months ago, we were faced with the sharpest and most widespread global downturn in generations. The near collapse of the financial system quickly fed through into the wider global economy. World trade went down sharply and unemployment sharply up across the world. Families and businesses in every continent felt the pain.

Governments around the world intervened to rescue the banking system. We supported our economies with tax cuts, increased Government spending and co-ordinated action to lower interest rates and to boost money supply. No choices were easy choices; indeed, some even argued that we should not have acted at all. But as a result of those actions, there is growing evidence that global confidence is returning. The US housing market, which triggered the crisis, is stabilising—so is the housing market here. Global manufacturing is up almost 6 per cent., world stock markets by 30 per cent.

As the world's largest financial centre, the turmoil in the banking sector has had a substantial effect on the UK. With more home owners here than in Europe, a global slump in property prices hit confidence hard in this country. As the sixth biggest exporter of goods and the second largest exporter of services, our trade has been hit. But as demand picks up abroad, as is already happening, British businesses will benefit. So I am confident that the UK economy will start growing by the turn of the year.

However, across the world, there remain risks to recovery. Oil prices are volatile. Recent market reaction to financial problems in Dubai highlights just how fragile world confidence remains. So while I am confident that the UK economy is on the road to recovery, we cannot be complacent. We must continue to support the economy until recovery is established. To cut support now could wreck the recovery. That is a risk that I am not prepared to take.

This time last year, we recognised the exceptional trading difficulties that businesses here were facing. In the past, inaction by Government to support firms led to widespread—and avoidable—business failure. I was determined that we did not repeat that mistake. So in an unprecedented move, I cut VAT to 15 per cent. for a year, to put more than £11 billion into the pockets of consumers and retailers. That countered the impact on businesses of the global credit squeeze and the collapse in consumer demand when it was needed most. I can confirm that VAT will return to 17.5 per cent. on 1 January, as planned. I have no other changes in VAT to announce.

To ease problems with cash flow and access to bank lending, we deferred tax rises and extended tax allowances for businesses. Because we chose to intervene, the rate of business insolvencies is far lower than would have been expected. In the recession of the early 1990s, proportionally twice as many businesses went under. While some measures such as the VAT cut and the working capital and trade credit insurance schemes are finishing, it is right to extend others while uncertainty remains. The time-to-pay scheme has helped more than 160,000 businesses spread their tax payments over a timetable that they can afford. They can get additional time when they need it most and, because firms continue trading, the likelihood of companies paying the tax owed increases, so I have decided that the scheme will be extended for as long as it is needed.

Last year, I temporarily increased the threshold for empty property relief to help small businesses. I can announce that it will be extended, so that for 2010-11, empty commercial properties with a rateable value below £18,000 will be exempt from business rates. Seventy per cent. of all empty properties will continue, therefore, to be exempt. I have one further announcement to help small businesses. I have decided to defer the increase in corporation tax for smaller companies. That will leave the 2010 rate unchanged for 850,000 small businesses, helping them until the recovery is secured.

In the early 1990s, hundreds of thousands of families lost their homes. I did not want to see that repeated, so we introduced a range of measures to allow families to stay in their homes and to help young couples on to the housing ladder. As a result, repossessions are now running at around half the rate of the recession of the early 1990s. By the time the stamp duty holiday finishes at the end of this month, I expect 240,000 home buyers to have been helped. But with unemployment still likely to rise, it would not be right to withdraw all support now for home owners.

Last year I improved the scheme giving support for mortgage interest, to provide better cover for mortgage interest payments for those who had lost their jobs. More than 220,000 people have been helped so far. I have decided that that additional support will be extended for a further six months. There will, of course, be a cost to that and other continued Government support, but the cost to families of losing their home would be immense, and it would be a false economy for the country. The more successful these measures are in restoring confidence to the housing market, the lower the cost will be to the Exchequer.

The best way of avoiding repossessions is to help people to stay in work or re-enter the labour market quickly. Such a deep global recession was always going to have a damaging impact on employment. The bleak news last week that Corus is to shut its Teesside plant underlined the fact that the reduction in global demand will have an impact on jobs for some time to come. That is why, yesterday, I agreed with the Secretary of State for Business, Innovation and Skills to provide £30 million from within existing resources to help industry in Teesside.

No Government, even during times of the strongest economic growth, can prevent every job loss. Unemployment has risen in the UK and will keep rising for some time, but it remains lower than it was in France, Canada, the United States and the euro area. In fact, even now, there are some 2.5 million more people in work than there were in 1997. Because of our values of fairness and opportunity, promoting employment has always been, and remains, a top priority for this Government. Unemployment can never be a price worth paying.

As the global recession hit our country, we responded by bringing forward investment in vital infrastructure projects to protect jobs, and finding an additional £3 billion to help people to find new work more quickly. We expanded the Jobcentre Plus network and offered support through the rapid response service to staff in 3,000 firms hit by redundancies. Help including training, volunteering and recruitment subsidies has been offered to those still unemployed after six months.

It is clear that we are making a difference. Unemployment has increased much less than expected by independent forecasters. If we had seen the same rate of job losses, relative to GDP, as we saw in the early 1990s, four times as many people would have lost their jobs. Despite the severity of the global recession, the claimant count today stands at 1.6 million, compared with the 3 million reached in 1985 and 1992. Our comprehensive support means that a short spell in unemployment is not turning into a lifetime on benefits, as happened in the recessions of the '80s and '90s. Indeed, more than 3 million people have been helped off the claimant count in the past year.

Despite this support, there are groups who need more help. Past recessions have had a very damaging impact on young people, who should have been starting their working lives, but instead were unemployed. Our package of support for the young already includes a place for every 16 and 17-year-old in education or training. I intend to provide funding so that this guarantee will be available to school leavers again next September. In the Budget, I went further and announced that every 18 to 24-year-old would be guaranteed work or training after 12 months out of work. I do not want them to have to wait that long, however, so I am going to bring that forward. I have decided that, from next month, no one under 24 needs to be unemployed for longer than six months before being guaranteed work or training.

In the past, older people were allowed—indeed, often encouraged—to drift into permanent unemployment, but we cannot afford to write off their experience. So we will ensure that the over-50s receive specialist and tailored support to equip them with the confidence and skills they need to get a job. We also want to encourage those who want to stay working part-time after they reach retirement age, and to make work pay for everyone, regardless of their age. To make it easier for those over 65 to receive the working tax credit, we will reduce the minimum number of hours they need to work to be eligible.

We chose not to let people sink when they lost their jobs, but to intervene to help them to stay afloat. That is good for the individuals and their families, and also for the wider economy, boosting spending and, in turn, creating new jobs. The more successful our targeted support, the more likely that the rise in unemployment will be lower than expected and therefore cost the country less, as has already happened. Government action has made a real difference.

The worldwide recession has had an impact on all families, and it is often the most vulnerable who are affected the most, including those on modest incomes who have been put on shorter hours. The Government's flexible tax credits system has risen to the challenge of the downturn, delivering substantial support to families to compensate for that loss of pay. I can tell the House that so far this year, because of tax credits 400,000 families whose income has fallen have benefited from that extra help—on average by £37 more per week. For those who doubt the value of tax credits, here is the proof that they work.

The recession has also had other effects. For the first time in half a century, the retail prices index has been negative for much of the year. That helps families with the cost of essential goods, but many benefits and tax credits are also linked to the September RPI. RPI inflation last September was minus 1.4 per cent. That would have meant no increase in those benefits in April. I do not believe that such a freeze would be fair, so I can confirm that the basic state pension will not be frozen, but will rise by 2.5 per cent. in April—a real-terms increase of nearly 4 per cent.

I can also tell the House that, from the time of the Budget, I will cut bingo duty from 22 to 20 per cent.—[Interruption.] Obviously a popular measure. I also want to help families in receipt of other benefits linked to the inflation figures, such as child benefit and some disability benefits, so those benefits will rise by 1.5 per cent. in April.

We are committed to helping people back into work, and making work pay. I have decided to roll out across the country a guarantee that anyone in work will always be better off than they were on benefits. If that is not happening already, they will be guaranteed extra money from the Government, making sure that work really does pay for everyone and encouraging more people to re-enter the labour market. So we are continuing to provide targeted support for people and businesses, as we secure the recovery.

Across world economies, the first half of this year saw a sharper deterioration than had been expected. That was also true here in the UK. Up to the third quarter of this year, the global recession has meant a cumulative economic contraction of 3.2 per cent. in the United States, 5.6 per cent. in Germany, 5.9 per cent. in Italy and 7.7 per cent. in Japan. Over the year as a whole, the UK economy is expected to have contracted by 4.75 per cent. this year, but as I forecast at the Budget, I expect a return to growth in the fourth quarter.

Next year, I forecast growth of between 1 and 1.5 per cent., as I said in the Budget. Because of the underlying strength of our economy, the pick-up in world demand and the substantial spare capacity opened up by the recession, my Budget forecast, broadly in line with that of the Bank of England, of growth of 3.5 per cent. in 2011 and 2012 remains unchanged. This growth, however, will come from more varied sources and not depend as much on the financial sector, which will, of course, remain an important part of our economy. Growth will be driven by fresh opportunities to export as the global economy expands and by investment by businesses in the key industries of the future. It is growth that I am determined to support in this pre-Budget report.

[Mr. Alistair Darling]

Partly because of the reversal of the VAT cut, consumer inflation will rise from 1.5 per cent. to around 3 per cent. early next year, before falling back. The Bank of England expects inflation then to fall below target and reach 1.5 per cent. by the end of next year.

The global recession has had an impact on the public finances in every country, with tax revenues falling and spending increasing to support the economy. Here in the United Kingdom, the financial sector, which provided over a quarter of all corporate tax revenues, has been hard hit. Revenues from stamp duty and income tax are sharply down and it will take time for tax revenues to recover.

Our steps to maintain stability in the banking sector have also had an impact on the public finances. At the Budget, given the extreme uncertainty at the time, I made a provisional £50 billion estimate of the possible taxpayer losses from our interventions in the financial sector. Those risks have now significantly diminished because of the successful intervention of Governments to support the global financial system. Lloyds Banking Group, for example, has been able to raise capital from the markets and is not receiving Government support in the asset protection scheme. We have also restructured RBS's participation in that scheme, so there are no expected losses for the taxpayer. Other banks are also in a much more stable situation. As a result, I can revise down my provision for any potential impact on the public finances from £50 billion to around £10 billion, but our objective remains to get all the taxpayers' money back, on top of the fees charged for supporting banks through this crisis.

I have made clear that support during the downturn must go hand-in-hand with steps to rebuild our fiscal strength once recovery is firmly established. Backed by legislation introduced today, the Government will ensure that public sector net borrowing as a share of GDP falls every year and is more than halved by 2013-14, and that net debt as a share of GDP is falling in 2015-16. I believe that that is a sensible timetable. To consolidate too soon, too quickly or too indiscriminately, as some have proposed, would risk delaying the recovery and threatening a longer recession. When Japan tightened prematurely in the 1990s, it pushed the economy back into recession, making debt and deficits higher, not lower.

Taken as a whole, this pre-Budget report secures a fall in borrowing each year until 2013-14 to meet our deficit reduction plan. In the Budget, I forecast that public sector net borrowing would be £175 billion this year and would then fall to £97 billion in 2013-14. Because of the severity of the recession, my forecast for this year's borrowing is £178 billion. Next year it will fall to £176 billion. As the economy recovers and the deficit reduction plan starts to take effect, it will fall to £140 billion and then to £117 billion, and will reach £96 billion in 2013-14—a slightly lower level than I forecast in April—before falling to £82 billion in 2014-15. As a share of GDP, borrowing will be 12.6 per cent. this year, 12 per cent. next year, then 9.1 per cent., then 7.1 per cent., and 5.5 per cent. in 2013-14. It will fall to 4.4 per cent. in 2014-15. If we exclude public sector investment, or capital spending, and take the economic cycle into account, the budget deficit is expected to fall to 1.9 per cent. at the end of the forecast period.

Public sector debt has increased in every G20 country as a result of this global recession. Net debt as a share of GDP is expected to reach 82 per cent. in Germany, 83 per cent. in France, and 85 per cent. in the United States. As a result of the lower provision for possible losses in our financial sector this year, I can forecast that net debt will reach 56 per cent. of GDP. It will then rise to 65 per cent. next year, and to 78 per cent. by the end of the forecast period in 2014-15. However, net debt as a share of GDP will fall the year after that. Even at its peak, debt will be in line with the average for the other G7 economies.

I believe that we have made the right choices to help the country through the recession when we could have chosen to do nothing. We also need to make the right choices to reduce the deficit. In the Budget, I set out how we would do that by encouraging growth now and in the future, with fair tax increases and with tighter control of public spending. I now want to set out further details of how we will achieve this deficit reduction plan.

The combination of the talents of the British people and today's low inflation and low interest rate environment provides us with a strong platform to meet our ambition of long-term sustainable growth—so does having the most flexible labour market in Europe, the lowest rate of corporation tax in the G7, and a competition regime that is among the best in the world. That is why ours is judged to be one of the best locations in which to do business and attract inward investment. I am determined to build on those strengths today by maintaining our leadership in the low-carbon sector, boosting investment in our national infrastructure and skills, and supporting our world-class high-tech industries.

In line with the overall neutrality of this pre-Budget report, two thirds of the targeted measures that I shall now announce come from within existing budgets. If businesses are to expand and grow, they need access to credit. Following the intervention by the Government, total bank loans to businesses today are above where they were when the crisis hit in 2007. We have seen over £50 billion in new business loans from RBS and Lloyds alone. But unsurprisingly, at the same time other businesses have reacted to the uncertainty by repaying existing loans, which is why net lending as a whole is down. I am very aware that some small and medium-sized businesses still encounter difficulties in obtaining loans. As recovery gets under way, we shall need to ensure that SMEs obtain the credit they need. We must work with the banks to ensure that that happens. We are also working to secure a contribution from major banks towards a £500 million growth capital fund which will invest specifically in small businesses. We will announce further details shortly.

In January we launched the enterprise finance guarantee, which has already offered Government guarantees on bank loans to over 6,000 businesses. Today I have decided to extend the scheme for a further 12 months, which will guarantee a further £500 million of loans to small businesses.

This week sees the start of the UN conference on climate change, an historic opportunity for the reaching of a universal agreement to tackle global warming. We can be proud that the UK has led the way: on meeting Kyoto targets, introducing carbon budgets, and recognising that developing countries need help to reduce their own emissions. Tackling climate change will bring new opportunities for new low-carbon industries, and that will create the high-skilled, high-paid jobs that are crucial to our future prosperity.

Today I can redirect existing funding and invest in wind power, renewable energy and other green industries. Through the innovation investment fund and the Carbon Trust's venture capital scheme, we will support at least £160 million of public and private investment in low-carbon projects. We will also invest £90 million in the European Investment Bank's new 2020 fund, which will enable €6.5 billion of finance to be made available for green infrastructure projects. I can also tell the House that we will double our commitment to finance four carbon capture and storage demonstration projects, which will make us world leaders in that vital area.

As well as investing in clean and low-carbon technologies, we must all become more energy-efficient and cut emissions as well as household bills. The roll-out of smart meters, which will be completed in 2020, will help families to identify how to become more energy-efficient. Improving home insulation is key. A quarter of all the country's emissions come from households. Already 235,000 homes have benefited from the Warm Front scheme to provide more efficient heating and insulation for the most vulnerable. Today I can announce an additional £200 million, from April, to help with energy efficiency. An extra 75,000 households will benefit from an extension of the scheme. That will go alongside further requirements, amounting to up to £300 million overall, for the energy companies to provide discounts on energy bills for a further 1 million low-income households.

Inefficient domestic boilers add over £200 to household bills and 1 tonne of carbon to the atmosphere each year. I therefore want to build on the successful car scrappage scheme. I want to help 125,000 homes to replace those inefficient boilers with new models. I can also announce changes to the climate change levy, company car tax, and fuel benefit charge.

I have three more targeted measures to announce. From April, people with home wind turbines or solar panels who plug excess power into the national grid will receive, on average, £900 a year. I intend to make that payment tax-free. To help to boost the number of electric cars on our streets, I have decided to exempt them from company car tax for five years. I can also announce 100 per cent. first-year capital allowances for electric vans.

A key component of our growth strategy is investment to keep goods and people moving. The Government have made huge strides in rebuilding the national infrastructure following years of neglect. Continued public investment here is essential to growth. This year public sector investment reached a 30-year high, and has delivered more than 70 road and motorway schemes and improved journey times across the rail network. Work is now under way on Crossrail, the Thameslink project and, from this month, the upgrade of the M1. All that work will continue; so will the rail electrification programmes for the Great Western main line and the north-west that were announced in July.

I have given the go-ahead to further plans for rail electrification between Liverpool, Manchester and Preston. My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will announce further details shortly. The Government will also respond, early next year, to the proposals for a new high-speed rail line from London to the west midlands and to the north and Scotland.

Since 1997, we have helped millions of people gain qualifications or training. The number of apprenticeships has doubled. New advanced apprenticeships will meet the skills needed in key growth areas, such as advanced manufacturing, low carbon, digital technologies, and the biosciences. We also want to break down informal barriers that close off some careers to undergraduates, particularly from poorer backgrounds, so I can announce that we will offer financial support for up to 10,000 undergraduates from low-income backgrounds to take up short-term internships in industry, businesses and the professions. This will give them a taste of careers that they may not otherwise have considered. We will announce further details shortly.

We are modernising the UK's digital infrastructure and, in the process, creating thousands more skilled jobs. We have provided funding to help extend the opportunities of the broadband network to more remote communities. We now want to go further, so that we can provide the next generation of super-fast broadband to 90 per cent. of the population by the end of 2017. That will be funded through a duty of 50p a month on landlines, which will be included in the Finance Bill.

The oil and gas industry is an essential part of our economy. To encourage further investment, I am today relaxing the criteria of the field allowances, to support the development of up to eight known fields and to encourage further exploration. We will work with industry to look at how best to ensure the development of infrastructure to the west of Shetland.

We already have a tremendous track record in key growth industries. We have the leading medical biotechnology sector in Europe. Our aerospace industry is the second largest in the world. Our creative sector has increased exports by 60 per cent. since the beginning of this decade. All of that has been supported through our investment in science and our targeted tax policy. This country has a remarkable record of ideas and innovation. We have won more Nobel prizes than any other country of our size. We need to do more to support this ingenuity and ensure this creativity is harnessed by this country. I want to encourage research and development in the pharmaceuticals and biotech industries in particular. So, following consultation with business, I will introduce a new 10 pence corporation tax on income that stems from patents in the UK. This will help maintain jobs in science and technology in this country.

I also want to build on our world-class achievements in medical research. With the Wellcome Trust, Cancer Research UK and University college London, we are working on plans to establish the largest institute in Europe for research into long-term medical challenges.

[Mr. Alistair Darling]

The new strategic investment fund, set up in April, has already agreed vital support to hi-tech projects such as Airbus in Wales and the life sciences in Scotland. We will expand this work through £100 million of redirected funds and an extra £100 million. By supporting the low-carbon sector and investing in our vital infrastructure and our world-class industries, we will secure growth, create new jobs and provide the revenue to help rebuild our fiscal strength.

Supporting growth is vital to provide the future revenue to halve borrowing over the next four years, but, as I have said, it also requires us to take some tough decisions on tax now. I am determined that any tax increases will continue to be guided by our values of fairness and responsibility. Last year, the banks made collective losses of £80 billion in this country alone. This would have been much higher without the unprecedented level of support from the taxpayer. There is no bank that has not benefited, either directly or indirectly, from this help. This should be a time for banks to rebuild their capital base and become stronger. A tax on profits, as has been suggested, would prevent them from doing that, so I have decided against a windfall tax. However, there are some banks who still believe their priority is to pay substantial bonuses to some already high-paid staff. Their priority should be to rebuild their financial strength and increase their lending, so I am giving them a choice: they can use their profits to build up their capital base, but if they insist on paying substantial rewards, I am determined to claw money back for the taxpayer. I have decided to introduce from today a special one-off levy of 50 per cent. on any individual discretionary bonus above £25,000. This will be paid by the bank, not the bank employee, and anti-avoidance measures will be introduced with immediate effect. High-paid bank staff will, of course, also have to pay, as usual, income tax at their top rate on any bonus they receive. On a cautious assumption, which includes our expectation that some banks will rein back on bonuses, this levy is expected to yield just over £500 million. That additional money will be used to pay for the extra measures that I have already announced, such as help for the young and older unemployed to get back into work.

Under the existing rules, the highest earners benefit disproportionately from tax relief on pensions. At present, a quarter of all the money spent on pensions tax relief goes to the top 1.5 per cent. of earners. To make this fairer, I announced in the Budget that we would reduce pension tax relief for people with incomes of over £150,000. I want to do that as fairly as possible, and to treat individuals the same regardless of whether they receive their pay as current salary or as a future pension benefit, and prevent avoidance, so I have decided to include employer pension contributions in the definition of income for this tax measure. To provide certainty, I will introduce a floor so that, irrespective of the size of employer pension contributions, no one with an income below £130,000 will be affected.

I believe it is right that parents should be able to pass on savings to their children. Before the financial crisis rocked the global economy, I enabled married couples to combine their inheritance tax allowances, and this will continue. I also said then that allowances would rise to reflect inflation and the expected continued increase in house prices, but I do not believe that raising this allowance can possibly be a priority given the impact of the downturn on the country's finances, so I have decided to freeze the individual allowance at £325,000 for the next year. That will still mean that fewer than 3 per cent. of estates will pay inheritance tax.

I have decided against any further changes to income tax rates or thresholds next year, except for some changes in what can be tax-deductible. Because RPI inflation was negative in September, this will provide a real-terms benefit relative to inflation, but in April 2012 I have decided to freeze the point at which people start to pay income tax at 40 per cent. for one year. No one with income below £43,000 will be affected by this change.

It is also fair that those who should pay tax do not escape their responsibilities. I am determined to tackle activities such as avoidance and evasion, which undermine tax receipts. Since the Budget, Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs has asked for details of at least 100,000 offshore accounts held at over 300 financial institutions. This pre-Budget report sets out anti-avoidance and smaller tax measures to deliver additional revenues and protect £5 billion a year of existing revenues.

These are tough, but necessary, measures to increase tax, but I have done this in a fair way: those on modest incomes are protected; those on middle incomes will pay more, depending on their earnings; but the biggest burden will fall on those with the broadest shoulders. Today's measures, combined with those from the Budget and last year's pre-Budget report, mean that over half of the additional revenue raised will be paid by the top 2 per cent. of earners.

Fairness in tax is a crucial part of maintaining fiscal sustainability, but the majority of the reduction in borrowing will have to come from slower growth in overall public spending. We have already set out our spending plans until April 2011, but I believe it would be dangerous, as the head of the International Monetary Fund said only a couple of weeks ago, to reduce spending too soon, so to continue to support jobs and the economy, we have decided to stick to our spending plans for next year. In 2010-11, total public spending will increase by £31 billion, a growth rate of 2.2 per cent. in real terms, providing continuing strong support for the wider economy until the recovery is firmly established. Once recovery is secured, we must, as I made clear at the time of the Budget, reduce the rate of growth in public spending, and meet our ambitious target to halve the deficit.

We take these decisions from a position of strength. In 1997, our public services were in crisis. Chronic under-investment in health and education had taken its toll: hospitals with too few nurses and doctors to meet the needs of patients; schools with too few teachers, textbooks and computers. The country had failed, too, to invest in transport and national infrastructure, all of which was damaging to our economy and prosperity. That was the record we inherited and that was the record we had to deal with. We have worked to turn it around, through a combination of strong investment and far-reaching reform.

So, although the period ahead is going to be challenging, our public services are in a better state they have been for decades. However, we have to be realistic: the spending environment will be tough over the next few years. For as long as extraordinary uncertainties remain in the world economy, this is not a time for a spending review.

We have already set out clear and firm departmental budgets for the next financial year, but to try to fix each Department's budget now for the next five years is neither necessary nor sensible. We can, however, set out a clear direction, based on our economic priorities and our values as a Government.

We are clear that, following the investment made over the past decade, current spending growth can be set lower than in the past and fall to an average of 0.8 per cent. a year between 2011-12 and 2014-15. That will mean cuts to some budgets, as programmes come to an end or resources are switched, and it will mean that some programmes will need to be stopped altogether. We believe that if Departments can find further savings and cuts within their existing budgets, as many are already announcing, that will release resources so that they can continue to provide services. Already individual Departments have made great strides in finding savings—£10 billion in the NHS, £800 million in education and more than £400 million in the police—but even in this much tighter financial environment we are determined to protect front-line services and sustain the improvements that have been delivered over the past decade. The pre-Budget report sets out our plan to do that while halving the deficit.

First, we must make sure that we get maximum value for every pound we spend. Between 2005 and 2008, we delivered £26.5 billion of annual efficiency savings, and between 2008 and 2011 we are delivering further efficiencies worth more than 3 per cent. of total departmental spending per year. This week, we announced plans to deliver another round of savings, amounting to £12 billion a year by 2013-14. We will abolish quangos, cut consultancy and marketing costs, improve procurement and streamline back-office functions. We will also sell those assets that can be managed better by the private sector.

Secondly, we need to focus better on those areas that make most difference to people's lives. We have begun a root-and-branch review to examine every area of Government spending to drive through efficiency, to cut waste and to cut lower priority budgets. Today, I am able to announce £5 billion of savings from spending programmes. This includes: phasing-in the roll-out of pension personal accounts; cutting back on the scope of major IT projects; reforming legal aid and outsourcing inefficient prisons; refocusing regeneration spending, so that it is spent where it is most needed; and cutting the cost of residential care by supporting older people to stay in their own homes. Those are necessary choices.

Thirdly, on public sector pay and pensions, public pensions need to be broadly in line with those offered in the private sector. So, by 2012 contributions by the state to public sector pensions for teachers, local government, the NHS and the civil service will be capped, saving about £1 billion a year. Public sector workers will make a greater contribution to the increasing value of pensions, with those earning more than £100,000 paying more. Public sector pay makes up about half of departmental spending. The senior civil service will take the lead with a cut in its pay bill of up to £100 million over three years, and any new Government appointment of someone on more than £150,000 and all bonuses of more than £50,000 will require explicit approval by the Treasury. I can announce that for the two years from 2011 we will ensure that all public sector pay settlements are capped at 1 per cent. [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I apologise for interrupting the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Mr. Bellingham, we have, on a regular basis, a running commentary from you, but the House does not need it and the country does not need it either.

Mr. Darling: As with previous pay decisions, we will recognise the special circumstances of the armed forces. There will be savings of £12 billion from greater efficiency, of £5 billion from scaling back or cutting lower priorities, and of more than £4.5 billion from reducing the cost of public sector pay and pensions. These are difficult choices, but they are essential if we are to stick to our plan to halve the deficit and protect the front line.

Our first priority today must be to ensure that our armed forces have all the resources they need. The whole House, especially this week, will want to join me in praising the dedication and valour of our troops, especially those engaged in the conflict in Afghanistan. They deserve all our support and we must match that support with resources. For the next year, I can announce that a further £2.5 billion will be set aside for military operations in Afghanistan. At the same time, we will continue to improve the effectiveness of core defence spending, reducing the civilian work force and restructuring the Department. I also want to do more to help those who have served in combat zones and are retiring from the forces, so I can announce that £5 million will be allocated from the strategic investment fund to help ex-service personnel who want to set up their own businesses.

In 2005, we led the way towards abolishing the debts of the poorest countries, and we have committed to doing more in the fight against global poverty. Spending on overseas aid remains a very small proportion of our overall budget, but it does make a huge difference to the lives of millions of people, as well as creating a fairer world, helping to build markets for our goods and countering extremism. I can confirm that we will honour our commitments, so spending on overseas aid will rise to 0.7 per cent of gross national income by 2013.

Our priority is to protect those services that are absolutely essential to the health of our society and the strength of our economy: the health service, which is crucial for our well-being; the police force, which is crucial for our safety; and our schools, which are crucial for our future. I am determined that we will protect improvements in those front-line services, on which millions of people rely. That cannot be done without a further difficult decision. I intend to increase all employer, employee and self-employed rates of national insurance by a further half pence from April 2011. But to protect those on modest incomes, I have also decided to raise the starting point from which national insurance is payable, and no-one earning less than £20,000 will pay more contributions as a result. This will raise £3 billion a year from 2011-12.

As a result, I am today able to offer guaranteed minimum real-terms increases in front-line NHS and schools spending for two years from 2011, as well as providing sufficient funding to maintain the number of police and community support officers. That means that I can confirm not just that we will increase spending as planned next year on hospitals, schools and policing, but we can pledge that spending on these crucial front-line services will continue to rise over and above inflation after 2010-11, so that we can meet the improved public service guarantees and entitlements that we have set out. There will of course be Barnett consequentials for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

[Mr. Darling]

I have one further announcement to make: because of my decisions today, I am able to extend free school meals to 500,000 primary school children of low-income working parents who previously would not have been eligible. Once that is fully rolled out, it will lift an additional 50,000 children out of relative poverty and will be a step towards our target of abolishing child poverty by 2020.

The decisions the Government have made have helped support businesses and families through the deepest global recession for more than 60 years. These are decisions that have been followed across the world but, of course, have been opposed by some here. The steps that I have announced today are aimed at securing recovery, reducing borrowing and, through targeted investment, providing a springboard for long-term growth. The choice facing the country is between securing recovery and wrecking it; between investment to build a fair society where all prosper or a divided society that favours the wealthy few; and between ambition driven by the values of fairness and opportunity or austerity driven by an outdated dogma. I commend this statement to the House.

Mr. George Osborne (Tatton) (Con): Today, confronted with the biggest budget deficit in our peacetime history, the right hon. Gentleman faced a choice: would he take the tough spending decisions before the general election or would he completely duck them? We were promised a pre-Budget report and what we got was a pre-election report. The Government have today lost all the moral authority to govern. Instead, the full scale of the economic disaster that Labour has visited on this country is clear to us all: the biggest debt we have ever known; spending cut on almost everything; taxes up on anyone who earns more than £20,000 a year; Labour's new tax on jobs; and higher interest rates to pay for the higher borrowing. Every family in the country will be forced to pay for years for this Prime Minister's mistakes. At the end of their period in office, they have indeed adhered to the greatest of golden rules: "Never trust a Labour Government with your money again."

Everything that the Government have told us on the economy collapses in the face of the truth. They told us that they would be prudent, and the figures that they have produced have shown us that Labour has quadrupled the national debt while in office. They told us that Britain was better prepared than other countries, and now our budget deficit is higher than that of any other comparable country anywhere else in the world. They specifically told us—this Prime Minister told us—that Britain would lead the world out of recession, and now the rest of the world leaves Britain behind as it recovers.

We are the only G20 economy in recession, and that Prime Minister used to stand at the Dispatch Box on occasions like this and say that he had rewritten the laws of economics, that he had abolished the trade cycle, and that he had abolished boom and bust. The numbers that the Chancellor has given us confirm that this Prime Minister inflicted on us the deepest and longest recession in our modern history. No one will ever believe a word they say on the economy again.

Faced with this catastrophe, the Chancellor had three tasks today: first, to restore confidence in the Treasury forecasts; secondly, to produce at last—we hoped—a credible plan to deal with Britain's record debts; and finally, to show the world that Britain is open for business again and can create jobs. He failed on all three accounts.

First, the forecasts. Every single time this Chancellor has come to this House, he has got his forecasts wrong, and today was no different. He confirmed that the GDP figures for this year show a contraction of 4.75 per cent. That is not only a full percentage point worse than the figure in the Budget—it is almost four times worse than when he delivered the last pre-Budget report. I noticed in his speech a little sleight of hand. He gave the annual contraction figure for the UK and the total contraction figure for every other country. The total contraction figure for the UK is 5.9 per cent., the worst since the 1930s.

It would be difficult to imagine that this year's forecast for borrowing would be an underestimate, but so it turned out to be. I am told that they are having a row in Downing street: the Prime Minister wants to get his forecasts wrong on purpose, while the Chancellor prefers to get them wrong by accident. Either way, Britain is borrowing £178 billion this year and £176 billion next year. This is a figure that he did not give: £789 billion of additional borrowing over the next six years, and that is based on some pretty heroic growth assumptions in future years. Of course, a sneaky fiddling of the definition of the structural deficit was buried in the report. It all amounts to the fact that he is doubling the national debt from where it is today to £1.4 trillion—£23,000 for every child born today.

Without a hint of irony or contrition, the Chancellor publishes today what is farcically called a Fiscal Responsibility Bill—as if we needed a law to tell us that their irresponsibility has been criminal. This is what one of the Prime Minister's own appointments to the Monetary Policy Committee has just said about their law:

"Fiscal responsibility acts are instruments of the fiscally irresponsible to con the public."

The Chancellor should have introduced our plan for a proper, independent office for budget responsibility that will keep the Chancellor honest and ensure that never again can a Government fail to fix the roof when the sun is shining.

So, the Chancellor has not restored confidence in Treasury forecasts. That was his first task. His second was to set out a credible plan to deal with the debt crisis. Yesterday, as he well knows, another credit rating agency warned that that the UK was at risk of a downgrade. Even this morning, the deputy leader of the Labour party was admitting on television that markets are getting more nervous than they were about Government borrowing. The Governor of the Bank of England says that we must "eliminate a large part of the structural deficit"

over the lifetime of this Parliament. I agree with the man in charge of monetary policy in this country. Yet today the Chancellor is sticking with the same plan that he set out in the Budget—the plan that the Bank of England, the CBI and the OECD have all told him is not credible. The whole object of policy going forward as we come into recovery is to keep interest rates as low as possible for as long as possible. That is not what his recipe provides today.

As the debts have become bigger, so the Government's response gets smaller. What the Chancellor had to say to the House today on spending is just not credible. He promises more efficiency savings, but coming from the people who have just admitted that they wasted £4 billion on an NHS computer system, that rings a little hollow. As for the waste advisers who wrote those reports that the Chancellor is publishing today, they have lived up to their names by deciding that they will not waste any more time with him: they are working with us.

Then there are the proposals on bankers. We warned the Chancellor two months ago that he should try to stop big cash bonuses being paid out. I said in my conference speech that we should look at the tax system. Let us be clear: the Government are going to pay out a load of bankers' bonuses that they should not have been paying out in the first place, then put a one-year windfall tax on them and declare it a triumph. The real test of this new tax will be whether it curbs bank bonuses instead of curbing bank lending. Let us hope that it is more effective than those binding lending agreements that we once heard so much about at that Dispatch Box.

The Government say that they will use the money on youth unemployment, because instead of abolishing it, as promised, the Prime Minister has led youth unemployment to a record high. We need a real, lasting plan to get Britain working and to deal not just with the million or more people who have lost their job under Labour, but the millions more who have never had a job under Labour.

On spending, the Chancellor is prepared to tell us what he will spend money on, but he stays almost totally silent on where the real axe will fall. He is achieving the previously impossible trick of ring-fencing a black hole. He said, with understatement, that this is not the time for a comprehensive spending review. This is from a Chancellor who said that that he was acting from a position of strength! Why is it not the time for a comprehensive spending review? The Government have all the figures and they have access to all the information that they need. They had spending reviews just before the 2001 election and just before the 2005 election. Now, suddenly, the spending review has to wait until after the 2010 election. That spending review is the massive missing piece of this pre-Budget report. They have given us lavish detail on the few things that they say that they are protecting, and almost nothing on the many things that they are planning to cut. They are not being honest with the British people about the real price of their incompetence. This has got nothing to do with protecting front-line services and everything to do with protecting themselves. What we see today is not a credible plan on the debt, and the Chancellor has failed his second task.

The Chancellor's final task was to set out a real plan for growth. What does he propose? A higher tax on jobs. That is his answer to Britain's unemployment problem—higher costs for struggling businesses and more money taken from families. That is yet another thing that we could have avoided if this Government had taken the hard decisions in the good years.

Let me just say this about some of the tax measures that the Chancellor has announced in the Budget, the last pre-Budget report and this pre-Budget report. The message to aspiring families from these tax changes is pretty clear: if you want to get on in life, if you want to own your own home, save for a pension or leave something for your children, then the Labour party is not for you anymore. All that work Labour did to drag the party on to the centre ground of British politics, as well as all the effort it made to persuade the country that it was for enterprise and aspiration, is gone. Instead, it has erected a sign over the country that says, "Closed to enterprise and wealth creation," all for the sake of narrow political dividing lines. Instead of telling the country that we are all in this together, Labour now pretends that it can solve our problems by setting one part of the country against another. At the next election, it will be the few who support this approach and the many who reject it.

Instead of a plan for growth and jobs, the Chancellor's plan means higher taxes, higher taxes on jobs, higher interest rates and turning his back on aspiration and enterprise. His third and final task—failed. There is no confidence, no credible plan, no growth and aspiration is being abandoned.

Why is it that every Labour Government have taken this country to the brink of bankruptcy? Each one in turn seems to ignore the most basic rule of finance: if you keep on spending more than you earn, sooner or later you run out of money. How difficult can it be for them to remember this simple point? The country now faces a choice. There is Labour's route, which has been set out for us today: higher debts leading to higher taxes and higher interest rates; the recovery choked off; and Britain reduced again to being the sick man of Europe. Or people can choose our route, which is to face up to the problem; set out to eliminate a large part of the deficit in the Parliament for which we are accountable; expect everyone to share the burden, but protect the lowest paid; keep interest rates lower for longer; send the message out loud and clear that Britain is open for business; and transform the economy that Labour built on debt into one in which we save and invest for our future. That is not going to happen under this Government.

The Prime Minister—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I apologise for interrupting the shadow Chancellor. Mr. Prentice, you must calm down. You might have an opportunity later, but you must calm down now.

Mr. Osborne: The Prime Minister always called himself the nation's bank manager, and so he has been. He bet the nation's finances on a never-ending property bubble and a City bonanza, and now, like every other failed master of the universe, he is coming to the taxpayer and asking to be bailed out, but he should remember this: most bail-outs start with a change at the top.

Mr. Darling: I have listened to the shadow Chancellor speak for the past 10 minutes or so, and there is one word that he did not mention—one word that he finds quite impossible to let pass his lips: "growth". Not once did he mention the possibility of achieving growth. He did not mention it in his conference speech, and he did not mention it today, because it is the one thing that the Conservative party seems quite incapable of realising—that we must secure long-term sustainable growth in this country. The alternative that he offered—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to have to interrupt the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I must say, Mr. Blunt, that this constant heckling is not impressive to the people of this country. It conveys a very bad impression of the House. Stop it.

Mr. Darling: Growth is absolutely essential for our long-term future. The hon. Gentleman also barely mentioned unemployment and the need to take measures to get unemployment down. He did not say whether or not he supports the measures that I have put before the House today to get people back into jobs and to make sure that people do not find that a short spell on benefit ends up being a lifetime in long-term unemployment. He did not say where he stands on our priorities of ensuring that we protect the front-line NHS, ensuring that we have got schools for the future and making sure that we have got enough policemen on the beat. He says absolutely nothing about that.

Fundamentally, yes there is a big issue before us. Because of this downturn, we, like every other country in the world, face much higher borrowing than we would like. It has resulted in debt increases, but the question is this: at what rate and how quickly do we reduce that borrowing and debt, and how do we do that? Perhaps the hon. Gentleman should have a word with the Leader of the Opposition, who seems to be talking to himself just now. On Sunday, when the Leader of the Opposition was speaking to the BBC and was asked about our proposals to reduce the debt, he said:

"I don't think it is fast enough."

On Tuesday—another day, another audience—when he was asked about reducing deficit, he replied:

"Of course, there is a danger, if you do too much too early, you would choke off some demand."

That is precisely the argument between the two political parties. Certainly on Tuesday, the Leader of the Opposition seemed to agree with our point of view that, yes we have to reduce the deficit, but we have to do it in a way that is orderly and does not damage demand.

Of course, that comes to the heart of the problem that the Conservatives have. They cannot tell us what action they would take. Not once in the 10 minutes that he spoke did the shadow Chancellor actually say what he would do either in protecting services or in reducing debt. Indeed, all we do know is that he is committed to taking action more quickly. He gave the impression just now that he wanted to cut the deficit, perhaps in the next Parliament, but if we do that we will end up having to cut something like £25 billion more. If that is his policy, he will have to spell out where he is going to take that money from. Who would feel the brunt if that money were taken away?

The shadow Chancellor went on to criticise us for having a lack of aspiration. Both of us expect to be judged—the British public will choose—but I have to tell him that I represent a constituency in which people are aspirational. They want to get on and they want to do the best they can for themselves and their families, but they honestly do not see that the first priority in that is giving a tax break to a tiny minority of the top estates in this country. I really think it is time that he rethought his priorities. We believe that public services help many people in this country. People accept that they have to be paid for and they accept the value of hospitals and of the schools that their children go to, but they also want to make sure that as we come through this crisis, just as we had to take difficult decisions with the banks over a year ago, we take difficult decisions now but in a way that reduces the deficit but does not damage our economy at the same time. Yes, all of us need to be fully engaged in that, and all of us are. What we have heard from the shadow Chancellor today is long on politics and very short on good ideas.

Dr. Vincent Cable (Twickenham) (LD): I thank the Chancellor for sending me his statement, even though it was missing 43 paragraphs.

What is clear from the statement is that the economic position of the country is still very grave. We know now that we are 5 per cent. poorer than we were a year ago, and that the Government estimates of borrowing for this year and next year are higher than even they had forecast. What we needed was a national economic plan, but what we have got is an election manifesto.

There have been genuinely great Labour Chancellors in the past—Stafford Cripps and Roy Jenkins, among others—but they would not have been obsessed, as the Chancellor is today, with drawing tactical dividing lines. There are small things that one welcomes, such as initiatives on jobs for young people, on technology and on environmental policies. This is a good Budget for bingo and boilers; I think that is what it boils down to.

The underlying problem, however, is that for the past decade or more, the British Government have been over-dependent for their revenues on the fickle fortunes of the banking industry. We have had an economy that has been built on sand—on the assumption that property prices rise for ever, and on consumer borrowing—and the economy is now being rebuilt on sand, because the only signs of real recovery that we have are rising house prices and booming bank profits at a time when industry is continuing to decline.

Let me speak specifically about the banks. The Chancellor has clearly been provoked into action by the extraordinarily stupid and arrogant behaviour of the RBS board. What he has come up with, to the extent that it is intelligible, is an extraordinarily complex mechanism. Will he explain precisely how he will stop the banks converting their bonuses into basic salary? He talks about avoidance measures, but how is he going to stop that? Will he give us a worked example of what it means in reality?

Let us take as an example Mr. Bob Diamond of Barclays Capital, who has just walked away with £27 million on the back of a taxpayer guarantee. How would that be affected by the Government's proposal? Surely it makes more sense, as I think the Prime Minister entertained when he went to the G20 summit, not to try to tax bankers separately from other high earners, but to have a levy on bank profits because the banks depend on a taxpayer guarantee. Until they can be broken up and can stand on their own two feet, they have to pay for the insurance that the taxpayer provides.

The heart of the Chancellor's statement was about the borrowing requirement and the long-term problem of the structural deficit. What we needed was a clear, long-term way of dealing with this problem. What we had, to the extent to which we can understand the early statement that he made, was that there is an increase in tax—approximately £6 billion to £7 billion a year—much of which will be in the form of national insurance. Let us be clear about what will now happen. Any worker earning more than £7,000 a year will pay 32 per cent. marginal income tax and 12 per cent. national insurance contributions. All the money raised in additional tax will go to public spending, and none will be used to pay down the borrowing requirement and the deficit. That is a complete distortion of the priorities that the Government should surely have.

In respect of timing, it is obviously right that we heed the advice of the Governor of the Bank of England and others that, if the economy is continuing to stagnate, it makes no sense to embark on rapid cuts in public expenditure and reducing the deficit. That is the problem that the Conservatives have got themselves into, but it is also right that, if there is rapid growth, the Government must get on with dealing with the deficit. What the Government have assumed today is that there will be high rates of economic growth—3.5 per cent. in 2011—but what is the basis for that assumption?

It is a little like the old story of the economist who is given a tin of food to eat and says, "Let's assume the existence of a tin opener." The Government are saying, "Let's assume economic growth." Why? Have they made any estimate of the very real risk that the economy will revert to a double-dip recession or continue to stagnate? What is the risk of those things happening—is it one in 10, one in five, or one in two? Surely we cannot operate on the basis of a single-line forecast that is based entirely on optimism and very little else.

To the extent that we can understand what the Government are doing about cutting public spending growth, it comes down to two items. Perhaps the Chancellor will confirm that. One of the items involves hitting low-paid workers by cutting the proposal for personal allowances, which I understand has been postponed or deferred. The other is the approach adopted to public sector pay. On the assumption that the Government have made, a 1 per cent. increase for a low-paid manual worker is a real cut. Of course, it is worth 10 times as much for a permanent secretary on £150,000 a year as it is to a worker on £15,000 a year. If there is to be restraint—and we have argued for it—surely it should be a flat sum across the board. We have argued that it should be £8 a week for everyone. That is the heart of the issue of fairness, which the Chancellor claimed was at the heart of his statement.

Of course it is right that we should be concerned with fairness in the tax system and in public spending priorities. The hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Osborne) keeps saying that we are all in this together, but that is simply not right: we are not all in this together, as some people have done much better than others.

The Government's claims to fairness are absolutely bogus. The Chancellor's big, totemic step of the last year was to introduce a 50 per cent. tax rate, but he has delivered a gift-wrapped invitation to tax avoidance by keeping capital gains tax at 18 per cent. He had an opportunity today to deal with that, but he has done absolutely nothing about it. Unless there is fairness, the public will not accept the fact that, for the next five years or longer, there is going to be a real hard slog for the economy. The Chancellor has not set out the way forward that we need.

Mr. Darling: I disagree with the hon. Gentleman. We have set out a plan to reduce the country's deficit over a four-year period, and I believe that that will be done in a sensible way that will not damage public services or the fabric of the economy. Yes, the settlement will be tighter and it will be difficult, but I am surprised that the hon. Gentleman did not set out some of his proposals in relation to universities, for example.

I think that choices will have to be made, but I believe that people will recognise that, with public spending having grown over the last 10 years, we can proceed with a much tighter settlement than we have had in the past. However, as I said earlier, I believe that we can protect front-line services at the same time.

I listened to what the hon. Gentleman had to say about tax. He did not say what he would do, but that is one of the luxuries of being on his Benches. I think that using national insurance is a fair approach, and I said I would take steps to make sure that people earning under £20,000 would not be affected.

The hon. Gentleman asked about growth. I have set out my forecasts, which are not dissimilar to those of the Bank of England. Indeed, I remember that after the last Budget he and many others criticised my forecast that the economy would grow by between 1 and 1.5 per cent. next year, whereas the consensus among most commentators now is that that is broadly right.

The hon. Gentleman asked about the financial services industry. Yes, it has been a major part of our economy. I am not sure where he stands on these things nowadays, but I believe that it will remain an important part of the economy. It employs 1 million people in this country and, properly supervised and regulated, it is important. However, I think—and I think the hon. Gentleman thinks so too—that people responsible for banks should bear it in mind that they have had a lot of public support, directly or indirectly, and that their priority should be to rebuild the banks' capital. He asked how the system would work. He seemed to hint that he would have imposed a windfall tax on the banks. I think that would be a mistake, because it would amount to telling the banks to build up their capital position while at one and the same time taking the money away from them. Some of the banks that might be affected by such an approach are those that, arguably, did a little bit less to contribute to some of the problems in the first place.

The way that the system will work is quite simple—there will be a levy of 50 per cent. on bonuses of more than £25,000, and there will be anti-avoidance measures. The hon. Gentleman asked what will happen if people get the money paid in income, and the answer is relatively simple—they will pay income tax on it. That is how the system operates and, unless he is saying that there should be an incomes policy for all bankers, which would be difficult to operate, I disagree with him.

The hon. Gentleman said that I was searching for tactical dividing lines; I have rarely been accused of doing that. I think that the divisions between us and the Conservatives, and between us and the Liberal party, are perfectly there to be seen. We do not have to go looking for them.

John McFall (West Dunbartonshire) (Lab/Co-op): It is right for the Government to use this pre-Budget report to maintain investment in the economy. The private sector is on its knees at the moment because of the banking catastrophe that we are experiencing. It is only the Government, through the help that they are giving to business and individuals, who are keeping the economy going.

[John McFall]

However, given the need in the future to cut the fiscal deficit, increase capital liquidity requirements for financial institutions, unwind the £200 billion of quantitative easing and eventually to move interest rates away from zero, will the Chancellor consider further developing a macro-economic framework to deal with those issues?

Mr. Darling: My right hon. Friend is absolutely right. The priority is to deal with the aftermath of this downturn and I set out proposals for that. I will continue to take every step possible to ensure that we get the deficit down. It is absolutely a prerequisite for making sure that we have sustainable long-term growth in the future. It is something that must remain a priority for the Chancellor at all times.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Twenty-two hon. and right hon. Members are seeking to catch my eye. As usual, I should like to accommodate everybody, and therefore I reiterate my usual appeal and exhortation that each hon. Member ask a single brief supplementary question, and of course that the Chancellor of the Exchequer provide an economical reply.

Mr. John Redwood (Wokingham) (Con): Why has growth been non-existent so far, when the Chancellor's policy is meant to be about promoting growth?

Mr. Darling: There has been no growth in the last year for perfectly obvious reasons. Because of the crisis in the banking sector that has affected this and every other country in the world, there has been a very severe downturn. I would have thought that that was very obvious.

Hazel Blears (Salford) (Lab): Politics is clearly the language of priorities, and I am delighted that my right hon. Friend has set out this Labour Government's priorities of supporting young people into jobs and apprenticeships. That stands in stark contrast to priorities of the Conservatives who have chosen to benefit the 3,000 wealthiest estates in the country.

Will my right hon. Friend ensure that his measures to support apprenticeships are directed to communities like mine in Salford where, in the last Tory recession, 75 per cent. of young people were without jobs and hope? We need these measures to build on our success.

Mr. Darling: Yes is the short answer. It is important that we carry on expanding the number of apprenticeships because, not just now when unemployment is clearly too high but also in the future, we will need qualified people with the skills that our economy needs.

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough) (Con): The previous Gershon efficiency savings were found, after independent audit by the National Audit Office, to be largely unproven. Given that, it is difficult to believe that these new efficiency gains will be backed by evidence. To prove me wrong, will the Chancellor pass all his assumptions and proposals on efficiency savings to the NAO for independent audit?

Mr. Darling: I do not accept the general premise underlying the hon. Gentleman's question that efficiencies cannot be made. For example, we managed to reduce the amount of money that we were paying to drug companies from the NHS. I remember from my time at the Department for Work and Pensions that we reduced the number of middle management employees to ensure that the then Benefits Agency, which formed part of Jobcentre Plus, was more efficient. So I simply do not accept the premise that underlies his question.

Mr. Michael Meacher (Oldham, West and Royton) (Lab): Does my right hon. Friend really believe that a one-off, short-term bonus tax is sufficient to achieve his aim of permanently changing City culture? How does he justify the prospect of cutting public services and still not imposing a windfall tax on banks, when those bank profits have been fortuitously inflated by quantitative easing, by the offsetting of £80 billion of past losses against tax, by the elimination of rivals in the financial crash and by a vastly expanded market in Government bond sales?

Mr. Darling: My right hon. Friend should bear it in mind that if—when—banks return to profitability, which must be one of the objectives in the longer term, they pay corporation tax on those revenues. On tax and bonuses, I want to try to get banks to think long and hard about paying out large sums when, frankly, they ought to be building up their strength. I have said often enough in the House that I am not against the payment of bonuses in themselves—they can be a good way to reward and incentivise people—but if banks are going to pay those very high bonuses, it is right that the taxpayer should see some benefit from that.

Mr. Brooks Newmark (Braintree) (Con): How much worse off will constituents of mine who earn £25,000 be as result of the Chancellor's national insurance increase?

Mr. Darling: I said in my statement that, yes, national insurance will go up, and that is necessary because we want to ensure the services that the hon. Gentleman's constituents and mine receive. If they are unfortunate enough to go to hospital or they go to see their doctors or schools, they recognise that they get a benefit from that. I certainly do not think that they want to go back to the days of the past, when a lot of those services were very seriously run down.

Mr. Richard Caborn (Sheffield, Central) (Lab): I welcome the statement, particularly for the wealth-creating sectors and manufacturing up north—in 1997, we inherited industrial deserts, particularly in areas such as South Yorkshire—and the investment has been made by Rolls-Royce in the Advanced Manufacturing Park. May I prevail on the Chancellor to consider the short-termism of the marketplace? Indeed, I think that everyone appreciates that the statement today tries to tackle some of the problems, but long-term investment in wealth creation and our manufacturing is not four or five years, but five, 10 and 15 years. I hope that that is borne in mind and that the Treasury and the shareholding Executive will get that change of culture.

Mr. Darling: My right hon. Friend represents a part of the country that was at the wrong end of the 1980s recession. On many visits to his part of the country, I have found it impressive to see how former coke works and coal mining areas have been completely transformed and, on the same sites, high-tech industries and cutting-edge developments in advanced engineering employing a lot of people. He is absolutely right to say that we need to encourage that not just for the next five or 10 years, but for decades after that.

Julia Goldsworthy (Falmouth and Camborne) (LD): The Chancellor applauded the flexibility of working tax credits, but no additional support has been offered to two of my constituents who work in a factory and whose hours have been reduced to a three-day week since July. They are not entitled to working tax credits, redundancy pay or jobseeker's allowance. Was it not an omission not to include support for them in the pre-Budget report?

Mr. Darling: We have tried over a number of years to improve the help that we give to people who lose their jobs or go on to short-term working. Yes, we are always looking to see how we can improve that, but it is partly constrained by what we can do. The hon. Member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable), who speaks for the Liberals from the Front Bench, rather gave the impression that he wants the Government to spend less rather than more, but the hon. Lady is absolutely right to say that we need to ensure that we help people to stay in work.

Mr. Frank Field (Birkenhead) (Lab): May I compliment the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how he has acquitted himself not only today but for the whole period that he has been Chancellor? It has served the public interest well. Given that the Bank of England will shortly cease to print money to buy Government debt and that the Government will have to go into the real world to raise that money, what will be the impact over the coming year on long-term interest rates, given what he has announced on public expenditure levels for the same period?

Mr. Darling: First, I am grateful to my right hon. Friend. On quantitative easing, the Monetary Policy Committee will have to reach a decision on when it stops that work and then on how it unwinds what it is doing. It is very conscious of the fact that it needs to do that in an orderly way that complements what the Government are doing. Indeed, I think that I made it clear when I announced the scheme that there will be some discussion when it is wound down to ensure that that is done in the right way.

Mr. Stewart Jackson (Peterborough) (Con): The OECD believes that early and ambitious fiscal consolidation will strengthen the recovery. Why does the Chancellor think that it is wrong and he is right?

Mr. Darling: Yes, but the OECD is not arguing for going far faster and therefore damaging jobs and the fabric of the economy. I can assure the hon. Gentleman that—whether it is the OECD, or the International Monetary Fund of which 186 countries are members—none of them support the sort of approach that the Conservatives are advocating.

Dr. Roberta Blackman-Woods (City of Durham) (Lab): I thank the Chancellor for listening to those of us who were pressing for an extension to the free school meals programme, because it is an important measure in helping to reduce child poverty, but does he agree that it is quite wrong for the Liberal Democrats to lecture us on reducing child poverty when the first thing that Hull, which is a Liberal Democrat-controlled council, did was to withdraw its free school meals programme?

Mr. Darling: These things sometimes happen with the Liberal Democrats, but I am grateful to my hon. Friend for what she said about our proposals.

Sammy Wilson (East Antrim) (DUP): I fully recognise the constraints placed on the Chancellor in balancing and restoring public finances, while not damaging economic growth. One concern, however, for devolved Administrations is to have some certainty about Government spending plans for 2011 and beyond. When will he be able to give that assurance? When looking at those plans, will he bear in mind the House of Lords report that has indicated that Wales and Northern Ireland have greater needs than other parts of the United Kingdom?

Mr. Darling: I hope that, one way or another, the Government have recognised Northern Ireland's special needs, not just in the regular spending rounds but, as the hon. Gentleman well knows, in other discussions as well. As I have said, the Barnett formula will apply to the announcements that I have made today where appropriate in the usual way. All the devolved Administrations know the spending that they are getting for the rest of the spending review, but spending reviews have been fixed for three years in the past to give some certainty. I think that people will accept just now that, given what is happening, it is not possible to set out definitely what spending might be in three or five years' time, but they have that certainty for the next year, which will help them.

Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North) (Lab): I note that the Chancellor's statement included the welcome reference to the fact that anyone who moves off benefits into work will not be worse off. Will he please explain how that will affect people who live in expensive private rented accommodation and receive housing benefit at the moment, but lose all or most of their housing benefit on going into work and thus end up considerably worse off and, in extreme cases, can even be rendered homeless as a result?

Mr. Darling: I understand that concern, and I can tell my hon. Friend that the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions will make a statement fairly shortly and give more details, but we are all very aware of his point about the withdrawal rates of benefits.

Dr. Andrew Murrison (Westbury) (Con): The Chancellor has announced increased funding for current operations, but after the increased costs of the redundancy of kit and the uplift in troops announced by the Prime Minister earlier this month, what will be left for the repair and replacement of our inadequate helicopter fleet, which is putting at risk the lives of our servicemen?

Mr. Darling: First, as I said in the statement, we are making available further sums to the Ministry of Defence. The Secretary of State for Defence will in due course set out how the MOD is reorganising what it does to ensure that it can provide support, particularly on the front line. I have said often enough before that it is important if we send troops into Afghanistan that they are properly equipped and supported. That means some reprioritisation in the MOD. I think that the hon. Gentleman would accept that, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be able to say something about it.

Rob Marris (Wolverhampton, South-West) (Lab): Does the Chancellor agree with the leader of the Conservative party that the problem is big Government and that there was too much regulation, or does the Chancellor agree with me that Government have a big role to play in protecting people and that the banking problems came about from too little regulation?

Mr. Darling: Despite being posed such a difficult question, I am probably more on my hon. Friend's side than the Leader of the Opposition's. The problem was partly caused by regulation that was not tough enough, but partly caused also by the fact that too many at the top of some banks clearly did not know what they were doing. There was a failure of corporate governance as well as a failure in regulation. That situation has undoubtedly had consequences, however, and every Government in the world have had to deal with those consequences. The question before us now is, how do we manage to deal with that situation in an orderly way?

Mr. Peter Bone (Wellingborough) (Con): The Chancellor was incorrect in saying that when the banks return to profit, they will pay corporation tax, because there will be £80 billion of losses to set off first. Does he not think that the citizens of the United Kingdom will be amazed by the fact that banks will be making billions of pounds in profit and not paying a single penny of corporation tax?

Mr. Darling: Of course I am aware of the tax treatment of losses, but the hon. Gentleman will be aware of the way in which tax losses are treated for capital adequacy purposes, so the situation is a little more complicated than the one he describes.

Helen Southworth (Warrington, South) (Lab): Will my right hon. Friend make sure that services to safeguard and protect vulnerable children who are at risk are a priority and receive investment?

Mr. Darling: I know that our right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families is very concerned about that issue, as should we all be. It is very important that children who are at risk are properly looked after, and I very much hope that we can continue to do that.

Stewart Hosie (Dundee, East) (SNP): Even if the deficit falls as planned, based on pretty heroic growth forecasts, the national debt will continue to rise, on the Treasury calculation, to £1.7 trillion, which is 91 per cent. of gross domestic product. That is in the Green Book. The Chancellor is right to say that we need a budget for growth, but this was not a budget for growth. This pre-Budget statement specifically confirmed the cut announced earlier this year in both the resource and the capital departmental expenditure limit for Scotland. Why did the Chancellor not take the advice of even his own colleagues in Scotland and have a further year's reprofiling of capital expenditure to protect the recovery, instead of ensuring that the cuts come now and weaken Scotland's ability to recover?

Mr. Darling: I say this to the hon. Gentleman: yes, we did bring capital spending forward, and the situation in Scotland would have been infinitely better had the Scottish National party not turned its face against continuing to work with the private sector. The SNP had a vanity project to try to replace the private finance initiative, and as a result, as I know from my constituency and others, the only things being built under the schools building programme, for example, are schools that the previous Labour Administration authorised. The nationalists should have a long hard look at what they have done in Scotland over the past two years, because in just about every single case where they made a promise, they have failed to deliver it, partly because of dogma and partly because they have simply over-promised and overreached. It is no wonder that people are beginning to see through what the nationalists actually do.

Ms Dari Taylor (Stockton, South) (Lab): I warmly welcome the Chancellor's announcement of the innovation investment fund for research into the development of the green economy, which is led significantly by Teesside's chemical process industry. Will One NorthEast administer that fund, giving local companies an easy opportunity to get advice and access to it? If not, which Department will administer the fund and from what date?

Mr. Darling: I understand that the Secretary of State for Business, Innovation and Skills will make the situation clear very shortly. The regional development agency, One NorthEast, will of course be closely involved in everything that we do in relation to Teesside. It is important that Jobcentre Plus, the regional development agency and other public bodies all work very closely together, but I shall ensure that my hon. Friend is given that information by the Secretary of State.

Richard Younger-Ross (Teignbridge) (LD): I congratulate the Chancellor on adopting the proposal that I included in an early-day motion on the boiler scrappage scheme and on also adopting an EDM proposal for an effective 75p rate on banker bonuses. However, if such a rate is to be effective, measures to stop avoidance by increasing salaries or rolling over pay to a following year will have to be in place. What proposals does he have to ensure that such avoidance cannot happen? If he cannot do that, he will be far better off sticking with the proposals made by my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable).

Mr. Darling: I do not know whether the proposals from the hon. Member for Twickenham are to be found in an EDM, but it was not clear to me what his proposals actually were. Anti-avoidance measures will be introduced as part of the Finance Bill. On the other measures that the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Richard Younger-Ross) has proposed, I cannot claim to have read the EDMs, but I am glad that he supports the policies.

Mr. Rob Wilson (Reading, East) (Con): Will the Chancellor confirm that manufacturing has contracted more under this Government than it did under the Thatcher Government in the 1980s?

Mr. Darling: I am glad to hear that there is common ground on this issue, because, certainly in my first 10 years in this House, it was not accepted that we lost far more manufacturing than perhaps we should have in the early 1980s. I think that manufacturing in this country, despite the downturn and despite the difficulties, is well placed for the future. We have a lot of manufacturing of which we can be genuinely proud, and in the past 10 years, through our investment in science and our support for universities, we have seen a lot more projects come out of universities and develop for the future. Much of what I had to say this afternoon was about encouraging such growth in the future. The policy of the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Osborne) is not to reverse the situation at all, but, it seems, to make it worse.

Adam Price (Carmarthen, East and Dinefwr) (PC): In the month when the Holtham commission, which the Labour-led Administration in the National Assembly for Wales appointed, has reported that the people of Wales are losing out to the tune of £400 million a year as a result of the Barnett formula, why did not the Chancellor use this opportunity—perhaps the final opportunity for some time for a Labour Chancellor—to implement the proposal for a needs-based formula and finally deliver justice to the people of Wales and, as we heard from the hon. Member for East Antrim (Sammy Wilson), to Northern Ireland as well?

Mr. Darling: I believe that, certainly over the past 12 years, Wales has seen a significant increase in funding because of the increases in spending on health, education, science and research. Wales has benefited from that—tremendously so. If I have a disagreement with the nationalists, it is that I fail to understand what possible justification there can ever be for Welsh independence. I cannot see how on earth it could benefit that country.

Justine Greening (Putney) (Con): The return to growth that is forecast in later years is predicated on consumers generating more GDP growth than they have in the past. The Chancellor suggests that 2 per cent. of GDP growth will be driven by private consumption, but between 2000 and 2007 only 1.75 per cent. of GDP growth was driven by consumer consumption. Does he think that wise, given that consumers are paying down their debt? Why does he think that he should rely on consumers backtracking, when they have worked out that they have a debt crisis even if the Government have not?

Mr. Darling: I think that many members of the public will be reducing the amount of debt that they carry, and that is a good thing. However, it is also true that people can at the same time maintain their spending, and some people increase their spending. Of course, as unemployment starts to fall and employment starts to grow, more people will be in work and more people will be able to spend their money on goods and services in this country.

Mr. Andrew Pelling (Croydon, Central) (Ind): As politicians are to blame, like bankers, perhaps the top 25 per cent. of our salaries should also be taxed at 90 per cent. However, the Chancellor mentioned in his speech a £550 million yield from the special tax levy, which is the equivalent of £1.1 billion in paid bonuses. Is he implying that the measure is a ban on bonuses? Otherwise, bankers will either redefine themselves as working for hedge funds or non-bank banks, or domicile themselves outside the UK to receive such bonuses.

Mr. Darling: The figure I mentioned is our estimate of what we will get after behavioural changes in terms of both payment of bonuses and, I suspect, people saying, "Okay, I will take my wage in salary." As I said earlier, the problem is not bonuses in themselves; the problem is when we start paying excessive bonuses or rewarding people for doing things that they really should not do. That is where we get the problems.

Points of Order

2.9 pm

Mr. Peter Bone (Wellingborough) (Con): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I know how keen you are for this House to hear news from the Government first. In the past, when a Budget statement has been made—this is, effectively, an autumn Budget—MPs have been sacked for leaking the information to the media first. Clearly, the BBC and Sky had important knowledge relating to this Budget, so will you look into this to see whether there has been a leak and what can be done about it?

Mr. Speaker: It is not, of course, a Budget. I note, however, the very important point that the hon. Gentleman has raised. I know that there has been a considerable amount of speculation, but I would be reluctant to say more than that. I am happy to reflect on the matter. I know how assiduous the hon. Gentleman is in these important matters.

Greg Mulholland (Leeds, North-West) (LD): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I need to bring to the attention of the House a separate, very important and worrying matter. Enterprise Inns is Britain's most notorious pubco. Its reputation is shown by its incredible litigiousness. It has tried to sue local media and national media, and has indeed threatened hon. Members of this House. I do not know if you are aware of this, but Enterprise Inns has sought by way of legal threat and intimidation to prevent the Business and Enterprise Committee from carrying out its scrutiny of the activities of the pub company—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have listened very carefully to what the hon. Gentleman has said, which is certainly a matter of the highest importance to him and to many others. However, I have to say to him at this stage that if he has a complaint about a breach of the privilege of the House, that is a matter about which, in the first instance, he should come to me, or it is open to him to write to me, but he should not in the first instance raise it on the Floor of the House. Those options are open to the hon. Gentleman. If he wishes to pursue the matter with me in one or other of the ways that I have suggested, I will be all agog to hear what he has to say.

BILL PRESENTED

Fiscal Responsibility

Presentation and First Reading (Standing Order No. 57)

Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, supported by the Prime Minister, Ms Harriet Harman, Mr. Liam Byrne, Mr. Stephen Timms, Sarah McCarthy-Fry and Ian Pearson, presented a Bill to make provision for and in connection with the imposition of duties for securing sound public finances.

Bill read the First time; to be read a Second time tomorrow, and to be printed (Bill 13) with explanatory notes (Bill 25-EN).

Child Poverty Bill

[Relevant Document: The Twenty-eighth Report from the Joint Committee on Human Rights of Session 2008-09, Legislative Scrutiny: Child Poverty Bill, HC 1114.]

Consideration of Bill

New Clause 1

THE RELATIVE LOW INCOME AFTER HOUSING COSTS TARGET

'(1) The relative low income after housing costs target is that less than 10 per cent. of children who live in qualifying households live in households that fall within the relevant income group.

(2) For the purposes of this section, a household falls within the relevant income group, in relation to a financial year, if its equivalised net income for the financial year is less than 60 per cent. of median equivalised net household income after housing costs for the financial year.'.—(Steve Webb.)

Brought up, and read the First time.

2.12 pm

Steve Webb (Northavon) (LD): I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

Mr. Speaker: With this it will be convenient to discuss the following: new clause 2—The reduction in the causes of poverty targets—

'The Secretary of State shall make regulations setting out reduction in the causes of poverty targets.'.

New clause 3—2010 Target—

'(1) The Secretary of State must, before the end of the period of three months beginning with the day on which the Act is passed, publish and lay before Parliament a report setting out an assessment of progress made towards meeting the 2010 target.

(2) The 2010 target is that in the financial year beginning with 1 April 2010, fewer than 1.7 million children live in households that fall within the relevant income group as defined by section 2(2).'.

Amendment 1, in clause 1, page 1, line 7, at end insert—

'(b) the relative low income after housing costs target in section [The relative low income after housing costs target].'.

Amendment 23, page 1, line 10, at end insert—

'(e) the reductions in the causes of poverty targets contained in regulations made by the Secretary of State under section [The reduction in the causes of poverty targets].'.

Amendment 33, in clause 6, page 3, line 9, at end insert—

'(ba) the circumstances in which a child living in communal accommodation may be regarded as living in a qualifying household;'.

Amendment 2, page 3, line 15, after 'costs', insert

'except when calculating household income for the purposes of section [The relative low income after housing costs target] (the relative low income after housing costs target)'.

Amendment 3, page 3, line 20, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 34, page 3, line 22, at end insert—

'(4A) Before making regulations under subsections 1(a) and 1(ba), the Secretary of State must request the advice of the Commission as to what statistical surveys can reasonably be expected to be undertaken.'.

Amendment 4, in clause 8, page 4, line 30, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 24, page 4, line 34, at end insert—

'(iii) describe the progress that the Secretary of State considers needs to be made in dealing with the causes of poverty in order to meet the targets in sections 2 to 5.'.

Amendment 5, page 4, line 43, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 6, in clause 9, page 5, line 14, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 7, in clause 10, page 6, line 3, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 8, page 6, line 15, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 9, page 6, line 25, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 10, in clause 11, page 7, line 13, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 11, page 7, line 26, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 12, page 7, line 37, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 13, in clause 13, page 8, line 29, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 14, in clause 14, page 9, line 14, at end insert—

'(b) the percentage of children living in qualifying households in the United Kingdom in the target year who were living in households that fell within the relevant income group for the purposes of section [The relative low income after housing costs target] (Relative low income after housing costs target);'.

Amendment 15, page 9, line 32, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 16, page 9, line 34, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 17, in clause 16, page 10, line 12, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 18, in clause 24, page 14, line 38, after 'or', insert

'section [The relative low income after housing costs target] (Relative low income after housing costs target) or'.

Amendment 19, in schedule 2, page 20, line 9, after '5', insert

'and section [The relative low income after housing costs target]'.

Amendment 20, page 21, line 23, at end insert—

'(b) the percentage of children living in qualifying households in the United Kingdom in the renewed target year who were living in households that fell within the relevant income group for the purposes of section [The relative low income after housing costs target] (Relative low income after housing costs target);'.

Steve Webb: A wry smile crosses our faces when it is announced that this Bill is the main business of the day, but in fact it is, in the sense that child poverty is a crucial issue. That view is certainly shared by all those who served on the Committee that considered the Bill.

New clause 1 arises from the discussions that we had in Committee about the most appropriate method of measuring poverty. Hon. Members will know that there are in the Bill four measures or targets relating to poverty, which combine various facets of income, material deprivation, persistence of poverty, and relative and absolute poverty. Clearly, it is welcome that the Bill does not settle on a single definition but recognises that poverty is multi-faceted and that one statistic does not do justice to the whole problem.

In Committee, we discussed the most appropriate treatment of housing costs. My hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, West (John Barrett) and I proposed that, for the purpose of income measures, we should measure income after the deduction of housing costs. One of the arguments that the Treasury Minister who responded to our proposal made against it was that replacing the before-housing-costs measure would cause a problem, because we would not have comparable statistics for use in international comparisons. In other words, if we got rid of the before-housing-costs measure and imposed an after-housing-costs measure, our statistics would not line up with those from other EU countries and the OECD.

The point of debates in Committee is to reflect on such issues and then to come back on Report with revised amendments, and that is what we have done in this case. Rather than suggest that we replace the before-housing-costs measure with an after-housing-costs measure, we now suggest in new clause 1 that we do not replace the four existing targets but add a fifth—income after housing costs. That definition will be familiar to the House. It relates to information that is published regularly in the "Households Below Average Income" statistics, so it requires no additional statistical work. The figures are already there, but they would be given the same force as the other four targets in the Bill.

I should say in passing that amendments 1 to 20 are consequential to the inclusion of new clause 1, so wherever the Bill lists the four targets, there would be a list of five. The wording of new clause 1 exactly mirrors the target relating to the before-housing-costs measure and would simply insert "after housing costs". Another, slightly more involved, consequential change is that where the Bill says that certain things cannot be deducted, one of which is housing costs, it would have to state that that does not apply to the provisions of the new clause, under which housing costs would be deducted.

2.15 pm

I have been reflecting on the arguments that the Government might use against making the change proposed in new clause 1. First, however, it is worth making the case for an after-housing-costs measure. We believe that there is added value in looking at people's living standards after they have had to meet their housing costs, first and foremost because housing is a very large part of most people's budget and a very big determinant of their living standards. To look at people's standard of living without taking any account of whether they have high, low or next to no housing costs is to miss a very important part of the picture. Because it is such an important determinant of living standards, the absence from the Bill of an income measure that takes account of housing costs is a significant omission.

Lembit Öpik (Montgomeryshire) (LD): I strongly support the new clause and my hon. Friend's arguments for it. Does he agree that the proposal is particularly salient in low-income areas such as my constituency, because many of my constituents cannot afford the basics after they have paid rent, for the simple reason that rents have not come down with the recession, whereas in many cases incomes have declined?

Steve Webb: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for making that very important point. The Bill measures income, including housing benefits and so forth, but takes no account of the impact of housing costs coming out of that income. Many households are in poverty, and if one compares the statistics on income before housing costs and after housing costs, the poverty rate is much higher on the after-housing-costs measure. It is interesting that he should raise that question, because the general assumption is that taking account of housing costs is an urban issue that relates to big cities with high housing costs, but it is clearly relevant in areas such as his, where housing costs can also take a big part of people's incomes.

Housing costs are a big part of household budgets, and people often have quite limited choices in that regard. It could be argued, "Well, if you have big housing costs it's because you live in a big house. You have chosen a higher living standard, so why should we deduct your housing costs? That would be like deducting your caviar expenditure. You've chosen to spend more and you're better off as a result, so we shouldn't deduct it." However, the reality, particularly for many people in rural areas or others with low means, is that housing is not one of those things that they shop around for, like wondering what tin of beans to buy this week. People in poverty often have very constrained choices about housing, so the level of housing expenditure is not discretionary in the way that spending on a luxury item would be. It really is a necessity, and people have very constrained choices and have to live with the consequences of making them. Assessing income after housing costs have been met would give us another facet. I am not suggesting that it is the only way of looking at things, but it is an additional way.

The second reason why this is important is that the regional impact of housing costs varies considerably, and if we look only at income before housing costs, we do not capture that. Obviously, on average, housing costs will be substantially higher in London and certain other housing hotspot areas. One of the perverse aspects of the measure of income before housing costs is that it includes housing benefit. If that is the only measure we have, we end up with the strange situation where somebody with a huge rent that is being met wholly or largely by housing benefit seems to be relatively well off because all that housing benefit is included in their income, but no account is taken of the fact that it has an equal and opposite cost on the other side of the equation. That bit would never get measured under the Bill as it stands.

Let us take as an example two pensioner households living next door to each other, both with identical pension income. One person has paid off their mortgage and owns their house outright, and the other is on housing benefit and getting their rent paid in full. On the before-housing-costs measure, the person with the housing benefit is much better off than their neighbour because they have housing benefit, but after housing costs they are both in the same position because they just have their pension once they have met their housing costs. Clearly, the measure we propose provides a fairer assessment of relative living standards than saying that the person on housing benefit is better off. Indeed, one could argue that the person who owns their house outright is better off, because they have an asset, from which one might impute an income. The before-housing-costs measure puts people the wrong way round in that sense, so it is not an ideal definition.

I mentioned in response to the intervention by my hon. Friend the Member for Montgomeryshire (Lembit Öpik) that poverty is greater after housing costs than before them. That is not a reason to put it in the figures, but it demonstrates that, once income including housing benefit is measured, housing costs are seen to take up a bigger proportion of the incomes of the poor than of the rich, which is an important facet of measuring people's poverty.

We want reliable measures over time. My hon. Friend mentioned the problem of rent inflation. It has been the policy of successive Governments to deregulate social rents, so they have risen far faster than inflation for many years. If we only use the before-housing-costs measure, that makes people appear better off, because their housing benefit shoots up every time their rent does. That seems perverse in the extreme. If we measure income after housing costs, we will strip out the effect of rental inflation, which, as he said, has been very significant. There are strong reasons for having the additional target—it would give us a new lens through which to view child poverty without taking away from any of the existing measures, and it would catch an important facet of poverty.

As I said, I have thought about the responses that Ministers might give. One might be, "Well, we can't add another target to the Bill. We've got four targets, we can't have five." If they were to say, "We've got four targets, we can't have 99," I would probably accept that, but we wish to add one additional target. Why do the Government have four, and not three or two? Each target needs to stand on its own feet as an important indicator of poverty and give us new insights that we would not get without it. That should be the test of each target in Bill. As I said in Committee, I believe that the absolute low income target could go. If we could have only four, I would take that one out, but there seems no substantive reason why five good targets that provide a more comprehensive measure of poverty are worse than four. It is a difference not of kind but of degree, and given the added value of the after-housing-costs measures, the additional target is justified.

When we discussed the matter in Committee, Ministers said, "Ah, yes, but housing is in the Bill. You don't need to worry, it is already covered." I apologise if I am running through the Minister's bullet points for her. The Bill does contain provisions on housing, such as the material deprivation measure, which contains a few questions about housing, but nothing that will capture the cost of housing as a measure of income after housing costs would. The difference between the poverty figures before and after housing costs is, as it says on the tin, all to do with housing costs. They should not be buried as a sub-factor in part of a measure. That is the problem. Although the material deprivation measure has a few housing-related matters in it, there are also a lot of non-housing matters. It would be incredibly difficult to strip out details of housing costs and be clear about whether they, rather than some other facet of material deprivation, were driving the figures. It will be as plain as a pikestaff that housing costs are causing the problem if we use figures for income after rather than before them.

The Minister might say that housing costs are about housing quality. I hope that I addressed that point earlier. The two are not wholly uncorrelated, but they are not very well correlated. Higher housing costs are often the product of necessity and of the part of the country in which people live. Often, as many people who live in private rented accommodation would say, they are not a good proxy for the quality of housing. Deducting housing costs and having both before and after-housing-costs measures, so that one can assess their impact on the figures, therefore seems to us an entirely sensible approach.

Drawing those threads together, the reason why there is not just one target in the Bill is that child poverty is multi-faced. The Government have alighted on four targets, but they could have alighted on three or five. Once one has accepted that there should be more than one, having five rather than four does not seem to make a substantive difference, and there is huge added value in the after-housing-costs approach.

I shall briefly address other amendments and new clauses in this group. I am sure that the hon. Member for South-West Bedfordshire (Andrew Selous) will speak to new clause 2, which suggests that there should be "reductions in the causes of poverty targets."

I had to read that several times to work out where the pause came—I think it means reductions in the causes of poverty rather than in the targets. Clearly we should examine the causes of poverty, not just the outcomes. We discussed the matter in Committee, in the light of which the hon. Gentleman has obviously refined the new clause. I look forward to hearing him make the case for it. New clause 3 argues for an assessment of progress on the 2010 target. We supported the idea in Committee and anticipate doing so again.

Amendments 33 and 34 were prompted by the discussions of the Joint Committee on Human Rights, and I believe that my hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Dr. Harris) may be planning to speak to them. They raise some important points about who counts as a child in a qualifying household and whether there are two tiers of children in the Bill. There are children who appear in the household surveys on which all the statistical data are based, and there are other children who come under the Bill's more general wording about deprivation but who are not covered by the statistical targets.

I do not mean to be in any way critical of the Joint Committee, but in a sense it is easier to point out the problem than to work out what one should do about it. The Committee referred to Gypsy and Traveller children, some of whom are in the statistics because they live in households picked up in the surveys—for example, if they are on local authority or private Traveller sites. However, the most transient might not get picked up in the figures. It is incredibly difficult to think how one might meld them into the statistics, so although it is important that they are not treated as second-class children, I am not entirely sure how we can add them to a measure based on household equivalent income.

Likewise, we discussed in Committee children who are in care. Their well-being is clearly crucial, but trying to measure the living standard of a child living in an institution, for example, is very difficult. A child being cared for in a private household, perhaps having been fostered, will be picked up in the normal statistical surveys, but it is difficult to identify the living standards of a child living in an institution whose meals are provided, but for whom there is no parental or household income that one can measure. It is difficult to know whether their income is 50 or 70 per cent. of the median, or how they could be melded into a living standard measure based on households. I am sure that my hon. Friend would accept that. The real question is whether there should be another statistical target or whether we should give greater weight to the parts of the Bill that refer more broadly to socio-economic disadvantage. I look forward to hearing his suggestions.

New clause 1 need not divide us along party lines, and I welcome the support that the hon. Member for Regent's Park and Kensington, North (Ms Buck) has given it. She was a member of the Public Bill Committee and is much respected on these issues, and she rightly believes that housing is a crucial aspect of living standards. I can understand why she would take that view as a London MP. I hope that all parties will support the new clause. I hope for a conciliatory response from the Minister, because I know that my noble Friends in another place attach great importance to housing costs and they will want to return to the matter if we cannot get a better measure into the Bill—one that would improve it and help the Bill to achieve the goal that we all share of ensuring that child poverty is abolished.

Mr. Frank Field (Birkenhead) (Lab): In speaking to this group of amendments, I hope to achieve two objectives. The first is to praise the Government for their determination in setting the objective in the Bill. It is an audacious thing to do, and I do not want the debate to pass without that being said. However, I also wish to raise some questions about the balance of the Government's approach, not in the Bill but up to this point in their campaign to abolish child poverty. I shall question whether they have been far too mechanical in seeing the solution as coming largely from benefits rather than through trying to balance people's immediate need for more money with an examination of the long-term causes of poverty. I take new clause 2 to be about that matter.

First, on a point of congratulation, no Government in the post-war period, or indeed ever, have set the objective of abolishing poverty in the way that this Government have. At the time they set that objective, I was Minister with responsibility for welfare reform, but I learned about it from a television broadcast. That suggested something about the relationship between the two powers in Downing street and the rest of the Administration, but I was pleased to read more recently that No. 11 was not even consulted before the objective was set in the famous Toynbee Hall speech by the then Prime Minister.

2.30 pm

The objective certainly marked this Government out from previous ones, but for most of our stewardship we have thought of poverty—naturally enough—in material terms, and of solutions in money terms. Therefore, the whole effort of the Government's engineering at the bottom of the income scale has been to raise benefit levels disproportionately to other incomes, so that one took children and their families across a poverty line. As far as one's first moral responsibility of helping the poor goes, who could fault the Government on that?

However, at least two things have happened since. First, the money has run out, even though the Chancellor was not too willing to admit that in his earlier statement, and perhaps he will not do so for another year. Secondly, the Government have engaged in the debate in a very responsible way, taking that crude initiative and broadening it out. One sees that in the Bill. It is about not only money, but what some of us in the House would refer to as causes.

Although I have not participated in a debate on the Bill before, I have read reports of them, and I have been struck by how they have been captured by Seebohm Rowntree. He was the chocolate manufacturer's son—his father, Joseph Rowntree, made his name building up that great firm in York and elsewhere. His son made his name—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Michael Lord): Order. I am reluctant to interrupt the right hon. Gentleman, but I am not quite sure how far he is going to stray from new clause 1. I am prepared to allow a certain amount of latitude, but he will bear in mind that we have new clauses and amendments before us.

Mr. Field: I thought we were taking all the clauses together, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes we are, but a degree of precision is essential.

Mr. Field: Of course it is.

One thing Seebohm Rowntree did was list the issues that the Government are trying to deal with in the Bill—in a sense, that underpins new clause 1 and the whole of the Government's approach. At the turn of the last century, he asked why people were poor. He listed low pay, being a single-parent household, unemployment, sickness and old age, but he went on to say that one should not read such things as the causes of poverty, and that they are in fact manifestations of poverty. He said that if we want to look at the causes of poverty, we have to go much deeper into the big questions about political economy.

Therefore, I much welcome the fact that when the Government started to fan out in the Bill how they view poverty, they got on to what I think we need to get on to—namely, looking at the deep, root causes of poverty in our society, with which amendments in this group deal. Indeed, I would argue that it is inconsistent for the Government to adopt such an approach to defining poverty and not to welcome the debate about the link between children in poverty and one-parent households—Labour Members find it easier to link low pay in such households to children in poverty. There seems to be something inconsistent about our approach. We are not prepared to try to teach the nation that if one becomes a single-parent, or makes little opportunity of the 13 years of state investment in education and goes into an unskilled job, the probability is that one will be poor.

I was therefore disturbed that, when in the past couple of days the Leader of the Opposition raised the question—he did so very carefully—of eliminating the discrimination against two-parent families, it was immediately read by some of the single-parent groups as an attack on the status of single parents. I know they have grounds for doing so, because when we were first elected in '97, we said we were going to abolish such discrimination, but we foolishly presented that in terms of attacking single parents and reducing their income. However, the proposals I mentioned were not to reduce the income of single-parent households, but to raise the income of households with two parents. In that way, the children in such households would be equivalent to children in households in which only one parent earned.

I rose to congratulate the Government on distinguishing themselves as the first ever who decided they could, by their means, change whether people lived in households in poverty. Secondly, I rose to congratulate the Government on broadening how they see the mechanisms by which poverty is transmitted. They have moved—thank goodness—from a rather crude definition and from concern only in money terms, and are beginning to look at the debate about the root causes of poverty, which I think we need to have in what remains of this Parliament and in the next.

That is why the Government's proposals for raising the performance of our secondary schools are so important. We need to guarantee that practically every child leaves with minimum school-leaving requirements. Those requirements should not be made up by adding slightly bogus vocational qualifications to five GCSEs including English and maths. In the hard world in which the employer interprets such qualifications, children who have them will probably be condemned to poverty in adulthood, and their children with them.

I also believe that we need to get over to younger people that opting for single parenthood is not a desirable life choice. Many have that inflicted upon them, but the way we allow young people to make that decision without spelling out what it means for them and their life chances, and more importantly for their children's life chances, fails that next generation. It is not good enough for the pressure groups to wheel out upper-middle class young single parents who are having a whale of a time and saying, "I'm so pleased I'm a young single parent. I can't tell you all the choices I have now I've got all that over with," and the rest of it. The young women who follow that model in my constituency do not have the bank balances to see them through.

I affirm my congratulations to the Government on their long period of stewardship and on staying with this issue. Perhaps a little later than I would have thought, they have widened the debate beyond what Rowntree thought were the superficial causes to the root causes of poverty, which I welcome.

I put that down as a marker for the next Parliament—hopefully some of us will be returned by the electorate. The Government made their choice at a time of record public expenditure. In the next Parliament, there will be record cuts in public expenditure. As Tawney said, when the great liners go down, who gets into the lifeboats is important. It is important for us to help to shape the debate about the priorities and to decide who gets into those lifeboats when the age of big cuts in public expenditure is really upon us.

Andrew Selous (South-West Bedfordshire) (Con): As always, it is a great pleasure to follow the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) and, indeed, the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb), who ably introduced new clause 1. As the hon. Gentleman said, we touched on this issue in Committee and I understand where he is coming from. Indeed, in Committee I made the point that families are primarily interested in the after housing costs income—how much money they have left to spend on food, clothing, transport and so on, to balance the weekly budget. That is the critical amount for many families.

We do track that figure. In Prime Minister's questions earlier, the figure of 4 million children living in poverty was mentioned, and that is the after housing cost figure, rather than the before housing cost figure of 2.9 million. In Committee, my hon. Friends and I backed amendment 28, tabled by the hon. Gentleman, which would have removed clause 6(2) which prevents housing costs from being deducted when calculating the net income of a household. We thought that that was overly prescriptive because it would tie the hands of the Child Poverty Commission, which has not even been set up yet, when it came to take a view on housing costs. We were happy to back the hon. Gentleman on that amendment.

As the hon. Gentleman has made clear, the households below average income series already publishes the figures for both before and after housing costs, and it will continue to do so. The Minister made that clear. I assure the hon. Gentleman that we will pay careful attention to the after housing costs figure. At 4 million, it is much higher than any of us would like.

My concern about supporting new clause 1 is that we already have four income targets in the Bill, as I said in Committee. I was grateful for the comments by the right hon. Member for Birkenhead when he talked of the importance of widening the range of indicators and targets that we use to track our progress in reducing poverty, which will of course always be measured in income terms. We should have a range of targets in the Bill that drive policy in the right direction. My concern about new clause 1 is that that fifth income target would focus more on downstream intervention, whereas the real need is to focus on the root causes of poverty—those factors that trap people in a life of poverty, about which the right hon. Gentleman rightly talked. In that respect, I tabled new clause 2 and amendments 23 and 24.

New clause 2 seeks to add a fifth target to the Bill, just as the hon. Member for Northavon has tried to do, that would deal specifically with reducing the causes of poverty. I tabled a similar amendment in Committee and made an attempt to put some detail in the clause. Other members of the Committee said, "Well, you have included this, but you have left out that, and we do not think that that's very good." I took that point. I accept that the new clause is relatively brief at the moment, but amendment 23 specifies that the actual causes of poverty would be specified in regulations made by the Secretary of State. That is clearly something that the Child Poverty Commission, among others, would have a view on, and it would advise the Government. I think that that measure is essential. Indeed, my overriding criticism of the Bill is that it focuses purely on downstream income intervention and does not do enough at an early enough stage to address the causes of poverty.

I am supported in that point by several commentators, not least by witnesses at the formal evidence sessions in Committee. For example, both Mike Brewer of the Institute for Fiscal Studies and Donald Hirsch, a well respected academic from the university of Loughborough, were asked whether the Bill needs to address the longer-term causes of poverty in the early years, and they both said yes. Mike Brewer said:

"I wish that there were a broader range of indicators".

That is precisely what new clause 2 is seeking to introduce. Neil O'Brien, another witness from Policy Exchange, spoke about the current set of targets driving public policy to

"relentlessly...downstream intervention to give people income, rather than...tackle the causes."

He spoke of it being necessary to align

"your targets to your broader strategy". —[Official Report, Child Poverty Public Bill Committee, 22 October 2009; c. 101-104, Q199 and 203.]

That is the central point.

2.45 pm

The Department for Work and Pensions used to go some way along those lines. In its excellent "Opportunity for All" report, it published details of the number of children in workless households, teenage pregnancy, the proportion of children in disadvantaged areas with a good level of development, the number of children not in education, employment or training, childhood obesity and other such factors. Bizarrely, it stopped producing that report in 2007.

I quoted Mike Brewer's evidence to the Committee, but he has not stopped considering the point. In a recent article entitled "What's the point of the Child Poverty Bill?", he wrote that

"in my mind, the worrying aspect of the Bill is that it highlights income-based measures of child poverty over all other possible measures of child well-being. Although the Bill says that a government strategy must tackle socio-economic disadvantage amongst children, the way we will know whether child poverty is eradicated in 2020 will be determined by four measures of income poverty."

He also points out that "there is a risk that politicians will always favour policy responses with immediate and predictable impacts on the incomes of parents over responses which mitigate the impact of poverty on children, or improve poor children's well-being, or reduce the intergenerational transmission of child poverty (such as measures to tackle low achievement amongst white boys in receipt of free school meals, whose results at Key Stage 2 were recently revealed to be lower than all other ethnic groups)."

Mr. Gary Streeter (South-West Devon) (Con): I am attracted by my hon. Friend's approach, but does he think that it would be possible to reach agreement on the causes of poverty? Is not that quite a political issue, on which people from different backgrounds or different sides of the House might have a fundamentally different view, especially on things such as family breakdown? Is it possible to achieve his goal?

Andrew Selous: I agree with my hon. Friend that it would not be easy, and my attempt to do so in Committee did meet with some flak from fellow Committee members.

[Andrew Selous]

I thought that it was slightly unfair as I had made an attempt to put a bit of detail in the Bill, but I was so roughly treated that I have tabled a slightly sparser clause on this occasion. However, I do not think that difficulty should prevent us from doing this work. My hon. Friend may be aware of the comments by the Joseph Rowntree Foundation that

"the strategy against poverty and social exclusion pursued since the late 1990s is now largely exhausted."

That is the very group that the right hon. Member for Birkenhead quoted.

We can all agree on a certain set of indicators, perhaps around worklessness, addiction and educational underachievement, and in fact I thought that there was a degree of unity across the House on the issue of family breakdown.

Mr. Frank Field: I was trying to get away from this debate. The quotation that the hon. Gentleman cited from Mike Brewer was—apart from the last half-sentence—about a more flowery definition of poverty, whether children are fat or not fat. What I was trying to emphasise was that we should be primarily concerned with how to create as many exits from poverty and, equally importantly, how to cut off the supply routes to poverty. The hon. Gentleman may have had a rough going over in Committee, but that is what I thought his clause was about. What are the supply routes to poverty?

Andrew Selous: I mentioned one or two routes in response to my hon. Friend the Member for South-West Devon (Mr. Streeter), including worklessness, educational underachievement and addiction. Nearly 1.5 million children in this country live in households where their parents are subject to serious addiction. Just over 1 million are subject to serious alcohol abuse and 350,000 children have parents who are subject to serious drug abuse. I say to the Government in all earnestness that, unless they ally their anti-addiction policy with their anti-poverty strategy, we will not succeed in meeting the 2020 targets.

I thought that the right hon. Member for Birkenhead phrased his contribution extremely well. I am at one with him on ensuring that the debate is not about stigma or castigating a particular group, but about giving help to every type of family and trying to encourage the right sort of behaviour, which he ably described in relation to his constituents.

Mr. Field: Is addiction not to some extent a presenting problem? Are we saying that if we abolished addiction, we would automatically link that to the abolition of poverty? What does the hon. Gentleman think are the supply routes? Behind addiction is another tale to tell. There are two big routes that the House should want to tackle. The first is why some people can command only low-paid jobs—if they are going? Secondly, we know that the likelihood is that very young mothers on their own and their children will be poor. Should we not at least be telling people that?

Andrew Selous: I agree. There is no great difference between the right hon. Gentleman and myself. I think that his first point referred primarily to education and skills and his second to certain types of family formation. I am in broad agreement with him.

Mr. Graham Stuart (Beverley and Holderness) (Con): Our party is often critical of targets because of how they distort behaviour to meet often statistical and numerical outcomes. Child poverty is a complex issue involving supply routes, causes and the reasons why some people are sustained in poverty. Does my hon. Friend share my fear that because the Government want to fulfil and not breach their targets, such a Bill, which sets fixed numbers based on income, may risk putting a short-term desire for box-ticking ahead of the long-term need to address the deep-rooted causes of poverty and to support those who need long-term solutions, not short-term political fixes?

Andrew Selous: My hon. Friend served with great distinction in Committee, and it is excellent to see him in the Chamber. He has a point. It worries me a little when I hear Ministers saying, "We have raised 500,000 people"—or however many—"out of poverty." I take the example of a household that has been nudged from, say, 58 to 61 per cent. of median income. Imagine knocking on the door of that household and asking, "What does it feel like to be out of poverty?" That might be a harsh analogy because I realise that we will always need a target, that it will involve a line and that crossing it will bring only slight differences. However, my general point is that we could visit that household that is just above the poverty threshold and find that things had not really changed. I believe that the hon. Member for Copeland (Mr. Reed) talked about the culture of poverty in his excellent contributions in Committee, and I think that he has a sense of where I am coming from.

I hope to press new clause 2 to a Division, and the same goes for new clause 3, if time permits—although I realise that it might not. There is a serious point behind new clause 3. It would put the much easier 2010-11 target to halve the original rate of child poverty by 2010-11 on a statutory basis. I was grateful to the hon. Member for Northavon and his colleagues in Committee for supporting us on that. I look forward to their support if we can press new clause 3 to a Division.

As I said, there is a serious point behind the new clause. We are not just playing politics. All the commentators think it unlikely that we will meet the target. In the light of the pre-Budget report, will the Minister tell the House how many additional children will be brought out of child poverty? I am looking at the section in the report on supporting families to reduce child poverty, on page 81, but that number is not leaping out at me. Perhaps she will enlighten the House in her response.

Interestingly, it has been 10 years, virtually to the day, since the then Chancellor of the Exchequer—the current Prime Minister—committed the Government, in the pre-Budget report on 9 November 1999, to the intermediate goal, as I think it was described, of halving child poverty by 2010. We have had 10 years, almost to the day, of trying to meet the 2010 target. New clause 3 would provide great value by ensuring that the relevant Secretary of State—I understand from Committee proceedings that it would be the Chancellor—comes to the Dispatch Box and explains why the 2010 target of halving child poverty has not been achieved, because, frankly, after today it is not going to be achieved, and then, importantly, how the policy will change, what additional things will be done in our schools and skills training, and how we can strengthen families throughout the length and breadth of the nation. That would give us an early opportunity to learn the lessons on how we need to tweak policy to make further progress. That is the point. If we continue with the current rate of progress, with the strategy that the Government have had in place since 1999, we will not have a chance of meeting the 2020 target, which everyone in the House, I believe, wants to see achieved.

Mr. Stuart: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for giving way; he is a charitable person and does not necessarily share my view. I believe that the Bill is before the House today to distract child poverty campaigners and the people of this country from the fact that the Government made a solemn promise to halve child poverty by 2010, but had no intention or means of meeting that promise. That was in a time of plenty when we were spending far more funds than the country could afford, and they still failed to deliver on that promise. Instead of being honest with people, therefore, they have set out to promise eradication in 10 years, when we know that public finances will be far tougher. The likelihood is that a fraud and a deceit are being put upon people, including the poorest children in the country, by a Government who are seeking to distract people's attention rather than tackling the root causes of poverty.

Andrew Selous: My hon. Friend made that type of forceful comment extremely well in Committee. Some believe that that is the case; they think that this is declaratory politics. I would like again to quote Mike Brewer from the IFS. He said:

"Those with a more cynical mind would accuse the Government of introducing this Bill to try to hide its predicted failure to meet its target for child poverty in 2010/11...It is not clear why the Government is unwilling to meet its own target for 2010/11, but keen to bind its successors to more stringent targets."

That is precisely my hon. Friend's point. As I have said, therefore, I would like to press new clause 3 to a vote. I know that he will be in the Division Lobby behind me, if we get the opportunity.

Mr. Frank Field: It is easy enough for us to attack the Government for not achieving the objective, but will the hon. Gentleman not at least praise them for setting out on this course and for willing huge taxpayer resources to achieve it? If one wants to criticise the Government, it should be for having a top-down approach—for wanting to do things without thinking how the poor themselves might be set free and given the ability to change their own circumstances.

Andrew Selous: I do indeed pay tribute to the Government's commitment. I do not think that that is disputed. If the right hon. Gentleman looks at the record, he will see that I said that in Committee and I am happy to say it again from the Dispatch Box. I am interested in his point. He is right to talk about the importance of moving away from a top-down approach, which is why I am excited about the potential of part 2 of the Bill—I do not know if he has had a chance to look at it—which offers an exciting new role for local authorities. My hon. Friends and I share a concern that the Government have taken an overly prescriptive and top-down approach to dealing with local authorities, because we believe that having a degree of diversity and trying different solutions is likely to yield more results.

3 pm

Finally, I pay tribute to the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Dr. Harris) for tabling amendment 33, which is one of a series of amendments that were suggested by the Joint Committee on Human Rights, on which he serves. He is right to alight on the fact that the current survey excludes those addresses that are communal establishments or institutions. The groups affected include, among others, Traveller children and children of asylum seekers, and the important categories of those in bed-and-breakfast accommodation and looked-after children in children's homes. I am sure that all of us in the House would want to ensure that those groups are included.

Amendment 34, the hon. Gentleman's linked amendment, asks the child poverty commission to look at what type of annual survey would include those groups of children. I could not help thinking when I read the amendment that it should also be directed at the Office for National Statistics, because the ONS is the independent body to which the Government look to collect such data. I have no doubt that the Minister will touch on that point when she replies.

I am also interested to hear how the Government view their responsibilities to the children of asylum seekers and the Traveller community. I quite understand that they are difficult communities for the Government to engage with, particularly if Traveller children are moving around the country, or perhaps going abroad and returning again. I am also interested in the exact position of children of asylum seekers. For example, if they are in institutions such as Yarl's Wood in the north of Bedfordshire, where my constituency is, how exactly do the Government measure income for them?

Mr. Streeter: I will be mercifully brief. I want to raise a number of points in support of new clauses 3 and 2.

As most colleagues will know, I spent quite a lot of time on the international development brief in the 1990s, when we were pursuing the 2015 millennium development goals. They were set in the early 1990s, when giving 10, 15 or 20 years to achieve them seemed a perfectly reasonable and commendable thing to do. Everyone thought that that was exactly the right way forward. As it turned out, the closer we get, the more we realise we are a long way from achieving those goals. With hindsight, it would have been far better to build in more immediate, intermediate goals as we walked along that journey, to ensure that we were moving in the right direction and testing ourselves. That is why I support new clause 3.

We have had the Government target, but new clause 3 talks about not just an immediate target for 2010 in this Bill, but being very specific indeed about what is achieved through that target. I said this on Second Reading, but putting in place a target and setting up a commission are not substitutes for a proper, well thought through and developed strategy for hitting such targets and delivering on the issue that we are all concerned about—there is no one in the House who does not want to reduce child poverty, however it is defined. If we are serious, there is an argument for restructuring the machinery of government, rather than just setting up a commission and setting a target, so that many existing Departments are better placed to bear down on the problem.

[Mr. Streeter]

I sit on the Select Committee on Home Affairs. Yesterday we heard evidence from the former drugs tsar, Mr. Hellawell. He talked about his time as someone brought in from the outside to take overall responsibility of the drugs strategy in the United Kingdom, and about the difficulty of getting all Departments co-ordinated and in alignment to bear down on the drugs problem. If we genuinely believe that child poverty in this country should be a huge focus for the Government and if we would all like it to be significantly reduced, there is an argument for restructuring the machinery of government to bear down on the problem, and not just setting a target or establishing a commission. I hope that the House will seriously consider agreeing to new clause 3, and if not, to something like it, to ensure that we do not just set waffly old goals, but put down, on the record, achievable targets and stepping stones towards achieving them in the mean time.

New clause 2 talks about the causes of poverty, which resonates greatly with the former Prime Minister's talk about being "tough on crime, tough on the causes of crime". Of course we would like to be tough on the causes of poverty, but what are they? I intervened on my hon. Friend the Member for South-West Bedfordshire (Andrew Selous) and wondered whether it was possible for us to agree as a House on what the causes of poverty might be. For example, what part do human nature and the choices that we make individually play in the causes of poverty? We have all observed, in our lives and in our constituencies over the years, people in similar circumstances and from similar backgrounds making different choices, with some flourishing and others ending up in deprivation and poverty. To what extent can one factor in those individual choices that are a reflection of individual human nature? Perhaps that is utterly impossible.

Ill health is also a cause of poverty. We have all known families who have been going along very nicely indeed, when the primary breadwinner—or perhaps both parents or a child—sadly becomes ill and the money stops flowing, causing disruption and poverty. Family breakdown, drug addiction and alcohol dependency, which my hon. Friend mentioned, and poor education—all these things can be causes of poverty.

John Mason (Glasgow, East) (SNP): The hon. Gentleman lists a number of issues. We are all committed in this House to getting to the causes, but is there not a danger that, by making the list so wide, that becomes impossible, because everything from the weather onwards becomes a factor?

Mr. Streeter: The hon. Gentleman anticipates me. I embrace that concept, except to say that I am not sure how practical it is. I support probing the issue and I believe that the Government need to think about it more, but I reject the fact that we are measuring only financial poverty. This is a slightly different point, but we know that there are lots of children who are from modest or poor backgrounds but who have a stable, loving family and lots of encouragement and nurturing, and who would not consider themselves to be poor. There are other families with a great deal more financial support and income, but who live in chaotic households and would certainly consider themselves to be deprived of the most important things in life.

We are talking about very difficult issues. More thinking needs to be done. The Bill suffers from the fact that it does not seek to get behind the issue of poverty and try at least to trigger a debate about its causes. My hon. Friend the Member for South-West Bedfordshire is on to a good thing in setting out new clause 2, which would require someone to do some more thinking on the issue. I think that the idea is for regulations to come forward to grapple with the problem—I am sure that my hon. Friend will nod at this point.

Andrew Selous indicated assent.

Mr. Streeter: That would be a very valuable exercise.

Mr. Jamie Reed (Copeland) (Lab): As ever, the hon. Gentleman is making a thoughtful and valuable contribution, but does he agree that although poverty, and particularly child poverty, is about more than money, unless we address the financial implications of child poverty, frankly this Bill will be for the birds and we shall make no headway at all?

Mr. Streeter: I agree, or I think I do. I certainly want us to address financial child poverty—of course I do. It is distressing when we come across it, as we all do in our constituencies every weekend. However, I feel even more strongly that I would not want us just to focus on financial poverty, but to see some of the other values and framework principles in life as equally important. Some of us enjoyed them as we were growing up and some of us did not, and they make a huge difference to the sorts of people we become.

Mr. Graham Stuart: There is the possibility of distortion, not only in the child poverty agenda as we get nearer to the targets being met, but across the piece. Does my hon. Friend share my misgivings about such declaratory legislation, which means that child poverty, by being put on a statutory footing, has privilege over every one of the various other priorities that government has to balance at all times, such as the vulnerable elderly? If the legislation has force in the rather poorer decade that we now face, it could lead to the wrong decisions being made from a social justice point of view, in wider areas than child poverty alone.

Mr. Streeter: My hon. Friend is on to a very good point—this is a question of what the Government focus on. This slightly contradicts the point that I made earlier. If we are serious about child poverty, we need to restructure Government Departments and align them so that they can bear down on the problem. My hon. Friend might ask why we should not do that in relation to elderly poverty or to deprivation of all kinds. Of course these are important issues.

I have been in the House for 17 years. I believe that, for all sorts of reasons, the situation is now significantly worse—with the lack of social cohesion, with behaviour issues and the fact that so many children are now growing up in households of chaos—than when I first entered the House in 1992. I do not say that in any political sense. I would love to see whichever Government are in place after the next election focusing on this issue and really getting underneath the surface to try to tackle it.

Ms Sally Keeble (Northampton, North) (Lab): Does the hon. Gentleman accept that, in about 1980, about one in three children were growing up in poverty, compared with just under one in five now? By any standard, a society with a third of its children growing up in poverty is much more dysfunctional.

Mr. Streeter: I am afraid that I do not really trust those statistics terribly much. From my own experience, looking out on this country and on my own constituency profile and work load, I believe that our country now faces greater challenges in terms of its social cohesion and the quality of life of the 15 to 20 per cent. of the population who are growing up in households of chaos and not being given a chance.

I am talking about new clause 3, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in case you were under any misapprehension. The corollary of what I said earlier about choices is this: I accept that many people growing up in this country do not have the same choices as those who come from secure, stable, nurturing backgrounds. I totally take that point on board.

I think that I have delivered more or less all that I wanted to say. I believe that my hon. Friend the Member for South-West Bedfordshire is on to a good point in new clause 2, and that we should build specific delivery mechanisms into the Bill, as set out in new clause 3. I hope that the Government are in listening mode.

Dr. Evan Harris (Oxford, West and Abingdon) (LD): I rise to speak to amendments 33 and 34, tabled on behalf of the Joint Committee on Human Rights by me and the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore), the Chairman of that Committee.

The Joint Committee attempts—it generally succeeds—to analyse every piece of primary legislation that might engage human rights, and to issue a report for Parliament and the Government in which we make recommendations, particularly when we feel that the legislation has human rights compatibility issues; we also comment when the measures enhance human rights. We tend to do that before the Report stage of a Bill in the first House, to enable Parliament as a whole to consider our recommendations and debate the amendments. It is good to see the amendments being debated, although there is not always time to do so on Report.

The Joint Committee report was published on 10 November 2009. It makes it clear that the Committee welcomes the Bill and generally recognises it as a human rights enhancing measure. We also welcome the detail provided in the human rights memorandum that the Government supplied and the fact that the Government recognised, implicitly and explicitly, the role that the Bill can play in meeting our treaty obligations under the United Nations convention on the rights of the child and the United Nations convention on economic, social and cultural rights. It is good to have the opportunity to debate measures that show the value of our human rights commitments arising from the treaties and the Human Rights Act 1998, particularly in the light of the many attacks—usually based on myth—that are made on the Act in this House.

3.15 pm

The matter addressed by the Joint Committee's two amendments is that the principal duty set out in the Bill is to meet four targets defined by income-based indicators of poverty. They relate to children in what the Bill describes as "qualifying households". Those are not defined in the Bill—they are to be defined by regulations—but it is clear that they will include households that are covered by certain surveys. The report states:

> "The surveys currently used are based on the Small Users Postcode Address File, which includes most addresses which have postcodes and receive less than 50 items of post a day, and exclude addresses which are 'communal establishments or institutions'."

That is where our concern arises. Children who do not live in qualifying households under that definition will not be the subject of the targets. That raises the question whether they would suffer discrimination under article 14 and whether the legislation is therefore incompatible with our obligation not to discriminate under article 14 in respect of their enjoyment of other convention rights.

Our argument is not that that would be a matter of direct discrimination; it clearly would not be. However, it would constitute indirect discrimination. The example we give, which has already been mentioned, is that children from disadvantaged groups—that makes it worse; it is not children generally, but children from disadvantaged groups, such as the children of asylum seekers, Gypsy, Roma and Traveller children, and children living in bed and breakfast accommodation and care homes—would not benefit under the present definition from the duty imposed on the Government to tackle child poverty according to the existing four targets, although if my hon. Friend the Member for Northavon (Steve Webb) gets his way, there will be five targets. The Joint Committee's assertion is that that would breach article 14 in respect of the enjoyment of the rights under article 1 of protocol 1, which include the right to enjoy one's possessions. There are clear examples in case law of the kind of benefits that are covered by that, and an article 8 case is also relevant.

If that is a problem, we need to provide a solution. As my hon. Friend the Member for Northavon said, that will not be easy. It is not, however, the job of the Joint Committee to provide that solution. It is for the Government to propose it and for Parliament to amend it. The Joint Committee has, however, tabled two amendments that we believe go some way towards providing a solution. They would place a duty in the Bill for an effort to be made to ameliorate any discrimination that might, almost by necessity, follow from the use of the existing surveys.

I shall not go through the report in detail, but it makes a number of brief arguments against the proposition that we set out in correspondence with the Government. First, we said that the Bill does not engage article 1 of protocol 1, because it sets out no specific benefits. It simply establishes a framework, and the measures in the Bill are not sufficiently determinative of any decision to allocate funds or resources to particular groups, and not therefore to others. Our view was that the measure would have to have sufficient scope of application; it would not be necessary to identify specific discrimination for article 1 of protocol 1 to be engaged.

The question that is raised is whether the use of binding targets is sufficient to create this problem if a group is left out. We believe that there is a question of discrimination, which is not permitted, if some children are treated better than others particularly disadvantaged children such as those of asylum seekers, Gypsies and Travellers, and those living in bed and breakfast accommodation. We definitely think that that would be a problem.

The Government have argued that no provision in the Bill would result in some children being left out, because the qualifying households will be defined in regulations. They say that there can be no argument with the Bill, because the definition will follow in the regulations. We have not accepted that argument previously, and nor have the Government, when it suits them. We state in the report:

"Our concern about the compatibility with Article 14 ECHR of excluding children not in qualifying households from the targets is not affected by the fact that qualifying households will be defined in regulations rather than in the Bill itself."

We have made clear that if

"the provisions in a Bill are likely to give rise to a breach of a Convention right in practice, for example because of a regulation making power that is likely to be exercised in a way which is incompatible with Convention rights",

that

"is of as much concern to us as a breach on the face of the Bill."

The Government's third argument is that it is not the intention to discriminate against those children, and I certainly accept that the Government are of that view. Indeed, they point out that the duty to have a child poverty strategy will apply to all children; other parts of the Bill not affected by these amendments do not seek to discriminate. Although we support and welcome that, it does not solve the problem that part of the Bill does appear to discriminate against children. The fact that it is not the intention for the Bill to discriminate against them is not relevant; it is, as we say,

"enough that it is the effect of its provisions that the children covered by the targets are prioritised over those children not caught by the data".

The fourth and final argument that we have identified the Government using is that the discrimination against children not living in qualifying households is justifiable and proportionate because it is simply not practical to conduct surveys that cover all children. We do not think that that is good enough, because we believe that efforts could be made to identify the children we are concerned about. We have made that clear in a number of places in our report.

Steve Webb: The dilemma is that for the vast bulk of the nation's children, living standards can be assessed using household surveys on a common standard, internationally defined and all the rest of it. Is my hon. Friend's argument that, if it is not possible to put children in the groups he refers to on to that same metric—that is the key problem; we know where they are and we could survey them, but converting their living standards into the same metric is very difficult—could we not apply a rational approach to the vast majority of children; or would my hon. Friend's approach preclude us from doing that at all because it is discriminatory?

Dr. Harris: I do not know the answer to that question, but we recognise that the number of additional children that it would be necessary to survey is relatively small, amounting to about 0.5 per cent. Because the whereabouts of many of those children is already known because of the other responsibilities of public authorities, it would be difficult to make a case for regarding as disproportionate the task of ensuring that the data are available, so that all children can be measured against child poverty targets. I accept my hon. Friend's point that it would not be easy to apply household data to non-household individuals. I am sensitive to the fact that existing data sets are not conducive to that task, but the amendment does not say that the data sets are conducive. It is designed to get the Government to take extra steps to ensure—perhaps by amending the targets to have two tiers, because although it would be differential, it would not be discriminatory if the intention and effect are good—the best means of identifying, aiding and lifting out of poverty those other children who are just not being measured.

John Mason: I am listening carefully to what the hon. Gentleman is saying and I believe I understand his point. I just wonder whether we simply need a completely separate target for those children. Might that not be the best way to deal with the problem?

Dr. Harris: That might be the way forward. We argue that the Bill as a whole, because of the targets set in it, ends up being discriminatory—not intentionally, but in effect—so if the relevant part of the Bill dealt specifically with those children, it would seem to solve the problem. It is not a matter of saying that those children need to appear in every target, but the relevant part of the Bill that puts a duty on the Government to allocate resources to children living in poverty should not by design, albeit unintentionally, exclude some of the most disadvantaged children. That is really the nub of our argument.

The problem is not that, because the children are not covered by the duty, they may not receive the resources. Instead, the problem is that, given our present difficult financial straits, resources may be moved from those children who are not subject to the targets in order to provide the resources to deal with the children who are covered in the target. We have seen that happen, or at least allegedly happen, before—in the treatment of lone parents, for example, when lone parent benefit for the very poorest was cut in order to increase it for the next poorest group. That happened some years ago and I well remember the debate about it. That is the real problem.

Finally, I would like to deal with the point raised by the hon. Member for Beverley and Holderness (Mr. Stuart) in his first, less irate, intervention. He made a very good point. I have always had concerns about target-based approaches to policy, because if targets are not measured correctly or if the target ends up being the wrong one, it can distort policy and resource allocation. We see that in the health service all the time, where the most urgent patient is the one who has been waiting 17 and a half weeks, rather than the one who has waited only three weeks but whose case is clinically more urgent. That is why when dealing with the vulnerable, it is vital that we identify the right groups. That is why I hope the Minister will consider carefully the constructive suggestions made by the Joint Committee.

David Simpson (Upper Bann) (DUP): I rise to speak briefly to this group of amendments. I confess that I have not been involved in the debate all along, but would like to raise just a few points.

When it comes to the key principles and objectives of this Bill, I believe the Government's heart is in the right place, but as right hon. and hon. Members have already said, the target date of 2020 will not be achieved—it is going to be very difficult.

Before I entered this House and became engaged in full-time politics, child poverty to me was a third-world country—a country trying to develop and move on and enter western society. When I came into politics, however, I was astounded at the number of children who were living in poverty across the whole of the United Kingdom. That was a real eye-opener for me.

I find myself in agreement with the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), who is not in his place at the moment, in much of what he said about poverty. Other Members have raised the point about finding reasons for such poverty. What is the root cause? We have heard a number of different responses to that question.

Ten years ago, the Government pledged to eradicate child poverty within a generation. It had doubled in the preceding 20 years, and the United Kingdom had the worst child poverty record in Europe.

Mr. Gregory Campbell (East Londonderry) (DUP): My hon. Friend has talked of the Government's commitment to eradicating child poverty within a generation. Does he agree that part of the challenge, not just in Northern Ireland but throughout the United Kingdom, is that poverty is a generational problem? In many societies, estates and communities, the grandparents, the parents and, now, the children have all suffered from the same difficulty, from which no one has managed to extricate them.

David Simpson: I agree wholeheartedly with my hon. Friend. There is no doubt that child poverty is a generational problem, and that it is still a reality in Britain today. Figures have been issued ranging from 4 million to 6 million. However, many of the issues have been devolved to the Northern Ireland Executive. Like my hon. Friend, I had the privilege of chairing the Social Development Committee in the Assembly, where all those issues were raised.

3.30 pm

In Northern Ireland, where the problem has been historically worse, some 100,000 children are living in poverty. The hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb) mentioned housing. Far too many young people's lives are blighted by homes that are cold and damp because their families cannot afford heating. As a result, their health suffers. They go into adulthood with chronic health problems that may plague them for the rest of their lives. Children who grow up in poverty do not have the same opportunities as their peers—the right hon. Member for Birkenhead mentioned education in this context—and that can turn disadvantaged children into disillusioned adults.

Mr. Graham Stuart: How is a balance to be struck between giving families who are living in poverty a sense of empowerment and a sense that they are the authors of their own lives—I am thinking, for instance, of the many first-generation immigrant families who live in poverty but, driven by their values, make sure that their children do not follow them—and giving them support? We need to support them, but not in a way that sustains a lack of aspiration and a lifestyle that will keep successive generations in poverty. How do we provide support in a way that is both humane and politically effective?

David Simpson: I wish that I had a crystal ball. It is very difficult to identify the root of the problem and find a way of encouraging people to emerge from that lifestyle. The hon. Gentleman referred to addiction earlier, and that is also a major problem. As with a disease, we need to find the root cause in order to eradicate this problem, and I believe that it will take until well after 2020 to complete the job.

The Northern Ireland Executive remain committed to the 2006 strategy document "Lifetime Opportunities". Its key objectives are enshrined in the "Programme for Government", which sets out some ambitious targets including the lifting of some 67,000 children out of poverty by next year and—as the Bill proposes—the elimination of child poverty by 2020. That will be very difficult, but the aims and objectives are there.

Money was mentioned earlier today. Let me end with a comment made by a parent from Belfast. She says:

> "I know that money cannot buy happiness and my children have loads of love, but having enough money is important to ensure that my children are well looked after and have the things that they need in life."

We owe it to our children and the next generation to act on that.

As I have said, I believe that the Government's aims and objectives show that their heart is in the right place, but we need to dig for the root cause in order to deal with the problem.

Mr. Graham Stuart: It is a pleasure both to follow the hon. Member for Upper Bann (David Simpson) and to participate in this debate. I shall address my remarks chiefly to new clauses 2 and 3. The hon. Gentleman and other contributors have mentioned the Government's heart being in the right place, and I think I agree with that, but there are three drivers behind this Bill, and whereas the first of them is a genuine commitment to tackling child poverty, the other two are more ignoble.

The Bill is designed in part to distract from the Government's failure to meet the 2010-11 target, and it is also being introduced in the hope that it will serve to create the famous political dividing lines, as is characteristic of so many proposals and legislation since the current Prime Minister took office. The Bill has been introduced in the hope that the Conservatives will fall into a political trap by expressing doubts about the mechanisms it employs or its declaratory nature—or any other of a number of well-founded concerns about it. The Government hoped the Conservatives might be foolish enough to oppose the Bill so that they could be shown to be more interested in the few than the many, thus reinforcing the disgraceful and unhelpful narrative to which the Prime Minister is so dedicated. Therefore, the Government's heart is not in the right place in two out of those three aims. Furthermore, the fact that the Government are so keen to create these dividing lines prevents us from being able to talk about the fiendishly complex problem of tackling child poverty.

I do not doubt the Government's commitment to tackling child poverty, but in the boom period that we have recently enjoyed, the low-hanging fruit in policy terms was halving child poverty, and they did not meet their target in 2005—although they missed it by a wafer-thin margin, so I will not place too much emphasis on that. They are going to miss the 2010 child poverty target as well, and they reject spending the money that the Institute for Fiscal Studies says they could spend in order to meet that target next year. Therefore, despite the fact that they made a solemn pledge, they are saying that they will not spend the £4.3 billion on transfers to ensure that they halve child poverty. They could do that, but they have decided not to, because they recognise, as all Governments must, that they have to strike a balance between all the different priorities they are addressing. Why, therefore, would a future Government be able to do that in 10 years' time, after what will doubtless be a much tougher decade than the past 10 years from a financial point of view? I therefore believe that that will not be done. The Government are setting us up for failure, and they are giving a false promise to people that eradication is in sight. I find the entire Bill deeply unsatisfactory.

[Mr. Graham Stuart]

New clause 3 is tremendously useful in asking for a report, and thereby asking the Government to talk about what they are doing now—to talk about the deadline not 10 or 11 years hence, but for tackling children being brought up in deprivation today. What are the Government doing now—this month, this quarter, next quarter, all the way through to the end of the next financial year? If they oppose the new clause, they will show that they are not interested in transparency and in looking at the here and now. They will show that they are interested not in the political realities of delivering for the poorest in our society, but in playing political games so that they can welcome the clamour of support for their long-term vision. We have had a lot of long-term visions, and the long-term vision of today is that we have ended up with record numbers of young people in unemployment.

Whenever my hon. Friend the Member for South-West Bedfordshire (Andrew Selous) is sitting on the Front Bench, I am always minded to try to follow his lead by being less strident and more charitable—he manages to achieve that both rightly and effectively. It is, therefore, worth commenting on a few positive things the Government have done. They have invested in early child care such as the Sure Start children centres, and they have made a genuine effort to put in place early intervention, which relates to matters of interest to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen). We must judge the outcomes of today, however, and what we now have are more NEETs—young people not in education, employment or training—than when the Government came to power.

We should also consider the number of people who are on the very lowest incomes. When most people think about poverty, they think about the very poorest. When they have a Labour Government who say they want to eradicate child poverty, little would they imagine that that Government would be smug and proud of their record when the number of children in families on the very lowest incomes—not below 60 per cent. of median income, which is the technical description of relative poverty, but below 40 per cent. of median income—is at its highest for 25 years. That is the reality. The poorest are poorer under Labour, despite the investments and the genuineness of the commitments. Yet we have before us this vainglorious piece of legislation, which is designed to distract and to allow this failing Government, who have so often failed the poorest, to wrap themselves in a cloak of social justice. They do not deserve to wear it.

All this means that we are not doing enough of what the hon. Member for Upper Bann and so many others, including the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), were talking about. We should be trying to wrestle with the complexity of these issues so that we do not create perverse incentives—those affecting the poor and the rich. We want social justice and we want effectiveness, and we want it to be provided in a humane way. We do not want to play politics with looking after the poor in a way that ends up with more of them kept that way.

Dr. William McCrea (South Antrim) (DUP): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that in meeting the challenge of child poverty, it does not matter to which party one belongs? Child poverty is a problem facing all parties in this House, so it is vital that we reach a consensus on how we take children out of poverty and allow them to succeed in life with the backing of Government and Government policy?

Mr. Stuart: I partially agree with what the hon. Gentleman says, and I certainly welcome the sentiment behind it. I am not always convinced that consensus does lead to the best results. A clash of ideas more often leads to positive outcomes than does a cosy consensus in this place. All the parties signed up to the Climate Change Act 2008, but have we seen a demonstrable change in emissions since it was passed? We have not seen it yet, but I hope that we will. I shall not go further on that; I shall stop before I am stopped, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Steve Webb: It is always a shame to interrupt the hon. Gentleman in full flow. May I encourage him to be a bit wary about this so-called very low-income measure of less than 40 per cent. of median income? I hope he is aware that although that accurately represents some people's living standards, surveys of income and expenditure provide good reason to think that the measurement of income of those very low-income households is often not a good proxy for their living standards. The classic case is that of the self-employed, whose books show less than 40 per cent. but whose living standard is clearly not that at all. I am trying not to be patronising, but I discourage him from putting too much weight on this measure of less than 40 per cent., where the data really are murky.

Mr. Stuart: I would always defer to the hon. Gentleman on matters of statistics, but when the official Government statistics have been reasonably consistent—he may correct me if I am wrong about this—and have shown an increase in the number of people in that category, either we have had an explosion in black market activity among families or we face a genuine problem. It is perfectly reasonable for those of us who have not slaved for many years in national statistics offices to take Government figures at face value, particularly when they show us an ugly picture of an increase in poverty among the poorest. He may patronise me as much as he likes, but until I am given comprehensive evidence to show that there has not been an increase in poverty among the poorest in this society, I shall remain concerned—even if he wants to dismiss my concern for technical reasons.

It is worth saying that we could have a clash of ideologies here, although there is so much political fear ahead of a general election that not much clashing is occurring. Historically, the Conservative party has believed—or certainly one could caricature it thus—in trickle-down economics. I remember a friend of mine sneeringly saying to me a little while ago, "I suppose you believe in trickle-down economics." As a good Conservative, I do, to an extent. However, although the previous Conservative Government transformed the country from being the sick man of Europe—we took over from the previous economic wreckage of a Labour Government—to being a much more powerful and dynamic economy, child poverty increased, and nobody who sits on the Conservative Benches is proud of that.

We want to combine a proper recognition of the need for incentives, for hard work to be rewarded, for enterprise to be supported and for the state not to smother economic activity with ensuring that, as we grow the economy, we carry all with us and do not rely on trickle-down economics to give us the magic solution. That certainly did not happen under the previous Conservative Government.

John Mason: I noticed the hon. Gentleman's phrase about hard work being rewarded, and there is a problem in that a lot of the children in poverty have one or more parents working. Would he be happy to support a higher minimum wage and, in fact, a living wage?

3.45 pm

Mr. Stuart: That is a fair question and it would need to be considered. We do not want to price people—particularly single parents who are inflexible in what they can do in the workplace because of their family commitments—out of accessing the marketplace. It is not a battle between those who do not care and those who care and want a higher minimum wage. It is a really tough judgment call to get the right thing for the country as a whole and for the poorest in particular. That is an argument that I would be happy to engage in with the hon. Gentleman. I do not have any firm views on it, and his expertise might easily eclipse mine.

We talked about social cohesion and, as hon. Members have mentioned, households in chaos. We have to deal with that. What do we do when we take measures? I fear that this Bill could end up enabling transfers of money to households, rewarding and reinforcing chaotic lifestyles. The Minister has had nothing to say about that. In fact, one of the Ministers who is on the Front Bench—the Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, the hon. Member for Bishop Auckland (Helen Goodman)—said in Committee, extraordinarily:

"The Government are not wholly convinced that family breakdown is a cause of poverty".

She actually said that. If she wants to intervene, I would be happy to allow her to retract that today. She said:

"The Government are not wholly convinced that family breakdown is a cause of poverty; on the contrary, we tend to hold the view that poverty is a cause of family breakdown."—[Official Report, Child Poverty Public Bill Committee, 20 October 2009; c. 15, Q44.]

Of course poverty is a cause of family breakdown. Of course the tensions and pressures of poverty might exacerbate tensions in a family. However, to suggest that family breakdown does not push people into poverty is entirely to misunderstand what happens to families. The fact that we have a Minister on the Front Bench with such a perverse and peculiar view undermines my confidence that the Government know what they are doing.

Mr. Jamie Reed: The hon. Gentleman is making a very interesting case, as usual, which is being enjoyed by Members of all parties. Does he agree that this Bill is fundamentally about the kind of country that we want to be and that it is also about priorities and assurances? Where does that rate in his priorities?

Mr. Stuart: The hon. Gentleman is quite right. I shall try to answer him as straightforwardly as I can. I personally do not support putting child poverty targets on a statutory footing when we have not assessed all deprivation and when we have not considered the plight of the disabled, the elderly poor or any number of other groups. We have not considered the other priorities—we could be at war in eight years' time. All Governments want the best outcomes for the most people and have a particular interest—they certainly should—in looking after the most vulnerable and the weakest in our society. Should we—the hon. Gentleman will have to forgive me, as I know that he is not a cynical Member of this place—prioritise this issue for cynical electoral reasons so that the Government can capture a headline and distract from their failures?

Ms Keeble: Would not the hon. Gentleman agree that all the studies that are based on Department for Work and Pensions stats, including the Joseph Rowntree Foundation study, show that it is children who are most likely to be in poverty in the UK today? That is the point of this legislation. They are the single foremost group. We can identify within that group which household structures and which income structures lead people to be in poverty, but overwhelmingly it is children who are at risk of poverty.

Mr. Stuart: I am grateful to the hon. Lady for that intervention. Single parent households are twice as likely to be in poverty, according to the Government figures, as two-parent households. We have a Minister who suggests that family breakdown is not a cause, and suggestions have been made that to try to eradicate the disincentives and built-in biases against couples in the benefits and tax system is an attack on single-parent families. I would have hoped that the hon. Member for Northampton, North (Ms Keeble), who takes a profound interest in such matters, would support the Opposition, who believe that we need a level playing field. We certainly do not need to reinforce the pressures on couples to split up because of perverse incentives in the benefit system.

Ms Keeble: I would be grateful if the hon. Gentleman would quote the figures from Department for Work and Pensions tables or from the Rowntree study that show that single-parent households are twice as likely as two-parent households to be in poverty. I acknowledge that there might be a greater likelihood of that, but I would be very surprised to hear those figures, and I would be grateful if he would quote them.

Mr. Stuart: I hope that it is not because of blind prejudice that the hon. Lady has not looked at the basic figures.

Andrew Selous rose—

Mr. Stuart: I am happy to give way to my hon. Friend, who is a master of such figures and will share them with the House.

Andrew Selous: I am happy to intervene briefly on my hon. Friend to give the Government's figures on HBAI for 2007-08, from which the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb) has frequently quoted. Table 4 on page 66 shows that the chance of being in poverty is 36 per cent. for a child of lone parents and 18 per cent. for a child of a couple—half that rate. Those are the Government's own figures from a central DWP document on child poverty.

Mr. Stuart: One would hope that in a less febrile battle between false political narratives one would not even need to see the tables; one needs only common sense to see that that is likely to happen. No one wants to stigmatise single parents or to pretend that anyone lives in a model family, least of all today, but one must recognise the realities and try to support people in staying together and to minimise what the right hon. Member for Birkenhead said were the supply routes into poverty. That should be a common cause across the House. It is a shame that we have to read out tables to get people to do what common sense should tell them as a matter of course. That is a key appeal from me.

When debating new clauses 3 and 2, we need to talk about the causes of poverty. That is a complex area, and we need cross-party working and understanding without playing games. On Second Reading, the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions said that the Bill would hold the Government of the day's feet to the fire to ensure that aims on child poverty were delivered. My duty—not in 2018 or 2090, but right now, as a Member of Parliament who represents many poor families and poor children—is to try to hold this Government to the fire for solemn pledges that they have made, but they do not even want to make a report to the House to 'fess up to what is happening. The failure to do that and to agree this new clause suggests that we will not be doing everything we can to minimise the number of children in child poverty, not in 10 or 12 years' time, but right now in the coming months.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Alan Haselhurst): I now have to announce the result of a Division deferred from a previous day. On the motion relating to environmental protection, the Ayes were 284 and the Noes were 192, so the Question was agreed to.

[The Division list is published at the end of today's debates.]

John Howell (Henley) (Con): It is always a great pleasure to follow my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley and Holderness (Mr. Stuart). I note that during his speech he was in his new charitable guise. Despite that, I am grateful for having been called to speak after him. It is rather better that I should follow him than the other way around.

In Committee, I thought that we were getting very close to a university lecture in semantics at times. We learned that eradication meant no such thing, certainly in terms of how the general public would understand it. Similarly, I think that we are in danger of looking at child poverty through the eyes of the House alone and not those of people outside, and of seeing it purely in statistical terms rather than in the wider terms that people outside would see it. Looking at it through those eyes, I do not see how we can achieve the general aim of eradicating child poverty in that broader sense simply through clauses 2 to 5, so I rise to speak in support of new clause 2 and the consequential amendments that deal with the causes of child poverty. We cannot deal with child poverty adequately without considering its causes and how we might break the cycle of deprivation. I agree that income has to be a substantial part of that, but I want to talk about why considering income alone would be inadequate.

In the period between Committee and Report, I have had the privilege of being able to talk to a number of organisations that work to combat child poverty. I have spoken to them in some depth about the Bill and their approach to child poverty in general. One of the things that they welcome is that the Bill sets a framework. They are not necessarily in agreement that it is the right framework, but they agree that there should be a framework. One of the consistent things that has come out of my conversations with them is that they too see the difficulty with a framework that is built only on income targets without taking into account the importance of the family and the broader context that others have spoken about today.

In Committee, the Government tried to argue that the broader context would be dealt with through the mechanisms in clause 8. I shall return to that in a moment but, if that is true and the Bill contains a recognition of that context—through the mechanism of material deprivation, for example—one has to ask why there is no consistency. Why is the recognition of the broader context in one part of the Bill not reflected in the targets at the beginning of the Bill? New clause 2 would rectify that problem.

I still have a great problem: I struggle to see how part 1 and part 2 are linked. It is perfectly right to have local government involved in delivering much of the work needed to help to eradicate child poverty, but that work is about the causes of the poverty and the cycle of deprivation. We heard from, among others, Paul Carter, the leader of Kent county council. He told us how that council was pulling the work together, and not just in recent years: it had been a long journey lasting six, seven or eight years, which had included integrating the work with the delivery of education.

The county council that covers my constituency has taken the same joined-up approach involving education and the primary care trust, with the aim of looking at the causes of child poverty and helping to overcome it. It is a shame that the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) is not in his seat at the moment, as that approach goes part of the way to answering the concerns that he raised about how we get to the root causes of child poverty.

In some ways, the Government have recognised that one way to get to those root causes is to use local government. That is what part 2 of the Bill is about, but the Government have not linked part 2 with the targets in part 1 to achieve the sort of broad target that new clause 2 calls for.

We also heard evidence from Charlotte Pickles from the Centre for Social Justice about the need to see things in a family context. She made the point that we need to make sure that the increases in money provided to try to eradicate poverty reach the child, and that it is not unfairly diverted to other causes in any of the various possible ways. I was struck by her comment in her evidence of 22 October, when she said:

"of course, you need to address income levels but that cannot be the sole thing. Unfortunately, the Bill is framed in such a way that we feel that the point of looking at a wider perspective may be lost."—[Official Report, Child Poverty Public Bill Committee, 22 October 2009; c. 82-83, Q7.]

I think that that goes to the heart of new clause 2 and the consequential amendments that flow from it. We need to move towards that broader picture.

In Committee, I was astonished that the Minister seemed unable to make the connections between other factors and child poverty, or to see the problem in a way that was not compartmentalised but in the round. In response to question 13, Charlotte Pickles said:

"If your targets are solely focused on income, and not on other issues around poverty, you are not measuring what is necessarily going to bring that child out of poverty."—[Official Report, Child Poverty Public Bill Committee, 22 October 2009; c. 86, Q13.]

When taken with the broader context of the family, that child focus was extremely helpful.

However, we did not hear only from Charlotte Pickles and the Centre for Social Justice, as we also heard Neil O'Brien from the Policy Exchange talk about the narrowness of the targets in the Bill. There has been some talk to the effect that the current targets at least give focus. I admit that they do give a focus on income, but that is surely not enough: we have to make sure that the focus is complete, and that it is the right focus. I am far from convinced that that is the case, and it goes to the heart of the Bill's extremely poor structure.

4 pm

Mr. Jamie Reed: The hon. Gentleman has made some interesting points, but does he agree that income is the cornerstone of the Bill and that, frankly, everything else—whether health and well-being, the family unit or any of the other issues relating to opportunity—cannot be addressed unless we centralise our efforts first and foremost on income?

John Howell: I am not arguing that we should not take income into account. I have not heard anyone in the evidence sessions in Committee or in the House on Second Reading or today say that income is not an important element; but surely the hon. Gentleman cannot claim that income is everything. It cannot form the complete picture.

Mr. Reed: I absolutely agree with the hon. Gentleman. I fear that I was not as clear as I might have been. I am not taking issue with him at all. I simply say that income is at the heart of everything that we do. The other issues that he talks of, which are exceptionally important, cannot be progressed in any way unless we first address the income issue.

John Howell: I thank the hon. Gentleman for making that point, but I look at it the other way around. We need to ensure that the increase in income that we use to help to eradicate child poverty is well used and that no other factor will come into play to prevent it from having the maximum effect, but we cannot tell that at the moment, because we do not see in the Bill how to deal with the causes of deprivation and poverty—what the right hon. Member for Birkenhead referred to as stopping the flow of negativity that enters the system and produces the root causes of the problem.

I well recall the comment in Committee that the Bill already took such things into account with the emphasis on material deprivation and the need to consider them in the strategy, but what stuck in my mind most in reading the report of the Committee proceedings was the information that the data on assessing material deprivation were so weak. So why is an imperfect measure buried in the Bill, when new clause 2 could provide us with a much better measure of the things that material deprivation indicates we are struggling to move towards. We must not view the issue in terms of narrow statistics. I do not want too many targets in any Bill, but nor do I want targets that skew the Bill and our actions towards income only.

In Committee, if I remember correctly, the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb) was sceptical and said that too many targets would allow the Government too much wriggle room. If there were 10 targets, they could say that they had achieved seven of them and therefore that they had met their goals, but those seven targets might not be the most important ones. I take that point—it is one of the things that needs to be worked out—but I do not believe that the process is impractical to achieve.

Those hon. Members who have been involved in the management of businesses may well have come across the concept of the balanced scorecard, by which the most important quadrants of a business's activities are divided and a handful of measures used to manage the business to achieve those objectives. Almost all those objectives are not single ones; they are baskets of objectives in which decisions are made about the importance of each in achieving the overall objective in each quadrant.

The methodology exists and is being used effectively in business and local government. In the days when I was a councillor, I happened to be responsible for introducing a balanced scorecard approach to my county council, and the management of the council's business improved almost overnight as a result, because of the clarity and decision making there had to be, not just in respect of headline-grabbing targets but in respect of targets all the way through. [Interruption.] I think the Minister is trying to intervene on me, is she not?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (Helen Goodman) indicated dissent.

John Howell: Ah, the hon. Lady is just making faces in response to my comments. If she would like a lecture on the balanced scorecard and how to do targets, she could make an appointment afterwards. I am very happy to share with national Government the knowledge and expertise that I have gained from local government.

I am almost at the end of my contribution. The point has been made that it is practical to look at a way of approaching targets based on the causes of poverty, instead of just sticking to the narrow and somewhat misleading targets that have been set in the Bill.

Helen Goodman: I shall speak to new clauses 1, 2 and 3, and amendments 1 to 20, 23, 24, 33, and 34.

[Helen Goodman]

New clause 1, which the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb) moved, would include in the Bill a target for relative low income measured after housing costs. The consequential amendments are amendments 1 to 20. The new clause would impose a new target that is additional, as he knows, to the relative low income before housing costs target in clause 2 and the other targets in clauses 3 to 5.

Whether poverty should be measured before or after housing costs and the impact of housing quality on children's outcomes were debated at some length in Committee. I emphasise that the Government recognise the importance of housing costs to families' disposable incomes and the impact of those costs on their living standards. That is why the Government have placed, and will continue to place, significant focus on the availability of affordable homes. For example, the latest investment of £290 million at the end of November, delivering almost 5,500 affordable homes throughout 149 local authority areas, brought total Government help for house building since June to £1.8 billion.

Mr. Graham Stuart: Will the Minister give way?

Helen Goodman: Not yet, if the hon. Gentleman would just be a little patient.

As we discussed in Committee, however, there is a number of reasons why the Government have chosen to use before-housing-costs measures of poverty in the Bill. First, measures of housing quality are currently included in the list of items that are used for the combined low income and material deprivation measure, so if a child is experiencing poor housing, that will be reflected in their material deprivation score. More importantly, families who cannot afford items because of their high costs, such as high housing costs, will be picked up in the material deprivation measure. For example, looking at poverty statistics by region, it is clear, using the combined measure, that London has a far higher average risk of poverty than the relative low income measure would suggest, highlighting the additional costs—particularly the high housing costs—of living in London.

Secondly, it is important to note—

Mr. Stuart: Will the Minister give way now?

Helen Goodman: No.

Secondly, it is important to note the drawbacks associated with an after-housing-costs measure. As the hon. Member for Northavon said, measuring income after housing costs can understate some individuals' relative standard of living because they pay more for better-quality accommodation. Conversely, income measures that do not deduct housing costs may overstate the living standards of people whose housing costs are high relative to the quality of their accommodation. Therefore, the relative low income indicator before housing costs, in conjunction with the combined low income and material deprivation indicator, ensures that we effectively capture the issue of affordability of housing. Given the drawbacks of the alternatives, we consider the material deprivation indicator to be a better way of capturing the impact of housing costs.

The hon. Gentleman asked why housing benefit should be included as income in the before-housing-costs measure of poverty. The obvious answer is that housing benefit is income, but I shall give him a fuller response than that. Households in receipt of housing benefit pay their housing costs using their total income, including housing benefit. Households that do not receive housing benefit need to pay their housing costs from their total income. Including housing benefit enables like-for-like comparison between the incomes that households have with which to pay housing costs and to meet their other needs. To deduct housing benefit from the income of those who receive it would be to underestimate the total income that they had with which to meet their housing costs and other needs.

Mr. Stuart: Will the Minister give way?

Steve Webb rose—

Helen Goodman: I give way to the hon. Member for Northavon.

Steve Webb: Can I ask the Minister a simple question? If I were to give her a fiver and take a fiver out of her purse, would she feel better off?

Helen Goodman: That is not a very difficult trick question, because, as the hon. Gentleman knows, housing benefit rates vary around the country to take account of the different costs of housing in different parts of the country.

The hon. Member for Northavon asked a slightly more tricky question when he gave the example of two pensioners living next door to each other, one of whom owned their house and one of whom was on housing benefit, with the latter appearing to be better off on a before-housing-costs basis. There are similar arguments against an after-housing-costs measure. Imagine two families on the same income and with the same number of children. One family decides to spend a lot of money on a house in a nice area, and the other decides to spend less on housing because they have other priorities. On an after-housing-costs measure, the first family are considered to be poorer. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman can see the logic of my case.

We discussed in Committee the fact that other European countries measure poverty before housing costs. We have stated our ambition to be among the best in Europe. The ability to make comparisons is vital because they allow us to benchmark our performance.

The new clause would not change the approach to measuring child poverty set out in the Bill; instead, it would add a further target to the Bill, which we do not consider necessary. As members of the Committee, including the hon. Gentleman, highlighted, further targets run the risk of creating a lack of focus. Having four comprehensive targets covering financial poverty is sufficient and enables us to capture the different facets of poverty. As noted, the combined low income and material deprivation indicator will ensure that those whose high housing costs impact on their living standards will be captured.

The new clause proposes a target level for the measure of less than 10 per cent. The level of less than 10 per cent. for the before-housing-costs relative low income measure in clause 2 was selected on the basis that that is the lowest that has been achieved and maintained over time in other modern European economies. The vast majority of European countries publish poverty statistics using only a before-housing-costs measure of relative low income, so there are no comparative data to establish whether a target of 10 per cent. on an after-housing-costs measure is either realistic or in line with our ambition to be among the best in Europe.

Although the targets in the Bill should be ambitious and stretching, they should not be unrealistic. The present level of relative poverty after housing costs is 31 per cent., or 4 million children. Meeting the proposed target would require a reduction to fewer than 1.3 million. I would argue that it is unrealistic to envisage our achieving that in the next 10 years. We published the principles of our child poverty strategy in today's pre-Budget report, outlining five principles, including cost-effectiveness and affordability. That is key if we are to meet our objectives in a sustainable manner.

I draw the hon. Gentleman's attention to the fact that in preparing a UK child poverty strategy, consideration must be given to any necessary measures required in respect of housing to support the tackling of child poverty, as set out in clause 8(5)(d). We are currently analysing the impact of housing on child poverty to inform the first child poverty strategy, and that analysis will determine the key principles for that policy area and, subsequently, appropriate monitoring arrangements.

Finally, we are committed to ensuring that the "Households Below Average Income" series continues to publish income figures after housing costs, so that it will always be possible to monitor child poverty trends on an after-housing-costs basis and to keep under review the impact of housing costs on families' living standards.

4.15 pm

Mr. Graham Stuart: The Minister may not have been passionate in her espousal of the importance of housing in tackling poverty, but she has at least acknowledged it, and I welcome the extra money that is coming to the East Riding of Yorkshire for additional affordable housing. Can she explain, however, why a Government supposedly committed to eradicating child poverty have built fewer houses in any year of their time in government than were built in any year of the previous Conservative Administration?

Helen Goodman: I have described this afternoon the investment that we are making, which is providing a record improvement in the decent homes standard. That is having a significant impact on people's standard of living.

New clause 2 and amendment 23, tabled by the hon. Member for South-West Bedfordshire (Andrew Selous), suggest that regulations under the Bill should set targets on a potentially wide range of outcomes that can be said to be the causes of child poverty, and that the child poverty strategy should set out what progress needs to be made to address those causes in order to meet the targets in clauses 2 to 5. The causes of poverty drew comments from many Members in the debate, including my right hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), who brought his usual compassionate and well informed perspective to bear.

My right hon. Friend began by congratulating the Government on their excellent record and the scale of their ambition to tackle child poverty, but he suggested that the Government's approach had been too mechanistic. I point out to him that we are not focusing simply on incomes, taxes and benefits but, as I think he acknowledged, we are also tackling worklessness and education issues. He suggested that benefits had been increased too much compared with income, so I hope that he will welcome the better-off credit that the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced earlier. It will ensure that everybody in full-time work is better off. I remind him also of the significant reductions in the marginal deduction rates that we have recently achieved.

In the discussion about the root causes of poverty, the hon. Members for South-West Devon (Mr. Streeter), for Upper Bann (David Simpson), for Beverley and Holderness (Mr. Stuart) and for Henley (John Howell) mentioned family formation. It would not be particularly fruitful for me to detain the House on that matter for long, but I point out that it is extremely difficult to say precisely what is the correlation between family structure and poverty levels. I remind hon. Members of the experience in Denmark, which has the highest level of lone parenthood in western Europe but also comes out at the top of the UNICEF table on child well-being. The lesson that we can learn from that is that the structures and policies that we put in place are far more significant than particular matters of family formation. In any case, it is not clear that those matters are under the Government's control.

Of course it is important that any Government tackle the broad range of issues and policy areas related to poverty. Clause 8 requires the UK child poverty strategy to do precisely that, but that does not mean that targets on them should be set in the Bill, as that would risk diluting the clear focus on income poverty and material deprivation that is at its heart. Such issues were debated substantially in Committee, and I refer hon. Members to the arguments that were expressed. As we said then, income poverty and material deprivation must be at the heart of the Bill because of the evidence of the impact that they have on children's lives, both in their experiences now and their chances for the future. Income poverty has an impact on children's education, health and social lives, the relationships with and between their parents and their future life chances.

Andrew Selous: Does the Minister not agree that making progress on dealing with the causes of poverty is very likely to result in the Government achieving their income poverty targets? The two go together.

Helen Goodman: If the hon. Gentleman had been a little more patient, he would have heard me make a similar point.

Our strategy needs to be multi-faceted if we are to break into generational cycles of poverty, and so truly end child poverty. That multi-faceted approach is supported by the Bill. The UK strategy will need to meet both purposes set out in clause 8(2). As well as showing how the targets will be met, the strategy must meet the purpose of ensuring, as far as possible, that children in the UK do not experience socio-economic disadvantage. That second purpose ensures that the strategy will be broad in scope and that it will focus on a wide range of policy areas, rather than relying on a narrow range of policies related simply to raising household income through financial support.

[Helen Goodman]

Moreover, clause 8(5) establishes that the strategy must consider what measures if any ought to be taken across a range of key policy areas. Those building blocks of the strategy have been determined on evidence that shows that those policy areas have the potential to make the biggest impact in tackling the causes and consequences of growing up in income poverty. It follows that amendment 24 is unnecessary, because the strategies will already need to set out the specific actions that need to be taken to meet the targets, and the annual reports will monitor delivery, tracking a wide range of indicators that may change over time, as determined by the needs of the strategy.

As well as being unnecessary, amendment 24 is unhelpful and problematic, because it seeks to require the strategy to define causal relationships that in reality are tenuous and difficult to establish. The strategies will review the evidence on the underlying causes of poverty, seeking to establish clear evidence of causal relationships where they exist, but the problem with amendment 24 is that in many cases it is not possible to establish evidence of clear causal relationships. In many cases, the evidence shows that there are strong associations or connections between growing up in relative poverty and material deprivation, and experiencing poor intermediate outcomes in a range of areas, including educational attainment, health and other aspects of well-being. It also shows that there are strong associations between those intermediate outcomes and the risk of experiencing poor final outcomes in adulthood, including the risk of experiencing poverty and material deprivation. However, the causal relationship goes both ways. Income poverty has both direct and indirect effects on other policy areas, including health and education. Defining the causes of poverty, as the amendments would require, is therefore not possible to achieve at present owing to gaps in the evidence base and limitations in the data available.

The development of the strategy will involve identifying those groups of children most at risk of being in poverty, including particularly vulnerable groups, and assessing what action needs to be taken to meet all the targets on income poverty and material deprivation. The indicators that should be tracked will change over time, as determined by the needs of the strategy, but our ultimate goal—the ending of child poverty—remains constant.

I shall now turn to new clause 3, which was tabled by the hon. Member for South-West Bedfordshire. I understand the need for transparency on progress towards the 2010 target. However, I shall explain why the new clause is unnecessary. Opposition Members have been full of doom and gloom about our prospects for 2010 and achieving those targets—the hon. Gentleman asked a number of questions about where we are and where we think we are going to be in the light of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's announcements.

As the hon. Gentleman knows, the Government previously forecast that measures taken since 2008 would reduce child poverty by a further 500,000 in relative terms, but the Institute for Fiscal Studies says that the number is 600,000. The measures that the Chancellor announced earlier today will produce a further reduction of at least 50,000. He announced an extension of free school meals entitlement to primary age children whose parents are on working tax credits, and an increase in child benefit of 1.5 per cent. in April 2010, which is well ahead of what it would be if we had stuck with the indexation in legislation. I contrast that with the freezing of child benefit under the previous Administration, which meant that by 1997 it was lower in real terms than when they took office in 1979.

Steve Webb: I understand that it has been revealed since the pre-Budget report—it was not apparent in the statement—that the 1.5 per cent. increase in child benefit is actually a draw-down of the following year's increase. The following year will have not a full inflation increase but inflation less 1.5 per cent.—a real-terms cut. Was the Minister aware of that?

Helen Goodman: I do not think that there will be a real-terms cut in the following year as the hon. Gentleman suggests. I will write to him on that point.

I turn now to the amendments tabled by the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Dr. Harris). Amendment 33 would add a further regulation-making power to clause 6, enabling the Secretary of State to make regulations setting out the circumstances in which a child living in "communal accommodation" may be regarded as living in a qualifying household. That came out of the report by the Joint Committee on Human Rights, of which the hon. Gentleman is a member. I would like to make it very clear that our goal is to eradicate poverty for all children: the framework that the Bill establishes for achieving that goal—using national child poverty strategies and duties on local government—applies to all children in the UK.

To ensure accountability for and progress towards the goal, clauses 2 to 5 define targets for a range of poverty indicators. As I am sure hon. Members appreciate, those targets will be effective only if progress towards them is measurable. That is why they do not apply to children who are not covered by the surveys that we use to measure poverty. Targets for those children would not be measurable, and therefore would be an ineffective way to ensure that their experiences of poverty are tackled. The Bill therefore sets out that the targets apply only to children living in "qualifying households".

For many children living in communal establishments, the concept of household income is simply inapplicable. However, we have other policies to address the well-being of those children. For example, in residential care homes, minimum requirements include the provision of healthy meals, clothes and sufficient financial resources.

I am concerned to satisfy the hon. Gentleman's concerns, because these issues are especially important. The Joint Committee on Human Rights said that the targets discriminate against children not living in qualifying households. In fact, the targets do not discriminate, as only actions can discriminate. He is making a jump in logic and setting up a situation that assumes that the policy that flows from the targets will be discriminatory. That is a mistake and that is why, with the reassurance that the objectives apply to all children, I hope that he will not press his amendments. I hope that other hon. Members also will not press their amendments.

Steve Webb: It is good to see the House filling up for my views on the after housing costs measure of income.

We have had an unexpectedly full debate on this group of amendments and one of the key points that the Minister made is that measuring income after housing costs has many flaws. That makes me wonder why her Department publishes so many statistics on that basis every year. It is presumably because they complement the before housing costs measures, because they tell us different things. Each measure has its relative advantages and disadvantages, and that is why the Department publishes both. To pick one for the purpose of legislation seems inconsistent to me.

The Minister said that we need international comparisons, and my amendment would not prevent those being included. She says that 10 per cent. is an arbitrary figure—obviously it would be the same for before housing costs—and that it is unobtainable. She seems to think that we will just have to live with 1.3 million children in poverty after housing costs. That is a very depressing prospect for the coming decade.

Mr. Frank Field: Will the hon. Gentleman address the Minister's example of two families in identical positions, one of whom decide to spend more of their disposable income on housing—perhaps living in a better area and because it has better schools, which will help the children exit poverty? Under his proposal, we could beat up the Government for the fact that parents, because they have behaved in their children's best interests, appear poor, whereas under the single definition, they would not be.

4.30 pm

Steve Webb: Indeed. That is why a single measure, either before or after housing costs, does not give the full picture. Were housing costs always about housing quality, I would take the right hon. Gentleman's point, but often they are only poorly related to housing quality. Measuring income before and after housing costs, therefore, gives us a fuller picture. The Minister did not respond to my example. She repeated it, but she did not explain why the before housing costs would not be inaccurate in my example. For different circumstances, the two measures would be more or less accurate, which is why we need both.

The hon. Member for Beverley and Holderness (Mr. Stuart), in an impassioned contribution, raised concerns about the number of children in very low—below 40 per cent.—income households. I raised concerns about the data, and having checked the official figures, I can say that the figures below 40 per cent. are not published on a regular basis, because of doubts about their validity, especially with regard to the self-employed. He asked fairly why the figures show what they do, but I am not convinced that they necessarily show anything more than just problems with the data. However, that is unclear, and clearly we need good data, so I take his point.

The comments of my hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Dr. Harris) were informed by his membership of the Joint Committee on Human Rights. He raised an issue that I had not thought of, and I do not think that the Minister's response will offer him the reassurance that he seeks. As the hon. Member for Henley (John Howell) said, we have part 1 and part 2. Part 1 children are those who find their way into surveys, and part 2 children are those about whom local authorities have to do something. Part 1 children are privileged in the Bill because they have their own targets and the child poverty commission and so on. That infrastructure does not support the sort of children about whom my hon. Friend was talking, so he raises a valid point. As the hon. Member for Glasgow, East (John Mason) said, separate targets for the groups in part 1 might be the only way forward. I do not think that they can be melded into the existing targets, so they might need targets of their own.

Dr. Harris: The Minister asked me whether I was happy, but then sat down before I could intervene. Does my hon. Friend agree that the matter will be looked at again in the House of Lords? The Minister's assertion that the Joint Committee said that targets discriminate is incorrect; we were careful to say that it was not the targets, but what might flow from them, that discriminates. The problem was not solved by her response.

Steve Webb: I agree with my hon. Friend, and I am sure that their lordships will want to return to that issue.

In summary, it became apparent a few hours ago, during the pre-Budget statement, that the Government have given up on the 2010 target. Independent estimates suggest that £4 billion or £5 billion might have been needed to ensure that the 2010 target was met, but there was nothing of the sort in the pre-Budget statement. The Government have therefore run up the white flag on their target of halving child poverty. That is why new clause 3 and a report on the 2010 target would be valuable.

Our argument on new clause 1 is not that after housing costs are the only valid measure, but that they complement existing measures. I have heard nothing from the Minister that dissuades me from that view, so I seek to test the opinion of the House.

Question put, That the clause be read a Second time.

The House divided: Ayes 69, Noes 290.

Division No. 19] [4.33 pm

AYES

Alexander, Danny	Hunter, Mark
Barrett, John	Jones, Lynne
Brake, Tom	Keetch, Mr. Paul
Breed, Mr. Colin	Kennedy, rh Mr. Charles
Brooke, Annette	Kramer, Susan
Burstow, Mr. Paul	Lamb, Norman
Cable, Dr. Vincent	Laws, Mr. David
Campbell, Mr. Gregory	Leech, Mr. John
Campbell, rh Sir Menzies	MacNeil, Mr. Angus
Carmichael, Mr. Alistair	Mason, John
Corbyn, Jeremy	McCrea, Dr. William
Davey, Mr. Edward	Moore, Mr. Michael
Dodds, Mr. Nigel	Mulholland, Greg
Donaldson, rh Mr. Jeffrey M.	Öpik, Lembit
	Pelling, Mr. Andrew
Farron, Tim	Price, Adam
Featherstone, Lynne	Pugh, Dr. John
Foster, Mr. Don	Rennie, Willie
George, Andrew	Robertson, Angus
Gidley, Sandra	Robinson, Mrs. Iris
Goldsworthy, Julia	Robinson, rh Mr. Peter
Hancock, Mr. Mike	Rogerson, Dan
Harris, Dr. Evan	Rowen, Paul
Harvey, Nick	Russell, Bob
Heath, Mr. David	Sanders, Mr. Adrian
Hermon, Lady	Short, rh Clare
Holmes, Paul	Simpson, David
Howarth, David	Spink, Bob
Hughes, Simon	Stunell, Andrew
Huhne, Chris	Swinson, Jo

Teather, Sarah
Webb, Steve
Williams, Hywel
Williams, Mark
Williams, Mr. Roger
Williams, Stephen
Willis, Mr. Phil
Willott, Jenny
Wilson, Sammy
Younger-Ross, Richard

Tellers for the Ayes:
John Hemming and Mr. Andy Reed

NOES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Ainger, Nick
Alexander, rh Mr. Douglas
Allen, Mr. Graham
Anderson, Mr. David
Anderson, Janet
Armstrong, rh Hilary
Atkins, Charlotte
Austin, Mr. Ian
Austin, John
Bailey, Mr. Adrian
Bain, Mr. William
Banks, Gordon
Barlow, Ms Celia
Barron, rh Mr. Kevin
Battle, rh John
Bayley, Hugh
Beckett, rh Margaret
Begg, Miss Anne
Bell, Sir Stuart
Benn, rh Hilary
Benton, Mr. Joe
Berry, Roger
Betts, Mr. Clive
Blackman, Liz
Blackman-Woods, Dr. Roberta
Blears, rh Hazel
Blizzard, Mr. Bob
Blunkett, rh Mr. David
Borrow, Mr. David S.
Bradshaw, rh Mr. Ben
Brennan, Kevin
Brown, rh Mr. Nicholas
Brown, Mr. Russell
Browne, rh Des
Bryant, Chris
Burden, Richard
Burgon, Colin
Butler, Ms Dawn
Byers, rh Mr. Stephen
Cabom, rh Mr. Richard
Cairns, David
Campbell, Mr. Alan
Campbell, Mr. Ronnie
Cawsey, Mr. Ian
Challen, Colin
Chapman, Ben
Chaytor, Mr. David
Clapham, Mr. Michael
Clark, Ms Katy
Clark, Paul
Clarke, rh Mr. Charles
Clarke, rh Mr. Tom
Clelland, Mr. David
Coaker, Mr. Vernon
Coffey, Ann
Cohen, Harry
Connarty, Michael
Cook, Frank
Cooper, rh Yvette
Cousins, Jim
Crausby, Mr. David
Creagh, Mary
Cruddas, Jon
Cryer, Mrs. Ann
Cummings, John
Cunningham, Mr. Jim
Cunningham, Tony
David, Mr. Wayne
Davidson, Mr. Ian
Davies, Mr. Dai
Davies, Mr. Quentin
Dean, Mrs. Janet
Denham, rh Mr. John
Dhanda, Mr. Parmjit
Dismore, Mr. Andrew
Dobbin, Jim
Dobson, rh Frank
Donohoe, Mr. Brian H.
Doran, Mr. Frank
Drew, Mr. David
Eagle, Angela
Eagle, Maria
Efford, Clive
Elman, Mrs. Louise
Engel, Natascha
Ennis, Jeff
Farrelly, Paul
Field, rh Mr. Frank
Fitzpatrick, Jim
Flint, rh Caroline
Flynn, Paul
Follett, Barbara
Foster, Michael Jabez (Hastings and Rye)
Francis, Dr. Hywel
Gapes, Mike
Gardiner, Barry
George, rh Mr. Bruce
Gerrard, Mr. Neil
Gilroy, Linda
Goggins, rh Paul
Goodman, Helen
Griffith, Nia
Griffiths, Nigel
Grogan, Mr. John
Gwynne, Andrew
Hain, rh Mr. Peter
Hall, Mr. Mike
Hall, Patrick
Hamilton, Mr. David
Hamilton, Mr. Fabian
Hanson, rh Mr. David
Harman, rh Ms Harriet
Harris, Mr. Tom
Havard, Mr. Dai
Healey, rh John
Hendrick, Mr. Mark
Hepburn, Mr. Stephen
Hesford, Stephen
Hewitt, rh Ms Patricia
Heyes, David
Hill, rh Keith
Hillier, Meg
Hodge, rh Margaret
Hodgson, Mrs. Sharon
Hoey, Kate
Hoon, rh Mr. Geoffrey
Hope, Phil
Hopkins, Kelvin
Howarth, rh Mr. George
Howells, rh Dr. Kim
Hoyle, Mr. Lindsay
Humble, Mrs. Joan
Hutton, rh Mr. John
Iddon, Dr. Brian
Illsley, Mr. Eric
Ingram, rh Mr. Adam
Irranca-Davies, Huw
Jackson, Glenda
Jenkins, Mr. Brian
Johnson, Ms Diana R.
Jones, Helen
Jones, Mr. Kevan
Jones, Mr. Martyn
Joyce, Mr. Eric
Keeble, Ms Sally
Keeley, Barbara
Keen, Alan
Kelly, rh Ruth
Khan, rh Mr. Sadiq
Kidney, Mr. David
Kilfoyle, Mr. Peter
Knight, rh Jim
Kumar, Dr. Ashok
Ladyman, Dr. Stephen
Lammy, rh Mr. David
Laxton, Mr. Bob
Lazarowicz, Mark
Lepper, David
Levitt, Tom
Lewis, Mr. Ivan
Linton, Martin
Lloyd, Tony
Love, Mr. Andrew
Lucas, Ian
Mackinlay, Andrew
Mactaggart, Fiona
Mahmood, Mr. Khalid
Malik, Mr. Shahid
Mallaber, Judy
Mann, John
Marris, Rob
Marsden, Mr. Gordon
Martlew, Mr. Eric
McAvoy, rh Mr. Thomas
McCabe, Steve
McCarthy, Kerry
McCarthy-Fry, Sarah
McCartney, rh Mr. Ian
McDonagh, Siobhain
McDonnell, John
McFadden, rh Mr. Pat
McGovern, Mr. Jim
McGuire, rh Mrs. Anne
McIsaac, Shona
McKechin, Ann
McKenna, Rosemary
Meacher, rh Mr. Michael
Meale, Mr. Alan
Merron, Gillian
Michael, rh Alun
Miliband, rh David
Miliband, rh Edward
Miller, Andrew
Mitchell, Mr. Austin
Moffat, Anne
Moffatt, Laura
Mole, Chris
Moon, Mrs. Madeleine
Morden, Jessica
Morgan, Julie
Morley, rh Mr. Elliot
Mountford, Kali
Mudie, Mr. George
Murphy, Mr. Denis
Murphy, rh Mr. Jim
Murphy, rh Mr. Paul
Naysmith, Dr. Doug
Norris, Dan
O'Brien, rh Mr. Mike
O'Hara, Mr. Edward
Oliner, Mr. Bill
Osborne, Sandra
Owen, Albert
Palmer, Dr. Nick
Plaskitt, Mr. James
Pope, Mr. Greg
Pound, Stephen
Prentice, Bridget
Prentice, Mr. Gordon
Prescott, rh Mr. John
Primarolo, rh Dawn
Prosser, Gwyn
Purchase, Mr. Ken
Purnell, rh James
Rammell, Bill
Reed, Mr. Andy
Reed, Mr. Jamie
Reid, rh John
Riordan, Mrs. Linda
Robinson, Mr. Geoffrey
Rooney, Mr. Terry
Roy, Mr. Frank
Ruane, Chris
Ruddock, Joan
Russell, Christine
Ryan, rh Joan
Salter, Martin
Sarwar, Mr. Mohammad
Seabeck, Alison
Sharma, Mr. Virendra
Sheerman, Mr. Barry
Sheridan, Jim
Simon, Mr. Siôn
Singh, Mr. Marsha
Skinner, Mr. Dennis
Slaughter, Mr. Andy
Smith, rh Mr. Andrew
Smith, Ms Angela C. (Sheffield, Hillsborough)
Smith, rh Angela E. (Basildon)
Smith, Geraldine
Smith, rh Jacqui
Snelgrove, Anne
Soulsby, Sir Peter
Southworth, Helen
Spellar, rh Mr. John
Starkey, Dr. Phyllis
Stewart, Ian
Stoate, Dr. Howard
Strang, rh Dr. Gavin

Straw, rh Mr. Jack
Stringer, Graham
Stuart, Ms Gisela
Sutcliffe, Mr. Gerry
Tami, Mark
Taylor, David
Thornberry, Emily
Todd, Mr. Mark
Touhig, rh Mr. Don
Trickett, Jon
Truswell, Mr. Paul
Turner, Mr. Neil
Twigg, Derek
Ussher, Kitty
Vis, Dr. Rudi
Waltho, Lynda
Ward, Claire
Wareing, Mr. Robert N.
Watson, Mr. Tom
Watts, Mr. Dave
Wicks, rh Malcolm
Williams, rh Mr. Alan
Wilson, Phil
Winnick, Mr. David
Wood, Mike
Woolas, Mr. Phil
Wright, David
Wright, Mr. Iain
Wright, Dr. Tony
Wyatt, Derek

Tellers for the Noes:
Lyn Brown and
Mr. John Heppell

Question accordingly negatived.

New Clause 2

THE REDUCTION IN THE CAUSES OF POVERTY TARGETS

'The Secretary of State shall make regulations setting out reduction in the causes of poverty targets.'.—(Andrew Selous.)

Brought up, and read the First time.

Question put, That the clause be read a Second time:—

The House divided: Ayes 206, Noes 289.

Division No. 20] [4.47 pm

AYES

Afriyie, Adam
Ainsworth, Mr. Peter
Alexander, Danny
Amess, Mr. David
Ancram, rh Mr. Michael
Arbuthnot, rh Mr. James
Atkinson, Mr. Peter
Bacon, Mr. Richard
Baldry, Tony
Baron, Mr. John
Barrett, John
Beith, rh Sir Alan
Benyon, Mr. Richard
Beresford, Sir Paul
Blunt, Mr. Crispin
Bone, Mr. Peter
Boswell, Mr. Tim
Brady, Mr. Graham
Brake, Tom
Brazier, Mr. Julian
Breed, Mr. Colin
Brokenshire, James
Brooke, Annette
Browne, Mr. Jeremy
Browning, Angela
Burns, Mr. Simon
Burrowes, Mr. David
Burstow, Mr. Paul
Burt, Alistair
Butterfill, Sir John
Cable, Dr. Vincent
Cameron, rh Mr. David
Campbell, Mr. Gregory
Campbell, rh Sir Menzies
Carmichael, Mr. Alistair
Clark, Greg
Clarke, rh Mr. Kenneth
Clifton-Brown, Mr. Geoffrey
Cox, Mr. Geoffrey
Curry, rh Mr. David
Davey, Mr. Edward
Davies, David T.C. (Monmouth)
Davies, Philip
Davis, rh David
Djanogly, Mr. Jonathan
Dodds, Mr. Nigel
Donaldson, rh Mr. Jeffrey M.
Duddridge, James
Duncan, Alan
Dunne, Mr. Philip
Ellwood, Mr. Tobias
Evans, Mr. Nigel
Evennett, Mr. David
Fallon, Mr. Michael
Farron, Tim
Featherstone, Lynne
Field, rh Mr. Frank
Field, Mr. Mark
Foster, Mr. Don
Francois, Mr. Mark
Fraser, Christopher
Gale, Mr. Roger
Garnier, Mr. Edward
Gauke, Mr. David
George, Andrew
Gibb, Mr. Nick
Gidley, Sandra
Gillan, Mrs. Cheryl
Goldsworthy, Julia
Goodman, Mr. Paul
Goodwill, Mr. Robert
Gray, Mr. James
Green, Damian
Greening, Justine
Grieve, Mr. Dominic
Hague, rh Mr. William
Hammond, Mr. Philip
Hammond, Stephen
Hancock, Mr. Mike
Harper, Mr. Mark
Harris, Dr. Evan
Harvey, Nick
Heald, Mr. Oliver
Heath, Mr. David
Heathcoat-Amory, rh Mr. David
Hemming, John
Hendry, Charles
Herbert, Nick
Hermon, Lady
Hoey, Kate
Hogg, rh Mr. Douglas
Hollobone, Mr. Philip
Holloway, Mr. Adam
Holmes, Paul
Horam, Mr. John
Howarth, David
Howarth, Mr. Gerald
Howell, John
Hughes, Simon
Hunter, Mark
Jack, rh Mr. Michael
Jenkin, Mr. Bernard
Jones, Mr. David
Keetch, Mr. Paul
Kennedy, rh Mr. Charles
Kirkbride, Miss Julie
Knight, rh Mr. Greg
Kramer, Susan
Laing, Mrs. Eleanor
Lait, Mrs. Jacqui
Lancaster, Mr. Mark
Laws, Mr. David
Leech, Mr. John
Leigh, Mr. Edward
Letwin, rh Mr. Oliver
Lewis, Dr. Julian
Liddell-Grainger, Mr. Ian
Lidington, Mr. David
Lilley, rh Mr. Peter
Loughton, Tim
Luff, Peter
Mackay, rh Mr. Andrew
Main, Anne
Malins, Mr. Humfrey
May, rh Mrs. Theresa
McCrea, Dr. William
McIntosh, Miss Anne
McLoughlin, rh Mr. Patrick
Mitchell, Mr. Andrew
Moore, Mr. Michael
Moss, Mr. Malcolm
Mulholland, Greg
Newmark, Mr. Brooks
O'Brien, Mr. Stephen
Öpik, Lembit
Osborne, Mr. George
Ottaway, Richard
Paterson, Mr. Owen
Pelling, Mr. Andrew
Penning, Mike
Penrose, John
Pickles, Mr. Eric
Prisk, Mr. Mark
Pugh, Dr. John
Randall, Mr. John
Redwood, rh Mr. John
Reid, Mr. Alan
Rennie, Willie
Rifkind, rh Sir Malcolm
Robathan, Mr. Andrew
Robertson, Hugh
Robinson, Mrs. Iris
Robinson, rh Mr. Peter
Rogerson, Dan
Rosindell, Andrew
Rowen, Paul
Ruffley, Mr. David
Russell, Bob
Sanders, Mr. Adrian
Scott, Mr. Lee
Selous, Andrew
Shapps, Grant
Simmonds, Mark
Simpson, David
Simpson, Mr. Keith
Smith, Chloe
Soames, Mr. Nicholas
Spelman, Mrs. Caroline
Spicer, Sir Michael
Spink, Bob
Spring, Mr. Richard
Stanley, rh Sir John
Steen, Mr. Anthony
Streeter, Mr. Gary
Stuart, Mr. Graham
Stunell, Andrew
Swayne, Mr. Desmond
Swinson, Jo
Swire, Mr. Hugo
Syms, Mr. Robert
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Taylor, Dr. Richard
Teather, Sarah
Tredinnick, David
Turner, Mr. Andrew
Tyrie, Mr. Andrew
Vara, Mr. Shailesh
Walker, Mr. Charles
Wallace, Mr. Ben
Waterson, Mr. Nigel
Watkinson, Angela
Webb, Steve
Whittingdale, Mr. John
Widdecombe, rh Miss Ann
Wiggin, Bill
Williams, Mark
Williams, Mr. Roger
Williams, Stephen
Willis, Mr. Phil
Willott, Jenny
Wilson, Mr. Rob
Winterton, Ann
Winterton, Sir Nicholas
Wright, Jeremy
Young, rh Sir George
Younger-Ross, Richard

Tellers for the Ayes:
Michael Fabricant and
Mr. Stephen Crabb

NOES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Ainger, Nick
Alexander, rh Mr. Douglas
Allen, Mr. Graham
Anderson, Mr. David
Anderson, Janet
Armstrong, rh Hilary
Atkins, Charlotte
Austin, Mr. Ian
Austin, John
Bailey, Mr. Adrian
Bain, Mr. William
Banks, Gordon
Barlow, Ms Celia
Barron, rh Mr. Kevin
Battle, rh John
Bayley, Hugh
Beckett, rh Margaret
Begg, Miss Anne
Bell, Sir Stuart
Benn, rh Hilary
Benton, Mr. Joe
Berry, Roger
Betts, Mr. Clive
Blackman, Liz
Blackman-Woods, Dr. Roberta
Blears, rh Hazel
Blizzard, Mr. Bob
Blunkett, rh Mr. David
Borrow, Mr. David S.
Brennan, Kevin
Brown, rh Mr. Nicholas
Brown, Mr. Russell
Browne, rh Des
Bryant, Chris
Burden, Richard
Burgon, Colin
Butler, Ms Dawn
Byers, rh Mr. Stephen
Caborn, rh Mr. Richard
Cairns, David
Campbell, Mr. Alan
Campbell, Mr. Ronnie
Cawsey, Mr. Ian
Challen, Colin
Chapman, Ben
Chaytor, Mr. David
Clapham, Mr. Michael
Clark, Ms Katy
Clarke, rh Mr. Charles
Clarke, rh Mr. Tom
Clelland, Mr. David
Coaker, Mr. Vernon
Coffey, Ann
Cohen, Harry
Connarty, Michael
Cook, Frank
Cooper, rh Yvette
Corbyn, Jeremy
Cousins, Jim
Crausby, Mr. David
Creagh, Mary
Cruddas, Jon
Cryer, Mrs. Ann
Cummings, John
Cunningham, Mr. Jim
Cunningham, Tony
David, Mr. Wayne
Davidson, Mr. Ian
Davies, Mr. Dai
Davies, Mr. Quentin
Dean, Mrs. Janet
Denham, rh Mr. John
Dhanda, Mr. Parmjit
Dismore, Mr. Andrew
Dobbin, Jim
Dobson, rh Frank
Donohoe, Mr. Brian H.
Doran, Mr. Frank
Drew, Mr. David
Eagle, Angela
Eagle, Maria
Efford, Clive
Ellman, Mrs. Louise
Engel, Natascha
Ennis, Jeff
Farrelly, Paul
Fitzpatrick, Jim
Flint, rh Caroline
Flynn, Paul
Follett, Barbara
Foster, Michael Jabez (Hastings and Rye)
Francis, Dr. Hywel
Gapes, Mike
Gardiner, Barry
George, rh Mr. Bruce
Gerrard, Mr. Neil
Gilroy, Linda
Goggins, rh Paul
Goodman, Helen
Griffith, Nia
Griffiths, Nigel
Grogan, Mr. John
Gwynne, Andrew
Hain, rh Mr. Peter
Hall, Mr. Mike
Hamilton, Mr. David
Hamilton, Mr. Fabian
Hanson, rh Mr. David
Harman, rh Ms Harriet
Harris, Mr. Tom
Havard, Mr. Dai
Healey, rh John
Hendrick, Mr. Mark
Hepburn, Mr. Stephen
Hesford, Stephen
Hewitt, rh Ms Patricia
Heyes, David
Hill, rh Keith
Hillier, Meg
Hodgson, Mrs. Sharon
Hoon, rh Mr. Geoffrey
Hope, Phil
Hopkins, Kelvin
Howarth, rh Mr. George
Howells, rh Dr. Kim
Hoyle, Mr. Lindsay
Humble, Mrs. Joan
Hutton, rh Mr. John
Iddon, Dr. Brian
Illsley, Mr. Eric
Ingram, rh Mr. Adam
Irranca-Davies, Huw
Jackson, Glenda
Jenkins, Mr. Brian
Johnson, Ms Diana R.
Jones, Helen
Jones, Mr. Kevan
Jones, Lynne
Jones, Mr. Martyn
Joyce, Mr. Eric
Keeble, Ms Sally
Keeley, Barbara
Keen, Alan
Kelly, rh Ruth
Khan, rh Mr. Sadiq
Kidney, Mr. David
Killoyle, Mr. Peter
Knight, rh Jim
Kumar, Dr. Ashok
Ladyman, Dr. Stephen
Lammy, rh Mr. David
Laxton, Mr. Bob
Lazarowicz, Mark
Lepper, David
Levitt, Tom
Lewis, Mr. Ivan
Linton, Martin
Lloyd, Tony
Love, Mr. Andrew
Lucas, Ian
Mackinlay, Andrew
MacNeil, Mr. Angus
Mactaggart, Fiona
Mahmood, Mr. Khalid
Malik, Mr. Shahid
Mallaber, Judy
Mann, John
Marris, Rob
Marsden, Mr. Gordon
Martlew, Mr. Eric
Mason, John
McAvoy, rh Mr. Thomas
McCabe, Steve
McCarthy, Kerry
McCarthy-Fry, Sarah
McCartney, rh Mr. Ian
McDonagh, Siobhain
McDonnell, John
McFadden, rh Mr. Pat
McFall, rh John
McGovern, Mr. Jim
McGuire, rh Mrs. Anne
McIsaac, Shona
McKechin, Ann
McKenna, Rosemary
Meacher, rh Mr. Michael
Meale, Mr. Alan
Merron, Gillian
Michael, rh Alun
Miliband, rh David
Miliband, rh Edward
Miller, Andrew
Mitchell, Mr. Austin
Moffat, Anne
Moffatt, Laura
Mole, Chris
Moon, Mrs. Madeleine
Morden, Jessica
Morgan, Julie
Morley, rh Mr. Elliot
Mountford, Kali
Mudie, Mr. George
Murphy, Mr. Denis
Murphy, rh Mr. Jim
Murphy, rh Mr. Paul
Naysmith, Dr. Doug
Norris, Dan
O'Brien, rh Mr. Mike
O'Hara, Mr. Edward
Olner, Mr. Bill
Osborne, Sandra
Owen, Albert
Palmer, Dr. Nick
Plaskitt, Mr. James
Pope, Mr. Greg
Pound, Stephen
Prentice, Bridget
Prentice, Mr. Gordon
Prescott, rh Mr. John
Price, Adam
Primarolo, rh Dawn
Prosser, Gwyn
Purchase, Mr. Ken
Purnell, rh James
Reed, Mr. Andy
Reed, Mr. Jamie
Reid, rh John
Riordan, Mrs. Linda
Robertson, Angus
Rooney, Mr. Terry
Roy, Mr. Frank
Ruane, Chris
Ruddock, Joan
Russell, Christine
Ryan, rh Joan
Salter, Martin
Sarwar, Mr. Mohammad
Seabeck, Alison
Sharma, Mr. Virendra
Sheerman, Mr. Barry
Sheridan, Jim
Simon, Mr. Siôn
Singh, Mr. Marsha
Skinner, Mr. Dennis
Slaughter, Mr. Andy
Smith, rh Mr. Andrew
Smith, Ms Angela C. (Sheffield, Hillsborough)
Smith, rh Angela E. (Basildon)
Smith, Geraldine
Smith, rh Jacqui
Snelgrove, Anne
Soulsby, Sir Peter
Southworth, Helen
Spellar, rh Mr. John
Starkey, Dr. Phyllis
Stewart, Ian
Stoate, Dr. Howard
Strang, rh Dr. Gavin
Straw, rh Mr. Jack
Stringer, Graham
Stuart, Ms Gisela
Sutcliffe, Mr. Gerry
Tami, Mark
Taylor, Ms Dari
Taylor, David
Thornberry, Emily
Todd, Mr. Mark
Touhig, rh Mr. Don
Trickett, Jon
Truswell, Mr. Paul
Turner, Mr. Neil
Twigg, Derek
Ussher, Kitty
Vis, Dr. Rudi
Waltho, Lynda
Wareing, Mr. Robert N.
Watson, Mr. Tom
Watts, Mr. Dave
Wicks, rh Malcolm
Williams, rh Mr. Alan
Williams, Hywel

Wilson, Phil
Winnick, Mr. David
Wood, Mike
Wright, David
Wright, Mr. Iain
Wright, Dr. Tony
Wyatt, Derek

Tellers for the Noes:
Lyn Brown and
Mr. John Heppell

Question accordingly negatived.

New Clause 3

2010 TARGET

'(1) The Secretary of State must, before the end of the period of three months beginning with the day on which the Act is passed, publish and lay before Parliament a report setting out an assessment of progress made towards meeting the 2010 target.

(2) The 2010 target is that in the financial year beginning with 1 April 2010, fewer than 1.7 million children live in households that fall within the relevant income group as defined by section 2(2).'.—(Andrew Selous.)

Brought up, and read the First time.

Question put, That the clause be read a Second time.

The House divided: Ayes 214, Noes 281.

Division No. 21] [5.1 pm

AYES

Afriyie, Adam
Ainsworth, Mr. Peter
Alexander, Danny
Amess, Mr. David
Ancram, rh Mr. Michael
Arbuthnot, rh Mr. James
Atkinson, Mr. Peter
Bacon, Mr. Richard
Baldry, Tony
Baron, Mr. John
Barrett, John
Beith, rh Sir Alan
Bellingham, Mr. Henry
Benyon, Mr. Richard
Beresford, Sir Paul
Blunt, Mr. Crispin
Bone, Mr. Peter
Boswell, Mr. Tim
Bottomley, Peter
Brady, Mr. Graham
Brake, Tom
Brazier, Mr. Julian
Breed, Mr. Colin
Brokenshire, James
Brooke, Annette
Browne, Mr. Jeremy
Browning, Angela
Burns, Mr. Simon
Burrowes, Mr. David
Burstow, Mr. Paul
Burt, Alistair
Butterfill, Sir John
Cable, Dr. Vincent
Cameron, rh Mr. David
Campbell, Mr. Gregory
Campbell, rh Sir Menzies
Carmichael, Mr. Alistair
Clark, Greg
Clarke, rh Mr. Kenneth
Clifton-Brown, Mr. Geoffrey
Corbyn, Jeremy
Cox, Mr. Geoffrey
Curry, rh Mr. David
Davey, Mr. Edward
Davies, David T.C. (Monmouth)
Davies, Philip
Davis, rh David
Djanogly, Mr. Jonathan
Dodds, Mr. Nigel
Donaldson, rh Mr. Jeffrey M.
Drew, Mr. David
Duddridge, James
Duncan, Alan
Dunne, Mr. Philip
Ellwood, Mr. Tobias
Evans, Mr. Nigel
Evennett, Mr. David
Fabricant, Michael
Fallon, Mr. Michael
Farron, Tim
Featherstone, Lynne
Field, Mr. Mark
Foster, Mr. Don
Fox, Dr. Liam
Francois, Mr. Mark
Fraser, Christopher
Garnier, Mr. Edward
Gauke, Mr. David
George, Andrew
Gibb, Mr. Nick
Gidley, Sandra
Gillan, Mrs. Cheryl
Goldsworthy, Julia
Goodman, Mr. Paul
Goodwill, Mr. Robert
Gray, Mr. James
Green, Damian
Greening, Justine
Grieve, Mr. Dominic
Hague, rh Mr. William
Hammond, Stephen
Hancock, Mr. Mike
Hands, Mr. Greg
Harper, Mr. Mark
Harris, Dr. Evan
Harvey, Nick
Heald, Mr. Oliver
Heath, Mr. David
Heathcoat-Amory, rh Mr. David
Hemming, John
Hendry, Charles
Herbert, Nick
Hermon, Lady
Hogg, rh Mr. Douglas
Hollobone, Mr. Philip
Holloway, Mr. Adam
Holmes, Paul
Horam, Mr. John
Howarth, David
Howarth, Mr. Gerald
Howell, John
Hughes, Simon
Hunter, Mark
Jack, rh Mr. Michael
Jackson, Mr. Stewart
Jenkin, Mr. Bernard
Jones, Mr. David
Jones, Lynne
Keetch, Mr. Paul
Kennedy, rh Mr. Charles
Kirkbride, Miss Julie
Knight, rh Mr. Greg
Laing, Mrs. Eleanor
Lait, Mrs. Jacqui
Lancaster, Mr. Mark
Laws, Mr. David
Leech, Mr. John
Leigh, Mr. Edward
Letwin, rh Mr. Oliver
Lewis, Dr. Julian
Liddell-Grainger, Mr. Ian
Lidington, Mr. David
Lilley, rh Mr. Peter
Loughton, Tim
Luff, Peter
Mackay, rh Mr. Andrew
MacNeil, Mr. Angus
Main, Anne
Malins, Mr. Humfrey
Mason, John
Mates, rh Mr. Michael
McCrea, Dr. William
McIntosh, Miss Anne
McLoughlin, rh Mr. Patrick
Mitchell, Mr. Andrew
Moore, Mr. Michael
Moss, Mr. Malcolm
Mulholland, Greg
Mundell, David
Newmark, Mr. Brooks
O'Brien, Mr. Stephen
Öpik, Lembit
Osborne, Mr. George
Ottaway, Richard
Paterson, Mr. Owen
Pelling, Mr. Andrew
Penning, Mike
Penrose, John
Pickles, Mr. Eric
Price, Adam
Prisk, Mr. Mark
Pugh, Dr. John
Randall, Mr. John
Redwood, rh Mr. John
Reid, Mr. Alan
Rennie, Willie
Rifkind, rh Sir Malcolm
Robathan, Mr. Andrew
Robertson, Angus
Robertson, Hugh
Robinson, Mrs. Iris
Robinson, rh Mr. Peter
Rogerson, Dan
Rosindell, Andrew
Rowen, Paul
Russell, Bob
Sanders, Mr. Adrian
Scott, Mr. Lee
Selous, Andrew
Shapps, Grant
Shepherd, Mr. Richard
Simmonds, Mark
Simpson, David
Simpson, Mr. Keith
Smith, Chloe
Soames, Mr. Nicholas
Spelman, Mrs. Caroline
Spicer, Sir Michael
Spink, Bob
Spring, Mr. Richard
Stanley, rh Sir John
Steen, Mr. Anthony
Streeter, Mr. Gary
Stuart, Mr. Graham
Stunell, Andrew
Swayne, Mr. Desmond
Swinson, Jo
Swire, Mr. Hugo
Syms, Mr. Robert
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Taylor, Dr. Richard
Teather, Sarah
Tredinnick, David
Turner, Mr. Andrew
Tyrie, Mr. Andrew
Vara, Mr. Shailesh
Walker, Mr. Charles
Wallace, Mr. Ben
Waterson, Mr. Nigel
Watkinson, Angela
Whittingdale, Mr. John
Widdecombe, rh Miss Ann
Williams, Hywel
Williams, Mark
Williams, Mr. Roger
Williams, Stephen
Willis, Mr. Phil
Willott, Jenny
Wilson, Mr. Rob
Winterton, Ann
Winterton, Sir Nicholas
Wright, Jeremy
Young, rh Sir George
Younger-Ross, Richard

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Stephen Crabb and Bill Wiggin

NOES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Ainger, Nick
Alexander, rh Mr. Douglas
Allen, Mr. Graham

Anderson, Mr. David
Anderson, Janet
Armstrong, rh Hilary
Austin, Mr. Ian
Austin, John
Bailey, Mr. Adrian
Bain, Mr. William
Banks, Gordon
Barlow, Ms Celia
Barron, rh Mr. Kevin
Battle, rh John
Bayley, Hugh
Beckett, rh Margaret
Begg, Miss Anne
Bell, Sir Stuart
Benn, rh Hilary
Benton, Mr. Joe
Berry, Roger
Betts, Mr. Clive
Blackman, Liz
Blackman-Woods, Dr. Roberta
Blears, rh Hazel
Blizzard, Mr. Bob
Blunkett, rh Mr. David
Borrow, Mr. David S.
Brennan, Kevin
Brown, rh Mr. Nicholas
Brown, Mr. Russell
Browne, rh Des
Bryant, Chris
Burden, Richard
Burgon, Colin
Butler, Ms Dawn
Byers, rh Mr. Stephen
Caborn, rh Mr. Richard
Cairns, David
Campbell, Mr. Alan
Campbell, Mr. Ronnie
Cawsey, Mr. Ian
Challen, Colin
Chapman, Ben
Chaytor, Mr. David
Clapham, Mr. Michael
Clark, Ms Katy
Clark, Paul
Clarke, rh Mr. Charles
Clarke, rh Mr. Tom
Clelland, Mr. David
Coaker, Mr. Vernon
Coffey, Ann
Cohen, Harry
Connarty, Michael
Cook, Frank
Cousins, Jim
Crausby, Mr. David
Cruddas, Jon
Cryer, Mrs. Ann
Cummings, John
Cunningham, Mr. Jim
Cunningham, Tony
David, Mr. Wayne
Davidson, Mr. Ian
Davies, Mr. Dai
Davies, Mr. Quentin
Dean, Mrs. Janet
Denham, rh Mr. John
Dhanda, Mr. Parmjit
Dismore, Mr. Andrew
Dobbin, Jim
Dobson, rh Frank
Donohoe, Mr. Brian H.
Doran, Mr. Frank
Eagle, Maria
Efford, Clive
Ellman, Mrs. Louise
Engel, Natascha
Ennis, Jeff
Farrelly, Paul
Fitzpatrick, Jim
Flint, rh Caroline
Flynn, Paul
Follett, Barbara
Foster, Michael Jabez (Hastings and Rye)
Francis, Dr. Hywel
Gapes, Mike
Gardiner, Barry
George, rh Mr. Bruce
Gerrard, Mr. Neil
Gilroy, Linda
Goggins, rh Paul
Goodman, Helen
Griffith, Nia
Griffiths, Nigel
Grogan, Mr. John
Gwynne, Andrew
Hain, rh Mr. Peter
Hall, Mr. Mike
Hall, Patrick
Hamilton, Mr. David
Hamilton, Mr. Fabian
Hanson, rh Mr. David
Harman, rh Ms Harriet
Harris, Mr. Tom
Havard, Mr. Dai
Healey, rh John
Hendrick, Mr. Mark
Hepburn, Mr. Stephen
Hesford, Stephen
Hewitt, rh Ms Patricia
Heyes, David
Hill, rh Keith
Hillier, Meg
Hodge, rh Margaret
Hodgson, Mrs. Sharon
Hoon, rh Mr. Geoffrey
Hope, Phil
Hopkins, Kelvin
Howarth, rh Mr. George
Howells, rh Dr. Kim
Hoyle, Mr. Lindsay
Humble, Mrs. Joan
Hutton, rh Mr. John
Iddon, Dr. Brian
Illsley, Mr. Eric
Ingram, rh Mr. Adam
Irranca-Davies, Huw
Jackson, Glenda
Jenkins, Mr. Brian
Johnson, Ms Diana R.
Jones, Helen
Jones, Mr. Kevan
Jones, Mr. Martyn
Joyce, Mr. Eric
Keeble, Ms Sally
Keeley, Barbara
Keen, Alan
Kelly, rh Ruth
Khan, rh Mr. Sadiq
Kidney, Mr. David
Kilfoyle, Mr. Peter
Knight, rh Jim
Ladyman, Dr. Stephen
Lammy, rh Mr. David
Laxton, Mr. Bob
Lazarowicz, Mark
Lepper, David
Levitt, Tom
Lewis, Mr. Ivan
Linton, Martin
Lloyd, Tony
Love, Mr. Andrew
Lucas, Ian
Mackinlay, Andrew
Mactaggart, Fiona
Mahmood, Mr. Khalid
Malik, Mr. Shahid
Mallaber, Judy
Mann, John
Marris, Rob
Marsden, Mr. Gordon
Martlew, Mr. Eric
McAvoy, rh Mr. Thomas
McCabe, Steve
McCarthy, Kerry
McCarthy-Fry, Sarah
McCartney, rh Mr. Ian
McDonagh, Siobhain
McDonnell, John
McFadden, rh Mr. Pat
McFall, rh John
McGovern, Mr. Jim
McGuire, rh Mrs. Anne
McIsaac, Shona
McKechin, Ann
McKenna, Rosemary
McNulty, rh Mr. Tony
Meacher, rh Mr. Michael
Meale, Mr. Alan
Merron, Gillian
Michael, rh Alun
Miliband, rh David
Miliband, rh Edward
Miller, Andrew
Mitchell, Mr. Austin
Moffat, Anne
Moffatt, Laura
Mole, Chris
Moon, Mrs. Madeleine
Morden, Jessica
Morgan, Julie
Morley, rh Mr. Elliot
Mountford, Kali
Mudie, Mr. George
Mullin, Mr. Chris
Murphy, Mr. Denis
Murphy, rh Mr. Jim
Murphy, rh Mr. Paul
Naysmith, Dr. Doug
Norris, Dan
O'Brien, rh Mr. Mike
O'Hara, Mr. Edward
Olner, Mr. Bill
Osborne, Sandra
Owen, Albert
Palmer, Dr. Nick
Plaskitt, Mr. James
Pope, Mr. Greg
Pound, Stephen
Prentice, Bridget
Prentice, Mr. Gordon
Prescott, rh Mr. John
Primarolo, rh Dawn
Prosser, Gwyn
Purchase, Mr. Ken
Purnell, rh James
Reed, Mr. Andy
Reed, Mr. Jamie
Reid, rh John
Riordan, Mrs. Linda
Rooney, Mr. Terry
Roy, Lindsay
Ruane, Chris
Ruddock, Joan
Russell, Christine
Ryan, rh Joan
Salter, Martin
Sarwar, Mr. Mohammad
Seabeck, Alison
Sharma, Mr. Virendra
Sheerman, Mr. Barry
Simon, Mr. Siôn
Singh, Mr. Marsha
Skinner, Mr. Dennis
Slaughter, Mr. Andy
Smith, rh Mr. Andrew
Smith, Ms Angela C. (Sheffield, Hillsborough)
Smith, rh Angela E. (Basildon)
Smith, Geraldine
Smith, rh Jacqui
Snelgrove, Anne
Soulsby, Sir Peter
Southworth, Helen
Spellar, rh Mr. John
Starkey, Dr. Phyllis
Stewart, Ian
Stoate, Dr. Howard
Strang, rh Dr. Gavin
Straw, rh Mr. Jack
Stringer, Graham
Stuart, Ms Gisela
Sutcliffe, Mr. Gerry
Tami, Mark
Taylor, Ms Dari
Taylor, David
Thornberry, Emily
Todd, Mr. Mark
Touhig, rh Mr. Don
Trickett, Jon
Truswell, Mr. Paul
Turner, Mr. Neil
Twigg, Derek
Ussher, Kitty
Vis, Dr. Rudi
Waltho, Lynda
Ward, Claire
Wareing, Mr. Robert N.
Watson, Mr. Tom
Watts, Mr. Dave
Wicks, rh Malcolm
Williams, rh Mr. Alan
Wilson, Phil
Winnick, Mr. David
Wood, Mike
Wright, David
Wright, Mr. Iain
Wright, Dr. Tony
Wyatt, Derek

Tellers for the Noes:
Lyn Brown and
Mr. John Heppell

Question accordingly negatived.

New Clause 4

DUTY TO IMPLEMENT THE UK STRATEGY

'The Secretary of State shall take such steps are are in his reasonable opinion necessary to implement the UK strategy.'.—(Dr. Evan Harris.)

Brought up, and read the First time.

Dr. Evan Harris: I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this it will be convenient to discuss the following: Government amendment 21.

Amendment 35, in clause 9, page 5, line 21, at end insert—

'(ba) must consult the Children's Commissioners for England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland,'.

Amendment 27, page 5, line 22, leave out first 'or' and insert 'families and'.

Amendment 36, page 5, line 22, leave out first 'or' and insert 'and'.

Amendment 28, in clause 22, page 14, line 1, leave out first 'or' and insert 'families and'.

Dr. Harris: I shall be brief in speaking to this new clause on behalf of the Joint Committee on Human Rights, which reported on the Bill on 10 November. There are two sets of Liberal Democrat amendments in this group, the first of which, new clause 4, proposes that the Secretary of State should have a duty to implement the strategy on child poverty reduction. The second set—amendments 35 and 36—is about consulting children and the representatives of children.

Let me deal with new clause 4 first. In our report, we identified that, unlike in what might be considered comparable statutory regimes set out in legislation such as the Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Act 2000 and the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, there is no statutory duty in the Bill to implement the strategy. We engaged in correspondence with the Government to ask why that was. We support in principle having statutory duties to implement, as Parliament wishes, access to economic and social rights. That makes sense, as far as we are concerned, and we find it disappointing that there is no such duty regarding the strategy.

5.15 pm

The Government offered three justifications for not including a duty to implement the strategy. The first was that a separate part of the Bill

"places a binding duty on the Secretary of State to meet the child poverty targets, which is 'the strongest possible incentive' for the Government and their partners to deliver a strategy that over time achieves the targets."

The second was that

"including a duty to implement the strategy risks tying the Government to measures which subsequent evidence or analysis shows to be ineffective or inappropriate."

The third was that

"the Bill makes provision for political and public accountability for not implementing the strategy, by requiring that the Secretary of State's annual reports to Parliament must state whether the strategy has been implemented in full, and, if not, the reasons for this."

We considered those justifications, and offered our opinion on them. We do not believe that any offer sufficient justification for not including the duty to implement the strategy. The first, which was that the child poverty targets work and that there is therefore no need for a duty, does not work, and we used the comparison of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995—that although many things are done to deliver the strategy, there was still a duty to deliver access for the disabled. For that reason, we believe that it does not seem sensible to make a distinction in this regard.

In respect of the second justification that the Government offered, we did not believe that requiring that duty to be implemented would cause inflexibility because, in other areas, a public authority is entitled to take account of subsequent evidence or analysis when implementing a strategy. It cannot ignore such things just because it has a duty to implement a strategy. We said:

"We note that in the Disability Discrimination Act a duty to implement coexists with a duty to prepare further accessibility strategies after the first one, and similarly in the Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Act there is both a duty to implement and a duty to assess progress and revise the strategy."

In respect of the Government's third justification for not implementing the strategy, we said that, while we welcomed the political accountability that is included in the Bill, we did not

"consider such political accountability to be mutually exclusive with legal accountability" to implement provision. We therefore recommend to both Houses that the duty to implement the child poverty strategy be included, as we believe that that will

"enhance opportunities to hold the Secretary of State accountable for failure to make progress towards the targets between now and 2020."

Given the debate that we have had about the 2010 targets, it would be a sign of political confidence on the part of the Minister and the Government if they were to accept that they both should and could include the duty in the Bill.

On the other amendments in my name and that of the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore), in paragraph 1.57 of our report, we said:

"In our view the duties to consult children in the preparation of child poverty strategies are insufficiently precise, because they leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of State (or Scottish Ministers/Northern Ireland department) as to whether or not to consult children directly at all: they could choose to consult organisations working with or representing children instead. We recommend that the duty to consult be amended to give better effect to the right recognised in international human rights law to participate in the relevant decision-making process, by requiring consultation with both children and organisations working with or representing them, and by requiring consultation with the relevant Children's Commissioner."

Amendment 36 therefore proposes the word "and" be substituted for "or" when talking about children and the organisations that represent them. Amendment 35 proposes inserting a new subsection in clause 9 that would require consultation with the Children's Commissioners for England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. There does not seem to be any good reason not to require consultation with them, as they have been set up as experts in, and champions of, children's rights. Members of the Committee do not believe that that would create inflexibility with regard to the bodies that the Government consult. The amendment does not say that "only" those groups be consulted, but just requires that they are consulted.

Given the political sensibilities about the appointment of the Children's Commissioner, it would show appropriate confidence by the Government to include a duty to consult that person, whom they have gone to such great lengths to appoint after creating the post in a welcome move.

Those are the bases for the new clause and amendments, and I hope that the House will support them.

Andrew Selous: I have looked carefully at new clause 4 and read the relevant comments in the Joint Committee's report on the Bill, and I am not enamoured of the new clause. It should be up to the Government to decide how to achieve their objectives. As the Minister said in Committee, the Bill includes clear targets. The Government will be held to account in the House, by way of the annual statement to Parliament, and I expect that occasion to be well attended and one on which the relevant Minister will be pressed very hard if sufficient progress has not been made. The press and media, the lobby groups that take an interest in these matters, the charities and many people in the voluntary sector will ensure a good amount of pressure and focus is put on targets.

It is a worrying development to bring judges into the Bill to the extent that new clause 4 would do, so I am afraid that I am not with the hon. Gentleman on the new clause. However, I am more inclined to support amendments 35 and 36. It is right that the Government should speak to children. I find it hard to conceive that local or central Government could have any set of policies or provide any service without speaking to the people for whom those services are provided or for whom those policies are designed to assist.

My hon. Friends the Members for South-West Hertfordshire (Mr. Gauke) and for Rochford and Southend, East (James Duddridge) and I tabled amendments 27 and 28, which I think are superior to the hon. Gentleman's amendments, because they would require the Government to speak not only to children, as his amendment would, but to the families. I absolutely understand the focus on children and child poverty, but it would be strange to go to a poor family—the Government measure poverty by considering the poverty of parents or guardians as well as that of their children—and speak to the children but not to their parents. That would not be the right approach, and amendment 27 and 28 would remedy that omission.

Government amendment 21 will ensure that child care is included in the Bill. That very welcome concession is one of the few that the Government have made as a result of the debates in Committee, and it is good to know that all our labours were not wholly in vain in Committee.

It is worth noting in passing that under the Welfare Reform Act 2009, the Government sought to impose sanctions on lone parents when their children were only three years old and that the Conservative party made sure that the age was raised to five, when children go to school, as that is quite young enough to start imposing sanctions on parents. However, the point about child care is important. If we are to require lone parents—separated parents—to seek work when their children reach the age of 5, we must absolutely ensure that child care is in place. It has to be in place before school, on occasions, if there is a journey to work, after work, and, particularly importantly, in the holidays. Part-time and flexible work is incredibly important for that group of parents, many of whom seek to enter the labour market for the first time and are unable to make the step to full-time work, although they may aspire to it.

It is worth noting that there has not been universal success on child care as far as the Government are concerned. In fact, in 2008, more child care places closed down than were created. The child minder work force is in steep decline, and many private sector child care providers are having great difficulties. Although I welcome the inclusion of child care, I think that the Government need to address some significant issues to ensure that child care is adequate and that separated parents in particular can get into work.

Helen Goodman: I shall speak to new clause 4 and amendments 21, 27, 28, 35 and 36, which have been grouped because they all relate to UK strategies.

I shall respond to the points that the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Dr. Harris) made on new clause 4, which seeks to impose a duty on the Secretary of State to implement the measures in a UK child poverty strategy. Like the hon. Member for South-West Bedfordshire (Andrew Selous), I do not believe that the proposed change is necessary. The Bill sets four challenges, which, if met, would represent a considerable achievement. The legal duty to meet those targets is absolute, and it is supported by the duty in clause 8 to publish and lay before Parliament a strategy setting out the measures that the Secretary of State proposes to take to meet them.

The intention is clear: the strategy will drive forward action to achieve the targets. If there is a failure by the Government to take sufficient action, as detailed in the strategy, the targets will not be met and that may result in a judicial review. That clearly places very strong pressure on the Government to implement the measures set out in a strategy. There is a significant difference between this legislation and the legislation that the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon noted. The Warm Homes and Energy Conservation Act 2000 and the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 require the Government to implement strategies to achieve their goals, but they do not contain legally binding targets, unlike the Bill before us, which does contain such targets.

The Joint Committee on Human Rights stated that it is not incompatible to have both a duty to meet the targets and a duty to implement the strategy. I understand the theoretical point, but in practice there is no need for both duties. In fact, a duty to implement the strategy could be unhelpful and have unintended consequences that distract us from the important goals in the Bill. Such a duty risks binding the Government to take measures that may turn out to be less effective than was originally envisaged, or that could have negative outcomes that damage progress towards the target.

The Joint Committee is not convinced that the inclusion of a duty to implement the strategy necessarily results in inflexibility. However, surely the hon. Gentleman can see that the Government would be put in an extremely difficult position. If the Government did not take action to implement measures that, at that point in time, they understood to be harmful or ineffective, they would be infringing the duty to implement the strategy; but, if the Government did take action in the circumstances, implementing the strategy could be argued to be an improper use of public money, because they would have implemented a strategy that had been discovered to be ineffective.

As a consequence, the Government would need to lay down a new strategy every time data emerged suggesting that a measure was not working. Apart from the impracticalities that would clearly result from that, the practical effect would be that attention would be diverted from the real object, which is bringing down child poverty. A far more sensible approach is contained in clause 8, which requires that the strategy must be revised and refreshed at least every three years, ensuring that new developments and evidence about the best way to tackle child poverty are constantly taken into account in the development of future strategies, which gives the flexibility that we will need.

5.30 pm

The Bill also demands accountability for action that the Government have and have not taken. If the most recent UK strategy has not been implemented in full, clause 13 requires that the annual report must describe the respect in which it has not been implemented and the reasons for this. Parliament will then hold the Government to account and determine whether they have acted appropriately. I therefore suggest that the amendment risks undermining Parliament's role in assessing the detail of how the Government take action.

Government amendment 21 seeks to make child care an explicit part of the child poverty strategy. This was raised by many hon. Members in Committee. There was a clear consensus that child care should be added to the Bill because of its great significance, not only in enabling parents to work but in improving educational outcomes for children.

Amendments 27, 28, 35 and 36 deal with consultation and are similar in effect. Amendment 36 would require the Secretary of State, in preparing the UK strategy required by clause 9, to consult children directly as well as organisations working with or representing them. Amendment 27 would have the same effect but in addition require the Secretary of State to consult families directly. Similarly, amendment 28 would require local authorities, when preparing their joint poverty strategies, to consult children and families directly, as well as organisations working with them.

Amendment 35 takes a slightly different approach. It would place an additional duty on the Secretary of State to consult the children's commissioners for the four nations. Very similar amendments were debated in Committee. As I said then, the Government's intention has always been that the child poverty strategy should be informed by the views of children and their families, particularly those with direct experience of poverty. Indeed, we are committed to ensuring that children's views underpin all our policies to improve outcomes for all children.

Amendments 27 and 28 include reference to families. Looking at this from a drafting perspective, it is not clear what that word means. Does it refer only to parents, or to others with parental responsibility? Would it include parents of grown-up children? The problem is that the word "families" can apply to such a wide variety of groups of people that in effect this would become an obligation to consult the general public at large. I am sure that that is not what the hon. Member for South-West Bedfordshire intends.

Andrew Selous: I understand what the hon. Lady says, but I remind her that in the Government's own Bills they often have to go back and tidy up some of the drafting, so I do not take that as a massive minus point on our part.

On the central point, does the hon. Lady agree that it is slightly strange to go into a household—let us call it that for a moment—to speak to the children without any reference to the people responsible for them, be they the guardian, both parents or one parent in the case of those living with a separated parent? If the intention is to speak to children, to which she says the Government are committed, it would be natural to speak to the families in which those children live as well.

Helen Goodman: Obviously one would not want to consult children without the permission of their parents. That would not be appropriate, but we do want to hear the views of children specifically. The JCHR made specific reference to article 12 of the UN convention on the rights of the child, and the attractive element of the amendments is the opportunity to give local authorities and the Secretary of State the chance to consult organisations and children.

Amendment 35 refers to the Children's Commissioners. Of course we recognise that they have particular expertise in this area, and they are exactly the sort of body that we had in mind in the reference in clause 9(4)(c) to

"organisations working with or representing children".

It is therefore not clear why the amendment suggests a specific reference to the Children's Commissioners, as it is unnecessary.

We are clear that the development of both national and local child poverty strategies should benefit from input by children, and I argue that the provisions in the Bill go a long way towards ensuring that their views are properly taken into account. We want the strategies developed under the Bill to be as effective as possible, and we recognise that one step towards achieving that is to ensure that they are informed by the views of those experiencing poverty. The challenge is more about how to put that into practice effectively than about the precise requirements set out in the Bill. I am concerned that amendment 35 would not actually help to ensure that the strategy more effectively reflected the views of children or their families.

I am sure that this is not what hon. Members intend, but it is possible that the amendments could become little more than a process requirement, imposing additional bureaucratic burdens that would not help us to understand the concerns of children and families experiencing poverty or make our strategy more effective. In other words, there is a balance to be struck. We do not want to place process burdens on the Secretary of State and local authorities, particularly at a time when we are all conscious of the need to be careful with public money. On the other hand, I appreciate the concerns expressed by hon. Members and organisations outside the House that the Bill does not spell out as clearly as it could our intention to seek the views of children. Although I ask hon. Members not to press the amendments, we are prepared to consider whether amendment 36 would improve the Bill. If my colleague Lord McKenzie feels that it would be helpful, we will introduce it in the other place.

[Helen Goodman]

Ms Keeble: I am pleased to be able to speak at this stage, although I had hoped to be able to speak to the next group of amendments.

My hon. Friend the Minister mentioned the processes in the Bill for consulting those experiencing poverty, and she said that the Government had brought forward their proposal to include child care in the Bill because of its particular role in tackling child poverty. In preparation for Report, I consulted in a community in my constituency where there is a high concentration of families with children living in poverty. I talked to people about their concerns, and a key one, which led to my tabling amendment 32, which is in the next group, was the overcrowding that they experience. I hoped that that would be mentioned in the Bill. I wish to make a couple of points about the consultation, and I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will respond to them.

When I went around the estate in Southfields, half the people I asked about their experience of poverty and the places in which they lived told me they were living in overcrowded conditions and that that was one of their prime difficulties. The feature of overcrowding that is the biggest problem to them—it is why I wanted overcrowding as well as child care, which Government amendment 21 proposes, in the Bill—is that people have to sleep in living rooms. That is a fact of material deprivation that I had hoped the Government would have taken on board and included among the indicators.

May I give an example to my hon. Friend the Minister? As she will know from Committee, right back in 1935, when there was a debate about poor families, children and housing in east London, a Labour MP said

"the right hon. Gentleman's standards as regards overcrowding are not" normal. He continued:

"He contemplates as a normal thing that living rooms should be used as bedrooms. I can never agree to that...in ordinary circumstances".

He went on to say that if we accept that people should be required to sleep in living rooms,

"we shall be heading for the creation of new slums."—[Official Report, 20 May 1935; Vol. 302, c. 42-44.]

Helen Goodman: My hon. Friend has persisted in making those points over the course of consideration of the Bill, and they are indeed extremely important. I can inform her that the Department for Work and Pensions intends to pilot a new question for inclusion in the family resources survey, asking families with children about the space they have available in their homes for leisure and family activities. I hope she regards that as significant progress on that front.

Ms Keeble: I am grateful for that, and perhaps my hon. Friend will spell that out more fully on Third Reading, so that we can be absolutely clear that families with children will be regarded as entitled to have a living space in which nobody has to sleep, so they can have space for recreation, family activities, doing homework, and all the other things the hon. Member for Beverley and Holderness (Mr. Stuart) will regard as important in supporting family life. I look forward to speaking further on the matter if we reach the next group of amendments.

Mr. Graham Stuart: I rise to speak to amendment 27, which deals with consulting families. On page 5, the Bill states:

"In preparing a UK strategy, the Secretary of State...must consult...local authorities...Scottish Ministers...such children, or organisations working with or representing children, as the Secretary of State thinks fit...and such other persons."

Is it not odd not to mention families or the context in which children live? I would not make this allegation against the Government, but typically it is totalitarian states that try to bypass the context of the family and the parents to speak directly to children. The measure is rather odd. The Minister has tried to say that if we include families, suddenly the Secretary of State would be obliged to consult the whole of the general public, but that is obviously nonsense. The amendment would simply provide that the "Secretary of State...must consult...such children", families

"and organisations working with...children, as the Secretary of State thinks fit".

We have heard from the Minister, and we will not necessarily hear from her again, unless I have misunderstood the process, but it is a pity she dismissed the proposal. If the Secretary of State does not talk to children in the context of the family, she will not be properly talking to the child. The best advocate of the child is very often the parent. It is not that we do not want to hear directly from children, but if we do not understand the position of the parent as the chief advocate of the child, we misunderstand the essence of the important relationship between the state and children in the context of their family.

Mr. Streeter: Does my hon. Friend also think it a little peculiar and—I hesitate to say this—perhaps typical of a rather bureaucratically minded Government that they are prepared to consult

"organisations working with or representing children"

but not parents themselves?

Mr. Stuart: It is a little peculiar. I am trying to follow my hon. Friend in being charitable, and I do not want to be harsh toward the Government, but I am disappointed.

I would have liked to have heard from the Minister the context in which the consultation will take place. The cheapest and easiest way to consult children who might live in poverty might be to go to a school that serves a poor area and speak to the children there—in other words, entirely removed from the home and family in which the child is being brought up.

5.45 pm

I seek reassurance from the Minister, who said that the Government would like to consult children and families, because the Bill does not say that. The only substantive reason given for opposing this suggestion was that it would lead to consulting the whole general public, which is clearly nonsense. Why cannot the Minister accept that talking to children in the context of the family, and talking to the family, is the right thing to do? She has her head bowed—I hope that it is in shame or embarrassment. It would have been useful to hear why she does not think that what we propose would be constructive and where she expects the consultation to take place. Will it be in schools or will it be in the context of the family home? How will it be delivered? I fear, as stated here, that effectively the family context will be excluded because of how the Bill has been phrased.

Dr. Evan Harris: With the leave of the House, I will respond to the points made about amendments 35 and 36. I am grateful for the support of the hon. Member for South-West Bedfordshire (Andrew Selous), and I note that my hon. Friend the Member for Northavon (Steve Webb) tabled similar amendments in Committee.

In response to the point about children's commissioners, the Minister did not give a good reason why they should not be included. They have been suggested specifically because their role is statutory and that is why they are different from the others. If we are to go to the trouble of creating through statute an organisation with expertise in being an advocate for children, it should be a statutory consultee. That is only logical, and I suspect that a similar amendment would attract widespread support in the other place for that reason.

The Minister was concerned that amendment 36 would create a burden of consultation—a process burden. If there is a process burden, and if consultation can rightly be described as a burden—I do not think that it can—it was created by signing the UN convention on the rights of the child. Article 12 is clear in requiring states to assure to the child who is capable of forming his or her own views the right to express those views freely in all matters affecting the child, the views of the child being given due weight in accordance with the child's age and maturity. The Minister made reference to article 12 herself.

Helen Goodman: Does not the hon. Gentleman think that there is a difference between involving a particular child in a decision that affects them insofar as they understand the issue, for which we have precedent in English law, and the consultation of whole groups of children? I am not suggesting that groups of children should not be consulted—that is a good idea. I simply do not think that the read-across from article 12 is as tight as he suggests, notwithstanding the general principle of children being enabled to participate where possible.

Dr. Harris: I see the point that the Minister makes. However, the explanatory notes on the duty

"to consult children, or organisations working with or representing children as the Secretary of State thinks fit"

refer to article 12. That implies that that consultation with groups is based on article 12, and that that is not restricted to the right of individual consultation on measures that the state imposes on a child. That may be a debate for another day.

I wish to record my thanks to the Minister for saying that she will look at this point. I do not want to be churlish, but it is a point about process. I understand that my hon. Friend the Member for Northavon raised it on 29 October at columns 256-7 in a very good speech and in terms. At that point, she rejected the argument. The Joint Committee then issued its view on 10 November. The point of Report is for the Government to return to the House weeks later with a clear view, and not to see matters leave this House to be dealt with by the unelected House. I do not mean that in an angry way; I just regret that we are not using Report as it should be used. However, I recognise her willingness to reconsider the point, which ought to be put on the record.

Finally, on new clause 4, I accept that there is some validity in the Minister's point about whether it would tie the Government down to a duty to implement something that might not be the best way of meeting the obligatory targets. The Joint Committee considered and rejected that argument, but we will reflect on her comments and the Government's response. However, I reject the argument that a legal duty to implement a strategy undermines Parliament's ability to hold the Government to account. The processes of the House undermine that ability, and I think that any legal reference that Parliament can use will aid it. I do not accept that argument, and nor, I think, will the Joint Committee. It is clearly a difficult new clause, however, so I beg to ask leave to withdraw the clause.

Clause, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 8

UK STRATEGIES

Amendment made: 21, in page 4, line 23, after 'education', insert ', childcare'. —(Helen Goodman.)

Clause 21

LOCAL CHILD POVERTY NEEDS ASSESSMENT

Mr. David Gauke (South-West Hertfordshire) (Con): I beg to move amendment 29, in page 13, line 12, after 'assessment', insert 'including—

(i) job creation,

(ii) reducing family breakdown,

(iii) families with disabilities,

(iv) black and minority ethnic children, and

(v) looked after children.'.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Sylvia Heal): With this it will be convenient to discuss the following amendments: 32, page 13, line 12, at end add

'which must include the number of households within the area that fail to meet the bedroom standard'.

Amendment 30, page 14, line 38, leave out from 'of' to 'section' in line 39.

Mr. Gauke: The amendments relate to the duties of local authorities. Under clause 21, which deals with local child poverty needs assessments, the responsible local authorities are required to set out how they will address child poverty. Amendment 29 takes us back partly to an earlier debate, and in the time available I have no intention of running back through the arguments. However, as my hon. Friend the Member for South-West Bedfordshire (Andrew Selous) eloquently stated, we believe that there is a lack of balance in the Bill, because it focuses on income targets, which we recognise are necessary, but does not contain enough about the causes of poverty and how we can address them.

[Mr. Gauke]

To some extent, amendment 29 is another attempt to address the causes of poverty. It would do so in the context of the local child poverty needs assessments. The Government can produce regulations setting out matters that must be considered in such an assessment, and amendment 29 sets out some areas that we think should be included in those regulations, two of which relate to the causes of poverty. In particular, the amendment refers to job creation, which could be a solution and also reduce family breakdown. However, we have had a lengthy debate on those matters, and I have no intention of running back through the arguments.

As I said, we have set out areas that we think should be satisfied by a local needs assessment. For example, it should deal with matters relating to black and minority ethnic children and families with disabilities. On several occasions in Committee we had an interesting debate about issues relating to families with disabilities and the treatment of disability living allowance for the purposes of evaluating a household's income. Furthermore, assessments should deal with matters relating to looked-after children, which we also debated at length in Committee.

Mr. Streeter: Does my hon. Friend agree that the process of having local authorities working with their partners, other statutory agencies and the voluntary sector to thrash out local child poverty needs assessments using the headings that he has helpfully set out in amendment 29 would be extremely valuable in getting under the skin of what was happening for children in those localities and prove a valuable tool for those authorities and their partners thereafter?

Mr. Gauke: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. Indeed, there is a recognition of some of those points in the Bill. We have debated such matters in the course of our proceedings on the Bill, but having those points in the Bill would be helpful and would give useful guidance to local authorities.

Given the time and the fact that the hon. Member for Northampton, North (Ms Keeble) has already touched on her amendment 32, I will not go into it. However, I would like briefly to say that amendment 30 concerns a matter that we debated in Committee, thanks to a probing amendment from my hon. Friend the Member for Henley (John Howell). Amendment 30 relates to the definition of child poverty for the purposes of part 2, which relates to the duties of local authorities. Two issues came up regarding the relative income target in its application to local authorities.

The first issue was about how we measure relative income in a local authority. To be fair, the Minister provided a helpful note about national indicator 116, which stated that it would measure the proportion of children living in families in receipt of out-of-work benefits or working families whose income is below 60 per cent. of median income. That is not exactly the definition in clause 2, so if the Minister has an opportunity, I would be grateful if she could say how significant the difference is between that definition and the definition of relative poverty in clause 2. However, that definition looks pretty close, so to that extent our concern has been addressed.

A second concern is this: what things can local authorities do on the relative income target in clause 2 that are not relevant to those other income targets that clearly belong in the definition of child poverty for the purposes of part 2? The point was made in evidence to us that local authorities do not really have the levers to do anything about the target of 60 per cent. of median income. I can fully understand why that target exists nationally, but if local authorities cannot, as a matter of practice, do anything that is specifically targeted at that income measurement, why have it in the definition of child poverty for the purposes of part 2?

The Government accept that it is right that there should be a different definition of child poverty for part 2 from that for part 1; but if that is so, should we not tailor the definition more, and why should the relative income target be included anyway? We had a debate on that in Committee, but with the greatest of respect to the Minister, I am not sure that we received a clear answer from her. I hope that we will have an opportunity to hear one today, either now or on Third Reading.

Subject to those points, I hope that we will have an opportunity to vote on amendment 29, although I do not intend to push the House to a Division on amendment 30. However, it would be helpful if the Minister could at some point elucidate the Government's position on those matters.

Ms Keeble: I want to talk briefly to my amendment 32, which says that when local authorities make assessments of need, they should look specifically at the housing conditions in which children live, given the close link between child welfare and housing, as set out in Every Child Matters. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will address that point in her one-minute winding-up speech.

Helen Goodman: Rather a lot of points have been made, and I will have difficulty in responding to all of them. On amendment 32, tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Ms Keeble), I thought that I had made it clear that we were changing the information that would come in through the survey. It would therefore not be sensible to set a target along the lines that she has just described, because there simply is not the information available to do that.

In amendment 29, hon. Members are seeking to prescribe in the Bill matters that we believe would be more appropriately dealt with in regulations—

6 pm

Debate interrupted (Programme Order, 20 July).

The Deputy Speaker put forthwith the Question already proposed from the Chair (Standing Order No. 83E). That the amendment be made.

The House divided: Ayes 133, Noes 315.

Division No. 22] [6 pm

AYES

Afriyie, Adam	Bacon, Mr. Richard
Ainsworth, Mr. Peter	Baldry, Tony
Amess, Mr. David	Baron, Mr. John
Ancram, rh Mr. Michael	Bellingham, Mr. Henry
Arbuthnot, rh Mr. James	Benyon, Mr. Richard
Atkinson, Mr. Peter	Beresford, Sir Paul

Blunt, Mr. Crispin
Bone, Mr. Peter
Bottomley, Peter
Brady, Mr. Graham
Brazier, Mr. Julian
Brokenshire, James
Burns, Mr. Simon
Burrowes, Mr. David
Burt, Alistair
Butterfill, Sir John
Campbell, Mr. Gregory
Clark, Greg
Clarke, rh Mr. Kenneth
Clifton-Brown, Mr. Geoffrey
Cox, Mr. Geoffrey
Curry, rh Mr. David
Davies, David T.C. (Monmouth)
Davies, Philip
Davis, rh David
Dodds, Mr. Nigel
Donaldson, rh Mr. Jeffrey M.
Duddridge, James
Duncan, Alan
Dunne, Mr. Philip
Ellwood, Mr. Tobias
Evans, Mr. Nigel
Evennett, Mr. David
Fallon, Mr. Michael
Field, Mr. Mark
Fox, Dr. Liam
Francois, Mr. Mark
Fraser, Christopher
Garnier, Mr. Edward
Gauke, Mr. David
Gibb, Mr. Nick
Goodman, Mr. Paul
Gove, Michael
Gray, Mr. James
Green, Damian
Greening, Justine
Hague, rh Mr. William
Hammond, Stephen
Hands, Mr. Greg
Harper, Mr. Mark
Heald, Mr. Oliver
Heathcoat-Amory, rh Mr. David
Hendry, Charles
Herbert, Nick
Hogg, rh Mr. Douglas
Hollobone, Mr. Philip
Holloway, Mr. Adam
Horam, Mr. John
Howell, John
Jack, rh Mr. Michael
Jackson, Mr. Stewart
Jenkin, Mr. Bernard
Jones, Mr. David
Knight, rh Mr. Greg
Laing, Mrs. Eleanor
Lait, Mrs. Jacqui
Lancaster, Mr. Mark
Leigh, Mr. Edward
Letwin, rh Mr. Oliver
Lewis, Dr. Julian
Liddell-Grainger, Mr. Ian
Lidington, Mr. David
Lilley, rh Mr. Peter
Loughton, Tim
Luff, Peter
Main, Anne
Malins, Mr. Humfrey
Mates, rh Mr. Michael
May, rh Mrs. Theresa
McCrea, Dr. William
McLoughlin, rh Mr. Patrick
Mundell, David
Newmark, Mr. Brooks
O'Brien, Mr. Stephen
Ottaway, Richard
Paterson, Mr. Owen
Penning, Mike
Penrose, John
Randall, Mr. John
Redwood, rh Mr. John
Rifkind, rh Sir Malcolm
Robertson, Hugh
Robinson, Mrs. Iris
Robinson, rh Mr. Peter
Rosindell, Andrew
Ruffley, Mr. David
Scott, Mr. Lee
Selous, Andrew
Shapps, Grant
Shepherd, Mr. Richard
Smith, Chloe
Spicer, Sir Michael
Spink, Bob
Spring, Mr. Richard
Stanley, rh Sir John
Streeter, Mr. Gary
Stuart, Mr. Graham
Swayne, Mr. Desmond
Swire, Mr. Hugo
Syms, Mr. Robert
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Taylor, Dr. Richard
Turner, Mr. Andrew
Tyrie, Mr. Andrew
Vaizey, Mr. Edward
Vara, Mr. Shailesh
Viggers, Sir Peter
Wallace, Mr. Ben
Waterson, Mr. Nigel
Watkinson, Angela
Whittingdale, Mr. John
Widdecombe, rh Miss Ann
Wilson, Mr. Rob
Wilson, Sammy
Winterton, Ann
Winterton, Sir Nicholas
Wright, Jeremy

Tellers for the Ayes:
Bill Wiggin and
Mr. Stephen Crabb

NOES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Ainger, Nick
Alexander, Danny
Alexander, rh Mr. Douglas
Allen, Mr. Graham
Anderson, Mr. David
Anderson, Janet
Atkins, Charlotte
Austin, Mr. Ian
Austin, John
Bailey, Mr. Adrian
Bain, Mr. William
Banks, Gordon
Barrett, John
Barron, rh Mr. Kevin
Battle, rh John
Bayley, Hugh
Beckett, rh Margaret
Begg, Miss Anne
Beith, rh Sir Alan
Bell, Sir Stuart
Benn, rh Hilary
Benton, Mr. Joe
Berry, Roger
Betts, Mr. Clive
Blackman, Liz
Blears, rh Hazel
Blizzard, Mr. Bob
Blunkett, rh Mr. David
Borrow, Mr. David S.
Brake, Tom
Brennan, Kevin
Brooke, Annette
Brown, rh Mr. Nicholas
Brown, Mr. Russell
Browne, rh Des
Browne, Mr. Jeremy
Bruce, rh Malcolm
Bryant, Chris
Buck, Ms Karen
Burden, Richard
Burgon, Colin
Burstow, Mr. Paul
Butler, Ms Dawn
Byers, rh Mr. Stephen
Cable, Dr. Vincent
Caborn, rh Mr. Richard
Cairns, David
Campbell, Mr. Alan
Campbell, rh Sir Menzies
Campbell, Mr. Ronnie
Carmichael, Mr. Alistair
Cawsey, Mr. Ian
Challen, Colin
Chapman, Ben
Chaytor, Mr. David
Clapham, Mr. Michael
Clark, Ms Katy
Clarke, rh Mr. Charles
Clarke, rh Mr. Tom
Clegg, rh Mr. Nick
Clelland, Mr. David
Coffey, Ann
Cohen, Harry
Connarty, Michael
Cooper, rh Yvette
Corbyn, Jeremy
Cousins, Jim
Crausby, Mr. David
Creagh, Mary
Cruddas, Jon
Cummings, John
Cunningham, Mr. Jim
Cunningham, Tony
Davey, Mr. Edward
David, Mr. Wayne
Davidson, Mr. Ian
Davies, Mr. Dai
Davies, Mr. Quentin
Dean, Mrs. Janet
Denham, rh Mr. John
Dhanda, Mr. Parmjit
Dismore, Mr. Andrew
Dobbin, Jim
Dobson, rh Frank
Donohoe, Mr. Brian H.
Doran, Mr. Frank
Drew, Mr. David
Eagle, Angela
Eagle, Maria
Efford, Clive
Elman, Mrs. Louise
Engel, Natascha
Ennis, Jeff
Farrelly, Paul
Farron, Tim
Featherstone, Lynne
Fitzpatrick, Jim
Flint, rh Caroline
Follett, Barbara
Foster, Mr. Don
Foster, Michael Jabez (Hastings and Rye)
Francis, Dr. Hywel
Gapes, Mike
Gardiner, Barry
Gerrge, Andrew
George, rh Mr. Bruce
Gerrard, Mr. Neil
Gidley, Sandra
Gilroy, Linda
Goggins, rh Paul
Goldsworthy, Julia
Goodman, Helen
Griffith, Nia
Grogan, Mr. John
Gwynne, Andrew
Hain, rh Mr. Peter
Hall, Patrick
Hamilton, Mr. David
Hamilton, Mr. Fabian
Hancock, Mr. Mike
Hanson, rh Mr. David
Harman, rh Ms Harriet
Harris, Dr. Evan
Harris, Mr. Tom
Harvey, Nick
Havard, Mr. Dai
Healey, rh John
Heath, Mr. David
Hemming, John
Hendrick, Mr. Mark
Hepburn, Mr. Stephen
Hesford, Stephen
Hewitt, rh Ms Patricia
Heyes, David
Hill, rh Keith
Hillier, Meg
Hodge, rh Margaret
Hodgson, Mrs. Sharon
Holmes, Paul
Hoon, rh Mr. Geoffrey
Hopkins, Kelvin
Howarth, rh Mr. George
Howells, rh Dr. Kim
Hoyle, Mr. Lindsay
Hughes, Simon
Humble, Mrs. Joan
Hunter, Mark
Hutton, rh Mr. John
Iddon, Dr. Brian
Illsley, Mr. Eric
Ingram, rh Mr. Adam
Irranca-Davies, Huw

Jackson, Glenda
James, Mrs. Siân C.
Jenkins, Mr. Brian
Johnson, Ms Diana R.
Jones, Helen
Jones, Mr. Kevan
Jones, Mr. Martyn
Joyce, Mr. Eric
Kaufman, rh Sir Gerald
Keeble, Ms Sally
Keeley, Barbara
Keetch, Mr. Paul
Kelly, rh Ruth
Kennedy, rh Mr. Charles
Khan, rh Mr. Sadiq
Kidney, Mr. David
Kilfoyle, Mr. Peter
Knight, rh Jim
Kumar, Dr. Ashok
Ladyman, Dr. Stephen
Lamb, Norman
Laws, Mr. David
Lazarowicz, Mark
Leech, Mr. John
Levitt, Tom
Lewis, Mr. Ivan
Linton, Martin
Lloyd, Tony
Llwyd, Mr. Elfyn
Love, Mr. Andrew
Lucas, Ian
Mackinlay, Andrew
Mactaggart, Fiona
Malik, Mr. Shahid
Malliaber, Judy
Marris, Rob
Marsden, Mr. Gordon
Martlew, Mr. Eric
McAvoy, rh Mr. Thomas
McCabe, Steve
McCarthy, Kerry
McCarthy-Fry, Sarah
McDonagh, Siobhain
McDonnell, John
McFadden, rh Mr. Pat
McFall, rh John
McGuire, rh Mrs. Anne
McIsaac, Shona
McKechin, Ann
McNulty, rh Mr. Tony
Meale, Mr. Alan
Merron, Gillian
Michael, rh Alun
Miliband, rh Edward
Miller, Andrew
Mitchell, Mr. Austin
Moffat, Anne
Moffett, Laura
Mole, Chris
Moon, Mrs. Madeleine
Moore, Mr. Michael
Morden, Jessica
Morgan, Julie
Morley, rh Mr. Elliot
Mountford, Kali
Mudie, Mr. George
Mulholland, Greg
Mullin, Mr. Chris
Murphy, Mr. Denis
Murphy, rh Mr. Paul
Naysmith, Dr. Doug
Norris, Dan
O'Brien, rh Mr. Mike
O'Hara, Mr. Edward
Olner, Mr. Bill
Öpik, Lembit
Osborne, Sandra
Owen, Albert
Palmer, Dr. Nick
Pearson, Ian
Plaskitt, Mr. James
Pope, Mr. Greg
Pound, Stephen
Prentice, Bridget
Prentice, Mr. Gordon
Prescott, rh Mr. John
Price, Adam
Prosser, Gwyn
Pugh, Dr. John
Purchase, Mr. Ken
Purnell, rh James
Reed, Mr. Andy
Reed, Mr. Jamie
Reid, Mr. Alan
Reid, rh John
Rennie, Willie
Riordan, Mrs. Linda
Rogerson, Dan
Rowen, Paul
Roy, Mr. Frank
Ruane, Chris
Ruddock, Joan
Russell, Bob
Russell, Christine
Salter, Martin
Sanders, Mr. Adrian
Sarwar, Mr. Mohammad
Seabeck, Alison
Sharma, Mr. Virendra
Sheerman, Mr. Barry
Simon, Mr. Siôn
Skinner, Mr. Dennis
Slaughter, Mr. Andy
Smith, rh Mr. Andrew
Smith, Ms Angela C. (Sheffield, Hillsborough)
Smith, rh Angela E. (Basildon)
Smith, Geraldine
Smith, rh Jacqui
Snelgrove, Anne
Soulsby, Sir Peter
Southworth, Helen
Spellar, rh Mr. John
Starkey, Dr. Phyllis
Stewart, Ian
Stoate, Dr. Howard
Strang, rh Dr. Gavin
Stringer, Graham
Stuart, Ms Gisela
Stunell, Andrew
Sutcliffe, Mr. Gerry
Tami, Mark
Taylor, Ms Dari
Taylor, David
Teather, Sarah
Thornberry, Emily
Thurso, John
Timms, rh Mr. Stephen
Todd, Mr. Mark
Touhig, rh Mr. Don
Trickett, Jon
Trussell, Mr. Paul
Vis, Dr. Rudi
Waltho, Lynda
Ward, Claire
Wareing, Mr. Robert N.
Watson, Mr. Tom
Watts, Mr. Dave
Webb, Steve
Wicks, rh Malcolm
Williams, rh Mr. Alan
Williams, Stephen
Wills, Mr. Phil
Willott, Jenny
Wills, rh Mr. Michael
Wilson, Phil
Winnick, Mr. David
Wood, Mike
Wright, David
Wright, Mr. Iain
Wright, Dr. Tony
Wyatt, Derek
Younger-Ross, Richard

Tellers for the Noes:
Lyn Brown and
Mr. John Heppell

Question accordingly negatived.

The Deputy Speaker then put forthwith the Question necessary for the disposal of business to be concluded at that time (Standing Order No. 83E).

Schedule 1

THE CHILD POVERTY COMMISSION

Amendment made: 22, page 18, line 20, at end insert—

'Research

9A (1) The Commission may at any time request the Secretary of State to carry out, or commission others to carry out, such research on behalf of the Commission for the purpose of the carrying out of the Commission's functions as the Commission may specify in the request.

(2) If the Secretary of State decides not to comply with the request, the Secretary of State must notify the Commission of the reasons for the decision.'.—(Helen Goodman.)

Third Reading

6.14 pm

Helen Goodman: I beg to move, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

Tackling child poverty and deprivation is one of the most crucial roles for any Government. Our goal is—[Interruption.]

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Will hon. Members who are leaving the Chamber please do so as quickly and quietly as possible so that the Third Reading debate can take place?

Helen Goodman: Our goal is a society where no child's life is scarred by poverty, and where every child is given the best possible start in life and has the capabilities and opportunities to flourish. Children who grow up in poverty lack many of the experiences and opportunities that others take for granted, and can be exposed to severe hardship and social exclusion. Their childhood suffers as a result, which is unacceptable. In the current difficult economic times, our focus on tackling child poverty is even more important. Too often in the past, recessions and economic downturns have been allowed to affect the lives of children long after the country's economy has returned to growth.

Today, we set out the five principles that will guide our strategy on child poverty: first, that work is the most sustainable route out of poverty; secondly, that families and family life should be supported; thirdly, that early intervention is necessary to break cycles of deprivation; fourthly, that excellence in public service delivery is key; and fifthly, that cost-effectiveness and affordability are vital.

Worklessness in families and severe deprivation have not been tackled with the energy and drive needed to deal with entrenched disadvantage. In this context, it is right that we renew and strengthen our commitment to deliver on the 2020 goal through the Child Poverty Bill. The Bill will give us renewed impetus to deliver on our goals and to ensure that the right strategies and actions flow from it.

Mr. Graham Stuart: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Helen Goodman: I would like to make a little more progress.

The Bill will sustain and increase the momentum towards eradicating child poverty, create a clear definition of success, put in place a framework for accountability, and improve partnership-working and collaboration to tackle child poverty at the local level. I thank hon. Members on both sides of the House for their contributions to the debates as the Bill made progress. It has been encouraging that it has received a warm welcome from colleagues.

I want to respond briefly to some of the points that were raised and on which hon. Members asked for the Government's view. The hon. Member for South-West Hertfordshire (Mr. Gauke) asked about the position of local authorities in respect of relative income. The objective is not to have separate relative income targets for each local authority area. There was some confusion about that in Committee, and I hope we have cleared it up. The hon. Gentleman also suggested that local authorities do not have any impact on relative income standards in their areas. We believe that they do have the ability to influence families' incomes, and, indeed, play a pivotal role in tackling the causes of relative low income. Also, local authorities will soon have the means to assess local progress in tackling low income, and it is entirely reasonable to expect that to be taken into account in the preparation of their needs assessments.

Local authorities have a number of levers at their disposal to help increase family income. In the short term, they can administer financial help for families on low incomes with measures such as housing and council tax benefit, encouraging families to take up financial support, and joining up national and local partners to provide personalised skills and employment support. Local authorities can also reduce low income in the future by driving economic regeneration and neighbourhood renewal, and by providing high-quality education and early years services.

Aside from its positive reception, the Bill has been a credit to the House. Hon. Members have spoken passionately and been extremely well informed on this crucial topic. The focus that the Government have placed on child poverty has ensured that both the moral and economic case for tackling it is indisputable. They have much to be proud of in their record on child poverty. Our efforts and successes in tackling poverty and deprivation across the country have shown that with the political will those problems can be addressed. However, we need to do more to tackle the root causes and consequences of poverty, so that all children have a good start in life, enjoying a fulfilling childhood and having the capabilities and opportunities to flourish. Our vision is of a fairer society: one in which no child is left behind and every child has the opportunity to flourish.

I have very much enjoyed the debate on this important Bill, not only today, but throughout its Committee stage. Delivering this legislation will take us closer to our goal of eradicating child poverty in this generation. This Bill will help to focus efforts across government, local authorities and other partners to improve the lives of children and young people, and I commend it to the House.

6.20 pm

Andrew Selous: I have no hesitation in joining the Minister in saying that eradicating child poverty is an ambitious but vital objective for our country. It is both an economic imperative, because no advanced economy can afford to waste the potential of so many of its citizens, and, as she has said, a moral imperative, as no decent society should allow so many children to remain in poverty, as has been the case in the United Kingdom in recent years. I shall repeat what my right hon. Friend the Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) said on Second Reading, because we are both proud to serve under a leader who has said:

"I want me—and the government I aspire to lead—to be judged on how we tackle poverty in office. Because poverty is not acceptable in our country today."

I am also pleased that it was a Conservative Mayor of London who decided to pay a living wage to Greater London authority staff. That had not happened before.

The long title of the Bill refers to "eradication", but both the Minister and the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions have made frequent reference during our debates to the fact that the Government's real aspiration is to achieve a child poverty level that is among the best in Europe. It would have been slightly more honest to have said that in the Bill, because the 10 per cent. that is in the Bill represents the best level, and 10 per cent. is not eradication. Some 23 per cent. of children in the United Kingdom live in poverty, which is about twice the level found in the Netherlands, Sweden and Denmark—they have child poverty rates of 14, 12 and 10 per cent. respectively. It is also instructive to note that 23 per cent. of UK children were living in relative poverty in 1987, 24 per cent. were doing so in 1996 and 23 per cent. were doing so in 2001. The level of child poverty has remained stubbornly high for more than 30 years.

The Joseph Rowntree Foundation has drawn attention to the need for us to change our strategy if we are to make better progress, saying that

"the strategy against poverty and social exclusion pursued since the late 1990s is now largely exhausted."

The former Secretary of State for Health, the right hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn), has said that "poverty has become more entrenched".

That is why we need fresh thinking on this subject, and I was pleased that just now the Minister outlined five themes. A number of those relate to the causes of poverty, to which Conservative Members have tried on every occasion to include reference in the Bill.

The Bill is very much a blank canvas. It sets out the targets to be achieved in 2020, but I was disappointed just now that Labour Members voted against including the 2010 target, even though I believe that some of the Minister's colleagues joined us in the Division Lobby. As I said, the Government have had 10 years to have a run at the target of halving child poverty, and I think that a formal report to Parliament on that would have been useful and would have provided the Government with an early opportunity to come to the House to explain how the child poverty strategy will change.

[Andrew Selous]

Conservative Members have set out on a number of occasions the causes of poverty that we want examined. Our non-exhaustive list includes educational failure, hence our school reforms and our commitment to pay a pupil premium to those schools in the most disadvantaged areas, and the level of skills, which is vital. Level 3 skills, which were mentioned at Prime Minister's questions, are particularly important and have decreased over the past decade.

Both benefit dependency and intergenerational worklessness are huge problems that cause poverty up and down our country, hence the Opposition have produced some of the most detailed welfare reform proposals that any party has introduced in opposition or in government. Our "Get Britain Working" programme cuts right to the heart of what is needed to deal with child poverty, so that we can help people to get back into the work force and break these intergenerational cycles of worklessness.

Work on dealing with benefit dependency is extremely important, too, and I commend the "Dynamic Benefits" report produced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith) in that regard. The issue of debt is extremely serious. We touched on that in Committee. It aggravates poverty for some families in a particularly nasty and unattractive way, trapping them in deep poverty, often for long periods. Some excellent work is being done in the voluntary sector by Christians Against Poverty centres and others up and down the country.

I was pleased to hear the Minister refer to the need to strengthen families, and I was particularly pleased to have support from the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) in that regard, too.

We touched on the issue of addiction. I say again that I think that that needs to be part of the Government's anti-poverty strategy. I recognise that some people might get into illegal substance abuse and alcohol abuse because of poverty, but the relationship also works the other way around. Families and lives that were proceeding along absolutely fine are destroyed because of alcoholism or illegal drug use.

We have also learned from a recent report from the Joseph Rowntree Foundation that the Government's child poverty strategy started to run into trouble as early as 2004-05. That was a key turning point well before the recession when poverty, unemployment and property repossessions all started to rise. Indeed, only a day or so ago there was an further excellent report by the Young Foundation pointing out some of these difficulties and to the important psycho-social problems faced by many families up and down the country. In particular, it pointed out the vital role of the voluntary sector, working alongside the Government to make real progress in dealing with these deep-seated issues.

In conclusion, I want to thank all those who were on the Committee, in particular my hon. Friend the Member for South-West Hertfordshire (Mr. Gauke). He was an excellent shadow Minister to work alongside. I want to pay particular tribute, too, to my hon. Friends the Members for Henley (John Howell) and for Beverley and Holderness (Mr. Stuart). They were a formidable duo behind us both in Committee and this afternoon. I am also grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for South-West Devon (Mr. Streeter), who spoke eloquently on Second Reading and made a number of excellent interventions today.

The Bill is not perfect. We will seek in the other place to push some of the issues that we have raised. However, we join the Minister in agreeing with her wish to see child poverty come tumbling down in this country. It is still far too high and we believe that we can make much better progress.

6.28 pm

Steve Webb: It was interesting that when the Minister began her speech she said that she thought that it was wrong that any child should suffer poverty and deprivation. She was, of course, right. The hon. Member for South-West Bedfordshire (Andrew Selous) said that the Bill talked about eradication, and it is regrettable in a sense—one might call it the poverty of our ambition—that we would regard success as 1 million children still living in poverty in 10 years' time. It might be that in modern industrialised societies that is, in the Government's view, the best that can be achieved. Clearly, it would be an awful lot better than the point from which we are starting. To that extent, we welcome the Bill. It is sad that the Government have felt it necessary to oversell it: the Prime Minister routinely at Prime Minister's questions refers to the Government's goal in legislation as being eradication, but he never qualifies that with the odd million who will still be left. That is really rather unhelpful.

It is true that the Bill raises the political price of failing to tackle child poverty, but no Government can bind their successor. The hon. Member for Beverley and Holderness (Mr. Stuart) asked what would happen if we were at war in 2018. If that happened, no doubt we would repeal or amend the Act because we would have to spend money because we were at war. We realise that there are always get-outs to such things, but the Bill will make it more difficult, in a relatively normal period, for a Government not to prioritise tackling child poverty.

Mr. Graham Stuart: Does the hon. Gentleman have any misgivings about the Bill? Obviously, no one wants child poverty to be maintained, but if we do not make an assessment of a Government's overall social priorities, how can we come up with statutory targets for one particular area? Surely that creates a risk, outside of the calamity of major war, that we will prioritise child poverty when it would be better to prioritise something else because of the situation at that time. Is not the Bill more declaratory than proper in its structure?

Steve Webb: In a sense, the hon. Gentleman is clearly right—the Bill prioritises the tackling of child poverty, and he is perfectly entitled to take the view either that it should not be a priority or that we should not presume that it should be a priority. However, I refer him to the situation in the 1980s, when tackling child poverty was neither a priority nor a statutory priority.

Rather shockingly, the hon. Member for South-West Bedfordshire selectively started his history from 1987. He has done that before, but the first time he did so, I thought that it was done innocently; this time, I assume that it was done deliberately. It is worth remembering that the Conservatives started government with 1.7 million children in poverty and that that number rose to 2.8 million under them, so, at the point at which he started his figures, the Tories had already put 1 million children into poverty. He then glossed over the fact that another 500,000 children moved into poverty before the Tories left office. They therefore doubled child poverty. I do not doubt the personal sincerity of the hon. Gentleman one jot, but the idea that the Conservative party is the answer to child poverty is amazing.

Andrew Selous: The hon. Gentleman and I had a similar exchange on Second Reading, so we are going over slightly old ground. I have the HBAI figures in front of me—I am sure that he, too, has them—and I see from table 4.1 on page 72 that the highest point was in 1995, at 29 per cent. However, my point is that these problems have been around for a considerable period. The rate in 1987 was the same as it is today. We have not made the progress that one would have hoped, despite the Government having made child poverty a political priority, because we are only back at the level that we were at in 1987, hence the need for fresh thinking.

Steve Webb: The House might have thought that the hon. Gentleman was making a slightly different point—that it has all been pretty flat for 20 years, and that this is all terribly difficult. In fact, he picked a point halfway up a hill—a hill for which the Conservative party was responsible—because the figures continued to rise after his starting point. The achievements of the Labour Government might not have gone far enough, but they peaked the figures at the top of the hill and started us back down it again, and we are now halfway back down the hill that he started halfway up. The situation has not been static; a long-term trend of grotesque inequality, which his party presided over with apparent equanimity, has been reversed.

Andrew Selous: I hate to take up too much of Third Reading on economic history, but will the hon. Gentleman cast his mind back to the economy that the Conservative party inherited in 1979? It was a shambles and the priority had to be economic growth and regeneration. We were the sick man of Europe and we inherited a shambles. It is not possible for every Government to make progress on both economic and social targets if they inherit an economy that is in total shambles. It is worth putting that on the record.

Steve Webb: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for that. Clearly, 18 years is not long enough to avoid doubling child poverty. I assume, therefore, that he is saying that if the Conservatives came to office now, in what they say is a very difficult economic situation, and if child poverty were to double over the next 18 years, that would just be the way things are.

Judy Mallaber (Amber Valley) (Lab): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that it seems eccentric to think that a Conservative policy could assist in dealing with child poverty, given that it might mean that a man who is on his third wife would still get extra benefits from their marriage allowance, while his first wife, who might still be looking after their children as a lone parent, would be being discriminated against and have an allowance taken away?

Steve Webb: The hon. Lady raises a point about the perversity of the proposal to reward marriage through the tax system. The Conservatives started the abolition of the married couples tax allowance, but she may recall that Labour finished it off. It is funny how things come around again.

However, Madam Deputy Speaker, I am sure that you would not want me to stray from the Bill, which I welcome. It does not do a huge amount, but it does raise the political cost of not taking child poverty seriously, and that has to be a good thing. It will also engage local government, and we valued the contributions that the hon. Member for Henley (John Howell) made in Committee with his proactive thinking about child poverty at local level. That may well turn out to be one of the Bill's more concrete implications, as the national statistics will not be available locally anyway in quite that form.

As many hon. Members have said, we had a good Committee stage, and I was grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, West (John Barrett) for his support. It was also good that two Government amendments—on child care, and the research function of the child poverty commission—were tabled on Report in response to the points that we raised. It is a welcome—and for me a relatively novel experience—to find that the arguments that we made in Committee actually changed something. To that extent, it has been a productive process but I am sure, as the hon. Member for South-West Bedfordshire said, that our noble Friends in another place will still have some items left on their agenda. However, I certainly encourage my hon. Friends to support the Third Reading of the Bill tonight.

6.36 pm

John Howell: I do not know whether it is usual to have so many Back Benchers wanting to take part in a Third Reading debate, but it is perfectly appropriate for this Bill. In Committee, those on both Front Benches commented on the way that Back Benchers had contributed, and that included the amendments that we tabled. For myself, I have very much enjoyed participating in the proceedings on this Bill, as it is an extremely important subject that is very close to my heart. Child poverty is something that we really need to make progress on.

Having said that, I remain disappointed with many aspects of the Bill, given that this is such an important subject. I remain disappointed with the way that it is still ill thought through in terms of the targets that it sets and the way that it is tackling—or not tackling—the causes of poverty. We have heard a lot about both matters again this afternoon on Report.

I also think that the Bill's structure remains ill thought through, and I still find it difficult to reconcile what it is trying to achieve in part 1 with what it is trying to achieve in part 2. Another matter that was raised in Committee but not on Report is the possibility, as many of the charity representatives who came to the Committee as witnesses stated clearly, that the Government will be taken to judicial review over the non-achievement of targets. That is still the case, as is the potential, given that these are income targets, that judges rather than the Chancellor of the Exchequer will make economic policy—although, after today's pre-Budget report, perhaps judges could not do a worse job.

Mr. Graham Stuart: My hon. Friend is right to point to the absurd idea that judges might intervene in the complex area of child poverty—perhaps they will demand that billions be given in additional tax credits—but does he agree that there is also the equally absurd possibility of a conflict between statutory obligations? No Government before this one had ever put targets in statute, but now there will be statutes pointing in different directions. For example, whereas the Fiscal Responsibility Bill suggests that there must be cuts, other legislation such as the Climate Act 2008 and this Bill suggest that more should be spent.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. We are discussing the Third Reading of the Child Poverty Bill and not the other legislation that the hon. Gentleman has referred to.

John Howell: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. It is always good to take an intervention from the other half of the duo, who will no doubt make a contribution of his own in a moment. However, my hon. Friend is quite right to point out that that is also one of the legal consequences of the Bill, and I too think that it is an insult to Parliament as well.

I am also disappointed with the way that the Government continue to treat local government. It is clear from the Bill that they do not take local authorities seriously as entities in themselves, with their own agenda and ability to deliver, but regard them as the delivery arm of Whitehall.

Today is not the end of the matter with this Bill, as there is a huge pile of regulation and, even more worryingly, guidance to be issued to local authorities. All I shall ask of the Minister today is that she please take note of the evidence sessions and the comments made by witnesses. What is required from the Government when it comes to regulation and guidance is a light touch, if any touch at all. Many local authorities are already doing a good job in respect of child poverty, as was illustrated by the evidence to the Committee from Kent and Liverpool in particular. So please let us see in the guidance a recognition of the best practice that already exists.

I asked one of the witnesses what difference the Bill would make and whether it would make a big impact, because one of them had said that something pretty big needed to happen in the field of child poverty. I asked:

"Is that something going to happen as a result of the delivery mechanisms set out in the Bill?"

Neil O'Brien from Policy Exchange answered that negatively in terms of the delivery mechanisms and the aims in the Bill. It is interesting to read what he said next:

"you are not going to be voting in this place on the strategy and all of those things"— the big picture things—

"you are voting on just a target that is very much focused on central Government and everything they are doing. So, in answer to your previous question, there is a complete mismatch." [Official Report, Child Poverty Public Bill Committee, 22 October 2009; c. 110, Q21.]

That is a great shame.

The Bill could have shown greater ambition and taken us a lot further down the road towards eradicating child poverty. Instead, we have had the perversion of the English language, whereby "eradication" no longer means eradication in the sense that the rest of us would use the word. I hope that, with a change of Government, we will get a strategy for child poverty that is much more focused on delivering real change for children and particularly the families in which they live.

6.41 pm

Mr. Graham Stuart: It is a pleasure to take part in the debate on Third Reading. Like my hon. Friend the Member for Henley (John Howell), I have enjoyed being involved in the proceedings on the Bill. The Committee that considered the Bill had the involvement of hon. Members from across the House. That is not always true. Government Back Benchers in particular sometimes seem to spend their entire time writing correspondence. That was not the case in this Committee, and every hon. Member took a deep interest in the issue and brought their own skills to it. Labour Members brought to the Committee casework and an understanding of housing needs in their constituencies. The Front Benchers of all three parties also played a full part in the Committee, which was productive, so it was a pleasure and a privilege to be part of it.

The hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb) mentioned in his address that he hoped the Bill would make it harder and put up the political price for any Government in future to fail to tackle child poverty. He then launched a rather partisan assault.

Mr. Stewart Jackson (Peterborough) (Con): It was puerile.

Mr. Stuart: Puerile, was it? The hon. Member for Northavon then launched an assault on the Conservative Government, who did indeed inherit a basket-case economy in 1979.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind the hon. Gentleman that we are debating the Bill on Third Reading, and should therefore be debating the Bill's contents.

Mr. Stuart: I am grateful to you, Madam Deputy Speaker. I was trying to answer the points made from his Front Bench by the hon. Member for Northavon. I do not know whether his status is different from mine, but the likelihood of meeting the targets in the Bill is based on an assessment of prior performance. In 1997, when the last Conservative Government came in, we were in a similar position. Okay, the fiscal deficit at its peak in 1976, when the International Monetary Fund came in, was half what it is today, so we are in a worse position from which to make change. Under that Conservative Government, who restarted the British economy, child poverty increased in a way that is regrettable. My hon. Friend the Member for South-West Bedfordshire (Andrew Selous) is nodding his head.

Despite the wreckage that is being left of our economy—again, by a Labour Government—if a Conservative Government are elected this coming May, we aim to ensure that we do not just revive the economy while leaving behind children in poverty. That is precisely why my hon. Friends are determined to take the child poverty issue seriously. We accept the fact that the record on child poverty was not great under the last Conservative Government. We aim to do better, but none of us progresses policy development in that area if we just try to make cheap partisan remarks or to suggest that anyone at any time—Ministers in the 1980s any more than today—were indifferent to the welfare of children. They were trying to focus on turning the country around, from a sick of man of Europe and an economic basket case to a dynamo that could move forward. Of course, this Government inherited that position in 1997.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Could I remind the hon. Member that we are not repeating a Second Reading debate? I have given him some latitude, and I would now ask him to concentrate his remarks on the Third Reading of this particular Bill.

Mr. Stuart: I am grateful, Madam Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Peter Bone (Wellingborough) (Con): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Stuart: I am grateful also to my hon. Friend, who intervenes conveniently.

Mr. Bone: My hon. Friend is making his point powerfully, as usual, but I have been sitting here listening to the debate and I must say that one way to reduce child poverty is surely to encourage marriage and for children to be born into families where the parents are married, because they stay together longer. It seems as though the two other main parties in the House are opposed to the idea of encouraging marriage.

Mr. Stuart: My hon. Friend makes an interesting point. He was not here during the earlier debate, when I reminded the House of what the Under-Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, the hon. Member for Bishop Auckland (Helen Goodman), who is on the Front Bench today, told the Public Bill Committee. She said:

"The Government are not wholly convinced that family breakdown is a cause of poverty".—[Official Report, Child Poverty Public Bill Committee, 20 October 2009; c. 15, Q44.]

That is an extraordinary thing for a Minister in this Labour Government to say. They are turning themselves away from all the evidence. My hon. Friend the Member for South-West Bedfordshire intervened on me earlier to read out the latest set of statistics, provided by the Minister's own Department, which show that a child brought up in a single-parent family is twice as likely as a child in a two-parent family to be in poverty. So my hon. Friend the Member for Wellingborough (Mr. Bone) is absolutely right.

We have a Government who, for their own narrow ideological or political dividing-lines reasons, insist on turning their face against a fundamental aspect of tackling poverty, which is to restore families and help couples—not necessarily married—to stay together to support their children. We know that if we can help to maintain that situation, general outcomes are much better. There is less likelihood of children being in poverty, and there is less likelihood of other unpleasant after-effects in later life, whether they involve mental health, educational outcomes or the likelihood of unemployment.

The essence of what comes out of the Bill will be the strategies that local authorities and the Secretary of State come up with, but it is most important that we tackle the causes of poverty. The Minister normally tries to be honest, and she talked about this piece of legislation—this Bill—ensuring that Governments have to be held to account and take action on child poverty. But, disappointingly, what did she do in her opening speech? Not once did she mention the 2010 target that this Government set, with a solemn promise that we would see child poverty halved. She did not even mention it, and we can only take politicians seriously on matters such as tackling poverty if they face up to their record to date. [Interruption.] I think the hon. Member for Northavon wants to intervene again.

There has been some progress, but the Government have not moved to tackle child poverty. Of course the irony is that, here we are, with this Child Poverty Bill and the Government congratulating themselves on introducing it, yet today, in the pre-Budget report, the door has finally been slammed in the faces of those who hoped—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. Member that there will no doubt be an opportunity to discuss the pre-Budget report, but that now it is the Third Reading of the Bill?

Mr. Stuart: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. It is pre-Budget reports and future Budgets that will need to put in place the relevant measures, if child poverty and, indeed, the long-term roots of poverty are to be tackled.

Mr. Stewart Jackson: The Government talk a good game about the involvement of local government in the eradication of poverty, and they talk about initiatives such as Total Place, whereby they involve Departments across the piece in the support of local government. However, is it not true that the one Department that will not devolve power and responsibility for funding to Total Place and, I suggest, to the eradication of poverty is the centralised Department for Work and Pensions? The Treasury and other Departments support Total Place, but the Department for Work and Pensions fails to do so.

Mr. Stuart rose—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that the hon. Gentleman is not going to be tempted to stray into a very different debate from the one that we are currently dealing with.

Mr. Stuart: I am extremely mindful of your strictures, Madam Deputy Speaker, so I will return to the strategies.

We know very little about the strategies. That is why my hon. Friend the Member for South-West Bedfordshire tabled amendments to try to ensure that issues such as family breakdown and looked-after children would be covered in the Bill so that local authorities and, indeed, the Secretary of State dealt with them properly. It is in the strategies that we find the detail of whether we can come up with a way of genuinely tackling, let alone eradicating, child poverty.

Dr. McCrea: Can the hon. Gentleman assure the House that if we do have a Conservative Government in a matter of months, child poverty will be a key priority for that Government?

Mr. Stuart: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his intervention. In the light of what happened with child poverty under the last Conservative Government, I welcome the opportunity to say that it absolutely will be a priority. The leader of the Conservative party, my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Cameron), has said that the eradication of poverty is a major priority and that it is how a Conservative Government would wish to be measured. Statisticians of the talent and skill of the hon. Member for Northavon will be able to remind my right hon. Friend, and indeed me, of that undertaking. We are pledged to tackle poverty, and we want to do so in the most joined-up way possible.

[Mr. Graham Stuart]

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I understand that the hon. Gentleman is again responding to an intervention, but may I remind him that we are debating the Third Reading of this Bill, not any future Bill?

Mr. Stuart: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. Of course, it will be under the auspices of this Bill that any future Conservative Government would have to address child poverty—it will be the lens through which they look at it—so talking about what they would do is what the debate on this Bill is about. Unless it is repealed, it will determine and set a framework in which future Governments will have to deal with this important issue.

Mr. Bone: I have been listening to the debate with growing concern—I was here when my hon. Friend made his original speech—and I am beginning to wonder whether I should vote against the Bill. Could he summarise the reasons why I should or should not do so?

Mr. Stuart: If, like me, my hon. Friend does not like declaratory legislation, and does not think that targets should be set in law because they are a meaningless fraud on the British people, he may well not support the Bill. On the other hand, he may accept, as Conservative Front Benchers do, that this framework provides a driver whereby future Governments can show their intent to tackle child poverty. Given the difficulties with increases in child poverty in the past, it is tremendously important that we show the seriousness of intent of Conservative Members who wish and hope to be in government shortly; we must make absolutely clear our commitment to the eradication of child poverty. That is why, although I understand some of the questions about process that my hon. Friend no doubt has, I will not vote against the Bill. We need to show that there is consensus across the House that child poverty is wrong and we no longer want to see it. Through the details of the strategies that are produced in future, I hope and expect by a Conservative Secretary of State, we will be able to work away on the root causes of poverty and ensure that they are tackled.

I want briefly to mention an amendment dealing with rural poverty, which I tabled, unsuccessfully, in Committee. I appeal to Ministers, while we have them here, and before they go away to produce national strategies in addition to the local strategies produced by local authorities, to bear in mind the peculiarities of rural poverty. According to the Commission for Rural Communities, 22 per cent. of rural children and their families are in financial poverty. There are extra costs to living in rural areas. For example, households in rural settlements spend £74.50 on transport each week compared with £57.10 by those in urban areas. That is serious money coming out of income that might be thought to be in the hands of that family, making it better off than an urban family, but in fact they have to spend it on transport. I hope that Ministers will examine carefully the peculiarities of poverty in rural areas.

Like others, I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith) and the Centre for Social Justice on their work. I am glad that my right hon. Friend the shadow Secretary of State is in her place, because I wish to say that one of the most exciting programmes that the next Conservative Government, if that is what we have, could undertake would be to follow on from the "Dynamic Benefits" report and consider the barriers preventing those who are currently living in poverty from escaping it and getting into work. We need to understand the incentives that affect those on low income with the same precision with which we seek to understand the incentives for the rich, where they may move and what tax they pay. We need to ensure that for people who are not in work, getting back into work pays and they do not find themselves worse off by trying to do the right thing. I do not know the detail of the measure that was announced in today's pre-Budget report, but if it is a response to that problem and intended to ensure that those who are not in work are definitely rewarded for getting into work, I will congratulate the Government on it. I hope that it is a reality and not just a pretence.

6.56 pm

John Mason: I thank the hon. Member for Beverley and Holderness (Mr. Stuart) for leaving me approximately four minutes to make my comments.

We are agreed that we need to tackle income inequality. There has been much mention of the root causes of poverty, and we agree that we need to tackle them. I was not convinced by the Conservative argument that we should widen the Bill ever further to take everything into account, but income is clearly key. It is worth reminding ourselves of the explanatory notes to the Bill, some of which were extremely good. For example, they state:

"It is nearly impossible to quantify the financial benefits of eradicating child poverty. Growing up in poverty can damage cognitive, social and emotional development, which are all determinants of future outcomes for a child. The Joseph Rowntree Foundation estimates that child poverty costs at least £25 billion a year in Britain, and that £17 billion could accrue to the Exchequer if child poverty were eradicated. However, this is a possible under-estimate of the true benefit. There are other benefits associated with the eradication of child poverty which are difficult to quantify such as equity, reducing hardship, deprivation and exclusion and breaking the intergenerational poverty link."

I think we all agree on that.

The Child Poverty Action Group and others have said that we have to put serious extra resources into tackling child poverty. They have mentioned a figure of some £3 billion, and the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb), who has spoken ably today, mentioned a figure of £4 billion to £5 billion. That is the kind of sum that we would have needed from the Government if they were really serious. Without real money, I cannot see how child poverty targets can possibly be met. I know that we are not supposed to venture into the pre-Budget report, but it seems to have done very little to help.

There are other factors to consider, such as the fact that when people's work is cut to less than 16 hours, they lose tax credits, as well as the particular problem of single-parent families. In my constituency, there is a real problem of some kids being able to afford to go on a school trip whereas others in the same class cannot. The main issue brought to me is housing problems, and I see many youngsters being brought up in seriously overcrowded accommodation.

I agree with those who have said that less than 10 per cent. of children in relative poverty is a pretty poor target to aim at. Is it ambitious enough? It is certainly not eradication.

John Barrett (Edinburgh, West) (LD): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that that is the major failing of the Bill? It has redefined the word "eradicate". Eradicating poverty means to wipe it out, and the target is not to wipe it out.

John Mason: Absolutely. It makes a complete joke of the word.

There are other concerns. The Committee discussed whether clause 15 will be a get-out clause for the Government in future. We clearly have to set priorities for the time we are living in. I might as well mention Trident again, because that seems to be more of a priority for the Government than eradicating child poverty. There is not time to talk about many other things, but I emphasise that the minimum wage is far too low. We need it to be a living wage, and there is some good work being done on that in London, Glasgow and elsewhere. I want the Government to be a bit stronger on that, because it would surely go a huge way towards eradicating child poverty.

Finally, I appeal to the Government to work with the Scottish authorities in taking these matters forward. Westminster clearly needs to take—

7 pm

Debate interrupted (Programme Order, 20 July).

The Deputy Speaker put forthwith the Question already proposed from the Chair (Standing Order No. 83E). That the Bill be now read the Third time.

Question agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time and passed, with amendments.

Business without Debate

DEFERRED DIVISIONS

Motion made, and Question put forthwith (Standing Order 41A(3)),

That, at this day's sitting, Standing Order No. 41A (Deferred divisions) shall not apply to the Motion in the name of the Chancellor of the Exchequer relating to Corporation Tax.—(Mr. Mudie.)

Question agreed to.

CORPORATION TAX

Motion made, and Question put forthwith (Standing Order 118(6)),

That the draft Corporation Tax (Exclusion from Short-Term Loan Relationships) Regulations 2009, which were laid before this House on 3 November, in the previous Session of Parliament, be approved.—(Mr. Mudie.)

Question agreed to.

REGIONAL SELECT COMMITTEE (LONDON)

Motion made,

That Ms Karen Buck, Jeremy Corbyn, Clive Efford, Siobhain McDonagh, Mr Andy Slaughter and Mr Andrew Pelling be members of the London Regional Select Committee.—(Mr. Mudie.)

Hon. Members: Object.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE

Motion made,

That—

(1) Standing Order No. 14 (Arrangement of public business) shall have effect for this Session with the following modifications, namely:

In paragraph (4) the word 'eight' shall be substituted for the word 'thirteen' in line 42 and in paragraph (5) the word 'fifth' shall be substituted for the word 'eighth' in line 44;

(2) Standing Order No. 90 (Second reading committees) shall have effect for this Session with the following modification, namely:

In paragraph (2) the word 'fifth' shall be substituted for the word 'eighth' in line 21; and

(3) Private Members' Bills shall have precedence over Government business on 29 January; 5 and 26 February; 5 and 12 March; 23 and 30 April; and 7 May.—(Mr. Mudie.)

Hon. Members: Object.

PETITIONS

Badman Report (Mid-Dorset and North Poole)

7.1 pm

Annette Brooke (Mid-Dorset and North Poole) (LD): My first petition tonight comes from home educators who are concerned about the Badman report. The signatures from my constituency reflect the general concern of home educators up and down the country. The petition states:

The Petition of persons resident in the Mid Dorset and North Poole parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.

[P000452]

Park Home Sales

7.3 pm

Annette Brooke: My second petition tonight has been organised by one of my constituents, Sonia McColl. It is about a problem involving park home owners, who are on the whole very vulnerable people, and unscrupulous park owners. The petition does not in any way suggest that park owners are all unscrupulous, but there are instances that many of us know about when we need to strike a better balance between the two groups of people.

The petition states:

The Petition of persons resident in the constituency of Mid Dorset and North Poole and others,

Declares that the Petitioners believe that unscrupulous park owners are able to force home owners to accept lower than market value prices for their property, by demanding interviews with prospective buyers and raising unreasonable objections to purchases.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Government to bring forward proposals to amend the Mobile Homes Act 1983, in order to create the following requirements: that a park owner should not have the right to demand an interview with a person buying a home; that where a park owner believes an interview is necessary, that interview should be held in the office and in the presence of a lawyer with a registered legal practice; that in such a case the lawyer must be satisfied that the reasons for the interview are reasonable, that statements made by the park owner are not fraudulent, and that the buyer's references are satisfactory; that the lawyer concerned must be acceptable to both parties and shall before the interview make himself aware of the contents of the Mobile Homes Act 1983 and other associated legislation; and that the park owner must meet the cost of the lawyer's services.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.

[P000453]

Badman Report (Harborough)

7.5 pm

Mr. Edward Garnier (Harborough) (Con): I beg leave to present a petition from persons resident in my constituency in the county of Leicestershire.

The petition states:

The Petition of persons resident in the Harborough parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.

[P000470]

7.6 pm

Mr. John Leech (Manchester, Withington) (LD): Some time ago, I submitted a petition on behalf of thousands of constituents in support of the "Mahoro Must Stay" campaign. Unfortunately Adela Mahoro Mugabo is still under threat of deportation—

Madam Deputy Speaker (Sylvia Heal): Order. I understood that the hon. Gentleman's petition was on the Badman report.

Mr. Leech: That was last night, Madam Deputy Speaker.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I am afraid that my information is that his petition is on the Badman report. I accept what the hon. Gentleman says, but would he be kind enough to see the Clerk at the Table to confirm that his petition has been endorsed by the Journal Office? I can then call him to present his petition.

Climate Change (Copenhagen Talks)

7.7 pm

Angela Browning (Tiverton and Honiton) (Con): I present a petition that has been organised by Crediton Climate Action and has signatures from people in the town of Crediton, surrounding villages and many local organisations. Playing an especial part in this have been my constituents Gerald and Laura Conyngham, who are cycling to Copenhagen from Crediton to take part and make their views known.

The petition states:

The Petition of residents of the constituency of Tiverton and Honiton in Devon and others, regarding the Climate Change Talks in Copenhagen in December 2009,

Declares that the following should result from the Copenhagen Talks: all countries should agree to take urgent action to reduce carbon dioxide (CO_2) levels in the atmosphere to 350 parts per million; developed countries should take the lead, given our major responsibility for past emissions; and developed countries should give financial help to the developing world to help them adapt to climate change and invest in renewable energies.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Government to do all it can at Copenhagen to achieve these goals.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.

[P000530]

Post Office (New England)

Mr. Stewart Jackson (Peterborough) (Con): The New England post office in Peterborough was closed in 2008. I wish to present the petition of 721 residents of Millfield, New England and other areas in the city of Peterborough.

The petition states:

The Petition of residents of Millfield and New England and others,

Declares that New England Post Office ought to be re-opened

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Government to take all possible steps to ensure that New England Post Office can be re-opened.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.

[P000529]

Deepcut Army Barracks

7.8 pm

Mr. Paul Burstow (Sutton and Cheam) (LD): I wish to present two petitions this evening. The first is on behalf of my constituent, Mr. Gary Hobbs, who collected a petition of 200 signatures requesting an inquiry into the deaths at Deepcut barracks.

The petition states:

The Petition of residents of Sutton, Cheam, Worcester Park and others,

Declares that the findings of the Army Board of Inquiry into the deaths of Privates Geoff Gray and James Collinson at Deepcut Army Barracks have not closed the matter and leave questions unanswered and no one accountable for what happened.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons calls upon Her Majesty's Government to sanction a full, independent, public inquiry into the deaths of Deepcut Army Barracks between 1995 and 2002.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.

[P000626]

Freedom Pass

7.9 pm

Mr. Burstow: The second of the two petitions is presented on behalf of many thousands of my constituents who contacted my office over the past few weeks, when they learned about the threat now posed to the London freedom pass as a result of an announcement by the Department for Transport of a redistribution of funds from London to other parts of the country to underwrite the costs of their concessionary fare schemes.

The petition reads:

The Petition of residents of Sutton, Cheam, Worcester Park and others,

Declares that the decision of the Secretary of State for Transport to cut the financial support for concessionary travel for older and disabled people in London is unfair to the 1.2 million people who use the Freedom Pass. Further declares that London Councils currently contribute a third of the cost compared to the parts of the country where concessionary travel is fully funded by the Government and that the cut in the grant would result in London Councils covering half of the cost of the scheme.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons calls upon Her Majesty's Government to drop the plans to cut the funding for the Freedom Pass for elderly and disabled people.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.

[P000625]

Immigration (Adela Mahoro Mugabo)

7.10 pm

Mr. John Leech (Manchester, Withington) (LD): I shall try again. Some time ago, I submitted a petition on behalf of thousands of constituents in support of the "Mahoro Must Stay" campaign. Unfortunately, Adela Mahoro Mugabo remains under threat of deportation and I am now submitting a petition signed by a further 1,300 people who support the campaign.

The petition is as follows:

The Petition of the Mahoro Must Stay Campaign,

Declares that Adela Mahoro Mugabo, who is to be removed to Rwanda, is the widow of a man murdered in 2002 by the Interharamwe Hutus, and as a Hutu herself was accused by the Rwandan Military Intelligence of covering up for her husband's murderers. The Petitioners further declare that Mahoro was tortured and raped, and is now HIV-positive, and that if she is returned to Rwanda she will still be in danger and will be unable to get the anti-retroviral drugs she needs to survive.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Home Secretary to instruct a reconsideration of the Home Office decision and allow Adela Mahoro Mugabo to stay in the UK, a safe environment in which she will be able to lead a healthy life.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.

[P000493]

Badman Report (Bristol West)

7.11 pm

Stephen Williams (Bristol, West) (LD): I have a petition to present on behalf of 33 constituents in Bristol, West on the same subject as petitions presented by several other hon. Members: the report by Graham Badman into home educators. To avoid detaining colleagues further, I shall not read out the full text of the motion.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Bristol West parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000476]

Badman Report (Cheadle)

7.12 pm

Mark Hunter (Cheadle) (LD): I, too, beg the leave of the House to introduce on behalf of persons resident in the Cheadle constituency a petition expressing their grave concerns about the recommendations of the Badman report. The wording is exactly the same as the petition read out earlier by my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Dorset and North Poole (Annette Brooke).

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in Cheadle,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory

[Mark Hunter]

annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000612]

Badman Report (Brecon and Radnorshire)

7.13 pm

Mr. Roger Williams (Brecon and Radnorshire) (LD): By leave of the House, I beg to lay a petition regarding the Badman report that has been signed by seven residents of Brecon and Radnorshire. The wording is very similar, or identical, to the petition presented by my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Dorset and North Poole (Annette Brooke), therefore I shall not detain the House.

Following is the full text of the petition:

[The Petition of persons resident in the Brecon and Radnorshire parliamentary constituency,

Declares that they are concerned about the recommendations of the Badman Report, which suggests closer monitoring of home educators, including a compulsory annual registration scheme and right of access to people's homes for local authority officials; further declares that the Petitioners believe the recommendations are based on a review that was extremely rushed, failed to give due consideration to the evidence, failed to ensure that the data it collected were sufficiently robust, and failed to take proper account of the existing legislative framework.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urges the Secretary of State for Children, Schools and Families either not to bring forward, or to withdraw, proposed legislative measures providing for tighter registration and monitoring of children educated at home in the absence of a thorough independent inquiry into the condition and future of elective home education in England; but instead to take the steps necessary to ensure that the existing Elective Home Education Guidelines for Local Authorities are properly implemented, learning from current best practice, in all local authorities in England.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.]

[P000623]

Upper Gastrointestinal Surgery

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—(Mr. Mudie.)

7.14 pm

Angela Browning (Tiverton and Honiton) (Con): It is probably about two years ago that Devon primary care trust informed us, through their then chief executive, Dr. Kevin Snee, that it had been proposed that the upper gastrointestinal unit at Wonford hospital in Exeter be moved to and merge with the unit in Derriford hospital in Plymouth. In principle, I have no objections to proposals, including this one, that aim to create centres of excellence where surgeons can deal with a much wider range of patients and a much larger catchment area to improve their expertise in what is a very difficult area of surgery. Indeed, I support the call for centres of excellence.

In the discussions that I had with the then chief executive, it became clear to me that the facilities at Exeter would be moved to Plymouth and that, from that, the centre would grow. However, the upper GI unit at Wonford hospital in Exeter has developed as a national centre of excellence, using keyhole surgery to perform what are known as minimally invasive oesophagectomies—in other words, the removal of the oesophagus, a serious operation, usually required because of cancer, and one that surgeons need a great deal of experience to perform. To be able to carry out MIOs—which are much easier to say—it was promised that the excellence that had been developed in the centre at Exeter would be moved with the unit to Derriford hospital.

Under normal circumstances, the operation requires major open surgery, with the surgeon opening not only the chest cavity of the thorax, in order to access the oesophagus, but the abdomen. As one can imagine, that is a very large operation indeed. The surgical removal of the oesophagus has large implications for quality of life and recovery after surgery. However, as they have been developed over the years, it has been demonstrated and proven at Exeter that MIOs, where the thorax and the abdomen are entered using keyhole surgery, have a most beneficial effect on both post-operative recovery and quality of life, particularly where there are later reoccurrences of the carcinoma.

Since 2004, two surgeons at Exeter, Mr. Richard Berrisford and Mr. Saj Wajed, have done that operation in preference to open surgery. The Exeter MIO unit has submitted many papers to MIGOCS, the minimally invasive gastrooesophageal cancer study, which is run by the Oxford university medical school. The Exeter MIO unit is the only established UK unit that has published its data, published a safety algorithm and proven that its techniques result in the rapid restoration of quality of life, and it is also undertaking further research. Exeter is the UK's largest contributor to that national study, as a result of the work done in the MIO unit. Therefore, although I and my hon. Friend the Member for East Devon (Mr. Swire), who has raised the matter with Ministers in the past, have an interest in Devon and the wider west country, the unit is also of national importance, which is why I am raising the issue on the Floor of the House.

I was first alerted to the problems that have arisen with the removal of the MIO unit from Exeter to Derriford only recently, by Hannah Foster, the Conservative prospective parliamentary candidate for Exeter, who was in touch with the local patients group. Patients, who included my constituents, were concerned that they would be denied MIO treatment and that the MIO surgeons, who were meant to have helped establish the MIO unit at Plymouth by last September following the move from Exeter, had not been able to do so.

Mr. Hugo Swire (East Devon) (Con): I congratulate my hon. Friend and neighbour on achieving this debate. I raised the issue in Parliament more than two years ago and have continued to do so since. She referred to the move and the culture of secrecy surrounding it. Does she agree with my constituent Mr. David Hamilton of Sidmouth, who is currently undergoing treatment, and others who have raised the issue, who say that people are not allowed to talk to politicians? A culture of secrecy seems to have been created, with a rather sinister air of intimidation surrounding the entire proposal to relocate—a proposal that I do not believe adds anything to the argument, but which makes us in this place rather suspicious about the motives behind it all. Does my hon. Friend agree with me that the proposal is not benefiting anybody?

Angela Browning: I do agree with my hon. Friend. There is already a unit in Plymouth, at Derriford hospital, and it might well claim that it does keyhole surgery. However, the procedure that it carries out is not the same as that carried out at Exeter. The procedure at Plymouth tends to be either keyhole surgery in the thorax with open surgery in the abdomen, or vice versa. In other words, it is hybrid in nature.

The fact that everyone had been informed that the move from Exeter to Plymouth would have taken place by September of this year—so that, under the supervision of the Exeter surgeons, the unit would ideally have been up and running in Plymouth by early 2010—is a matter of great concern. I shall turn in a moment to the subject that my hon. Friend has just raised. Patients are worried, and doctors do not know where they stand, and we face the potential loss of a groundbreaking unit, not only in the west country but in the rest of the country.

Andrew George (St. Ives) (LD): Will the hon. Lady give way?

Angela Browning: I promised the hon. Gentleman that I would allow him to intervene in this debate.

Andrew George: The hon. Lady is making some important points. May I first apologise to the Minister, because I might not be able to stay in the Chamber to hear his closing remarks? The hon. Lady has raised an important issue that also affects Cornwall. It involves the whole issue of planning for upper gastrointestinal cancer surgery. I entirely accept the view of the Devon and Cornwall peninsula cancer network that patient safety must be paramount in the planning of these services, but does she agree that, rather than taking decisions about sub-specialty surgical interventions for cancer in a piecemeal manner, as is the case at the moment, we need to take a broader, more strategic view of how all these interventions are managed across the whole peninsula?

Angela Browning: I am not sure that I have understood the hon. Gentleman correctly. I said earlier, however, that if I needed treatment for oesophageal cancer, I would want that operation to be done by a person who was doing many such operations, and I would be prepared to travel to do that. Patient safety is important, and some procedures, including this one, are of such a specialised nature that they should not be left to generalist surgeons, who do not see or treat enough patients who require such a procedure in the course of a year to develop sufficient expertise. So I might be disagreeing with the hon. Gentleman on that.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for East Devon, however, when he says that the way in which the primary care trust has gone about all this looks extremely sinister. The Exeter surgeons should have been in the Derriford unit by last September, as promised, and working as a team. Teamwork is important in building up the necessary expertise. We have seen examples in other parts of the country of units not making such a transition smoothly. The result is that the consultants do not have enough time to build up their expertise before starting to carry out these procedures. The consequences of that will be obvious to everyone.

Plymouth has not yet carried out a full MIO of the type done at Exeter. Nor has it yet filed any papers with the Oxford study that I mentioned, to which Exeter has contributed more than any other organisation in the country. It has not registered its patients on the national register database in Oxford. I therefore believe that, in the interests of patient safety, Derriford should not be expected to replicate what is being done at Exeter without the proper transitional arrangements in place which are seen to work. That has not happened yet, and I would be very concerned if such procedures were to take place without those transitional arrangements. The health scrutiny committee of Devon county council has referred the case to the Minister, because it is so worried about it.

A further concern is that patients who are now presenting to the surgeons in Exeter are being told that the unit will not offer them operations after the new year. I received a phone call earlier from one of my constituents who was told by phone only this morning—I do not know whether that was connected to our holding this debate—that an exception would be made, and that he would receive his surgery in the MIO unit in Exeter in February. That makes it sound as if it is a one-off case and it does not look as though it will solve the whole problem that I have brought before the House tonight. The Minister is involved and there should be some national intervention in this case, not least because of the research at the Exeter MIO unit.

The research is known as the LOGIC programme; I am sorry about all the acronyms. The laparoscopic gastric ischaemic conditioning trial is approved by the Devon and Torbay ethics committee, has been running since April and has so far recruited 15 patients. It requires a total of 44 to complete the study. If there is a break in the established MIO service, there will not be a sufficient number of patients to allow the research to be completed. It is a very important piece of research. It is so important that one of our local cancer charities based in Exeter, FORCE—Friends of the oncology and radiotherapy centre—has donated £20,000 to the research project. People locally have put their firm commitment behind the research.

Will the Minister confirm tonight that the MIO unit in Exeter will continue until such time that it is safely—and I mean safely—established in Plymouth? If not, why is this being done against the clear recommendations of the health scrutiny committee and contrary to what was promised personally to surgeons, patients and MPs by the primary care trust? Why has Plymouth failed to develop a total MIO, despite giving the reassurance that it would develop it in September 2009, by which time we would have hoped that it would be well on the way to being established?

[Angela Browning]

Will patients in Devon now have to accept the choice of open surgery, which they do not want—those who have seen what is done at Exeter clearly opt for the minimally invasive surgery—or will they be faced with the very real risks of a learning curve in developing a new highly complex operation in a unit not familiar with this procedure? As I have mentioned, there have been disastrous parallels in previous examples of centralisation. I will not name them, but I am happy to tell the Minister privately where we have seen the procedure bomb as a result of the transition not being implemented properly and surgeons not having sufficient time or a team built around them to carry out the transition properly.

A final aspect of the problem is that people come from far and wide for the procedure in Exeter—not just from the south-west but from all parts of the country, because the procedure is unique. If the MIO unit closes in Exeter and is not reopened in Plymouth, a private patient could opt to have the MIO procedure and all the associated benefits if they are prepared to pay for it. NHS patients, however, who until now have had the choice and the benefits of the procedure, will be denied it. I really do not understand why something so groundbreaking and so important to our constituents, as well as being in the national interest, should be denied to the NHS. Something has gone seriously wrong with the way in which the process has been carried out, and I would like the Minister to investigate what it is and put it right.

7.28 pm

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Mr. Mike O'Brien): I congratulate the hon. Member for Tiverton and Honiton (Angela Browning) on securing the debate.

The fast and effective treatment of cancer is one of the national health service's highest priorities. As a result of massive and sustained investment in the NHS and in cancer services by this Government, paying for more consultants, more nurses, more National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence-approved drugs and far better facilities, there are now almost 9,000 fewer deaths every year than there were before 1997.

In 2000, we published the NHS cancer plan, setting out how we would improve cancer treatment and ensure high-quality services for patients. The plan committed the NHS to implementing the latest authoritative guidance available on all aspects of NHS cancer care. However, I can assure the hon. Lady that decisions about exactly where and how care will be provided are local decisions. It is a matter for the local NHS, working with cancer networks, clinicians, patients and other stakeholders; it is not for Ministers to decide that in Whitehall.

The Department, supported by the national cancer action team, has been monitoring progress in the context of local plans. Although I understand the concern expressed by the hon. Lady, I am sure she will appreciate that if further improvements are to be made in cancer surgery and if better outcomes are to be delivered for patients, local clinicians must be able to secure local solutions to the various issues that are raised. In 2008-09, a total of 3,668 major oesophagogastric procedures took place in England. I understand that about 50 patients currently undergo surgery for oesophagogastric cancer each year at Derriford hospital in Plymouth, some of whom are from Cornwall. About 47 patients undergo surgery at Royal Devon and Exeter hospital in Exeter, and about 20 undergo surgery at Royal Cornwall hospital in Truro.

I understand that Devon primary care trust, working with the South West strategic health authority and the peninsula cancer network, has considered the improving outcomes guidance recommendations for upper gastrointestinal cancers, and that discussion took place with local people. The proposal is that from 1 January next year the oesophagogastric surgical unit at Plymouth Hospitals NHS Trust will expand to become the centralised specialist surgical unit for patients from Devon and Cornwall with oesophageal and gastric cancer.

As part of its commitment to placing patients and the public at the centre of health services, the Government have established an independent scrutiny and review process for local change. I will deal with that shortly, and will deal in particular with the views of the overview and scrutiny committee, which were raised by the hon. Lady. The proposed change is intended to start from 1 January, which is fairly soon. The local NHS has finalised implementation plans, and patients in the south-west peninsula requiring specialist upper gastrointestinal cancer surgery will be given their surgical treatment in Plymouth from that date. The surgical element of their treatment will no longer be provided by Royal Cornwall hospital in Truro or by Royal Devon and Exeter NHS Foundation Trust. I recognise that there is a specific case of which I was not aware. I shall establish further information about it and report to the hon. Lady on whether it indicates any sort of precedent, because at present I simply do not know.

The peninsula cancer network has told my Department that the whole surgical team is experienced and properly trained in both open and minimally invasive techniques for oesophageal and gastric cancer surgery.

Angela Browning: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. O'Brien: If the hon. Lady allows me to say a little more, she may understand my point.

There is no nationally recognised definition of MIO, although this is a national issue. In Plymouth, the plan is to investigate both the role and the definition of minimally invasive techniques for oesophageal cancer as part of a multi-centre study.

Angela Browning rose—

Mr. O'Brien: The hon. Lady may still wish to respond, bearing that point in mind.

Angela Browning: I said I was aware that keyhole surgery had been performed at Plymouth. So far, however, a single case has not involved keyhole surgery throughout the procedure. Only hybrid operations have been performed at Derriford. I believe that this is an urgent matter involving the safety of patients. If what the Minister is telling me is accurate, either those at Derriford are going to replicate what is done at Exeter—they have not done that to date, which that means that they would practise on the first few patients, and that would worry me—or they will drop the full MIO procedure.

Mr. O'Brien: I will make further inquiries about the hon. Lady's point. I will say, however, that the intention is for the internationally recognised research on MIO at Exeter to be supported and developed at Plymouth. Once the clinical service has been established, it is intended to support and pursue the research programme currently under way in Exeter and to develop further projects. It is also the case that, following the publication of the review carried out by Professor Mike Griffin and Mr. Bill Allum, a period of public engagement was carried out, with various local meetings.

I understand the concerns that have been raised, and we have looked into some of those raised by the Devon OSC. The PCN has confirmed that equipment to undertake open and minimally invasive procedures is in place in Plymouth. Additional equipment has been ordered, after discussion with a senior surgeon at the Royal Devon and Exeter, and it will be delivered shortly. This will not impact on the delivery of the service from 1 January.

Angela Browning: I hear what the Minister says about the equipment being ready at Derriford. However, if I wanted to climb Everest, I could order the equipment over the internet and have it all ready, but although I might be a bit of a mountaineer, that would not make me ready to climb Everest. Experience and practice are required to go with that kit, and an experienced team as well.

Mr. O'Brien: The hon. Lady puts her case very eloquently, but I have to say that the PCN has confirmed that the whole surgical team is experienced and properly trained in both open and minimally invasive techniques for oesophageal and gastric cancer surgery. As was described in the AUGIS—Association of Upper Gastrointestinal Surgeons of Great Britain—consensus statement of 2008, there will be two consultant surgeons operating on each case, which will allow for the incorporation of skills from around the peninsula and the appropriate supervision and mentorship model for minimally invasive surgery. As also described in the AUGIS consensus statement, there is no recognised definition of MIO, and these matters will need to be looked at.

I am concerned by what the hon. Lady says and I will make some further inquiries, but we have been given reassurances, and, essentially, this is a local matter. We therefore have to rely on local clinicians to say whether they can do this. At present, they are coming back to us, through the appropriate procedures they have, and saying, "Yes, we can do this." She is saying that she believes the qualifications and experience are not in place. I will look again, and we will go back to the local clinicians, but she says something different from what they are currently telling us. I am not an expert clinician, and no more is she, and neither of us knows whether those skills are in place. All she can do is report what is being said to her, and all I can do is report back what I am being told. This is, however, a matter to be resolved locally, rather than nationally.

That brings me on to the hon. Lady's point about the local health OSC. I am concerned about that, of course, because such committees can refer proposals to the Secretary of State for Health, which he can then pass on to the independent reconfiguration panel for consideration and independent advice. On 20 November 2009, the Devon OSC informed the Department of Health that it would refer the proposals to the Secretary of State. A letter from the committee providing the grounds for its referral was received by the Department on 4 December. However, I now understand from the local NHS that the committee has said it will be writing again to the Secretary of State, seeking to "clarify" its position on its original referral. We await that letter, to discover what the clarification is, and whether or not it is referring, and if so, what exactly it is referring. I initially thought the letter was clear, but it now appears that it is not and that it needs further clarification. As the hon. Lady will appreciate, it is not appropriate for me to comment in detail on the issue at this stage, and certainly not before the Secretary of State has had the opportunity to consider the additional letter from the OSC. I understand that the local NHS is continuing to ensure that there will be full implementation of upper GI surgery at Plymouth on 1 January. That is the current situation.

All patients affected by planned changes will be given support with transport and accommodation. As I stated earlier, the local organisation of health care services is dictated not by Ministers or civil servants in Whitehall, but by the local health care professionals on the ground. The criteria by which any changes should be introduced are that they are clinically-led, that they are focused on the best outcomes for patients and, of course, that they meet the highest levels of patient safety. I urge MPs who have concerns about the proposals coming from their local health service to contact their primary care trust. I understand from NHS Devon that the hon. Lady has not, as yet, been engaging with it and that it would appreciate it were she to do so. I also made inquiries as to whether Hannah Foster, a prospective Conservative parliamentary candidate who was quoted in the local media, had been in contact with NHS Devon. Sadly, she has apparently not raised issues with NHS Devon, other than by attending an engagement meeting. If she wants to do something that is to be taken seriously, engaging with NHS Devon would be an appropriate course for her to take, rather than just dealing with the media.

With local leadership and national guidelines based on the latest evidence, we are continuing to seek to ensure that cancer care is delivered in centres of excellence, which ensure that people get the best quality treatment. The hon. Lady has raised a number of concerns. I shall go back to NHS Devon to make inquiries about some of the points that she has raised and then write to her or meet her, if she wishes me to do so. I aim to ensure that in so far as she or I can be satisfied, given that neither of us are clinicians, such reassurances as can be given will be given. It is important that people know that they are receiving safe treatment at a centre of excellence and that such an important operation is being delivered at a place where they can rely on that excellence being delivered to them.

Question put and agreed to.

7.41 pm

House adjourned.

Deferred Division

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION

That the draft Environmental Permitting (England and Wales) (Amendment) (No. 2) Regulations 2009, which were laid before this House on 28 October, in the previous Session of Parliament, be approved.

The House divided: Ayes 284, Noes 192.

Division No. 18]

AYES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Ainger, Nick
Alexander, rh Mr. Douglas
Allen, Mr. Graham
Anderson, Mr. David
Anderson, Janet
Armstrong, rh Hilary
Austin, Mr. Ian
Austin, John
Bailey, Mr. Adrian
Bain, Mr. William
Balls, rh Ed
Barlow, Ms Celia
Barron, rh Mr. Kevin
Battle, rh John
Bayley, Hugh
Beckett, rh Margaret
Begg, Miss Anne
Bell, Sir Stuart
Benn, rh Hilary
Benton, Mr. Joe
Berry, Roger
Betts, Mr. Clive
Blackman, Liz
Blackman-Woods, Dr. Roberta
Blears, rh Hazel
Blizzard, Mr. Bob
Blunkett, rh Mr. David
Borrow, Mr. David S.
Bradshaw, rh Mr. Ben
Brennan, Kevin
Brown, Lyn
Brown, Mr. Russell
Browne, rh Des
Bryant, Chris
Burden, Richard
Burgon, Colin
Burnham, rh Andy
Butler, Ms Dawn
Byers, rh Mr. Stephen
Byrne, rh Mr. Liam
Caborn, rh Mr. Richard
Campbell, Mr. Alan
Campbell, Mr. Ronnie
Caton, Mr. Martin
Cawsey, Mr. Ian
Challen, Colin
Chaytor, Mr. David
Clapham, Mr. Michael
Clark, Ms Katy
Clark, Paul
Clarke, rh Mr. Charles
Clarke, rh Mr. Tom
Coaker, Mr. Vernon
Cohen, Harry
Cook, Frank
Cooper, rh Yvette
Corbyn, Jeremy
Cousins, Jim
Crausby, Mr. David
Creagh, Mary
Cryer, Mrs. Ann
Cummings, John
Cunningham, Mr. Jim
Cunningham, Tony
David, Mr. Wayne
Davidson, Mr. Ian
Dean, Mrs. Janet
Denham, rh Mr. John
Dismore, Mr. Andrew
Dobbin, Jim
Dobson, rh Frank
Donohoe, Mr. Brian H.
Doran, Mr. Frank
Eagle, Angela
Eagle, Maria
Efford, Clive
Elman, Mrs. Louise
Engel, Natascha
Ennis, Jeff
Field, rh Mr. Frank
Fitzpatrick, Jim
Flint, rh Caroline
Flynn, Paul
Follett, Barbara
Foster, Michael Jabez (Hastings and Rye)
Francis, Dr. Hywel
Gapes, Mike
George, rh Mr. Bruce
Gerrard, Mr. Neil
Goggins, rh Paul
Goodman, Helen
Griffith, Nia
Griffiths, Nigel
Grogan, Mr. John
Gwynne, Andrew
Hain, rh Mr. Peter
Hall, Mr. Mike
Hall, Patrick
Hamilton, Mr. David
Hanson, rh Mr. David
Harman, rh Ms Harriet
Harris, Mr. Tom
Havard, Mr. Dai
Healey, rh John
Hendrick, Mr. Mark
Hepburn, Mr. Stephen
Heppell, Mr. John
Hesford, Stephen
Hewitt, rh Ms Patricia
Heyes, David
Hill, rh Keith
Hillier, Meg
Hodge, rh Margaret
Hodgson, Mrs. Sharon
Hoey, Kate
Hoon, rh Mr. Geoffrey
Hope, Phil
Hopkins, Kelvin
Howarth, rh Mr. George
Howells, rh Dr. Kim
Hoyle, Mr. Lindsay
Humble, Mrs. Joan
Hutton, rh Mr. John
Iddon, Dr. Brian
Illsley, Mr. Eric
Ingram, rh Mr. Adam
Irranca-Davies, Huw
Jenkins, Mr. Brian
Johnson, rh Alan
Johnson, Ms Diana R.
Jones, Helen
Jones, Mr. Kevan
Jones, Lynne
Jones, Mr. Martyn
Joyce, Mr. Eric
Keeble, Ms Sally
Keeley, Barbara
Keen, Alan
Keen, Ann
Kelly, rh Ruth
Khan, rh Mr. Sadiq
Kidney, Mr. David
Knight, rh Jim
Kumar, Dr. Ashok
Ladyman, Dr. Stephen
Lammy, rh Mr. David
Laxton, Mr. Bob
Lazarowicz, Mark
Leppert, David
Levitt, Tom
Lewis, Mr. Ivan
Linton, Martin
Lloyd, Tony
Llwyd, Mr. Elfyn
Love, Mr. Andrew
Lucas, Ian
Mackinlay, Andrew
Mactaggart, Fiona
Malik, Mr. Shahid
Mallaber, Judy
Mann, John
Marsden, Mr. Gordon
Martlew, Mr. Eric
McAvoy, rh Mr. Thomas
McCabe, Steve
McCarthy, Kerry
McCarthy-Fry, Sarah
McCartney, rh Mr. Ian
McDonnell, Dr. Alasdair
McDonnell, John
McFadden, rh Mr. Pat
McFall, rh John
McGuire, rh Mrs. Anne
McIsaac, Shona
McKechin, Ann
McKenna, Rosemary
McNulty, rh Mr. Tony
Meacher, Gillian
Michael, rh Alun
Milburn, rh Mr. Alan
Miliband, rh David
Miliband, rh Edward
Miller, Andrew
Moffatt, Laura
Mole, Chris
Moon, Mrs. Madeleine
Morden, Jessica
Morgan, Julie
Morley, rh Mr. Elliot
Mountford, Kali
Mudie, Mr. George
Mullin, Mr. Chris
Murphy, Mr. Denis
Murphy, rh Mr. Jim
Murphy, rh Mr. Paul
Naysmith, Dr. Doug
Norris, Dan
O'Brien, rh Mr. Mike
O'Hara, Mr. Edward
Oliver, Mr. Bill
Osborne, Sandra
Owen, Albert
Palmer, Dr. Nick
Pearson, Ian
Pickles, Mr. James
Pope, Mr. Greg
Prentice, Bridget
Prentice, Mr. Gordon
Primarolo, rh Dawn
Prosser, Gwyn
Purchase, Mr. Ken
Purnell, rh James
Raynsford, rh Mr. Nick
Reed, Mr. Andy
Reid, rh John
Riordan, Mrs. Linda
Rooney, Mr. Terry
Roy, Mr. Frank
Roy, Lindsay
Ruane, Chris
Ruddock, Joan
Russell, Christine
Ryan, rh Joan
Sailer, Martin
Sarwar, Mr. Mohammad
Seabeck, Alison
Sharma, Mr. Virendra
Shaw, Jonathan
Sheerman, Mr. Barry
Sheridan, Jim
Simon, Mr. Siôn
Simpson, Alan
Singh, Mr. Marsha
Skinner, Mr. Dennis
Slaughter, Mr. Andy
Smith, rh Mr. Andrew
Smith, Ms Angela C. (Sheffield, Hillsborough)
Smith, rh Angela E. (Basildon)
Smith, Geraldine
Snelgrove, Anne
Soulsby, Sir Peter
Southworth, Helen
Spellar, rh Mr. John
Spink, Bob
Starkey, Dr. Phyllis
Stewart, Ian
Stoate, Dr. Howard
Strang, rh Dr. Gavin
Straw, rh Mr. Jack
Stringer, Graham
Stuart, Ms Gisela
Sutcliffe, Mr. Gerry
Tami, Mark
Taylor, Ms Dari
Taylor, David
Taylor, Dr. Richard
Thornberry, Emily
Timms, rh Mr. Stephen
Todd, Mr. Mark

Touhig, rh Mr. Don
Trickett, Jon
Truswell, Mr. Paul
Turner, Mr. Neil
Twigg, Derek
Ussher, Kitty
Vaz, rh Keith
Watts, Lynda
Ward, Claire
Wareing, Mr. Robert N.
Watson, Mr. Tom
Watts, Mr. Dave
Wicks, rh Malcolm
Williams, rh Mr. Alan
Williams, Hywel
Wilson, Phil
Winnick, Mr. David
Wood, Mike
Woodward, rh Mr. Shaun
Woolas, Mr. Phil
Wright, David
Wright, Mr. Iain
Wright, Dr. Tony
Wyatt, Derek

NOES

Afriyie, Adam
Ainsworth, Mr. Peter
Alexander, Danny
Amess, Mr. David
Ancram, rh Mr. Michael
Arbuthnot, rh Mr. James
Atkinson, Mr. Peter
Bacon, Mr. Richard
Baker, Norman
Barker, Gregory
Baron, Mr. John
Barrett, John
Beith, rh Sir Alan
Bellingham, Mr. Henry
Benyon, Mr. Richard
Blunt, Mr. Crispin
Bone, Mr. Peter
Boswell, Mr. Tim
Bottomley, Peter
Brady, Mr. Graham
Brake, Tom
Bracher, Mr. Julian
Breed, Mr. Colin
Brooke, Annette
Browne, Mr. Jeremy
Browning, Angela
Burns, Mr. Simon
Burrowes, Mr. David
Burstow, Mr. Paul
Burt, Alistair
Burt, Lorely
Butterfill, Sir John
Cameron, rh Mr. David
Campbell, Mr. Gregory
Campbell, rh Sir Menzies
Clark, Greg
Clarke, rh Mr. Kenneth
Clegg, rh Mr. Nick
Cormack, Sir Patrick
Cox, Mr. Geoffrey
Crabb, Mr. Stephen
Curry, rh Mr. David
Davey, Mr. Edward
Davies, Mr. Dai
Davies, David T.C. (Monmouth)
Djanogly, Mr. Jonathan
Dodds, Mr. Nigel
Duddridge, James
Dunne, Mr. Philip
Evans, Mr. Nigel
Fabricant, Michael
Farron, Tim
Featherstone, Lynne
Field, Mr. Mark
Foster, Mr. Don
Fox, Dr. Liam
Francois, Mr. Mark
Fraser, Christopher
Garnier, Mr. Edward
George, Andrew
Gibb, Mr. Nick
Gidley, Sandra
Gillan, Mrs. Cheryl
Goldsworthy, Julia
Goodman, Mr. Paul
Goodwill, Mr. Robert
Gray, Mr. James
Grayling, Chris
Green, Damian
Greening, Justine
Grieve, Mr. Dominic
Hague, rh Mr. William
Hammond, Stephen
Hancock, Mr. Mike
Hands, Mr. Greg
Harper, Mr. Mark
Heald, Mr. Oliver
Heath, Mr. David
Hemming, John
Hendry, Charles
Herbert, Nick
Hoban, Mr. Mark
Hollobone, Mr. Philip
Holloway, Mr. Adam
Holmes, Paul
Howarth, David
Howarth, Mr. Gerald
Howell, John
Hughes, Simon
Huhne, Chris
Hunt, Mr. Jeremy
Hunter, Mark
Hurd, Mr. Nick
Jack, rh Mr. Michael
Jackson, Mr. Stewart
Jenkin, Mr. Bernard
Jones, Mr. David
Keetch, Mr. Paul
Kennedy, rh Mr. Charles
Key, Robert
Knight, rh Mr. Greg
Kramer, Susan
Laing, Mrs. Eleanor
Lait, Mrs. Jacqui
Lamb, Norman
Lansley, Mr. Andrew
Laws, Mr. David
Leech, Mr. John
Leigh, Mr. Edward
Letwin, rh Mr. Oliver
Lewis, Dr. Julian
Liddell-Grainger, Mr. Ian
Lidington, Mr. David
Lilley, rh Mr. Peter
Loughton, Tim
Luff, Peter
Mackay, rh Mr. Andrew
Main, Anne
Malins, Mr. Humfrey
Maples, Mr. John
Mates, rh Mr. Michael
May, rh Mrs. Theresa
McCrea, Dr. William
McIntosh, Miss Anne
McLoughlin, rh Mr. Patrick
Miller, Mrs. Maria
Milton, Anne
Moore, Mr. Michael
Moss, Mr. Malcolm
Mulholland, Greg
Murrison, Dr. Andrew
Neill, Robert
Newmark, Mr. Brooks
O'Brien, Mr. Stephen
Öpik, Lembit
Ottaway, Richard
Paterson, Mr. Owen
Pelling, Mr. Andrew
Penning, Mike
Penrose, John
Pickles, Mr. Eric
Pugh, Dr. John
Randall, Mr. John
Redwood, rh Mr. John
Reid, Mr. Alan
Rennie, Willie
Robathan, Mr. Andrew
Robertson, Hugh
Robinson, Mrs. Iris
Robinson, rh Mr. Peter
Rogerson, Dan
Rosindell, Andrew
Rowen, Paul
Russell, Bob
Scott, Mr. Lee
Selous, Andrew
Shapps, Grant
Shepherd, Mr. Richard
Simmonds, Mark
Simpson, David
Simpson, Mr. Keith
Smith, Chloe
Spelman, Mrs. Caroline
Spicer, Sir Michael
Spring, Mr. Richard
Streeter, Mr. Gary
Swayne, Mr. Desmond
Swinson, Jo
Swire, Mr. Hugo
Syms, Mr. Robert
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Teather, Sarah
Timpson, Mr. Edward
Tredinnick, David
Turner, Mr. Andrew
Vara, Mr. Shailesh
Wallace, Mr. Ben
Waterson, Mr. Nigel
Watkinson, Angela
Webb, Steve
Wiggin, Bill
Williams, Mr. Roger
Williams, Stephen
Willis, Mr. Phil
Willott, Jenny
Wilson, Mr. Rob
Wilson, Sammy
Winterton, Ann
Winterton, Sir Nicholas
Wright, Jeremy
Young, rh Sir George
Younger-Ross, Richard

Question accordingly agreed to.

House of Commons

Thursday 10 December 2009

The House met at half-past Ten o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

BUSINESS BEFORE QUESTIONS

LEEDS CITY COUNCIL BILL

Motion made, That the Bill, as amended, be now considered.

Hon. Members: Object.

Bill to be considered on Thursday 7 January.

READING BOROUGH COUNCIL BILL

Motion made, That the Bill, as amended, be now considered.

Hon. Members: Object.

Bill to be considered on Thursday 7 January.

Oral Answers to Questions

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

The Secretary of State was asked—

Nuclear Power Station (Bradwell)

1. Mr. Bernard Jenkin (North Essex) (Con): What representations he has received from English Nature on the environmental effects of proposals for a new nuclear power station at Bradwell, Essex. [305573]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Huw Irranca-Davies): The Government requested and received comments from Natural England—formerly English Nature—on the appraisal of sustainability and habitats regulations assessment reports on the site at Bradwell, which was nominated in the Government's strategic siting assessment process.

Mr. Jenkin: I thank the Minister for his response but, even though I am an enthusiast for new nuclear power stations, may I draw his attention to the serious concern expressed to me, particularly by local fishermen and oystermen, that the volume of the outfall from a new power station is likely to be four times greater than that from the previous power station, thus causing serious continuing damage to the ecology of the Blackwater estuary? Can he assure me that that will be addressed, perhaps by ensuring that the intake and outfalls will be sufficiently far away?

Huw Irranca-Davies: The hon. Gentleman has been assiduous in representing the interests of local fishermen and people who are concerned about the impacts on the environment. I can confirm that Natural England's response suggested that there was insufficient evidence that a development at Bradwell could have no adverse impacts on the Natura 2000 sites and associated features. The Government took that on board during the assessment, and the conclusions in the habitats regulations assessment reflect that. Natural England has suggested that further assessment is needed, not least in relation to climate change and rising sea levels, of which he will be aware. I can assure him that I will keep a close eye on the matter, as will Natural England, to ensure that the pertinent factors he raises are taken into account.

Climate Change (Forestry)

2. Mr. Jim Cunningham (Coventry, South) (Lab): When he expects to respond to the recent report of the Forestry Commission on forestry and climate change. [305574]

The Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Hilary Benn): The Government welcome the Read report, which sets out clearly how forestry in the UK can contribute to tackling climate change. The Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and the Forestry Commission are considering the report in detail and we will use its findings to develop our policy. We will outline next steps in DEFRA's climate change plan in the spring.

Mr. Cunningham: Does my right hon. Friend agree that it is important to increase tree planting in this country by 40 per cent., given the climatic change problems facing us? What consultations will he engage in with various organisations before reaching a decision on the matter?

Hilary Benn: The Read report has only just been published. I spoke at an event for its launch, where many of the people who would express a view on the subject were present. I agree that we should seek to achieve the objective that my hon. Friend mentions, not least because the Read report points out that if we managed to achieve it, that would contribute a significant proportion of the reduction in CO_2 emissions that this nation needs to achieve by 2050.

Mr. James Gray (North Wiltshire) (Con): North Wiltshire and Wiltshire more widely boast some of the most ancient and natural woodlands anywhere in England, in Bradon forest, Savernake and elsewhere. However, large parts of our oak population are threatened by oak decline syndrome, and a number of similar pathogens threaten our ancient woodlands. What does the Secretary of State intend to do about that?

Hilary Benn: We have a research programme that is examining a number of the diseases that have emerged, including the one to which the hon. Gentleman refers. Their emergence may indeed be a consequence of climate change. We have a very big programme examining phytophthora and I was able to see some of that work in a visit to the south-west in August. I am happy to write to him to provide more information about the specific issue that he has raised.

Jessica Morden (Newport, East) (Lab): The report is very welcome. What discussions is the Secretary of State having with the Welsh Assembly Government about what Wales could contribute to increasing woodland cover to 16 per cent.?

Hilary Benn: I will certainly have discussions with all those who could contribute to ensuring that we achieve that objective. I should point out to the House that, in the 90 years since the establishment of the Forestry Commission, there has been a significant increase in forest and woodland cover in the country, after our having got to the point where we had chopped down almost all the trees that we had.

Tim Farron (Westmorland and Lonsdale) (LD): The Forestry Commission report states that, in the next 10 years, the capacity of the UK's forests to absorb carbon could be reduced by up to 70 per cent. Will the Secretary of State therefore look to the capacity of Britain's uplands as a complementary source of carbon sequestration? Given that the average hill farm income last year was just £5,000, does he acknowledge that he must act quickly to restructure farm payments, to ensure that the upland stewards of our carbon sinks are fairly rewarded and are kept in business?

Hilary Benn: As the hon. Gentleman will be aware, we have changed the system. We will introduce the uplands entry level scheme, which we consulted on widely and which was welcomed at the time. The truth is that those who farm and those who manage the land have a real opportunity here not only to contribute to sustainability and to the management of the landscape, but to reduce carbon emissions both through peat bogs—the national parks want to play a role in that—and by planting trees where we can to soak up carbon.

Dr. Gavin Strang (Edinburgh, East) (Lab): I accept that the report is just out, but does my right hon. Friend agree that forestry has the potential to make a highly significant contribution to our emissions reduction targets? Indeed, with an increase of 4 per cent. in woodland cover over the next 40 years, we could, by the 2050s, achieve a reduction equivalent to 10 per cent. of greenhouse gas emissions.

Hilary Benn: I do indeed agree with my right hon. Friend. Trees are wonderful carbon-eating machines.

Carbon Footprint (Copenhagen Summit)

4. Mr. Peter Bone (Wellingborough) (Con): What estimate he has made of the average carbon footprint generated by his Department's representatives in attending the Copenhagen climate change summit. [305576]

The Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Hilary Benn): I and three officials from DEFRA will attend the Copenhagen climate change summit, where we will push for an ambitious agreement on forests and the protection of our oceans. The CO_2 footprint of these flights will be 1.54 tonnes. We will offset that by buying certified emission reduction credits, as we do for all flights.

Mr. Bone: Trees are very good "carbon-eating machines". Does the Secretary of State agree with me that 202,500 trees will have to be planted just to cover the CO_2 emissions of the Copenhagen jamboree?

Hilary Benn: I do not regard the Copenhagen summit as a jamboree. I am sorry that some Opposition Members seem to think that there is not a problem with climate change. I suspect that that is an embarrassment to those on their Front Bench. Frankly, I cannot think of a more important meeting, because the consequence of failing to get an agreement would be very serious for our planet, for our climate and for biodiversity.

Mr. Richard Benyon (Newbury) (Con): Given the importance of getting a deal on carbon emissions at Copenhagen, DEFRA should be leading from the front. Eighteen months ago, the Government announced a new body, the centre of expertise in sustainable procurement—a quango within a quango—to assist, among other things, in cutting emissions from the Government's own estate. We now know that the Government estate will miss its 2010-11 carbon targets by some margin. Is the Secretary of State, who leads on sustainability issues in the Government, embarrassed by that fact, and if so, what is he going to do about it?

Hilary Benn: In 2007-08, across the Government office estate, we achieved a 6.3 per cent. reduction in CO_2 emissions. In the DEFRA office estate, we have already achieved the 2010-11 target of a 12.5 per cent. reduction against the 1999-2000 figures.

Roadside Litter

5. David Taylor (North-West Leicestershire) (Lab/Co-op): What recent progress his Department has made on initiatives designed to reduce the amount of roadside litter. [305577]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Dan Norris): This summer, DEFRA's grant-aided delivery partner, Keep Britain Tidy, carried out a major vehicle litter awareness campaign that resulted in a 25 per cent. reduction in litter in locations monitored by local authorities throughout England. DEFRA continues to work alongside the Highways Agency and local authorities in keeping the roads under their responsibility clear of litter.

David Taylor: The most recent local environmental quality survey states that litter on verges and landscaping alongside rural roads is now a significant problem. When does the Minister intend to introduce measures to give local authorities greater powers to fine registered vehicle keepers or other responsible people when litter is thrown from vehicles, especially fast-food detritus, which is particularly obnoxious?

Dan Norris: Those who litter from vehicles are subject to the same laws that apply to anybody else on the street. Although it can be difficult to identify an offender, especially in a vehicle moving at speed, 65 fixed penalty notices were issued during a recent vehicle litter campaign. The Government are examining the matter very closely and if a compelling case can be made, legislation might be forthcoming. We will certainly give that serious consideration.

Mr. Nigel Dodds (Belfast, North) (DUP): In the light of the fact that surveys done in my own city, Belfast, show that the people who are responsible for most littering are those who eat fast food, smokers, the 18-to-35 age group and those who chew gum, is there a need to target initiatives to reach people who are particularly culpable?

Dan Norris: The most important challenge is changing behaviour. DEFRA provides a grant funding of £25 million a year to Keep Britain Tidy, and about £1.2 million each year goes specifically towards behaviour-changing campaigns, which are clearly targeted, as appropriate. That has raised awareness of traffic litter, resulting in a 25 per cent. reduction in litter from vehicles.

Mr. David Drew (Stroud) (Lab/Co-op): A significant amount of the litter on our streets, especially that thrown from cars, is cigarette material, particularly butts. What is the Department doing to get tough on the cigarette manufacturers? It is about time that they put something forward for clearing up the mess to which they contribute.

Dan Norris: Obviously, we have discussions with a wide range of people who manufacture items that contribute to litter. In truth, it comes back to behaviour change. Education, above all else, is what changes behaviour, and behaviour change is needed to deal with litter.

Miss Anne McIntosh (Vale of York) (Con): There does not seem to be much evidence of behaviour change. Will the Minister applaud the work on that aspect of Bill Bryson and the Campaign to Protect Rural England? Roadside and pavement litter especially are made up of cigarette butts and chewing gum, but as there is little evidence of behaviour change, what more can the Government do? What is the take-up of the Minister's grants?

Dan Norris: There is keen take-up of the grants. A number of local authorities have taken up various offers of grants to work towards reducing litter. The Government have made important powers available to local authorities, if they wish to use them. When those powers are applied, they have a good record of working effectively.

Food Labelling

6. Andrew Selous (South-West Bedfordshire) (Con): What recent discussions he has had with ministerial colleagues on country of origin food labelling. [305578]

The Minister of State, Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Jim Fitzpatrick): This is a very popular question this morning. I have regular discussions with ministerial colleagues and the Food Standards Agency to ensure that we have tighter, clearer and more accurate origin labelling.

Andrew Selous: Tesco, Morrisons, Sainsbury's, Marks and Spencer and Waitrose are all backing our honest food campaign to stop imported food, which is often produced under lower welfare standards than our own, from being passed off as British food. Why cannot the Government do more to help British consumers and farmers in that regard?

Jim Fitzpatrick: The Government have been working on this for some time. We welcome the Opposition's honest food campaign—it would be churlish not to say that it is a good initiative. The Food Standards Agency issued new guidance in 2008. My predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Wavertree (Jane Kennedy), started a campaign in October last year with, I believe, celebrity chef Jamie Oliver. We are working in Europe to try to ensure that food information regulations are as tight as possible, although they will not come in for perhaps another two or three years. We are supporting supermarkets that are labelling food more clearly, so that consumers can buy with greater confidence.

Mr. Barry Sheerman (Huddersfield) (Lab/Co-op): Does my hon. Friend agree that many of us have been campaigning on this issue for many years? Will he help us on veal, especially? Veal is a very good thing to eat—the animals are incinerated if they are not eaten—but we must ensure that people eat English or British veal, rather than imported veal, which comes from animals that have much poorer lives than our own animals.

Jim Fitzpatrick: I am grateful to my hon. Friend, who points out that the Government have been working on this for some time. Veal is one of the products whose labelling ought to be clearer under regulations. I hope that he and the whole House are aware that the EU protected food celebration takes place this afternoon at New Covent Garden; we will be launching Cornish sardines as the 40th UK food to achieve that status. I hope that Opposition Front Benchers will join my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and me at the celebration this afternoon, because those products are 40 of the best in Britain and are getting worldwide acclaim because of the protected name status, which we support vigorously.

John Penrose (Weston-super-Mare) (Con): Does the Minister accept that clear, honest food labelling is important not just for reasons of being straight with consumers, but because accurate information allows consumers to send a clear message to food producers about what they want to buy and what those producers should produce, which could allow his Department to reduce some of the burden of red tape and regulation on food producers?

Jim Fitzpatrick: I agree with the hon. Gentleman. We are encouraging retailers to mark and label countries of origin more clearly. I chaired the latest meeting of the pig meat taskforce earlier this week. We have reached a collective agreement—it ought to be finalised by 1 February—on pig meat, which has suffered because many foreign goods that are imported are claimed to be British bacon or British pork pies. I have no doubt that the agreement and new regulations will be launched on 1 February.

Dr. Phyllis Starkey (Milton Keynes, South-West) (Lab): Following my Adjournment debate last week about the labelling of goods from Israeli settlements in the west bank, has the Minister finalised the voluntary guidance that is due to be published for British retailers?

Jim Fitzpatrick: I can advise my hon. Friend, who takes a great interest in the plight of the Palestinian people, as do many of us in the House, that my right

hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today laid a written ministerial statement before the House, announcing that the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs has issued guidance to retailers who wish to respond to consumer demand for greater clarity on the origins of produce from the Palestinian occupied territories. My hon. Friend will be able to obtain that guidance and download it from the DEFRA website.

Tim Farron (Westmorland and Lonsdale) (LD): I spoke yesterday to Peter Thornton, owner of the Cumberland and Westmorland Sausage Co., who like me is appalled that sausages can be processed in this country from imported meat and then labelled as British, even when the animals have been reared under conditions that would be illegal in this country. Does the Minister agree that one of the supermarkets ombudsman's powers should be to enforce both the honest labelling of food and humane animal welfare standards for imported food to match the excellent standards in British farming?

Jim Fitzpatrick: There is clearly a consensus in the House that country of origin labelling should be tighter. I think that the Liberal Democrat spokesman is trying to tease from me what the supermarkets ombudsman should or should not do when he knows that we have yet to announce the conclusions on the position of an ombudsman. That might very well be one area in which such an ombudsman, were one to come about, would take an interest.

Mr. Lindsay Hoyle (Chorley) (Lab): My hon. Friend should recognise not only the importance of country of origin labelling and welfare standards, but the importance of ensuring that when people purchase goods they know how many food miles they have travelled to reach this country, and the importance of recognising the quality of UK farming.

Jim Fitzpatrick: My hon. Friend makes a very good point. British farmers are spending more on higher welfare standards and they want to be supported in that by British retailers. We believe that the British consumer wants to support them and that we should ensure that country of origin labelling is clearer, so that British farming gets the support it deserves.

Nick Herbert (Arundel and South Downs) (Con): When meat can be imported and then labelled as British, it misleads consumers and lets down our farmers. The Secretary of State says that he wants that practice stamped out. In January he said that he was pressing strongly in Europe, and in June he told this House that he was "pushing in Europe". The Minister has just repeated that the Government are working in Europe, so why in European Union negotiations this year did the Government oppose mandatory country of origin labelling?

Jim Fitzpatrick: I do not think that that is the case. The hon. Gentleman knows that competency in those matters rests with the European Union. The Italians have already been taken to task for trying to introduce a compulsory labelling system in Italy, and Ireland and Malta have already been told that that is not possible in their countries, either. We are negotiating in Europe to try to get the best deal possible, which, I have to say, is not the same position as that of the Opposition.

Nick Herbert: I have here the minutes of the European Council's working party on foodstuffs, dated 31 July. Let me tell the Minister what they record: the Italians, the French and nine other member states supported mandatory country of origin labelling; the UK opposed it. We knew that Ministers had failed to deliver honest labelling, but now we know that they actually argued against it. Is not it a disgrace that, for months, this Government have made cynical promises on food labelling which they have not had the slightest intention of keeping?

Jim Fitzpatrick: This is a complex issue, and the position that the hon. Gentleman describes is not that of the Government. We are doing all we can to get more accurate country of origin labelling, and we are working to ensure that the food information regulations, when they are introduced, are as tight as they possibly can be.

Canal Network

7. Alun Michael (Cardiff, South and Penarth) (Lab/Co-op): What assessment he has made of the contribution to the economy of the canal network. [305579]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Huw Irranca-Davies): My Department is working with the Inland Waterways Advisory Council and the waterways authorities to establish and to quantify the wide range of goods and services delivered by inland waterways. That will build on work undertaken by my Department and IWAC to evaluate those benefits. British Waterways' research estimates that its canals alone deliver public benefits of some £500 million per annum and support more than 20,000 jobs in local economies throughout the country.

Alun Michael: I congratulate the Minister on winning the support of the Treasury for ways to maintain the integrity of our invaluable canal network and expand their capacity. Does he agree that, for the future, a third sector model—a sort of National Trust for the canals—would be the best way to harness public enthusiasm for the canals with environmental and economic benefit and the stability that has been achieved in recent years?

Huw Irranca-Davies: Indeed. I pay reciprocal tribute to my right hon. Friend and other hon. Friends who are so assiduous in keeping an eye on the future of British Waterways because of the wide benefits involved, and to the Treasury, which listened to the arguments and responded to them. The third sector model has featured in the Government's announcement, and British Waterways sees the potential for this alongside the exploitation of its property portfolio. It is a fascinating way forward designed to tap into the good will towards the waterways around the country, and I am sure that we will explore it further.

Mr. Michael Jack (Fylde) (Con): The Minister will know from the reports that the Select Committee has done on our canal network of the importance of the property portfolio in contributing income to maintain the good progress that has been made on the historical infrastructure of the canal network. What assurances can he give me that that property portfolio will not in any way be degraded under potential new arrangements and put at risk the income needed to maintain the historical infrastructure of our canal system?

Huw Irranca-Davies: The real turnaround in the waterways has been to do with the success of the exploitation of the property portfolio under the British Waterways model, and we acknowledge that the third sector model referred to by my right hon. Friend would indeed necessitate the use of that property portfolio. It is also to do with the record investment that this Government have put in, with £800 million in grants over the past decade alone. The current state of our waterways and their maintenance, improvement and restoration, is a tribute to the work of British Waterways but also, I have to say, to the importance that this Government have placed on them.

Marine Conservation Zones

8. Ben Chapman (Wirral, South) (Lab): When his Department plans to establish marine conservation zones; and if he will make a statement. [305581]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Huw Irranca-Davies): The first marine conservation zones will be established on 12 January 2010, when the two existing marine nature reserves around Lundy and Skomer automatically become MCZs. Advice on potential sites from Natural England and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee is due by autumn 2011. The Secretary of State will then consult on and designate sites in 2012. MCZs, together with other types of sites, will form an ecologically coherent network of marine protected areas.

Ben Chapman: I welcome the creation of MCZs, with their rounded approach to conservation and the protection of marine life and wildlife. Can the Minister tell me whether the Dee estuary, which is already an important environmental site and a special area of conservation, will be a prime site to be designated?

Huw Irranca-Davies: I am sure that my hon. Friend will join me in welcoming the fact that, today, part of the Dee estuary—one of six sites of community importance in the UK—will be formally designated as a special area of conservation by the Secretary of State. I have written to other hon. Members who will have designations in their areas announced today. The Irish sea conservation zones regional project will consider the conservation potential of various parts of its area, including the River Dee. If there are parts of the Dee that have conservation potential—we already know from designations that there are—that are not already protected by other means, then they will indeed be considered.

Single Payment Scheme

9. Mr. Roger Williams (Brecon and Radnorshire) (LD): How many penalties have been applied in respect of the 2008 single payment scheme; and if he will make a statement. [305582]

The Minister of State, Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Jim Fitzpatrick): Payment reductions have been made in respect of some 7,748 claims under the 2008 single payment scheme. That represents 7.3 per cent. of the claimant population of 106,500.

Mr. Williams: I thank the Minister for that response. The minimum penalty for non-compliance is now 3 per cent. of the total single farm payment for any farmer. One of the most common triggers for a penalty is failure to notify animal movements within three days. That three-day limit is imposed by DEFRA, yet the EU regulation allows up to seven days. Why is the UK gold-plating the European regulations to the disadvantage of our farmers? Why cannot DEFRA allow the EU norm of seven days for notification of animal movements?

Jim Fitzpatrick: As the hon. Gentleman indicates, penalties are imposed for a variety of different reasons. These rules are laid down primarily by EU legislation, and the Rural Payments Agency does not have real discretion in applying them. We have recently made some improvements to the scheme relating to the removal of set-aside and the 10-month rule, and we will obviously continue to do what we can to make the system as beneficial to British farmers as we can.

Nick Herbert (Arundel and South Downs) (Con): Ministers have announced that 80 per cent. of payments under the single payment scheme have been made to farmers, but given that we have estimated overpayments of more than £20 million and underpayments of more than £38 million in the scheme last year, what guarantees can the Minister give farmers that 2009 payments will be accurate?

Jim Fitzpatrick: It is a little churlish of the shadow Secretary of State not to welcome the once again improved performance of the Rural Payments Agency. It has been improving year on year, and this year it managed to pay out £1.3 billion, which is almost twice as much as last year, two weeks earlier than last year to four times as many farmers. From our point of view, that should be complimented and lauded.

Dairy Farmers

10. Mr. Nigel Evans (Ribble Valley) (Con): What estimate he has made of the change in the number of dairy farmers between (a) 2008 and 2009 and (b) 2009 and 2010. [305584]

The Minister of State, Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Jim Fitzpatrick): Although we do not have official figures on the number of dairy farmers, it is believed that the number of dairy farms in England fell by about 5 per cent. between 2008 and 2009. The source of that figure is the cattle tracing system. The trend in UK dairy production is towards fewer, larger herds.

Mr. Evans: The Minister will know that there has been a steep decline over the past 10 years. On Saturday, I was at the Gisburn auction marts to present some certificates to young farmers, who were enthusiastically showing their livestock. Clearly, however, enthusiasm will not be enough to secure the future viability of dairy farming in this country, so what sustainable future can he offer young entrants into dairy farming in the UK?

Jim Fitzpatrick: I think the hon. Gentleman knows that, notwithstanding the concern and anxiety of young farmers coming into the industry, the British dairy sector is fundamentally sound and is expected to do very well over the medium to long term, due to efficiency improvements, innovation and investment in new products. We are much better placed than most of our European competitors, and we will do all we can in Europe and the UK to ensure that we support the British dairy industry.

Mrs. Ann Cryer (Keighley) (Lab): I wonder whether I could confirm what the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) said about dairy farming. My constituency is similar to his—not quite as beautiful, but almost—and for the past two years I have been the president of the Keighley and district agricultural show. I have been made painfully aware of the feelings of many farmers, and I am not sure whether the Minister is aware of how deep those feelings go. Not just they but their children are being forced out of the industry, because there is not a wage to be earned.

Jim Fitzpatrick: Obviously, I commend my hon. Friend for the position that she holds locally. Notwithstanding the reduction in the number of dairy farmers, the volume produced is not far short of where we were 10 years ago—13 billion litres rather than 14 billion—and we are well within quota. I reinforce the point that the UK dairy sector is much better placed than those elsewhere, and the recent trends in prices across the world demonstrate a keen rise in recent months. We want that to continue, because the dairy industry is very important to UK agriculture, making up 18 per cent. of the whole industry.

Mr. Elfyn Llwyd (Meirionnydd Nant Conwy) (PC): A few weeks ago, the awful announcement of Corus closing on Teesside triggered an immediate and proper response and financial intervention from Government. The dairy industry is dying on its feet. The milk price today is lower than the production price, and that cannot be sustained. Will the ombudsman—ombudsperson in the Minister's language—have anything to do with milk prices when examining the supermarkets' actions?

Jim Fitzpatrick: Obviously, if an ombudsman is introduced, it will very much be up to him or her to determine which issues to consider most closely. Ultimately, we believe that markets determine prices. I reiterate that the UK dairy industry is in a much better position than most of our EU competitors. A high-level group has been set up by the European Agriculture Council to examine the problems of the dairy sector, which are not exclusively UK problems and are much more serious in other member states. It is examining the situation to see what assistance can be given to dairy across Europe.

Food Production (Research)

11. Tony Lloyd (Manchester, Central) (Lab): What steps his Department is taking to support research on food production methods. [305585]

The Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Hilary Benn): The Government invest £254 million a year in food and farming research in England and Wales, and £50 million through Department for International Development research overseas. That covers sustainable farming—reducing pollution and greenhouse gas emissions, adapting to climate change and protecting against pests and diseases—and tackling food waste.

Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend mentioned climate change. Obviously, one of the enormous challenges to agricultural systems around the globe is the capacity of climate change to change agriculture totally. Are we satisfied that research in the UK will ensure security of food supply from our domestic producers, come what may with climate change?

Hilary Benn: Adapting to climate change is, as my hon. Friend indicates, an important task for the farming industry, and a significant proportion of the research that we are funding looks at that. To take a practical example, some very good research is being done at East Malling Research into the ability to produce crops using less water, which will benefit horticulture growers in the country.

Mr. Desmond Swayne (New Forest, West) (Con): What will be the impact on food production of the decision to discontinue weed cutting in the lower Avon valley? Is the Secretary of State prepared to meet a delegation of farmers to review the matter?

Hilary Benn: As always, I would be very happy to meet a delegation with the hon. Gentleman.

Food Labelling

12. Mr. David Jones (Clwyd, West) (Con): What recent discussions he has had with ministerial colleagues and representatives of the devolved Administrations on country-of-origin food labelling. [305586]

The Minister of State, Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Jim Fitzpatrick): As I said earlier, I have regular discussions with ministerial colleagues and the Food Standards Agency to ensure that we have tighter, clearer and more accurate origin labelling. I have had no discussions with the devolved Administrations.

Mr. Jones: The labelling arrangements as they stand facilitate not only the potential deception of consumers, but the theft of good will built up by generations of Welsh farmers who produce, for example, Welsh lamb. Does the Minister understand how dismayed those farmers will be when they hear of his rather lame response to the points put to him by my hon. Friend the Member for Arundel and South Downs (Nick Herbert)—that this Government have stood in the way of attempts to change those labelling regulations?

Jim Fitzpatrick: No—as I said a moment ago, we are doing everything we can to protect British produce. I also mentioned that we are celebrating Cornish sardines becoming an EU-protected food name later today. There are 39 other products, and I hope that the hon. Gentleman will come to New Covent Garden to see them and celebrate with us.

Economic Downturn (Rural Economy)

13. Sir Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield) (Con): What recent assessment he has made of the effect of the economic downturn on the rural economy. [305587]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Dan Norris): While the economic downturn is having an impact in both urban and rural areas, Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs analysis of data from other Government Departments and the regional development agencies suggests that, when compared with the economy in urban areas, the picture in rural England so far has been more positive.

Sir Nicholas Winterton: Is the Minister aware that some 200,000 people living in rural areas do not have bank accounts; that mainstream banking facilities in rural areas are closing; that pubs, post offices and schools are closing; and that in some areas, village halls are closing because they cannot be maintained? Will the Minister and his Department undertake a review of the position of rural areas as a result of what has been happening recently, not least the recession?

Dan Norris: That is a very important issue, as I know from my own constituency. In June 2009, the Department for Work and Pensions, which is the lead Department for financial inclusion, and the Commission for Rural Communities jointly published a report on financial inclusion in rural areas, "Rural Money Matters", which found that rural areas did not appear to fare worse than urban areas, although it suggested that analysis on a smaller scale would be likely to identify smaller pockets of significant hardship. I am certainly concerned to keep an eye on that.

Bovine Tuberculosis

14. Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby) (Con): How many cattle were slaughtered because of bovine tuberculosis precautions in the last three months. [305588]

The Minister of State, Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Jim Fitzpatrick): The most recent three-month report available is for the end of August 2009. Between 1 June and 31 August, 5,202 cattle were slaughtered in England for bovine TB control purposes. Figures are provisional and subject to change as more data become available.

Mr. Robathan: I am sure that the Minister is aware of the devastating impact that the slaughter of herds has not only on the farmer's business, but on the farmer and his or her family—it completely destroys their entire life. Furthermore, there are questions about the reliability of the TB tests. How much does the slaughter policy cost and what is the long-term policy, because we cannot just go on slaughtering more and more cattle when it obviously is not working?

Jim Fitzpatrick rose—

Mr. Speaker: Order. One answer will do.

Jim Fitzpatrick: The hon. Gentleman is right. We are sensitive to the tragic impacts on farms, families, regions and areas when TB strikes. The Secretary of State set up the TB eradication group last November. It has met 19 times and has already produced a report that recommended a raft of initiatives to try to deal with this. The problem will only be eradicated in the medium to long term, but I assure the hon. Gentleman that the Department is doing as much as it can to support the group.

Mushroom Composting (Emissions)

15. John Mann (Bassetlaw) (Lab): What recent steps have been taken to reduce the level of noxious emissions from mushroom composting. [305589]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Dan Norris): Mushroom compost-making plants such as that in my hon. Friend's constituency require a permit under the Environmental Permitting Regulations 2007 and local authorities are responsible for enforcing compliance. DEFRA also issues statutory guidance on best available techniques in order to minimise air emissions, including odour.

John Mann: As well as the loss of quality of life in the surrounding houses from the stink from mushroom composting, is the Minister aware of emerging evidence of problems with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, a killer disease, caused by people breathing in the spores? Is it not time that action were taken to close down Tunnel Tech in my constituency?

Dan Norris: I congratulate my hon. Friend on his hard work and conscientiousness in bringing this issue to my and my predecessor's attention. The Health Protection Agency is, as of today, investigating the prevalence of COPD in the locality where he has identified concerns. Further, the agency will also investigate the potential for the composting operation to cause or exacerbate COPD. Those investigations will be in consultation with the local primary care trust and I understand that the local council has already made contact with the HPA.

Financial Inclusion

17. Ann Winterton (Congleton) (Con): What recent assessment he has made of levels of financial inclusion in rural areas. [305591]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Dan Norris): DEFRA works hard across Government to ensure that all Departments take account of specific rural needs in their policies. Indeed, I met with my colleague in the Department for Work and Pensions only last month specifically to discuss rural issues.

Ann Winterton: Picking up a point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Sir Nicholas Winterton), who has pinched yet another question of mine—the problem is that we both come from the same stable—may I reiterate that approximately 200,000 people living in rural England do not have access to broadband facilities? Would that not aid financial inclusion as it provides access to valuable information, online banking, credit union services and other such services?

Dan Norris: Perhaps the hon. Lady should have some more interesting pillow talk than it appears she is having—[Laughter.] She is right: digital communications are crucial in rural areas as well as in urban areas. They make a big difference not least in access to banking and other important services and facilities. We are working hard on that issue and putting extra resources into it, including moneys from heads for which I have specific responsibility.

Food Labelling

19. Mr. David Amess (Southend, West) (Con): What recent discussions he has had with ministerial colleagues on country of origin food labelling. [305593]

The Minister of State, Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Jim Fitzpatrick): I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave a few moments ago. I am delighted to see that we have been joined by the hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Paice). We were a bit worried that since the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds had promoted him to the Privy Council and shadow Secretary of State in its press release this week, he might have been banished by his colleagues.

Mr. Amess: Having heard the exchange between my hon. Friend the Member for Arundel and South Downs (Nick Herbert) and the Minister on this subject, I am confused about the Government's position. Will the Minister now clearly say that he supports the Which? campaign for country-of-origin food labelling and backs British food?

Jim Fitzpatrick: We do support the campaign for clearer country-of-origin labelling. We took a different position from Europe in respect of mandatory labelling for everything. That would have meant labels a foot long on pizzas identifying the source of every bit of pepperoni. We want clearer labelling so that we can have informed consumer choice and support British agriculture.

Mr. David Chaytor (Bury, North) (Lab): Given that meat production generates six times more greenhouse gas emissions than the production of fish, cheese or vegetables, should CO_2 emissions related to food products not also be included in any future labelling system? Would that not be one of the most effective means of adapting to climate change?

Jim Fitzpatrick: I can tell my hon. Friend that agriculture is making great efforts to reduce the impact of the carbon that it produces. It is very supportive of every effort to increase sustainable production and is doing what it can to tackle climate change.

Single Payment Scheme (Mr. Peter Philpot)

20. Mr. John Baron (Billericay) (Con): What progress he has made in resolving the single payment scheme difficulties experienced by Mr. Peter Philpot. [305595]

The Minister of State, Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Jim Fitzpatrick): Mr. Philpot's single payment scheme claims have been complicated by a number of factors, including both corrections to and transfers of entitlements. Progress has been made recently in resolving the underlying problems and the Rural Payments Agency is working to resolve the outstanding issues and to confirm the results to Mr. Philpot as soon as possible.

Mr. Baron: I thank the Minister for that response. He will be aware that, on 29 October in this place, I raised that issue with the Secretary of State, who kindly agreed to consider it if I sent the relevant paperwork. That was sent the same day, but since then neither my constituent nor my office have heard anything. Will Ministers consider the matter again as a matter of urgency? Otherwise, we can only draw the conclusion that the RPA is nothing more than a master-class in misadministration.

Jim Fitzpatrick: I outlined earlier the dramatically improving performance of the RPA, and I hope that the hon. Gentleman will take some reassurance from that. I can only apologise that neither he nor Mr. Philpot have received an update of the position. My responses are obviously researched in preparation for questions, and I am told that progress has been made, but I will find out exactly when Mr. Philpot will be told and communicate that to the hon. Gentleman later today, if possible.

Flood Defences (York)

22. Hugh Bayley (City of York) (Lab): What plans the Environment Agency has for flood defences for the Leeman road area of York. [305597]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Huw Irranca-Davies): I am pleased to say that the Environment Agency is developing a flood alleviation scheme for the Leeman Road-Water End area of York. The scheme will cost approximately £6.5 million and protect 550 properties.

Hugh Bayley: It is nine years since the worst flood on record in York. I remember clearly that night when hundreds of local citizens and soldiers built a mile-long wall of sandbags on top of the flood defences to protect 550 homes on Leeman road. We are still waiting for the flood defences to be improved. When will the Environment Agency consult the public on its plans, and when do we expect the improvements to be built?

Huw Irranca-Davies: My hon. Friend raises an important point, and I am pleased to confirm that the consultation will begin in early 2010 to help to select the best solution. Subject to funding, construction should begin in early 2012. It is important to get the flood defences in place as soon as possible, subject to consultation.

Topical Questions

T1. [305598] Michael Fabricant (Lichfield) (Con): If he will make a statement on his departmental responsibilities.

The Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Hilary Benn): DEFRA's responsibility is to help us all to live within our environmental means.

I wish to inform the House that about 100 farms in Cumbria have been severely affected by the recent flooding, in particular by large quantities of stones deposited on their land. I visited two farms affected last week, and I will shortly announce details of help through the rural development programme for England.

Michael Fabricant: I think that the whole House will agree with the Secretary of State and offer its condolences to farmers in Cumbria. However, on another matter, the United Kingdom—that means the British taxpayer—is currently facing a possible £300 million fine for breaching the air quality directive. London is doing something about it. What will DEFRA do to try to avoid the fine?

The Minister of State, Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Jim Fitzpatrick): DEFRA is working carefully to ensure that we are within the scope of the directives. Only two weeks ago, we hosted an air quality summit with local authorities to look at best practice and to share it with many local authorities. We are in close contact with the Mayor of London, because most of the roads where there are problems are in the London area. We are working with him and his officials to try to ensure that together we can solve the problems in London and avoid the fines that might be coming our way.

Charlotte Atkins (Staffordshire, Moorlands) (Lab): Does the Minister share my relief that British Waterways will retain its property portfolio and the income from it? Does he consider that the third sector model that British Waterways is now pursuing will enable it to work more closely with local communities, such as that around Rudyard lake, which is concerned about sailability and is fighting for facilities for disabled people at the lake?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Huw Irranca-Davies): I was pleased to meet my hon. Friend and members of Rudyard Sailability recently to see the excellent work that they do. Everyone is concerned to ensure a satisfactory resolution as soon as possible, so that the work can continue. The Treasury has acknowledged that the mutual or third sector model is an interesting way forward and it is keen to explore it. I am sure that the Treasury will be seeking views from hon. Members and others on how the idea can be fleshed out, because it offers an exciting prospect for building on the good will that exists towards our waterways.

T3. [305601] Mr. Philip Hollobone (Kettering) (Con): Every year Kettering borough council has to round up about 250 stray dogs from across the borough, most of which do not have collars or microchips. Given the Department's responsibilities for animal welfare, especially in the run-up to Christmas, what more can the Government do to promote responsible dog ownership?

Jim Fitzpatrick: We certainly agree with the hon. Gentleman that we should do everything that we can to achieve responsible dog ownership. I visited the Dogs Trust re-homing centre in Harefield to support its annual campaign, which raises awareness with the message that a dog is for life, not just for Christmas. There are dogs charities and dog organisations all over the UK trying to get the message home, and we want to do the same. Dog licensing did not work. Chipping is a more modern, technologically superior, less expensive and less bureaucratic system, and it may be something that we want to consider in future. Chipping is not under consideration at the moment, but one can never close the door entirely, particularly to improvements in the welfare of animals.

T2. [305599] Jessica Morden (Newport, East) (Lab): The Environment Agency is running an event today to raise awareness of flooding in my constituency. Although that is a welcome initiative, does the Minister agree that sustained and long-term investment in flood defences is what will really bring peace of mind to my constituents?

Huw Irranca-Davies: Indeed. I congratulate my hon. Friend on promoting the use of forestry and woodlands for a variety of purposes. We have come to recognise that forestries have not only an intrinsic value, but a value in respect of climate change, carbon and flood alleviation. Forestries also have a prominent role to play in many other respects. I applaud the work that she does to promote those ways forward.

T4. [305602] Mr. Roger Williams (Brecon and Radnorshire) (LD): Today many Agriculture Ministers will be meeting in Paris to discuss the regulation of agricultural markets and the future of the common agricultural policy. I understand that Conservative shadow Ministers recently visited New Zealand to consider the future of farming without subsidies. Can the Secretary of State explain his position on the future of the common agricultural policy and whether it would include an element of co-funding or direct payment by nation states?

Hilary Benn: The UK will be represented at today's meeting in Paris, but no Ministers are there for the simple reason that Ministers are here in the Chamber answering questions. Our policy on reform of the common agricultural policy has been set out clearly in the past. As the hon. Gentleman knows, we have been a leading advocate of reform and a strong supporter of a shift in funding towards pillar two and agri-environment schemes, for the reasons that we have already covered in questions so far.

Mr. Michael Clapham (Barnsley, West and Penistone) (Lab): My right hon. Friend will be aware that windrow composting is now widespread, with more than 40 sites throughout the UK. However, it presents a danger: it is smelly and dirty, and it involves the release of Aspergillus fungus spores, which are a danger to health. What is he doing to encourage local authorities to join together to provide ways forward for other energy systems, such as the anaerobic digestion system? Is that something that he is working on?

Hilary Benn: It certainly is. I am aware of the close interest that my hon. Friend takes in the issue that he has raised. We doubled the incentives for anaerobic digestion under the renewables obligation system from 1 April this year. I am putting in about £10 million for demonstration projects, and when feed-in tariffs come in, they will add a further incentive. The House recognises that we are talking about a technology of the future. It is about to take off, and I encourage farmers and others who are responsible for green waste to look into it.

T6. [305604] Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby) (Con): One question only this time, Mr. Speaker. The British people are rightly concerned about animal welfare, and will broadly welcome the phasing out of battery cages in 2012. However, they do not wish to see imports of eggs and other chicken products from countries outside the EU that still raise animals in poor conditions and in batteries. What will the Government do to prevent the import of eggs and other chicken products that have been produced using poor welfare standards outside the EU?

Jim Fitzpatrick: As I discussed with the egg and poultry conference about two weeks ago, our position is still to hold firmly to the 2012 ban on battery cages. I was asked what plan B was. Plan B is to lobby the Commission to ensure that there are no imports of eggs from countries with lower standards, and to introduce a new marking number—No. 4—for those eggs that fall below standard. That is plan B, but we have not yet given up on plan A, which is to hold firm, and hope that the Commission holds firm, to the ban on battery cages that will come in in 2012.

T5. [305603] Tony Lloyd (Manchester, Central) (Lab): May I ask my hon. Friends about insect pollinator research funding? In particular, can they allay the fears of those involved that the method of assessment of such research projects could lead to big gaps in essential research areas such as husbandry for bee keeping and in the money being devoted to honey bees and bees generally? We do not need elegant academic research; we need a practical result that will save the honey bee.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Dan Norris): I certainly can reassure my hon. Friend that the Government take the health of Britain's bees and other pollinators very seriously indeed. The decline in bee health is a complex issue with no single cause. The insect pollinator initiative consortium has now considered the expressions of interest received and has invited four research bids for the £10 million that has been made available. It will make its final decisions on allocations early next year. In the interim, it is crucial that all interested parties play an active role in DEFRA's healthy bees plan in order to tackle this hugely important and complex issue. They have a lot to say, and lots of expertise, and we want to hear from them.

T7. [305605] Mr. David Evennett (Bexleyheath and Crayford) (Con): I met representatives of the Environment Agency this week to discuss flood and river issues affecting my constituency, and I was advised that, despite efforts to tackle domestic and commercial waste dumping, there are still problems with people dumping waste in our rivers. What recent assessment has the Minister made of this problem, and what action are the Government taking to try to tackle it?

Huw Irranca-Davies: The hon. Gentleman raises an important point. There is so much good work being carried out by the Environment Agency and by volunteer groups around the country, including in my own constituency. I am sure that, like me, he has spent many happy weekends knee deep in the waters—subject to the Environment Agency's approval, of course. I will happily look at the issue that he has raised and drop him a line to give him the state of progress.

T9. [305607] Hugh Bayley (City of York) (Lab): Since I was first elected as MP for the City of York, the Minister's Department has moved hundreds of jobs to its offices at Kings Pool in my city. There is now a major development site right next to Kings Pool that would allow DEFRA to build additional office space if it wanted to transfer more staff from London and the south-east to the north of England. Will the Secretary of State ask his director of estates to look at the real estate possibilities in York, and consider whether they would help the Department to deal with its staff relocation plans?

Hilary Benn: I promise to take careful note of the kind bid that my hon. Friend has made. Perhaps it will be the first of many.

T8. [305606] Paul Rowen (Rochdale) (LD): The Commons Act 2006 placed additional duties and responsibilities on those who hold commons rights. It has been brought to my attention that the lord of the manor of Rochdale, who is a New Zealand resident, has claimed title to considerably more common land than he is entitled to. Will the Minister undertake to look into this with the Land Valuation Office? Residents in the Littleborough area of my constituency are seriously concerned about the effect that that decision is having on them.

Hilary Benn: Very gladly. If the hon. Gentleman will give me further details, I will do precisely that.

David Taylor (North-West Leicestershire) (Lab/Co-op): What are the Government doing to encourage the producers and retailers of halal meat to increase the use of pre-stunning, which is compliant with the Koran and which would have significant welfare, economic and political benefits?

Jim Fitzpatrick: There are no plans to change the regulations on religious slaughter as they stand at the moment. My hon. Friend and I have had a meeting with some of his constituents in the past month to discuss this issue in depth. We obviously encourage support for the regulations as they stand, but there are no plans to change the status quo.

Mr. Mark Lancaster (North-East Milton Keynes) (Con): The proposed Milton Keynes-Bedford canal enjoys cross-party support and will bring many benefits to the region. It has interesting financial arrangements and could well go ahead, but it is stalling at the moment. Will the Minister use his influence to get the project moving again?

Huw Irranca-Davies: For obvious reasons we try not to intervene in individual projects, recognising that British Waterways has a good overview and has achieved a lot in the past decade in opening up new stretches of canals that had fallen into disrepair. I wish the project well and if the hon. Gentleman writes to me, I shall take a look at it. I applaud the enthusiasm of the people who want to open that stretch. We have many such instances across the country, showing why the strength and enthusiasm of volunteers are such a bedrock of the British Waterways network.

Dan Rogerson (North Cornwall) (LD): Many farmers are challenging new maps from the Rural Payments Agency. Will the Minister consider looking at an RPA presence on the ground so that a more constructive process for challenge could be developed, along the lines of moving towards stewardship applications with which farmers seem much happier?

Jim Fitzpatrick: The progress on re-mapping the country is steady. Earlier this week I chaired a meeting between the RPA, the National Farmers Union, the Country Landowners Agency and the Tenant Farmers Association, which are relatively pleased with the progress that has been made on a complex issue. There are deadlines in January that we have to meet and we are working as hard as we can to ensure that that takes place, so that we can pre-populate the maps for next year's claims. At the same time, we welcome the progress made in the payments for 2009.

Mr. Lindsay Hoyle (Chorley) (Lab): Will my hon. Friend give an updated statement on the surface water charges that affect sports grounds, churches and charities?

Huw Irranca-Davies: I am pleased to give an update. My hon. Friend and others who have lobbied assiduously on that matter will be pleased to know that the issue appears in our Flood and Water Management Bill. With the support of this House and the other place, we will get that measure on to the statute book and protect scouts associations, churches, community halls and others.

Mr. Michael Jack (Fylde) (Con): In light of the outbreak of the fatal disease swine fever in Russia, what steps is the Secretary of State taking to re-examine our bio-security arrangements?

Hilary Benn: The right hon. Gentleman raises an important point and he will know that we are always vigilant. The teams monitor carefully what is happening elsewhere and he can rest assured that we will do what is required in light of the evidence. If he would be interested—I am sure he would—I will be happy to write to him further.

Charles Hendry (Wealden) (Con): The Secretary of State may be aware that there is great local concern that sites have been identified for potential land raise facilities for waste disposal on the boundary between my constituency and that of the hon. Member for Lewes (Norman Baker). Will he give a clear statement that he believes that such approaches are increasingly out of date and unacceptable and that we should be looking for approaches that generate energy from waste, rather than just dumping it, often in inappropriate locations?

Hilary Benn: I agree with the hon. Gentleman completely. We need to get our landfill down, which is why—because of the landfill levy—domestic recycling rates have risen from 8 to 37 per cent. in the past 12 years. I shall be consulting after the turn of the year on whether we should ban certain products from landfill. Food waste is a good example; why put it in landfill when we could turn it into energy?

Business of the House

11.33 am

Sir George Young (North-West Hampshire) (Con): May I ask the Leader of the House to give us the business for next week?

The Leader of the House of Commons (Ms Harriet Harman): The business for the forthcoming week is:

MONDAY 14 DECEMBER—Second Reading of the Personal Care at Home Bill, followed by proceedings on the Consolidated Fund Bill.

TUESDAY 15 DECEMBER—Second Reading of the Flood and Water Management Bill, followed by a motion to approve a statutory instrument relating to Welsh language.

WEDNESDAY 16 DECEMBER—Motion on the Christmas recess Adjournment.

The provisional business for the week commencing 4 January will include:

MONDAY 4 JANUARY—The House will not be sitting.

TUESDAY 5 JANUARY—Second Reading of the Fiscal Responsibility Bill.

WEDNESDAY 6 JANUARY—Consideration of an allocation of time motion, followed by all stages of the Video Recordings Bill.

THURSDAY 7 JANUARY—A general debate on the pre-Budget report.

The provisional business for the week commencing 11 January will include:

MONDAY 11 JANUARY—Second Reading of the Children, Schools and Families Bill.

I should also like to inform the House that the business in Westminster Hall for 7 January will be:

THURSDAY 7 JANUARY—A debate from the Public Administration Committee on "Lobbying: Access and Influence in Whitehall".

Through you, Mr. Speaker, may I also offer my best wishes for Christmas and the new year to all hon. Members, and on behalf of all hon. Members, may I offer our best wishes for Christmas and the new year to the Clerks of the House, the Officers of the House, catering teams, the cleaners, the police, the doorkeepers, and all who work so hard to keep the House running smoothly? I think that everyone deserves a very good Christmas and new year.

Sir George Young: May I thank the Leader of the House for giving us next week's business?

I warmly welcome the change from the right hon. and learned Lady's initial refusal to allow time for a dedicated debate on the pre-Budget report. The House will want to discuss the issues raised by the Chancellor's statement of yesterday, and we will particularly welcome the chance to highlight that the Government's pay freeze will hit the poorest public sector workers, unlike our proposals, which excluded the million lowest paid employees. This debate will also give Ministers the opportunity to explain the cost to the NHS of the rise in national insurance.

If I am on a winning streak in asking for debates, may I repeat my other request, for a debate on Afghanistan? I appreciate the efforts that the right hon. and learned Lady is making to ensure that every week we get an opportunity to question Ministers on Afghanistan, but does she appreciate that Members are looking for a more substantial opportunity to discuss Government policy on Afghanistan, particularly in advance of the proposed London summit at the end of January, so can we have a full day's debate, in Government time, early in the new year?

I welcome today's written ministerial statement from the Leader of the House on the Kelly report. We are relieved that the Government have finally accepted our arguments that legislation is needed now to implement Kelly in full. Can the right hon. and learned Lady give an indication of when this proposed legislation will be brought forward and whether it will take the form of a stand-alone Bill or an amendment to existing legislation?

When may we debate the motion on private Members' Bills, which has been languishing on the Order Paper for more than a week? Unless we debate and resolve the issue soon, we will run the risk of not debating any private Members' Bills at all in this Session.

May we have a debate on yesterday's report from the Public Administration Committee on the unsatisfactory handling of the special report from the ombudsman on Equitable Life? As the Committee recommends, a mechanism needs to be found so that we can debate findings from the ombudsman without having to rely on either Government or Opposition motions. Does the right hon. and learned Lady agree that it would be sensible for the Government to respond to that recommendation during the debate on the Wright Committee report on Commons reform?

In the same vein, when will we debate and vote on the Procedure Committee's report on the election of Deputy Speakers? This is an initiative from you, Mr Speaker, which requires action if we are to get a new system in place before the beginning of the next Parliament. The Procedure Committee has said that it is seeking the endorsement of the House. When might it secure it?

May we have a debate on the Copenhagen agreement early in the new year? This is an historic moment, which we hope will deliver a real and meaningful settlement. Given that, will the right hon. and learned Lady ensure that the House is able to debate the conclusions of Copenhagen in full, and its implications for the UK?

Finally, as the right hon. and learned Lady has made clear, astonishingly, this is the last business question before Christmas, so, despite the fact that many people have yet to send a single Christmas card, I, too, would like to take this opportunity to offer you, Mr. Speaker, and all hon. Members including the right hon. and learned Lady, as well as all the staff and Officers, from the Clerks to the caterers, the cleaners, the police and the doorkeepers, a very happy Christmas and new year.

Ms Harman: I am happy to accede to the right hon. Gentleman's request for a debate on the pre-Budget report, and I have announced that. We are also looking for an opportunity to hold a debate on Afghanistan, and, given the context of the London summit, it is obviously even more important that the House has an opportunity to debate the issue, as well as hearing statements from Ministers, which have been made regularly, and hearing from the Prime Minister at Prime Minister's Question Time when he answers on the subject.

The right hon. Gentleman made a point about the Kelly report and legislation to take forward Sir Christopher Kelly's proposals. We all recognise that the House had to deal with the public anger and concern about the abuse of the allowance system by some Members. The House did not sit back waiting for Kelly. We have already substantially changed the allowance system and legislated for the establishment of the Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority. As the right hon. Gentleman recognises, there will be further legislation, particularly to make it the responsibility of IPSA to decide Members of Parliament's pay and pensions. We had, of course, already voted not to decide our own pay, but we will now bring forward legislation to put that on a statutory footing. I am not yet in a position to tell him and the House whether that legislation will stand alone or be added to existing legislation, but, whatever the vehicle, we are determined, and the whole House is agreed, that we should go forward on that basis. There is, as he said, a motion outstanding for debate on private Members' business. It is important that that is taken forward, and it will be.

On Equitable Life, as the Chief Secretary to the Treasury set out in the Opposition day debate on Equitable Life, Sir John Chadwick will produce an interim report by the end of the year, and a final report in the spring. He is hard at work on that very important business.

The election of Deputy Speakers has been considered by the Wright Committee. The Committee has also considered how the House chooses the Chairs and members of Select Committees, how the public can provide input to debates in the House of Commons through petitions and how House business is managed. I have written to Opposition parties about those issues, because how we should make progress on them is a House matter; it is not for Government diktat. We want to achieve consensus and we want to bring forward a motion on which both sides of the House can agree. I have asked Opposition parties to give me their views on all the issues that the Wright Committee has dealt with, so that I can introduce promptly, within the time limit that is expected of the Government, a motion that will achieve consensus, so that we can go forward with that important Committee's proposals.

On the right hon. Gentleman's festive comments, did he say that he had not sent a single Christmas card yet?

Sir George Young: I said that some people have not.

Ms Harman: Well, it could be said that the shadow Leader of the House is not one of the most cheerful Members of the House—[Interruption.] No, he is not. However, this is the time for Christmas parties. Even though it has been a very difficult year for the House and for the economy, we should not ignore the festive season altogether. With that in mind, I have been thinking about what we should all sing if we were to have a karaoke party, and I have allocated to the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) the karaoke number, "Remember You're a Womble". As the shadow Leader of the House is really the Morrissey of the House, I have chosen for him the Smiths number, "Heaven Knows I'm Miserable Now", and for myself, I have taken a Billy Joel number, "Uptown Girl".

Mr. David Heath (Somerton and Frome) (LD): Ho, ho, ho, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter.] May I wish you and all our staff and Officers of the House a Happy Christmas?

Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby) (Con): And us?

Mr. Heath: And all Members of the House, including even the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Robathan: Thank you very much.

Mr. Heath: I, too, welcome the fact that there is to be a debate on the pre-Budget report. I fear that it is unravelling at such speed that we may have to have an alternative pre-Budget report before the original is even debated to correct some of the errors in the first one. Nevertheless, that debate is welcome.

On private Members' Bills—here, I declare an interest—I am very keen, obviously, that time should be set aside for private Members' Bills and that the resolutions should be considered. However, that is one of the matters discussed in the Wright Committee report, which suggests an alternative arrangement for dealing with private Members' Bills. I cannot for the life of me see what the problem is, given that the Committee has produced a draft resolution, on page 94, to be put before the House. It is not for me, or the right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir George Young) or the right hon. and learned Lady to decide what is appropriate; it is for the House to decide. The Wright Committee has set out its draft proposals. Why cannot they now be put before the House?

There will be a debate on universities after today's statements. No doubt, the issue of the fiasco and chaos of the Student Loans Company will be considered, but it would be appropriate to have a statement from the Secretary of State to tell us just what has been happening. More importantly, what is being done about the company's senior management and chief executive? They have let down students across the country, who now find themselves in extreme difficulty. Will there be a statement to that effect?

May we have a debate on what I can only term abuse of section 44 of the Terrorism Act 2000 by police? It is not satisfactory that people up and down the country are being stopped and told that they cannot take photographs—and if they have taken photographs, they are asked to delete them from their cameras—apparently on the whim of police officers. So far, people have been told that they cannot take a picture of Christ Church in the City, St. Paul's, railway wagons, Christmas lights—and of Mick's Plaice, a fish and chip shop in Chatham! Such photography is not prime terrorist activity. I honestly think that the police need some education about the very strong powers that we in this House give them, to make sure that they are not used improperly.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover) (Lab): You didn't say that during the miners' strike.

Mr. Heath: I did, actually.

Lastly, I know that the Leader of the House is committed to the use of plain English in enactments and Government pronouncements. She has said so many times and has gone to great trouble to provide easy-to-read translations of what might otherwise be opaque in the Bills under her own control. However, may I draw her attention to the statement made earlier this week about smarter Government? I shall read out one of the conclusions of the attached paper. It states:

"We will align the different sector-specific performance management frameworks across key local agencies…thereby increasing the focus on indicators relating to joint outcomes."

[Mr. Heath]

Does that make any sense at all? I do not believe that it does. This management-speak is nonsense, so will the Leader of the House eradicate it from Government business?

Again, happy Christmas!

Ms Harman: On the pre-Budget report, there will be a debate when the House returns in the new year, but there is also Treasury questions next week and hon. Members can ask questions and raise issues then.

On the Wright Committee report, I think that it is perverse of the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) to object to being consulted. I will bring the proceedings before the House, but I am consulting the Opposition Front-Bench teams. Of course it is a matter for the whole House, and for Back Benchers on all sides as well as for those on the Front Benches, but it is not unreasonable to give the Front-Bench teams an opportunity to give their views as to what should be brought to the House. However, if they do not want to be consulted, they do not need to respond. I have given them until 16 December.

The debate this afternoon on students and universities will provide an opportunity to discuss the issues that the hon. Gentleman mentioned.

The hon. Gentleman raised concerns about terrorism, and I can tell him that there are Home Office questions next week when they could be discussed. He also made a point about the smarter Government publication and plain English. If he could pass me a copy of what he read out, I shall work out a translation for him before the end of business questions this morning.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Speaker: Order. No fewer than 23 hon. and right hon. Members are seeking to catch my eye. As always, I would like to get everybody in. Members will be conscious that there is a ministerial statement to follow, and that underlines the importance of short questions and answers.

Natascha Engel (North-East Derbyshire) (Lab): May I add my voice to those hon. Members calling for a debate on the parliamentary reform Select Committee, of which I was a member? I urge my right hon. and learned Friend to read the minority report submitted by myself and the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson), which at least indicates that there was no consensus on the Committee. I think that a debate would show that, although we were a minority on the Committee, we would be in the majority in the House.

Ms Harman: I thank my hon. Friend for her work on the Committee. The issues that she teased out in her minority report show that although the principles and objectives are clear and shared by everyone, how we put them into practice is far from straightforward and needs proper consideration.

Mr. Hugo Swire (East Devon) (Con): Given that the country is bust and there is now no money for anything, that the recent local government reorganisation in Cornwall trebled in cost from £20 million to £60 million and that my hon. Friend the Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Robert Neill) has said that any legislation enacted by this Government to reorganise local government, particularly in Devon, would be changed by legislation by an incoming Tory Government, will the Leader of the House have a word with her colleague the Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government and ask him to come to the House before Christmas to make a statement to end the uncertainties surrounding local government reorganisation in Devon and elsewhere?

Ms Harman: We have had a debate on local government this week, but I shall ask the Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. David Crausby (Bolton, North-East) (Lab): Will my right hon. and learned Friend ensure that we have an early debate on defence procurement, so that Britain's world-class defence industrial base will get the full benefit in these difficult economic times of the Ministry of Defence's substantial budget?

Ms Harman: This is of importance to not only the MOD, but the regions from which our procurement is obtained and the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills. I shall raise my hon. Friend's comments with the Ministers concerned.

Sir Patrick Cormack (South Staffordshire) (Con): Would the Leader of the House ensure that the Wright report and the minority report are debated side by side with the report on the election of Deputy Speakers? Could we have a full day for that, not one that is delayed by statements, so that many people can take part in the debate?

Ms Harman: I take note of those points, which are seriously made. I should say that we often decide that we really want to protect a day, and on such days, for example, Opposition days, we never want to put on Government statements. That is because our doing so encroaches on the Opposition's time for the subject that they have chosen for debate. Sometimes statements are made because of a genuine emergency and we have to bring them to the House. Obviously, I want to ensure that there is a full day's debate on the Wright report, but I cannot guarantee that a statement will not need to be made to the House.

Mr. Denis MacShane (Rotherham) (Lab): People from Toyoda Gosei, the Japanese car parts factory in my constituency, wrote to me recently saying that they had 30 different nationalities employed there. Could we have a debate on hiring practices, because although I am sure that its hiring practices are completely non-discriminatory, there is widespread concern in south Yorkshire that employers are perhaps not giving a fair crack to local Yorkshiremen and women, and we need to discuss with employers how to bring more of the local work force into active work?

Ms Harman: It is important not only that we have training, high skill levels and the appropriate skill levels in the local community for the jobs that are available, but that those jobs are made available through the jobcentres and that the regional development agencies work with employers to make sure that agencies that do not just choose workers from abroad are used. My right hon. Friend makes an important point and it is being taken forward.

Mr. Michael Fallon (Sevenoaks) (Con): May I welcome the Leader of the House's assurance that the debate on the Wright Committee's proposals will not be delayed by Front-Bench discussions? Does she intend that debate to take place before the end of January?

Ms Harman: As I told the House at last week's business questions, there is a time period within which it is expected that the Government would respond to Select Committee reports, and we expect to respond within that time period. In this case, I believe that that more or less finishes at the end of January, but we are not waiting until the last moment and we will respond when we can, after we are satisfied that there is a reasonable consensus as a basis on which we can then debate the report and reach agreement.

Julie Morgan (Cardiff, North) (Lab): I am sure that my right hon. and learned Friend is aware of the report that was published today about the health needs of children in immigration detention centres. I know that the Government have improved the situation, but recently a child in my constituency was badly emotionally damaged by the experience of going into a detention centre. When can we have a debate in which we can consider ending the practice of families with children being put into immigration detention centres?

Ms Harman: We want to make absolutely sure that children do not suffer just because their parents have not abided by the immigration rules and regulations. Perhaps my hon. Friend will have the opportunity to raise her question during Home Office questions next week.

Damian Green (Ashford) (Con): The Leader of the House is wrong in her choice of karaoke song—surely the appropriate Smiths song for my right hon. Friend the shadow Leader of the House is "This Charming Man".

Could the Leader of the House organise a debate in Government time on immigration policy, specifically so that the House can debate the Home Secretary's interesting remarks last night? He said that the Conservative policy of an immigration cap was a "legitimate option" within the debate. I am glad that the Home Secretary is coming to recognise the wisdom of Conservative immigration policy, as all reasonable people do. If he is going to do a U-turn, the whole House would want him to do so in this place so that we could welcome it warmly.

Mr. Speaker: That question was, frankly, too long, albeit that it was amusing in parts. I hope that others will not seek to imitate the Green model.

Ms Harman: The Home Secretary has certainly not done a U-turn. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will be able to raise that point with the Home Secretary in Home Office questions next week. I am going to look at the hon. Gentleman in a different light after he has shown himself to be a true Smiths fan.

Mr. Barry Sheerman (Huddersfield) (Lab/Co-op): My right hon. and learned Friend will know that in this very rich city of London this Christmas will be a hard one for many people. Is she aware that the centre for runaway children run by the St. Christopher's charity is in danger of closing down? Could we have a debate on this? The fact is that we should keep this precious resource going and that St. Christopher's does a wonderful job for runaway children—not only those from London, but those from all our constituencies up and down the country.

Ms Harman: Obviously everybody is concerned at all times of the year, but particularly at Christmas, about children who are not with their family and about whom their family are desperately concerned, and about what provision exists for such children. I shall raise the point about St. Christopher's with the relevant Minister.

Sir Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield) (Con): The future integrity, independence and authority of this House depends upon the implementation of the proposals of the Reform of the House of Commons Committee and the Procedure Committee. Will the Leader of the House give me and the House a firm commitment that these proposals will be decided on a genuine free vote, unencumbered by the Whips on either side of the House?

Ms Harman: I do not think that the hon. Gentleman should foster any sense of apocalypse about this. We should all seek to work together to maintain the integrity, independence and authority of the House. Of course we will have a debate on the Wright Committee report, and it will be on a free vote. Members should jealously guard their free vote on House issues.

Mr. Terry Rooney (Bradford, North) (Lab): On the Wright report, may I point out that it is important to remember that this is a political institution, that political parties exist for a reason and that this House would never ever survive a day's business without the workings of the usual channels and the Whips Offices? Will my right hon. and learned Friend bear that in mind in her deliberations?

Ms Harman: It is also worth our reminding ourselves that we are all elected on a manifesto, whereby we make promises to our constituents that if we get elected we will strive to keep our promises. One thing that would undermine our democracy is if we got elected to this House and then did not deliver on our manifesto commitments. That is why we have a majority Government, rather than a minority Government, and why it is the job of the Government to deliver their business in order to keep their manifesto promises.

Miss Anne McIntosh (Vale of York) (Con): On environmental protection, is the Leader of the House aware that today the Flood Risk Regulations 2009, statutory instrument No. 3042, come into force? They have not been consulted on or scrutinised by this House or issued to all the relevant parties. Will she issue an apology to the House? Will she castigate the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs for this? Will she assure us that these regulations will not come into force today, and that they will be properly scrutinised and properly consulted upon? They form part of the Flood and Water Management Bill—she just announced that it will have its Second Reading next week. The DEFRA Whip on the Treasury Bench—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am grateful to the hon. Lady. I think that there was a request for a statement next week somewhere in her remarks, but I did not readily identify it. I call the Leader of the House.

Ms Harman: We have just had DEFRA questions. I can reassure the hon. Lady, if she did not manage to raise her question with DEFRA Ministers, that all procedures were followed. Anyway, there is a debate on flood and water management next week, in which she might seek to catch Mr. Speaker's eye and to make her comments.

Mr. David Drew (Stroud) (Lab/Co-op): Will the Leader of the House pass on my thanks to the Chancellor for making a statement on getting serious about tax avoidance? One can hear the breaking of glass in News Corporation and the Telegraph Media Group. With that in mind, there is no better place to start than media groups to ensure that they pay an appropriate amount of tax in this country. Will she ensure that that is taken forward?

Ms Harman: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. It is important for companies and corporations to pay their taxes in this country and for individuals to do so, too. There is a particular issue for us in the House of Commons and for people who seek to come into the House of Commons. It used to be said that there should be no taxation without representation. We raise the taxes—we pass the Finance Acts—and so we should turn it around and say that there should be no representation without taxation. The idea that someone should purport to come into this House to make other people pay taxes while saying for tax purposes that they do not live in this country is bizarre.

Mr. Andrew Pelling (Croydon, Central) (Ind): Will the Leader of the House, in her busy schedule before Christmas, take the time to draw the Foreign Secretary's attention to early-day motions on the situation in Kurdistan, and particularly the adversely altered imprisonment arrangements for Abdullah Ocalan? If he were to pass away in Turkish custody, the security of us all would be greatly compromised.

Ms Harman: I know that the hon. Gentleman is concerned about this matter. There will be an opportunity next week in the pre-recess Adjournment debate, if he thinks that it is appropriate, for him to set out those points in more detail.

Mrs. Ann Cryer (Keighley) (Lab): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the wonderful Christmas party in your apartments yesterday. It was much appreciated by my granddaughter.

May I ask for an early debate based on early-day motion 346, on organ donors?

[That this House notes that 10-year-old George Higginson, who was tragically killed in a road traffic accident, donated his organs as gifts of life to five other people; wishes to pay tribute to the courage and selflessness of his parents who continue to support and promote organ donation; and supports Mr Higginson's suggestion that arrangements be made at polling stations to give people an opportunity to register as an organ donor whilst voting at the forthcoming general election.]

It was tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale (Geraldine Smith). The final sentence reads that

"arrangements be made at polling stations to give people an opportunity to register as an organ donor whilst voting at the forthcoming general election."

From my experience of bereavement because of a sudden accidental death, I know that it would certainly have helped me to have known that my late husband's organs had been used to save the lives of other people.

Ms Harman: My hon. Friend makes a very important point. I said to the House last week that we would look into whether information about signing up to the register of organ donors could be made available at polling stations. I am interested in my hon. Friend's comments about the Christmas party. Did they have karaoke at it, I wonder?

Adam Afriyie (Windsor) (Con): This is not a politically sexy subject, but it is an essential one that underpins freedom of speech, innovation and research, and societal change. Scientists and academics have a duty to criticise publicly the poor research and unsubstantiated claims of others in the public domain, but it seems to me that they are often silenced through fear and threat of lengthy and costly libel actions. May I urge the right hon. and learned Lady to hold a debate as soon as possible on UK libel laws?

Ms Harman: I shall raise the hon. Gentleman's point with the Justice Secretary.

David Taylor (North-West Leicestershire) (Lab/Co-op): The shadow Leader of the House's song should, of course, be "Young Love".

May we have a debate on the private finance initiative? As each successive report comes out, it appears that it is prohibitive in cost, flawed in concept and intolerable in consequence for our nation. With hundreds of billions of pounds stored up over the generations, it would help if we were to reform or abolish it. It would certainly assist the Chancellor in bridging the various financial gaps that he described to the House yesterday.

Ms Harman: The private finance initiative is massively changed from when it was originally embarked on. The reality is that in every constituency throughout the country we have really important capital projects—hospitals, schools and housing—that have been brought forward earlier because of the PFI system.

The question gives me an opportunity to reply to the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath), who asked me to translate "Putting the Frontline First". On his point—I will not read it all out again—the quotation basically concerned the fact that performance management indicators should be common across the different Departments, rather than each Department having a different performance management indicator, pulling in different directions. It is really about partnership working towards common objectives, which is probably gobbledegook in itself.

Dr. Julian Lewis (New Forest, East) (Con): During the holocaust, a Foreign Office official infamously wrote a minute in which he referred to the time being wasted by what he called "wailing Jews". When Mr. Rowan Laxton, the head of the south Asia desk at the Foreign Office, was convicted in September of an outburst in which he referred to "f— Jews" and was fined £350, his barrister said that that was "going to have very grave and long-term consequences"

and that

"whatever happens in court is secondary to the effect it will have on his career and reputation".

Given that he has been reinstated in the Foreign Office and appointed to a new job and that that job has not been revealed, may we have a statement confirming that the job will have nothing whatsoever to do with the middle east?

Ms Harman: In the sort of situation that the hon. Gentleman has raised, which concerns an individual employee of the civil service, I am not in a position to answer the question. However, as regards his overall point about the horror of anti-Semitism, I know that I can look to him to support the measures that we will introduce in the Equality Bill to give proper, strong legal protection so that people are not discriminated against or harassed on the grounds of their religion.

Fiona Mactaggart (Slough) (Lab): Is the Leader of the House aware that every day this week, thanks to your good offices, Mr. Speaker, school choirs have been able to sing in Portcullis House? At 1 o'clock today, Priory school from my constituency will be singing. Will my right hon. and learned Friend be able to join me in the audience and encourage other Members to be there, too?

Mr. Lindsay Hoyle (Chorley) (Lab): They are up against the quality of Chorley yesterday.

Ms Harman: I, too, pay tribute to all the schools who have come to Portcullis House, to you, Mr. Speaker, for initiating this, and to those hon. Members who have brought their schools here. I thank my hon. Friend for the invitation and I shall go.

Mr. Nigel Evans (Ribble Valley) (Con): Chorley school was excellent yesterday—I heard them.

Is it possible to have an early debate on the importance of community hospitals? Clitheroe hospital in my constituency provides a tremendous service to local people. A lot of rural villages use it and, as the Leader of the House knows, we do not have the same bus service as everyone else and a lot of people do not have access to cars to be able to go to the main hospitals. It was due to be replaced with a £12 million new hospital, but that has now been frozen while the trust considers the availability and provision of new services. Please may we have a debate on this subject? It is supposed to be a national health service that also includes rural areas.

Ms Harman: Absolutely it should. People locally, through the local health service organisations in consultation with hon. Members, patients' organisations and the local community should decide where those services are put. I suggest that if the hon. Gentleman is not happy with the proposals, he should write to the Secretary of State and ask to meet him to discuss this.

Mr. Mark Lancaster (North-East Milton Keynes) (Con): May we have a debate on sentencing so that we can discuss the case of Gregory Davis, who killed my constituent, Dorothy Rogers, by stabbing her 31 times and then chased her son, Michael, into the school playground and killed him, too? Does the Leader of the House at least understand the anger of my constituents at the news that after just six years, Mr. Davis is now enjoying unsupervised day visits to Oxford and could be released within weeks?

Ms Harman: Everyone will have absolute heartfelt sympathy for the relatives of Dorothy Rogers and her son Michael and will appreciate the concerns that have been raised by the hon. Gentleman on behalf of his constituents about the situation as regards Gregory Davis. Because the hon. Gentleman was able to give me notice of his question, I have already talked about this matter with the Justice Secretary, who has been looking into it this morning. He is happy to invite the hon. Gentleman to a meeting on this subject. The sentence was handed down by the courts but Gregory Davis was then transferred to a psychiatric facility. I think that we can all understand the concerns and a meeting with the Justice Secretary will be very important.

Mr. Peter Bone (Wellingborough) (Con): Under Standing Order No. 14, the Government are required to bring forward 13 days for private Members' business. Private Members' Bills will be presented next Wednesday, and unless by then the Government have nominated dates on which their Second Readings may be taken, the system will collapse. Will the Leader of the House name those 13 days, or provide a debate on changing the Standing Order?

Ms Harman: A motion has been tabled to amend the Standing Orders to provide for private Members' business in a Session that will inevitably be shorter than usual. However, the system will certainly not fall into chaos; it will proceed in an orderly and democratic way.

Mr. Nigel Dodds (Belfast, North) (DUP): May we have a debate on winter fuel payments and the need for regular review and uprating of those payments to pensioners? In that debate, we could also address the issue highlighted in early-day motion 407, which points out that those who reach the age of 80 after 27 September will not qualify for payments in the following year.

[That this House congratulates the Government on the provision of winter fuel payments for those aged 60 and over; further congratulates the Government on providing an increase in the payment for those aged 80 and over; notes with concern, however, that those people who turn 80 after the arbitrary date of 27 September are not eligible for the increased payments throughout the following winter; and therefore calls on the Government to change the qualifying date to ensure that those aged 80 on or before 31 December receive the increased payment in the year they are 80.]

Ms Harman: There will be a benefits uprating statement this afternoon, and the Prime Minister spoke about the matter during yesterday's Prime Minister's questions. If there is anything further that the hon. Gentleman would like to raise, perhaps he will write to the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions and keep the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland informed about his concerns.

Mr. John Hayes (South Holland and The Deepings) (Con): The Leader of the House was asked whether we could have a debate—or a statement at least—about the fiasco involving the Student Loans Company. It is not good enough for her to say that there is, coincidentally, a general debate on higher education this afternoon. There is a damning report about the Student Loans Company and ministerial involvement in it. It might be just one of those things for the right hon. and learned Lady, but students are suffering fear and hardship, night and day, and we want a statement in the House.

Ms Harman: Hon. Members will have an opportunity to ask their questions and to get them answered by a Minister during this afternoon's estimates debate. I would have thought that the point for Members is whether it is possible for them to raise the issue and get a response, whether that is as part of a topical debate, an estimates day or any other business. The question is whether there is an opportunity, and the answer is yes.

Mr. Philip Hollobone (Kettering) (Con): As this is meant to be the season of good will, is it not extremely mean-spirited and Scrooge-like of the Leader of the House to try to restrict debate on private Members' business in the new year to just eight days, instead of the statutory 13, especially when most of the Bills at the top of the list are being promoted by Labour Members?

Ms Harman: If we have a shorter Session, there are fewer days for private Members' business, so this is just proportionality—there is nothing unusual at all.

Benefits Uprating

12.13 pm

The Minister for Pensions and the Ageing Society (Angela Eagle): With permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement about benefits uprating and how that supports the action that the Government have taken to help people through the global recession. I shall place full details of the uprating in the Vote Office and arrange for the figures to be published in the Official Report at the earliest opportunity.

As the global recession, which had its origins in the US sub-prime market, began, we said that we would act to protect people in the UK. Since then, the Government have taken decisive action to support families, jobs and businesses. As the effects of the credit crunch spread to the real economy, we acted to protect people's deposits in banks and to stabilise the wider financial system. Then we acted by making available an additional £5 billion to help people in the labour market to remain in work or get back to work as quickly as possible. We ensured that the Jobcentre Plus network and our providers could not only maintain but increase our support to the increased numbers needing help.

We were determined not to lose a generation of young people to work, which is why we set up the future jobs fund and why we will now guarantee every 18 to 24 year-old who has been unemployed for six months a job, a training place or a volunteering opportunity. The action that we have taken has had an impact. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will lay out further measures in our "Back to Work" White Paper next week.

Let me turn to the statement. I wish to tell the House that we will act to provide real help for people when they need it most during the early stages of recovery. People of working age who are claiming income-related benefits will have their benefits uprated in line with the Rossi index, which is the retail prices index less housing costs. That means that people who receive benefits such as jobseeker's allowance, employment and support allowance, and incapacity benefit will receive an increase of 1.8 per cent from April 2010.

For those benefits that are traditionally uprated in line with the retail prices index, this year, as a consequence of the extraordinary global conditions, the RPI has moved into negative territory—it stood at minus 1.4 per cent in September. That means that those who rely on benefits being uprated by the retail prices index could have expected to see their benefits frozen in cash terms, which would have meant no increase at all next April. However, because the Government continue to demonstrate their commitment to helping the poorest and most vulnerable in society, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has decided that those benefits should be increased by 1.5 per cent. from April 2010. That means that we will increase benefits for disabled people and carers, and statutory payments for parents and others who receive national insurance-linked benefits, by 1.5 per cent from next April. Recipients of attendance allowance, carer's allowance, disability living allowance, and maternity allowances will have those important benefits uprated to ensure that they do not fall behind.

The basic state pension is traditionally uprated in line with the retail prices index, but as my right hon. Friend the Chancellor confirmed in yesterday's pre-Budget statement, the basic state pension will be uprated by 2.5 per cent from April 2010. That means that, from April next year, the basic state pension for a single person will rise by £2.40 to £97.65 a week, while the standard rate based on spouse's or civil partner's contribution will increase to £58.50, giving a pensioner couple a total of £156.15 a week. That above-inflation increase, which is delivered as a result of a commitment by this Government, will ensure that more than 11 million pensioners receive a real-terms increase in the value of their basic state pension.

The uprating of state additional pension feeds directly through to public service pensions and to some aspects of occupational pension schemes. As a result, we are unable to uprate those benefits without creating unintended consequences for occupational pension schemes. In the circumstances, we plan to hold state additional pension flat in cash terms this year. However, the 2.5 per cent increase in the basic state pension will mean that, on average, pensioners in Great Britain will see an overall increase of 2 per cent in their state pension.

For the poorest pensioners, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor also confirmed that the standard minimum guarantee in pension credit will rise from next April by £2.60 a week for single pensioners and £3.95 for couples. That means that, from April next year, no single pensioner need live on less than £132.60 a week, and no couple on less than £202.40 a week. That represents a real-terms increase of more than a third for the poorest pensioners since 1997. The above-earnings increase in the pension credit guarantee underlines the Government's ongoing commitment to tackling pensioner poverty, which has already ensured that there are 900,000 fewer pensioners in relative poverty today than there were in 1998-99. In fact, the Government have spent around £100 billion more on pensioners since 1997 than we would have done if we had simply allowed the policies of the previous Government to continue.

We have taken action, and we will continue to take action to ensure that people do not have to face the recession alone—abandoned, as happened so often in the past. We have learned the lessons from the recessions of the 1980s and 1990s, which is why our upcoming White Paper will set out the next steps in our continuing determination to invest in people and give them the help they need because, for this Government, unemployment will never be a price worth paying.

The package of uprating proposals, which is worth around £2 billion for 2010-11, represents significant and worthwhile help for those who are among the poorest and most vulnerable in society. It provides real help in a challenging year, and I commend the statement to the House.

Andrew Selous (South-West Bedfordshire) (Con): I thank the Minister for advance sight of her statement. This recession has hit families hard throughout the country, and, as we heard yesterday, low and middle earners, particularly those earning £20,000 and above, will pay the price for the Government's fiscal irresponsibility.

The Minister's statement comes at a time of great challenges. Unemployment has reached 2.5 million, with youth unemployment being higher before the recession than when the Government came to power. There are 2.5 million pensioners living in poverty, and the rate of child poverty has increased by 400,000 since 2004. We welcome any action that provides greater support to the innocent victims of Labour's failure to tackle poverty, but does the Minister agree that it is completely unacceptable and deeply cynical for the Government to increase benefit levels before an election, only to cut them after an election? That is exactly what they appear to be doing.

The Government are committed to a 1.5 per cent. rise in child benefit, disability living allowance, carer's allowance and incapacity benefit, but they have no funding to continue the measure after the election. The Institute for Fiscal Studies has made it clear that "the Chancellor committed himself—or rather, his successor—to increase those same benefits by 1.5 per cent. less than inflation this time next year"; and the pre-Budget report confirms that the policy

"avoids a further permanent increase in expenditure".

It is a pre-election con, paid for by a real-terms cut in benefits following the election. Does the Minister understand that such sleight of hand is exactly what we have come to expect from her Government and one reason why so many hold politics in such low esteem? Will she also confirm that this year there is no £60 Christmas bonus, which many pensioners valued this time last year, and explain the reason for its absence?

We welcome the increase in the basic state pension, which will be a relief to pensioners who have seen their savings hit by low interest rates. Will the Minister confirm when the Government plan to restore the earnings link for the basic state pension and will she explain how the Government plan to pay for it, having set their face against a state pension age increase that would save £13 billion a year?

There was a hidden threat to pensions in yesterday's pre-Budget report. The Chancellor's opaque reference to appears to herald yet another delay in the Government's flagship personal accounts scheme. Will the Minister confirm that personal accounts will not be fully up and running with 3 per cent. employer contributions until 2017? It is not high earners who will lose out from the delay, but people on middle and low incomes, because it potentially leaves millions of people facing a gap in contributions that they might never take up.

"phasing in the roll-out of pension personal accounts" [Official Report, 9 December 2009; Vol. 502, c. 369.]

The measure will not only fail to improve the levels of saving, it could actually reduce saving rates at the very time that we need them to increase. The Association of British Insurers said:

"This money will be saved at the expense of getting the low-paid into long-term pension saving, which is absolutely vital for their future welfare in retirement."

Will the Minister confirm that the PBR has taken £2.4 billion out of the pensions of people on low and middle incomes? I also note that the Government are not uprating state additional pensions. Will the Minister tell us how many pensioners are going to lose out as a result?

On disability benefits, following the Opposition day debate on Tuesday, I note that there is still concern about the threat that the Government's care reforms pose to disabled pensioners. All the preferred funding models in the Government's Green Paper are underpinned by the integration of attendance allowance and disability living allowance for the over-65s with a future care and support system. In effect, those cash benefits, which are currently paid directly to recipients for them to use as they wish, would be integrated into local authority social care budgets, and that would give older disabled people less control and less independence.

[Andrew Selous]

On Tuesday the Government were making up policy on the hoof without providing any details. They now have to answer a series of serious questions about how the new policy will work in practice. Will people entering a new scheme with equivalent needs to people currently receiving disability living allowance or attendance allowance get the same entitlement? Finally, will the Minister confirm that the Government are cutting £130 million from the national health service budget as a result of the rise in employer's national insurance which was announced yesterday?

Angela Eagle: I was going to thank the hon. Gentleman for welcoming the £2 billion of extra resources that, even in difficult times, this Government have managed to find for those who are poor and vulnerable. However, I did not hear any welcome at all in his remarks. He talked about the increase of 1.5 per cent. in disability and carer's benefits, but it would have been a zero-rate increase if we had not brought it forward as the Chancellor announced yesterday. That is not a cut in benefit; it is a 1.5 per cent. increase in benefit this year, over and above the current rate of RPI minus 1.4 per cent. Does he welcome that? He did not say whether he welcomed the fact that those who rely on disability and carer's benefits will have an increase this year instead of a freeze.

On the earnings link for the basic state pension, the hon. Gentleman knows that Parliament has already legislated to restore the link from 2012, or by 2015—the end of the next Parliament—at the latest.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North) (Lab): Who abolished it?

Angela Eagle: Obviously the Conservatives abolished it in the 1980s. [Interruption.] Opposition Front Benchers say that we have done nothing about the earnings link for the basic state pension while we have been in power, but we have raised the basic state pension above prices every year since 1998-99. Every year we have seen a real increase above RPI; in 18 years, the Conservatives increased it once, and they did so to compensate for the introduction of VAT on fuel. We have a far greater record of which to be proud than the Opposition.

I can confirm that the personal accounts reform programme will begin in 2012 as planned, but there will be a slowing of implementation to enable us to ensure that this very complicated and large programme can be put into effect appropriately.

On additional pensions, the hon. Gentleman asked why there is no increase this year, and that is because of the feed-through to those private sector pensions that are contracted out. Such a measure would be extremely complicated, and there would then be an increasing difference between public sector pensions, which would get the increase, and private sector pensions, which are often linked to RPI increases and have planned for a zero-rate increase. We felt that that situation would not be desirable, but I emphasise that all pensioners will see a real-terms increase because of the 2.5 per cent. increase that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced in his pre-Budget report yesterday.

The Opposition have spent the past few months telling us that in the depths of a recession we should cut public expenditure. They voted against the fiscal stimulus and the extra help from the Department for Work and Pensions for those in the real economy who have to deal with the effects of the recession, and for those who have been unemployed. Indeed, the Opposition continue to say that they would cut the deficit further and faster, but I still do not know, and I have not heard from the hon. Gentleman, whether they support the uprating—whether they support the £2 billion of extra money that we have been able to allocate for the poorest and most vulnerable in our society. I note with interest that he gave us no indication of whether the Opposition support today's statement.

Steve Webb (Northavon) (LD): I am grateful to the Minister for advance sight of the statement. May I offer her my commiserations? When there is good news, the Secretary of State comes to the House to make the statement; when it is bad news, the Minister of State does so. I therefore thank her for coming to the House with this statement. However, we had hoped that it would provide us with the bits that the Chancellor forgot yesterday. When we saw a copy of it a few moments ago, we anticipated the Minister explaining that April's rise in child benefit and disabled people's benefit was temporary, and that when the 2011 increase comes about it will be as if the 2010 increase had never happened. Mysteriously, she forgot that as well. I wonder whether her Department actually knew, or knows, about this; when we read the small print of the pre-Budget report last night, we spotted the problem and I challenged the Minister's ministerial colleague, the hon. Member for Bishop Auckland (Helen Goodman), about it in the Chamber. I asked whether there would be real-terms cuts in 2011, to which the hon. Lady replied:

"I do not think that there will be a real-terms cut"—[Official Report, 9 December 2009; Vol. 502, c. 424.]

Will this Minister clarify whether the Department was told about the issue in advance, and indeed whether it knows now, that what it proposes is a real-terms increase before the election and a real-terms cut after the election? Is that not a definition of cynicism?

The Minister mentioned additional pension and the state earnings-related pension scheme, or SERPS. Surely the Government could have indexed SERPS if they had wanted to; pensioners who heard that they were getting 2.5 per cent. would hardly have thought that the Government were picking and choosing which bits of their pensions to index and which bits not to. Can the Minister confirm that next year SERPS will be indexed fully in line with the RPI, and not clawed back as child benefit and disability living allowance have been? Can she also confirm that more than 10 million families and disabled people will, as the hon. Member for South-West Bedfordshire (Andrew Selous) said, be subject to a real-terms cut—by definition—between 2010 and 2011, because whatever the inflation rate in September 2010, the Government will put less than that on the benefit rates for 2010? That is a real cut; it must be. Will she confirm that?

Among the additional pension components is the graduated retirement benefit. That is not subject to contracting-out issues, so will the Minister confirm that she will index that benefit, which many older pensioners receive? I am sure that she will, because there is no reason not to.

Had we had a real-terms increase in 2010 for disabled people and families that was a permanent feature of the system, we would have welcomed it unreservedly. As it is, it is a temporary, pre-election feature of the system. It should have been made permanent. We all hoped that the statement today would make that clear; it is almost as if the Government are embarrassed about what they have done.

Angela Eagle: I am not embarrassed about a statement on uprating that, at a time of economic challenge and difficulty, puts £2 billion of extra resources into the pockets of people who are often the poorest and most vulnerable in our society. I am rather surprised that the hon. Gentleman could think that I would be.

The rise in retail prices-indexed benefits is not temporary, but real. It is happening in April next year instead of a zero increase. I would have thought the hon. Gentleman would welcome the fact that we have been able to get extra resources now into the pockets of those on child benefit, disability allowance and incapacity benefit, rather than inflicting on them the zero increase that the RPI benefits would have left them with. We are helping 5.5 million people, and I would have thought the hon. Gentleman would welcome that.

I confirm that we will increase SERPS indexation in line with the RPI; the question was simply whether we could, in the short space of time, give assistance with additional pension in that way. There would have been a difficulty with uprating the additional pension rather than holding it flat this year; it would have meant that the public sector would have got the increase, but that those responsible for private sector pensions, which are connected to this, would all have been planning for a zero-rate increase and would not have been able to increase their pensions in line with the increases we announced in the time available. We therefore felt that it would be better to do it in a more orderly way and keep additional pensions at zero for now. That does not mean that an increase connected to RPI will not come through in due course.

Mr. Winnick: As someone who occasionally criticises the Government, I should say to my hon. Friend that one of the most impressive achievements of the Labour Government since 1997 has been to undermine pensioner poverty substantially. We should also bear in mind the winter fuel allowance, which was introduced almost from the moment at which Labour was elected. That compares well with the disgraceful poverty that pensioners had to face year after year during the last Tory Government.

Angela Eagle: I thank my hon. Friend for his comments. I am certainly very proud to be part of a Government who are the first in our history to break the link between old age and poverty. People over 65 are now no more likely to face poverty than any other generation or age cohort in our society. That is a substantial achievement. I am also proud that instead of spending a mere £60 million on helping pensioners with their fuel bills—the situation we inherited in 1997—we now spend £2.7 billion a year on that, because of the introduction of the winter fuel payment.

Sir Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield) (Con): May I direct the Minister's attention to the group of pensioners who were very responsible during their working lives and established a quality and way of life funded not only by benefits or the state pension but by the savings they had made? Their quality of life has now been dreadfully undermined, because the rate of interest on savings has plummeted to almost zero. Are the Government and the Minister concerned about that group of people, who were highly responsible during their working lives but are now suffering? They cannot benefit from the announcements—announcements that I welcome—from the Minister this afternoon.

Angela Eagle: I thank the hon. Gentleman for welcoming the announcements, which is more than his party's Front-Bench spokesman did. The historically low interest paid at the moment, because of the economic situation we find ourselves in and the world finds itself in, has caused particular issues for those who rely on interest from savings in their retirement. We do our best to assist them—particularly, for example, by increasing the personal allowance thresholds, as my right hon. Friend the Chancellor did in his Budget last year. That lifted another 600,000 pensioners out of tax altogether, and 60 per cent. of pensioners now pay no tax.

Although we are concerned about pensioners who rely on savings income, I should also say that 55 per cent. of pensioners receive less than £10 a week, or no income at all, from investments. In essence, today's statement is more about them, as the hon. Gentleman himself acknowledged.

John Battle (Leeds, West) (Lab): I warmly welcome this statement on benefits uprating; it is proof today that the Government have not abandoned the poor and vulnerable. I particularly welcome the uprating on state pensions. Some of us will recall Mrs. Thatcher's being handbagged because of the Conservative Government's disgraceful record for cutting pensions rather than upgrading them. Will my hon. Friend confirm that some analysts in the media are suggesting today that, when we take account of the RPI and inflation trends, the increase may be worth about 4 per cent. in real terms? Will she also confirm that the Government have done more to bring pensioners and retired people out of poverty than any Government since the introduction of the welfare state? A Tory Budget—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Michael Lord): Order. This is becoming a speech.

Angela Eagle: I share my right hon. Friend's passion for the results of our work on eliminating pensioner poverty. Pensioners are now no more likely to be poor than other age cohorts in our society. There is still more to do, which is why we continue to work to improve access to pension credit, to assist those who are still on low incomes.

I can confirm that, with the RPI at minus 1.4 per cent., the 2.5 per cent. increase is closer to 4 per cent. If he had chosen to, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor could have frozen the basic state pension; instead, he chose to increase it by 2.5 per cent.—and that is closer to a 4 per cent. increase, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, West (John Battle) said. I know that across the country many of the spokespeople for our 11 million pensioners welcomed the announcement when they heard it in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's statement yesterday.

[Angela Eagle]

Mr. Nigel Dodds (Belfast, North) (DUP): Earlier, during business questions, I asked about the level of winter fuel payments and was told to await this benefits uprating statement, but unfortunately there is nothing in it about that issue. I welcome the Government's introduction of winter fuel payments and the increase in the basic state pension that has been announced. However, is there not a need for regular reviews on increases in winter fuel payments? Also, what about the £60 Christmas bonus for pensioners this year?

Angela Eagle: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor always keeps in view the level of the winter fuel payment, which the Conservatives have called a gimmick but is £2.7 billion of real help that ensures that when the weather gets cold, pensioners do not have to worry about turning their heating up. I welcome the hon. Gentleman's view on that. On uprating, my right hon. Friend keeps that under review. When the winter fuel payment was first introduced it was £20; this year, it is between £250 and £400 for all people over state retirement age—substantial and real help for those who wonder whether they can get through the winter and worry about turning their heating up. There is no need for them do that because of the winter fuel payment, which should be arriving even as we speak.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover) (Lab): Is my hon. Friend aware that in previous recessions stretching back to the '70s, on every single occasion the people at the bottom of the pile have come off worse? This is the first time that those least able to weather the storm have come off better than many others, including—dare I say it?—some bankers who could have been hit even harder. Can I suggest to my hon. Friend that this is an example of fixing the roof even when it is raining for those least able to bear it?

Angela Eagle: I agree wholeheartedly with my hon. Friend's comments. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor was very clear in his approach to the pre-Budget report, of which this uprating statement is a very important part. He believes that those with the broadest shoulders should bear the greatest burden of the challenges that face us in the economy at the moment. This uprating statement proves that he has delivered that in action.

Mr. Philip Hollobone (Kettering) (Con): Will the Minister take steps to end the scandal whereby British taxpayers are funding the now uprated child benefit payments to EU nationals who live in this country but whose children reside in their country of origin?

Angela Eagle: We keep these things under review. However, we are bound by EU reciprocal laws on social security that enable the 1.5 million UK citizens who live and work in the European Union to benefit in turn from local arrangements in the countries in which they work.

Mr. Jim Cunningham (Coventry, South) (Lab): We all appreciate what the Government have done over the past 10 or 12 years in general terms in increasing benefits across the board. Having said that, coming back to the point made by the hon. Member for Belfast, North (Mr. Dodds), can my hon. Friend reassure me that she will keep the winter fuel allowance under review, bearing it in mind that oil prices and so on are starting to creep up?

Angela Eagle: I know that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor is committed to keeping the winter fuel payment as the helpful benefit that it is. Its size has gone up consistently since it was introduced, and we now spend £2.7 billion a year on ensuring that older people need not worry about keeping warm in winter.

Mr. Peter Bone (Wellingborough) (Con): The Minister has a reputation for not trying to dodge a question and giving an honest answer. Will she therefore explain to the House whether, given that when we get to 2011 this year's 1.5 per cent. increase is going to be disregarded, that means there will be a real cut of 1.5 per cent.? Could she be absolutely clear about that?

Angela Eagle: Flattery will get the hon. Gentleman to all sorts of places; I welcome his comment about my answering straight questions. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has taken action to ensure that 1.5 per cent. of money can be given to those on carers' benefits, who otherwise, without the action he has taken, would have been facing a zero increase in today's uprating statement. That assists 5.5 million people. This morning, when asked about what would happen in 2011, he said that we will have to decide in 12 months' time what will happen for the next year. The hon. Gentleman knows that benefit upratings are held only on an annual basis, so we cannot speculate from this far away when we do not know what the rate of inflation will be and what the implications for uprating will be in 2011.

John Mason (Glasgow, East) (SNP): Obviously, 1.5 per cent. is more welcome than zero per cent., but for the carer's allowance, which is particularly low, it is not very much. Can the Minister see a way towards pulling carers allowance up?

Angela Eagle: We can have some interesting debates about the interaction of benefits, but today we are talking about their uprating rather than changing their balance in the benefits system. We all know from our own constituency case loads of the crucially important work that carers do. That is why I am pleased to be at the Department for Work and Pensions when we are bringing in the historic changes that, from April next year, will credit carers into access to the basic state pension for their caring responsibilities. For the first time, it will be possible for someone who has cared for 30 years to get the credits to qualify in full for the basic state pension. I am very proud of that change, which this Government have managed to bring in.

Points of Order

12.46 pm

Mr. David Heath (Somerton and Frome) (LD): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. In response to a freedom of information request for papers relating to Cabinet Committees dealing with devolution to Scotland and Wales, the Information Commissioner determined that those papers should be released. Today, Sir, the Lord Chancellor has laid a written ministerial statement indicating that he has used the veto that Ministers possess to prevent the release of those papers. In nine years, that veto was not used; it has now been used twice in one year. In this instance, it has been used before the matter has gone to an information tribunal, and the Lord Chancellor has not, as he did previously, come to the House to explain his decision in an oral statement.

I understand, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the Information Commissioner is likely to undertake a special report to Parliament. May I seek your guidance—perhaps if you cannot give immediate guidance, you might ask Mr. Speaker—as to how this special report, which is obviously of crucial importance, can be placed before the House for debate, because it is clearly inappropriate that such a report, which criticises the action of a Cabinet Minister, should be in the hands of the same Cabinet Minister in determining whether it should be placed before the House?

Sir Alan Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed) (LD): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The papers referred to, which date from 1997, relate to devolution to Scotland and Wales, and also to the English regions. I have in my hand a certificate that the Secretary of State placed in the Journal Office today in which he takes the view that the public interest favours the continued non-disclosure of all the information concerned. Bearing that in mind, could we, as my hon. Friend the Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) requested, have some clarification as to the procedure for ensuring that any report that the Information Commissioner makes is not withheld by the Secretary of State but is made available to the House, because so far it does not appear to be accessible?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Michael Lord): I have no prior knowledge of the point that the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Sir Alan Beith) and the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) have raised. Clearly, it is a very serious matter. It is not something that I can rule on now, but the House has certainly heard what they said, and it is clearly on the record. I am sure that those on the Treasury Bench, and Mr. Speaker too, will want to look at the matter very carefully and decide precisely what course of action to take.

Miss Anne McIntosh (Vale of York) (Con): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Have you heard whether there is to be a Statutory Instrument Committee meeting today to scrutinise the Flood Risk Regulations 2009, which are due to come into force today? Is it the Government's wish for us to scrutinise them in the normal way?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have to say the same thing to the hon. Lady. I have no knowledge that any statement of that kind will be made today, but again, the point that she has made is firmly on the record and I am sure that those responsible for these matters will take note of it.

Miss McIntosh: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Can you give me guidance on what the legal position is if a statutory instrument is not properly laid before Parliament, has not been properly consulted on with outside bodies and has not been properly scrutinised by both Houses of Parliament? Is that legal? Can such an instrument come into effect?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the hon. Lady is tempting me into all sorts of hypotheticals that I would be well advised to avoid. She has made the point, and as I said, I am sure that those who respond to these matters will look at it.

Mr. Nigel Dodds (Belfast, North) (DUP): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Concern has been expressed in various quarters of the House today and earlier about the treatment of private Members' Bills and the time available for them to be discussed and processed in this Session. Can you do anything to ensure that they are properly debated and that proper time will be made available to deal with them?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that the Leader of the House is looking very carefully at that situation to see precisely how it can be resolved. It is a very important matter, and it needs to be cleared up without delay.

Estimates Day

[1st Allotted Day]

VOTE ON ACCOUNT, 2010-11

DEPARTMENT FOR BUSINESS, INNOVATION AND SKILLS

Students and Universities

[Relevant Documents: The Eleventh Report from the Innovation, Universities, Science and Skills Committee, HC 170, Session 2008-09, on Students and universities, and the Government's response, HC 991.]

Motion made, and Question proposed,

That, for the year ending with 31 March 2011, for expenditure by the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills

(1) resources, not exceeding £9,653,466,000, be authorised, on account, for use as set out in HC 33, and

(2) a sum, not exceeding £11,071,732,000, be granted to Her Majesty out of the Consolidated Fund, on account, to meet the costs as so set out. (Mr Heppell.)

Mr. Phil Willis (Harrogate and Knaresborough) (LD) rise

Mr. David Willetts (Havant) (Con) rise

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Michael Lord): I call Mr. Phil Willis.

12.51 pm

Mr. Willis: What an august start to a debate—I am very grateful to you for making the historic decision to call me, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

I welcome this estimates debate on the report on students and universities that the then Select Committee on Innovation, Universities, Science and Skills published on 2 August. Although I recognise that many Members may wish to broaden the issue, I wish to keep my remarks to the report.

Far too often, the work of our universities is discussed in isolation from the very people who are the principal recipients, the students themselves. We often talk about research, institutions and organisations without mentioning the students, yet the quality of the experience that they get often not only determines their life chances but is critical to our nation's future. At this time, it behoves all political parties to take the issue of quality and standards in our universities to heart.

The taxpayer contributes something in the region of £15 billion to our universities, and there are currently about 2.3 million students of different sorts in them. They make a significant contribution too, through the money that they pay universities. The question that my Committee asked was whether the taxpayer and the students got good value for money and whether it was a quality product. We strongly welcomed the initiative by the right hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham), when he was Secretary of State for Innovation, Universities and Skills, of posing the question, "What do we want the higher education system to look like in 15 years' time?" That was exactly the right question, and I compliment him for beginning that debate.

I wish to put on record that over the past 10 years, the higher education system has received a significant investment of resources, both in revenue and particularly capital. On the matter that the Select Committee on Science and Technology, as it now is, is particularly interested in, there has been huge investment in laboratory infrastructure and so on. I have started on a positive note, and I hope that the Minister has noted it.

We considered whether the student experience is truly world-class, as it is often portrayed. Although fees and funding frequently came into our deliberations, they were not part of our brief, so I shall not comment on variable fees. The Committee looks forward to the report of the review by Lord Browne of Madingley, which should inform the debate after the general election.

I pay tribute to the four members of the Select Committee who are present for the debate. I have to say that our inquiry and our final report have not been without controversy, and it is fair to say that our mailbag was not only large but contained extremely diverse responses to our recommendations. That is exactly what a Select Committee report should do—it should be able to create debate and, to some extent, controversy. I thank all those who contributed to the report, including vice-chancellors, academics and representatives of professional bodies. In particular, I wish to single out students. We met a great number who were an absolute pleasure to deal with, and I wish to put on record our appreciation to the National Union of Students, which constantly provided the Committee with high-quality evidence and was prepared to take on board a number of the criticisms that we made.

The Committee actively sought out innovative ways to engage with students. We visited universities, and at Oxford we even had the equivalent of a speed-dating session, at which we spoke to a number of students in different formats. We also held a major consultation for three months as part and parcel of our work. We were rigorous in taking evidence, but it was controversial. I therefore wish initially to remove some misunderstandings.

We had no intention of undermining what I and my Committee believe to be a world-class higher education system. Our criticisms are to try to improve it rather than undermine it. Given the rapid changes in the sector, which are likely to accelerate in future months and years, we wanted to add to the debate about the future of the sector. We were therefore somewhat surprised by the reaction of the Government and the higher education sector to our report. When it was published last August Lord Mandelson, the Business Secretary, was quoted in the press as saying that he did not "recognise the committee's description" of universities. The Minister for Higher Education and Intellectual Property, who is in his place, was equally scathing about the fact that we had produced a report during the summer recess, which I found quite strange.

The Government echoed that line in their response to the report, stating at paragraph 1:

"We believe that the picture of our higher education system which emerged in the report was far less positive than is in fact the case."

Universities UK was equally hostile to the report. Indeed, many parts of the higher education establishment appeared largely defensive and reluctant to engage in many of the issues. They gave the impression that Parliament somehow had no right to interfere in the product being delivered, and that we should just let them get on with it. Given the fact that we have put in £15 billion of taxpayers' money, that attitude is frankly unacceptable.

Over the past few months the Government and the higher education sector, having dismissed many of our concerns, have quietly been getting on with implementing most of the key recommendations in the report. Perhaps that is the way things are and how the system works. I hope that the Minister will explain why there has been a change of heart—perhaps the Government were planning it in the first place. [Interruption.] I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Stephen Williams) does not have swine flu just before Christmas.

I wish to deal with four matters, the first of which is the information available to prospective students, which is absolutely essential if they are to make informed choices about institutions and courses of study. We found that although universities' prospectuses competed on their public relations appeal, they did not present information in a consistent format to allow easy comparison. We concluded that the sector should develop a code of practice on information for prospective students, which should cover the time a typical undergraduate student should expect to spend attending lectures and tutorials, in personal study and, for science courses, in laboratories during a week, and a clear indication of who would be teaching them.

The need for that information was brought home to us by a mature student doing a nursing degree, who pointed out:

"Getting a clear idea of the hours involved and when lectures would be was incredibly important to me because of child care."

The sector has seen a huge growth in the number of mature students—post 21-year-olds—and part-time students, and those who study specific modules at a variety of different sites, and they need to be able to plan with certainty.

We did not recommend the standardisation of either courses or curricula. To do so would be to undermine university autonomy and academic freedom, and the core strength of our university system. To be fair, the Government responded fairly positively and agreed that it would be helpful for prospective students to have access to information concerning work loads. They have asked the Higher Education Funding Council England to examine the issues, in consultation with the sector.

By contrast, Universities UK appeared to see little need for change, stating:

"Universities have already put significant resource into publishing information for prospective students".

That is true, but they said that the problem was students' failure to navigate the information that was already there. We were therefore pleasantly surprised to see in HEFCE's statutory responsibility for quality assurance report, which was published in October this year, that its teaching, quality and student experience sub-committee considered that:

"Institutions also clearly need to provide information in an appropriate common format. This should cover the nature and amount of staff contact that students may expect, the nature of the learning effort expected, the time this will take, and the academic support likely to be available."

That is exactly what we had recommended in the report that was dismissed, so ha'lelujah! The Government, in their plan for the future of higher education, "Higher Ambitions", which was published in November, on which I compliment the Minister, state:

"It is...important to ensure that potential students have the best possible information on the content of courses".

We warmly welcome that.

The second area our report covers is the treatment of part-time and mature students. The failure of the current system to treat part-time students on the same basis as full-time students is, in effect, a form of discrimination. That is not only wrong, but it hinders the achievement of the Government's objective of 40 per cent. of all adults in England gaining a higher education qualification by 2020.

Although we did not take extensive evidence from part-time students, there was a strong feeling that although some universities actively welcome them and make appropriate curriculum provisions, many do not. In the latter, students have to take what are effectively full-time courses in part, rather than appropriately designed modules.

Mr. David Chaytor (Bury, North) (Lab): Is not the real issue that as each year goes by, the distinction between full-time and part-time courses in terms of hours taught becomes increasingly irrelevant? In many universities and for many courses, it would be very difficult to distinguish clearly between a student attending a part-time course and a student attending full time? Many students on full-time courses will attend for fewer hours than students notionally on part-time courses.

Mr. Willis: I totally agree with the hon. Gentleman. That is why it is it is absolutely imperative for the review that is taking place to look at how we deliver higher education in totality and does not simply say, "Some students work part time and some work full time." We certainly need to consider that. I hope the Minister will tell us in his winding-up speech that that, and not simply funding, will be addressed in the review.

We were disappointed that Universities UK did not address the matter in its response. To go back to what the hon. Member for Bury, North (Mr. Chaytor) said, one area we looked at in the inquiry was the delivery of modularised curricula, which means people can dip in and out over a longer period, accumulate credits and transfer them between universities. There were some very hostile reactions, particular from some in the Russell group of universities, which frankly did not participate in that more universal response.

We were pleased, however, that in "Higher Ambitions", the Government stated:

"In order to attract a greater diversity of students, more part time study, more vocationally-based foundation degrees, more work-based study...and more study whilst living at home must be made available."

I think we are making progress—I put that on the record in a spirit of co-operation.

The quality of teaching should be a core aspect of the undergraduate experience. It did not surprise us that the views of the students to whom we spoke ran the full gamut between complimentary and downright critical, but we were stunned by one constant criticism that came up time after time. One student said that "university lecturers seriously need to take lessons from school teachers on how to teach. They are clever" that is a compliment

"but they are not skilled at conveying the message."

[Mr. Willis]

That is quite a powerful thing to say. It would clearly be inappropriate to have an Ofsted-type approach to teaching quality in universities—I fully accept that and we do not recommend such an approach—but it is important that the Government and the higher education sector draw up and implement arrangements applicable across the sector that would allow students to convey concerns about poor teaching, and ensure that universities take quick remedial action. We should empower students in that way. The Government should require universities, as a condition of support from the taxpayer, to have in place programmes to improve teaching quality and the effectiveness of all academic staff—I do not think that that would interfere with their autonomy—and there should be a review of the common practice in universities of using graduate students to teach, albeit in view of the main academic staff. That concern, which was raised by many students, clearly needs to be addressed.

The Government's initial response was lukewarm, but it is fair to say that successive Higher Education Ministers have pressed universities on that issue and made money available to improve teaching. Although the Government said that they believe the Minister has asked HEFCE to explore with the sector whether institutions' human resources strategies provide adequate information about their approach to staff professional development—we feel that the Minister needs to take the issue of improving teaching quality seriously.

"it is right that higher education institutions are responsible for ensuring their staff hold appropriate qualifications"

Mr. Andrew Smith (Oxford, East) (Lab): I value the work that the hon. Gentleman and his Committee did on the report. On his point about the involvement of graduate students in teaching or in support of the teaching effort, and linking it to what he is saying about professional development, is there a case for recognising the role that graduate and research students can play, and for actually structuring appropriate training and support, so that the quality of their teaching helps to raise the general standards?

Mr. Willis: The right hon. Gentleman is absolutely right. The Committee certainly did not say that we should not have graduate students teaching; we said that they should be properly trained. Quite often, their experience is nearer to that of the students', and they can therefore have a much close interrelation. However, the idea that a person can suddenly teach at graduate level just because they have completed their degree is stretching things.

Dr. Evan Harris (Oxford, West and Abingdon) (LD): On my hon. Friend's response to the right hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith), we also need to recognise that part of the problem is that many graduate students are told to teach, and they are expected to do so, perhaps while their supervisor is on sabbatical. They are not properly remunerated for it, which is bad for the person taught as well as for the graduate student.

Mr. Willis: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that. The reality is that we need to get a grip of the issue. We must not have teaching on the cheap. We would not get high-quality research on the cheap and we expect people to deliver those programmes, and that should apply to teaching.

It was disappointing that Universities UK accepted none of the criticisms on teaching in universities. It said in its response:

"In our experience, criticism of the quality of teaching and standards tends to be isolated and anecdotal, and not borne out by larger scale surveys such as the National Student Survey or the CBI survey of employers...nor the national data on complaints."

None of those surveys asked those specific questions, so they did not get the answer. However, I am grateful to the Minister for recognising that the quality of teaching is important and that we need to do something about it.

The final area I wish to examine is standards. That issue has generated much heat in the media, though not as much light as I would have liked. In my view, a key role of a Select Committee carrying out an inquiry is to test the orthodoxies—a thankless task, but essential. The orthodoxies on standards in higher education as we perceived them are, first, that the UK's international reputation is of strategic importance, and I think that we would agree with that. Secondly, universities themselves have the responsibility for maintaining the standards of their awards—again, we agree. Thirdly, maintenance of standards is integral to universities' autonomy and that autonomy is the keystone of the sector. Fourthly, all universities have systems in place to ensure that courses are regularly reviewed and, fifthly, the Quality Assurance Agency conducts regular visits to universities to scrutinise how they maintain standards. Who could disagree? The system should therefore be perfect. However, what we found when we challenged those orthodoxies was a somewhat uncomfortable truth.

We found that the system in England for safeguarding consistent national degree standards in higher education institutions is out of date, inadequate and in urgent need of replacement. With even the head of QAA describing the degree classification as "rotten" and "not fit for purpose", the issue needs to be taken seriously. The current arrangements with each university responsible for its own standards are perhaps no longer meeting the needs of a mass system of higher education in the 21st century with 133 higher education institutions and more than 2 million students.

One statistic sticks out like a sore thumb. The proportion of first class and upper second class honours degrees has steadily increased over the past 15 years, with the proportion of students achieving first class honours rising from 7.7 per cent. in 1996-97 to 13.3 per cent. in 2007-08. There may be good reasons for that, such as better teaching, harder-working students or a metamorphosis in students' ability. However, there may be perverse reasons, such as universities inflating marks to keep their positions in the league tables. I hope that it is the former, not the latter. The short answer is that we do not know. That is the uncomfortable truth. Nor is there any appetite whatsoever to investigate the reasons for that significant degree inflation objectively.

When we asked Universities UK about the increase in the number of first class honours, the answers we got would shame a first year student in statistics:

"Universities UK acknowledged that there had been 'a lot of talk and publicity on this in the last six months or so, about degree classification', but told us that 'the patterns of degree classification have not changed all that much over the last ten years—only a six per cent rise in the percentage of Firsts and 2.1s'".

Ministers appeared to take at face value explanations about grade inflation without detailed analysis. In fact the figures showed a steady increase in the proportion of first degree students achieving first class honours—an increase over the period of 72 per cent. That needs explaining, but rather than engage with the issue, it seems that everyone prefers to look the other way and hope for the best. Why? The defence is always university autonomy. I am talking here about institutional autonomy, not academic freedom.

The Committee rightly dared to question the institutional autonomy of universities to set and maintain their own standards, not because we wanted to lead an onslaught on the autonomy of higher education, but because we found evidence that autonomy was, if anything, obscuring, if not undermining, quality and standards. As a Committee, we would defend vigorously the right of universities to maintain autonomy from the state and be the custodians of academic freedom. That is the unique strength of our university system and why it is admired around the world. But in return, universities must be able to provide clear, peer-reviewed evidence that they are the true custodians of standards too. They cannot have it just one way.

How we compare academic standards across different institutions is not easy, but simply to ignore the challenge is unacceptable. The evidence we received on assessment methodologies gave us serious grounds for concern. One witness told us that there is "considerable variation across the higher education sector in assessment practices. Whilst this can be seen as a consequence of institutional autonomy, the rationales for the various institutional choices that have been made are unclear".

We established that quite small variations in the way in which degree classifications are determined can have more effect on the classification of some students than was generally realised. One academic told us that

"my university runs what has been described as a very perverse model for classifying degree schemes. What happens is that low marks between 0 and 20 are rounded up to 20 and high marks from 80 to 100 are rounded downwards, and then they are averaged together, so you have this non-linear average before making a classification."

If that is the basis on which we award degrees, something is wrong. There needs to be transparency and if the price of higher education organisational autonomy is a lack of transparency and inconsistent standards, we have to ask whether it is worth it.

Two pieces of evidence that we took from students and during the inquiry gave us real concern. First, different levels of effort were required in different universities to obtain degrees in similar subjects, which might suggest that different standards may be applied. Secondly, we came across some pointers that students in England spend significantly less time studying, including lectures, contact time with academic staff and private study, than their counterparts overseas. Our visit to the US confirmed that. We made no conclusion about these variations other than to ask that more research be done to examine whether these factors affect quality. That is not an unreasonable thing to ask. Sadly the Government said that they were "not convinced of the usefulness of further...research"

The only answer we were given by vice-chancellors, whose overseas market might be affected by declining quality, was that as international students continue to apply to our universities standards must be satisfactory. As we say in the report, we consider that it is "absurd and disreputable to justify academic standards with a market mechanism".

Of course, the defence of standards by both the Government and sector was the existence of the Quality Assurance Agency. But we found that the QAA focuses almost exclusively on processes, not standards. That is why we called for the QAA to be transformed into an independent quality and standards agency with a remit to safeguard, monitor and report on standards. We did not seek some standardised format that could mechanistically be monitored by an Ofsted-type organisation. Instead, a quality and standards agency would take up the challenge of maintaining standards across the sector rather than simply within individual institutions.

In reply the Government said:

"The Quality Assurance Agency...does a good job but needs to take on a more public-facing role and one which allows any concerns about quality or standards to be investigated quickly, transparently and robustly."

That misses the point. It is not better public relations that are required for the QAA, but a better examination of standards.

In a discussion only two weeks ago, I was intrigued to hear the new chairman of the QAA, Anthony McClaran, outline a proposed consultation on key principles and processes for a revised quality assurance system. He said that the purpose would be to provide authoritative, publicly accessible information on academic quality and standards in higher education; to command public, employer and other stakeholder confidence; to meet the needs of funders and of autonomous institutions; to meet the needs of students; and to reply on independent judgment. Hallelujah! That is exactly what we have called for. Quite frankly, I am not bothered whether it is called the quality and standards agency or the QAA, providing those issues are addressed.

That was a useful exercise for the Committee to undertake and it pointed out several issues that need further discussion. The Committee recognised the strength of our higher education system and that to meet the needs of a 21st century, post-recession economy, the system has to work harder, better and to a higher standard than ever before. We have to compete with a US system and an Administration that has just put nearly an extra $1 trillion into higher education, and with China and India, which are putting untold wealth into producing not just widgets, but the highest intellectual quality. That is why we did the report and why we recommended it to the Minister. In that spirit, I hope that he will respond in an appropriately supportive way.

1.20 pm

Mr. Eric Martlew (Carlisle) (Lab): I thank the Chairman of the Science and Technology Committee not only for the report before us today, but for the report by the Innovation, Universities, Science and Skills Committee, which he also chaired. There is no doubt that his Committee has a good reputation for holding Government to account. That is what Select Committees are about. He said that some Members might wish to go broader than his report, which I have read, and I intend to do so.

[Mr. Eric Martlew]

The thing about students and universities is that people need a university before they can discuss them. It is not a packed Chamber today, is it? However, the two hon. Members for Oxford constituencies—the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Dr. Harris) and my right hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith)—are present. That says something about the fact that Oxford university is probably the most famous university in the world and has done tremendous things not only for Britain, but the world.

Mr. Andrew Smith: I am grateful—as too, I am sure, will be the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Dr. Harris)—for my hon. Friend's recognition of Oxford. However, my hon. Friend must remember, when talking about universities and Oxford, to mention both of them—Oxford university, and Oxford Brookes university and its excellent work.

Mr. Martlew: But I shall try not to mention Oxford United.

I was elected MP for Carlisle in 1987. As a Cumbrian MP, I was faced with a particular challenge. More than 300 years ago, the area's application for a university was turned down because of our warlike neighbours, the Scots; it was thought inappropriate to have a university so close to the Scottish border, so it was put in Durham. People in Cumbria long took it for granted that they would not get a university, as a result of which so few of our young people actually went to university, and many of those who did, such as Lord Bragg of Wigton, Hunter Davies, Margaret Foster and Sir Brian Fender, the great educationist, did not return for many years. That meant the area was being drained of its talent, which we needed to bring prosperity.

Soon after I was selected as a candidate, I went to a lecture by the vice-chancellor of Preston polytechnic, as it was then—it is now the university of Central Lancashire. He said that north Cumbria and south-west Scotland were the most deprived areas in western Europe in terms of higher education provision. When I was elected, therefore, one of the first things that I knew that we needed to do was to provide local people with the opportunity to study for a degree without having to leave home and to encourage others to study there.

I am grateful to a good friend of mine, the noble Lord Glenamara, who was then chancellor of the university of Northumbria. Ted Short, as he was called when a Member of this House, was the Education Secretary who took the decision to locate the university in the north of England in Lancaster, not in Carlisle. As a Cumbrian, he always regretted having to do that, but I think that it was the fault of the local authority.

I worked well with Lord Glenamara, and in 1992, we opened—he kindly asked me to open it with him—the Carlisle campus of the university of Northumbria in the historic quarter next to the cathedral. That was the first time people from my area and north Cumbria could get a degree in their own constituency. And it made a difference. I remember meeting a young girl who must have been in her mid-20s with a child of about eight—obviously, she had a baby very young—who was attending the university. She had a child to look after and was thrilled that she could do a degree and become a teacher. There was great satisfaction in that example.

When Labour came to power, my area got a brand-new hospital—the first private finance initiative hospital to be built in this country. However, the old district general hospital, which was a listed building, had no use. That could have been a disaster, because listed buildings with no use are, in many ways, a menace, as I know well. However, St. Martin's college—one of the finest teacher-training colleges in Britain—which was looking to expand out of Lancaster, took over the old hospital. It is now a teacher-training section of the university of Cumbria.

We had the critical mass of facilities needed to build the university of Cumbria. My noble Friend Lord Dale Campbell-Savours, who at the time was the Member of Parliament for Workington, proposed a university of the Lakes, which in some ways was meant as a virtual university, but at the end of the day it was not successful, and a traditional university was chosen instead. However, for many years we had had a very good art college, which became the institute of art. We pulled those things together and two years ago we were able to say, "We have a university of Cumbria." That was a magnificent day for many of us—as I said, the area had waited 300 years—and, as hon. Members can I imagine, we were rather pleased.

There is no doubt that the university has teething troubles. The buildings are spread throughout the county: it has two campuses in Carlisle; there is one in west Cumbria; another, called Newton Rigg—it used to be the old agricultural college—is out in Penrith; and there is a 115-year-old teacher-training college, Charlotte Mason college, in the Lake District at Ambleside. Those facilities were brought together, along with part of St. Martin's college in Lancaster, to create the university of Cumbria. We are well aware that we need the university if we are to attract talent and business, and to keep that talent. That has gone very well, and I am thankful to the Labour Government for that provision.

There is, however, a difficulty about the location of the headquarters, which I think, being MP for Carlisle, and because it is by far the largest city in the area, should obviously be in the city of Carlisle. That was agreed, as too—finally—was the Caldew viaduct site, which I suggested many years ago. Everything was going well until the current economic problems. We now have an £8.4 million annual deficit and the capital moneys for the headquarters might no longer be available or its provision might be stalled. I find that puzzling, because as far as I am aware there has been no cut in the higher education budget, so it is not a question of the effect of the recession. Rather, there are obviously other issues at play, and over the past month or two the local media have highlighted the problems.

I have talked about the campuses at Charlotte Mason in Ambleside and at Newton Rigg in Penrith. One of my concerns is about the talk of mothballing those campuses and moving a lot of the staff and the teachers to Lancaster—to return to the 1960s, that was when Cumbria lost out to Lancaster, which is now probably one of the top 12 universities in the country. However, the reality is that we cannot have a university of Cumbria, the majority of whose students are in Lancaster. That will undermine the whole process.

I asked the new vice-chancellor—I sympathise with him, because he has not been in post very long—to come down on Monday afternoon to discuss the situation with Cumbrian parliamentarians from both Houses. I would like to ask the Minister, who is now in his place, whether he will have time after that meeting, probably early in the new year, to meet a delegation including myself and others to discuss the matter further. Although we have made great progress, we have a problem, and we have to come through it.

I recognise that the university of Cumbria has to build its own reputation. I suspect that it might be many years before it has the reputation that Oxford has, but that is what we must try to achieve. We must try to improve the university. However, we will overcome the problem. The university has stalled, but it will continue; indeed, other great strides have been made during this time. Before 1997, we did not have any medical training whatever in Cumbria. We are now part of a medical school and are training medical students. We also have a campus of the new dental school based in Liverpool, so we have made amazing strides and we are looking forward to the future.

What I would say to those hon. Members who take universities for granted is that there are parts of this country that have been deprived for centuries. We are getting over that, but we should not lose the impetus. We should continue to strive to make higher education available to as many people as possible.

1.33 pm

Mr. Tim Boswell (Daventry) (Con): I congratulate the Chairman, the hon. Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough (Mr. Willis), on introducing this debate and on his leadership of our Select Committees, which has been much appreciated. May I also commend the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew), who came into the House on the same day that I did in 1987? He has stuck up for his constituents and made an important point, to which I will obliquely return later.

It occurred to me in preparing for this debate that it is almost exactly 17 years to the day since I became the Further and Higher Education Minister, in the then Conservative Government. And, for the record, it is now nearly 15 years since I stopped being that Minister. I realise that that is a mere blink of an eye in the history of institutions as venerable as Oxford, Cambridge and St. Andrews. Nevertheless, I am staggered by how many of the issues remain current. It is rather like the gentleman from Salamanca university in the late middle ages who was locked up by the Inquisition for five years and resumed his next lecture with the deathless words: "As I was saying yesterday".

When I was doing the job as the Higher Education Minister, I was very much involved in higher education quality issues and issues of access to higher education. It would not be generally known, because it was private correspondence, but my first request through my private office on becoming Minister was for further information on the socio-economic background of participants in higher education at that time. One therefore should not feel that we are talking about a matter of interest to just one or two parties. It is remarkable to me, looking over that period, how little has changed with the institutions that we are dealing with—and in certain cases, the personalities we are dealing with. At the same time, however, the sector has undergone major expansion since the 1990s, which has been superimposed on the rapid expansion that began in the 1960s after the Robbins report and was accelerated in the 1980s, so that, in rough terms, we now have between 10 and 20 times as many students as in my days as an undergraduate.

I suppose that we should declare any current interests. First, I was a member of the previous Select Committee on Innovation, Universities, Science and Skills. I signed the report and in no way do I resile from our conclusions. For the reason that the Chairman of that Committee has outlined, we needed to be pretty trenchant in what we said. As for my personal interest, I suppose that I should declare that I am a graduate of Oxford university, as we are well represented here. At the same time, my wife comes from an educational background in the Principality, as some hon. Members might be aware. I am also a governor of the University of Wales Institute in Cardiff. I say that not as some statement of virtue—although it is a hugely engaging, interesting and constructive job—but, I hope, as a validation of a certain range of interest in higher education across the piece.

Anyway, it is far too late in my political career for any covert elitism or for making elaborate gestures against alleged dumbing down, or even any in favour of it. Nor am I particularly interested in megaphone diplomacy with Universities UK about alleged strengths and weaknesses. What seems practical is that we should recognise the strengths and find practical and useful ways of mitigating the weaknesses, always operating within the context of academic freedom and institutional autonomy. Even if we have been quite harsh and blunt as a Select Committee in some parts of our report and its press release, it is entirely proper that we have challenged some of the conventional wisdom and any element of defensive complacency. To quote from almost my first speech as an ingénu Minister, from about the first time that I was let out and considered safe enough to speak in public, "The days of the unaccountable professional are over." That was true in 1993, and it is still true.

In relation to my work as a governor of the institution that I have mentioned, perhaps I might also advert the fact that I am particularly proud that one of the bits of our mission statement is that governors should act as the safeguards and guardians of the philosophy of dissent. It is terribly important, and entirely consistent with the principles and values of higher education, that we should have a debate about such matters. We should bring them out and not seek to push them under the carpet.

I would like to begin my remarks by putting three points firmly on the record, in case they are misunderstood. The first point—I say this in no sense to soften up the opposition to our report or another view to it, wherever that might come from—is that the British university system, although not faultless, is an overall success story on almost all counts, including student numbers, which have already been referred to, and completions of degrees. We have a low drop-out rate and high participation and success. We have major international participation, which has also been referred to, and, at the same time, we sustain research excellence well above our weight. Some of the great continental universities—the Parises, the Bolognas and the Bonns of this world—have tended to fall behind simply because they have fallen victim to the coils of bureaucracy and inadequate resourcing.

Last time I said something good about British higher education, it coincided with a lecture tour that I was giving in the states of the former East Germany. I delivered a speech in Halle, which was duly picked up by The Times Higher Education Supplement, which gave me the headline—shock, horror!—"Minister goes to East Germany to say nice things about British higher education". However, it was and remains my view that those comments are appropriate.

[Mr. Tim Boswell]

My second general point is that Kingsley Amis got it wrong when he said "More will mean worse." In my earlier days, I would perhaps have said that "More will mean different", and I would now modify that message only slightly to read "More means more diverse." To take my own institution, the University of Wales Institute, Cardiff, as an example, we have just been under the hammer of the Quality Assurance Agency because of our application to be awarded research degree-awarding powers. We were awarded those powers on 7 September, and we are now proceeding with an application for university status and title. It was an intense process, involving the engagement of specialists, the entire academic body and the governance of the institution; it was no soft touch.

However, obtaining those research powers does not preclude our institution from offering initial teacher training or being actively involved with further education colleges. It is not an either/or situation. Sometimes, when we talk about diversity in the system, we do not always recognise that it can exist not only across different institutions but within an institution, where different departments are doing particular things according to their own strengths.

In any case, I do not think that it would be acceptable to revert to some kind of rosy, cosy myth of an Edwardian university, with donnish obscurity plus a few self-indulgent, privileged undergraduates. Even if we wanted to do that—I do not believe that anyone does—we could not, because there is now a huge stakeholding in higher education across society. The aspiration to get one's children into higher education has now become a kind of middle class entitlement. The issue is whether those from other classes and backgrounds can match that. In addition, a dynamic economy requires a significantly graduate population.

The third issue that I want to mention is that of institutional autonomy. In evidence, Dr. John Hood, in particular, averted to the changing character of autonomy. As the Chairman has already said, our Select Committee attached importance to those observations. I am slightly sorry that the Government have rejected the idea of a concordat on this subject. Even if the Minister is not in favour of that, he needs to impose a self-denying ordinance above and beyond any legal constraints that he might have.

Dr. Evan Harris: I want to endorse what the hon. Gentleman says about the importance of that recommendation to review the meaning of autonomy. In some areas, there is not enough autonomy; academic freedom is under threat and needs to be safeguarded. In others, however, the taxpayer is entitled to expect universities not to hide behind their autonomy if they are unwilling to engage in evidence-based processes that would widen participation or improve standards.

Mr. Boswell: I entirely endorse the spirit of that intervention. It is better that we should look at this subject properly, and not in an hysterical way. To make a general point about educational debate, it is, paradoxically, often expressed in terms of an either/or situation: either one is completely in favour of autonomy or one is against it. Such false polarities characterise so many of these debates, and we should look at the matter objectively.

In any case, the Minister needs to hold himself back, and he and his colleagues in the devolved Administrations need to look at the activities of their funding bodies. There is evidence that they collectively hanker after centralised planning functions, which, in my view, they are ill equipped to discharge, and possibly legally constrained from so doing.

Mr. John Hayes (South Holland and The Deepings) (Con): As ever, my hon. Friend makes a thoughtful contribution to our considerations. Does he agree that the best expression of autonomy is when autonomous bodies collaborate, and that the funding mechanisms need to pump-prime, or at least catalyse, that kind of collaboration, which is a celebration of autonomy, not its negation?

Mr. Boswell: That, too, was a hugely helpful intervention. We are beginning to build up a picture. We really must stop telling people in higher education what they have to do, and leave them to make the right decisions. That is not meant as a threatening remark. If we are to implement reforms, they need to achieve buy-in from academics and institutions, whose confidence in the system we must retain, and whose self-confidence we must not subvert in the process. We do not want an infantilised HE system that is simply told what to do.

Having cleared those preliminaries, I want to speak to three areas of policy. At first sight, they might seem disparate, but I believe that, when viewed from a wider perspective, they hang together. The first is the quality assurance system, to which the Chairman has already referred at length. As I have mentioned, I played a part in this. In some respects, it has come under increasing strain: first, conceptually, because it is still not clear from the evidence—it was not clear to me when I was a Minister—how we compare a first in one discipline with a first in another, or firsts obtained from different institutions. These are difficult "apples and pears" questions to respond to.

Operationally, there is also a lack of clarity. We need to be aware that there is a temptation, or a tendency, towards upwards academic drift, about which we have already heard. At one end, that might involve the Russell group, with its higher proportion of firsts; the other end might involve some of the hairier anecdotes that we pick up and occasionally hear in evidence about courses that have been "stuffed".

